Let us give our hearts to God; for we have only a little time remaining. We are living in the last days. On every hand are signs of the end. Life is becoming more and still more uncertain. We hear of numerous wrecks and other disasters; we hear of many who are killed in an instant, without a moment's warning. Let us determine not to wait until a more convenient season before preparing to meet the Lord in peace when he comes. Let us give ourselves wholly to him, and then work for the salvation of other souls, from house to house, and wherever we may be. I am expending all the means I have, in the work of advancing the third angel's message. We should be planning to win souls to Christ, and now is our time to do this work. The harvest is ready, but the reapers are few. From all parts of the world we are receiving letters telling us that the light is shining in clear rays in distant lands, and that the honest in heart are accepting the evidences of the truth for this time.

Amid the error that is overspreading the whole earth, let us strive to stand firm on the platform of eternal truth. Let us put on the whole armor of God; for we are told that in this time Satan himself will work miracles before the people; and as we see these things, we must be prepared to withstand their deceptive influence. Whatever is presented by the enemy as truth, ought not to influence us; for we should be under the instruction of the great Author of all truth.

I feel an intense interest in the future work and prosperity of the Loma Linda Sanitarium. God has not given us these buildings for naught. He has not given them for us simply to take pride and comfort in. We know that this beautiful property has been given us as an indication of a great work that is to be done in southern California for the Lord. We are to help every soul in need of help. We desire to see souls converted, that finally they may enter in through the gates into the city of our God. We desire to see these souls receive the crown of life and a golden harp and a palm branch of victory. We desire that they shall have life, eternal life, in the kingdom of glory.

This is why I am willing, so long as my life is spared, to bear the testimony that God may give me. Pray, pray, I beseech of you who are here in this Sanitarium. You who have no hope, do not wait; do not, I beg of you, wait a moment. Get hold of it, oh, get hold of it; for you can have hope. It is offered all who believe in Christ Jesus, and you can have it. If you will work on the plan of addition, God will work on the plan of multiplication, and you will have peace and joy and assurance — a foundation that can never fail. Then you will be prepared to meet the King in his beauty, and will hear him say, "Well done, good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The One Hundred and Forty-four Thousand

J. N. LOUGHBOROUGH

HAVING received the following question, to which I prepared a reply, the thought occurred that the same might be of interest to the readers of the REVIEW, so I forward it for publication.

"For some time, in fact for several years, I have been unable to see how the one hundred and forty-four thousand could be made up partly of those who have died during the third angel's message. Such a position seems to be contrary to the teachings of the spirit of prophecy. Of this favored number, Sister White has written that they are taken 'from among the living.' How could this be, if they are taken partly from 'among the dead?' Again, she says that they 'have endured the anguish of Jacob's trouble,' passed 'through the final outpouring of God's judgments.' How could all sing a song of such an experience if a part, perhaps hundreds, had never had the experience? How could one hundred and forty-four thousand dear souls sing that they had 'passed through the time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation,' and had endured anguish, hunger, sun heat, and the sight of the seven last plagues, if they were sleeping, or at least a part of them? Would not a part of this company be unable to tell and sing a part of that song?

"It may be said that Sister White, in one of her writings, makes herself one of the one hundred and forty-four thousand, but Ezekiel does also. Speaking of the seven last judgments, he represents himself as present at their pouring out, and says, 'and I was left.'

"I am a firm believer in the spirit of prophecy. I believe what it says. By this I mean, that when it comes across my path, I believe that God, through his prophet, has shown me my error. I have no new light. My message is the old,

His Presence

The Master walked with me.
I knew his presence, though I could not see
His face, as when he walked in Galilee.
The inner eye beheld him; and the sight
Filled all the earth and sky and mind with light.

There is no path so drear,
In trackless sea, or desert, far or near,
But soul with soul of him we hold so dear
May have companionship, and inly feel
The grasp of hand unseen, the pledge of weal.

The Master spake to me.
I knew his voice. No personality
Of human friend, by word or act, could be
More surely known, as to the mind he gave Assurance of his love and power to save.

"Yet not for self alone,"
He gently whispered, "are these mercies shown;
But for the desolate who have not known
The love I bear them, and who would not see
Or know me near, were I not seen in thee."

That he may live in me,
Henceforth, his life of blessed ministry
Is all my prayer for self; that men may see
The Christ of God once more in haunts of pain,
And know that God is love, and trust again.

Dedication of the Loma Linda Sanitarium

(1) Sunday, April 15, the beautiful buildings and grounds of the Loma Linda Sanitarium were solemnly dedicated to the service of God. (2)

The exercises of the day meant much to those who had made many personal sacrifices in order to help secure the institution and set it in operation. During the forenoon, the friends of the sanitarium began to come in from Los Angeles and its vicinity, and from Riverside, Redlands, San Bernardino, and other places in the beautiful valley, in the heart of which is Loma Linda. The morning hours were spent in looking over the property that has so providentially come into our possession. At noon, a lunch was served on the lawn.

Early in the afternoon the people gathered for the dedicatory exercises. Seats had been placed on a gentle sloping lawn, under the shadow of a beautiful grove of evergreen pepper-trees. In front was a large improvised platform, on which were seated the speakers and the singers. The congregation numbered about five hundred. Among those present were several physicians and other leading men from the surrounding cities.

During the exercises, the people were told of the remarkable providences that had attended every step taken to secure the property. The purpose we have in view in the establishment of many sanitariums was also dwelt upon. I was present at the meeting only a portion of the time, and spoke with freedom for nearly half an hour on the advantages of outdoor life in the treatment of disease.

I tried to make it plain that sanitarium physicians and helpers were to co-operate with God in combating disease not only through the use of the natural remedial agencies he has placed within our reach, but also by encouraging their patients to lay hold on divine strength through obedience to the commandments of God.

In Deuteronomy we read: "Harken, O Israel, unto the statutes and unto the judgments, which I teach you, for to do them, that ye may live." And when Moses, just before his death, had repeated the statutes of Jehovah in the hearing of all Israel, he declared: "See, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil; in that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments and his statutes and his judgments, that thou mayest live."

Again he pleaded: "I have set before you life and death; . . . choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live: that thou mayest love the Lord thy God, and that thou mayest obey his voice, and that thou mayest cleave unto him: for he is thy life, and the length of thy days."

In his closing admonitions, Moses once more exhorted Israel to observe "all the words" of God's law. "It is not a vain thing for you," he declared; "because it is your life: and through this thing [through obedience] ye shall prolong your days."

Physicians and ministers are to unite in an effort to lead men and women to obey God's commandments. They need to study the intimate relationship existing between obedience and health. Solemn is the responsibility resting upon medical missionaries. They are to be missionaries in the true sense of the term. The sick and the suffering who entrust themselves to the care of the helpers in our medical institutions, must not be disappointed. They are to be taught how to live in harmony with heaven. As they learn to obey God's law, they will be richly blessed in body and in spirit.

The advantage of outdoor life must never be lost sight of. How thankful we should be that God has given us beautiful sanitarium properties at Paradise Valley and Glendale and Loma Linda! "Out of the cities! out of the cities!" — this has been my message for years. We can not expect the sick to recover rapidly when they are shut in within four walls, in some city, with no outside view but houses, houses, houses — nothing to animate, nothing to enliven. And yet how slow some are to realize that the crowded cities are not favorable places for sanitarium work!

Even in southern California not many years ago, there were some who favored the erection of a large sanitarium building in the heart of Los Angeles. In the light of the instruction God had given, we could not consent to the carrying out of any such plan. In the visions of the night, the Lord had shown me unoccupied properties in the country, suitable for sanitarium purposes, and for sale at a price far below the original cost.

It was some time before we found these places. First, we secured the Paradise Valley Sanitarium, near San Diego. A few months later, in the good providence of God, the Glendale property came to the notice of our people, and was purchased and fitted up for service. But light came that our work of establishing sanitariums in southern California was not complete; and on several different occasions Testimonies were given that medical missionary work must be done somewhere in the vicinity of Redlands.

In an article published in the Review of April 6, 1905, I wrote: —

"On our way back to Redlands, as our train passed through miles of orange groves, I thought of the efforts that should be made in this beautiful valley to proclaim the truth for this time. I recognized this section of southern California as one of the places that had been presented to me with the word that it should have a fully equipped sanitarium.

"Why have such fields as Redlands and Riverside been left almost unworked? As I looked from the car window, and saw the trees laden with fruit, I thought, Would not earnest, Christlike efforts have brought forth just as abundant a harvest in spiritual lines? In a few years these towns have been built up and developed, and as I looked upon their beauty and the fertility of the country surrounding them, there rose before me a vision of what the spiritual harvest might have been had earnest, Christlike efforts been put forth for the salvation of souls.

"The Lord would have brave, earnest men and women take up his work in these places. The cause of God is to make more rapid advancement in southern California than it has in the past. Every year thousands of people visit southern California in search of health, and by various methods we should seek to reach them with the truth. They must hear the warning to prepare for the great day of the Lord, which is right upon us. . . .

"We are called upon by God to present the truth for this time to those who year by year come to southern California from all parts of America. Workers who can speak to the multitudes are to be located where they can meet the people, and give them the warning message. Ministers and canvassers should be on

(1) the ground, watching their opportunity to present the truth and to hold meetings. Let them be quick to seize opportunities to place present truth before those who know it not. Let them give the message with clearness and power, that those who have ears to hear may hear.”]

These words were written before I had learned anything about the property at Loma Linda. Still the burden of establishing another sanitarium rested upon me. In the fall of 1903 I had a vision of a sanitarium in the midst of beautiful grounds, somewhere in southern California, and no property I had visited answered to the presentation given in this vision. At the time, I wrote about this vision to our brethren and sisters assembled at the Los Angeles camp-meeting early in September, 1903.

(2) [While attending the General Conference of 1905, at Washington, D. C., I received a letter from Elder J. A. Burden, describing a property he had found four miles west of Redlands, five and one-half miles southeast of San Bernardino, and eight miles northeast of Riverside. As I read his letter, I was impressed that this was one of the places I had seen in vision,] and I immediately telegraphed him to secure the property without delay. He did so, and as the result, Loma Linda is in our possession.

(2) [Later, when I visited this property, I recognized it as one of the places I had seen nearly two years before in vision. How thankful I am to the Lord our God for this place, which is all prepared for us to use to the honor and glory of his name!]

Loma Linda cost us forty thousand dollars. The original cost was over three times this sum. There were seventy-six acres of land in the tract, and thirty have been added since. As a sanitarium site, the property is a valuable one. The grounds have been carefully laid out, at great expense to the original owners, and are beautified by well-kept lawns and flower gardens. The extensive view of valley and mountain is magnificent. One of the chief advantages of situation at Loma Linda is the pleasing variety of charming scenery on every side.

(3) [But more important than magnificent scenery and beautiful buildings and spacious grounds, is the close proximity of this institution to a densely populated district, and the opportunity thus afforded of communicating to many, many people a knowledge of the third angel's message. We are to have clear spiritual discernment, else we shall fail of understanding the opening providences of God that are preparing the way for us to enlighten the world. The great crisis is just before us. Now is the time for us to sound the warning message, by the agencies that God has given us for this purpose. [Let us remember that one most important agency is our medical missionary work. Never are we to lose sight of the great object for which our sanitariums are established,— the advancement of God's closing work in the earth. (1) (2)

(3) Loma Linda is to be not only a sanitarium, but an educational center. With the possession of this place comes the weighty responsibility of making the work of the institution educational in character. A school is to be established here for the training of gospel medical missionary evangelists.]

Much is involved in this work, and it is very essential that a right beginning be made. The Lord has a special work to be done in this part of the field.] He instructed me to call upon Elder and Mrs. S. N. Haskell to help us in getting properly started a work similar to that which they had carried on in Nashville and at Avondale. They came, and are now laboring with all the powers of their being to do a solid work. They conduct classes regularly in the institution, and have established a Bible training-school at San Bernardino, from which center is extending an influence throughout this district. Prof. W. E. Howell and his wife have consented to unite with the forces at Loma Linda in an effort to develop the school that must be carried on there. As they go forward in faith, the Lord will go before them, preparing the way.

The One Hundred and Forty-four Thousand

J. N. LOUGHBOROUGH

(Concluded)

IN “Early Writings,” pages 27, 28, we read: “I saw the sword, famine, pestilence, and great confusion in the earth. The wicked thought that we had brought the judgments upon them, and they rose up and took counsel to rid the earth of us, thinking that then the evil would be stayed.

“In the time of trouble, we all fled from the cities and villages, and were pursued by the wicked, who entered the houses of the saints with the sword. They raised the sword to kill us, but it broke, and fell as powerless as a straw. Then we all cried day and night for deliverance, and the cry came up before God. The sun came up, and the moon stood still. The streams ceased to flow. Dark heavy clouds came up, and clashed against each other, but there was one clear place of settled glory, whence came the voice of God like many waters, which shook the heavens and the earth. The sky opened and shut, and was in commotion. The mountains shook like a reed in the wind, and cast out ragged rocks all around. The sea boiled like a pot, and cast out stones upon the land. And as God spake the day and hour of Jesus' coming, and delivered the everlasting covenant to his people, he spake one sentence, and then paused, while the words were rolling through the earth. The Israel of God stood with their faces fixed (1) upward, listening to the words as they came from the mouth of Jehovah, and rolled through the earth like peals of the loudest thunder. It was awfully solemn. And at the end of every sentence, the saints shouted, Glory! Alleluia! Their countenances were lighted up with the glory of God, and they shone with the (1) glory, as did the face of Moses when he came down from Sinai. The wicked could not look upon them for the glory. And when the never-ending blessing was pronounced on those who had honored God, in keeping his Sabbath holy, there was a mighty shout of victory over the beast and over his image.”

According to Rev. 15:2, 3, we see that those who sing the song of victory over the image, etc., sing also the song of Moses. But in chapter 14:3 we learn that none can learn that song but the one hundred and forty-four thousand. In “Great Controversy,” page 649, we read: “None but the one hundred and forty-four thousand can learn that song; for it is the song of their experience,— an experience such as none other company has ever had. ‘These are they that follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth.’ These having been translated from the earth, from among the living [those who are raised in the partial resurrection of Dan. 12:1, 2 are surely among the living when the final translation comes], are counted as the “first-fruits unto God and the Lamb.” “These are they which came out of great tribulation;” they have passed through the time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation [the climax of that trouble among the nations is when, under the sixth plague, the nations are rallied to the great battle. Surely the resurrected ones see that]. They have endured the anguish of the time of Jacob's trouble [let it be remembered that these resurrected ones saw the time of Jacob's trouble]; they have stood without an intercessor through the final pouring out of God's judgments, but have been delivered, for they have “washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb [the final of God's judgments is in the sixth and seventh plagues, and these resurrected ones will see that]. They have seen the earth wasted with famine and pestilence, the sun having power to scorch men with great heat, and themselves have endured sufferings, hunger, and thirst.” They, even the resurrected ones, see the earth, as it has been brought into this condition by the things mentioned, and in fact have actually experienced a part of the very things that are mentioned.

Of the final translation of God's people we read in “Great Controversy,” page 645, “At the voice of God they [the living saints] were glorified; now they are made immortal, and with the risen saints are caught up to meet the Lord in the air.” It was true of the resurrected ones in the time of trouble that at the voice of God they were glorified, but at the actual coming of Christ, they, with those then resurrected, are caught up to meet the Lord in the air. So in their final deliverance they are “redeemed from the earth,” and “redeemed from among men.”

From the Testimony cited in this writing, we see that in 1849 the sealing work was going on. Persons were then being sealed, and Satan was trying to hinder the work. National troubles commenced there that would soon have

What of the Day?

What of the day, do you ask?
Then assuredly know
That the day which began weary ages ago
Speeds on to an issue sublime;
And the King whose glad coming draws hourly near,
Will, haply, when least you expect him, appear,
And the blessed long-prayed-for Sabbatical year
Usher in, in the fulness of time.

Will you hasten the day?
Will you labor and pray?
Will you thrust in the sickle and reap while you may
The plenteous harvests that lie
Waiting still for your hand
In every land
And rip'ning 'neath every sky?

Will you gather the stones for this temple divine?
And the gems in the crown of his glory to shine
Brighter far than the sun?
And then, when he comes, bowing low at his feet
With rapture unspeakable, hear him repeat,
"Well done, thou good servant, well done."

The Scriptures a Safeguard

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The Romish Church reserves to the clergy the right to interpret the Scriptures. On the ground that ecclesiastics alone are competent to explain God's Word, it is withheld from the common people. Though the Reformation gave the Scriptures to all, yet the selfsame principle which was maintained by Rome prevents multitudes in Protestant churches from searching the Bible for themselves. They are taught to accept its teachings as interpreted by the church; and there are thousands who dare receive nothing, however plainly revealed in Scripture, that is contrary to their creed, or the established teaching of their church.

Notwithstanding the Bible is full of warnings against false teachers, many are ready thus to commit the keeping of their souls to the clergy. There are to-day thousands of professors of religion who can give no other reason for points of faith which they hold than that they were so instructed by their religious leaders. They pass by the Saviour's teachings almost unnoticed, and place implicit confidence in the words of the ministers. But are ministers infallible? How can we trust our souls to their guidance unless we know from God's Word that they are light-bearers?

A lack of moral courage to step aside from the beaten track of the world, leads many to follow in the steps of learned men; and by their reluctance to investigate for themselves, they are becoming hopelessly fastened in the chains of error. They see that the truth for this time is plainly brought to view in the Bible, and they feel the power of the Holy Spirit attending its proclamation; yet they allow the opposition of the clergy to turn them from the light. Though reason and conscience are convinced, these deluded souls dare not think differently from the minister; and their individual judgment, their eternal interests, are sacrificed to the unbelief, the pride and prejudice, of another.

Many are the ways by which Satan works through human influence to bind his captives. He secures multitudes to himself by attaching them by the silken cords of affection to those who are enemies of the cross of Christ. Whatever this attachment may be, parental, filial, conjugal, or social, the effect is the same; the opposers of truth exert their power to control the conscience, and the souls held under their sway have not sufficient courage or independence to obey their own convictions of duty.

The truth and the glory of God are inseparable; it is impossible for us, with the Bible within our reach, to honor God by erroneous opinions. Many claim that it matters not what one believes, if his life is only right. But the life is molded by the faith. If light and truth are within our reach, and we neglect to improve the privilege of hearing and seeing it, we virtually reject it; we are choosing darkness rather than light.

"There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Ignorance is no excuse for error or sin, when there is every opportunity to know the will of God. A man is traveling, and comes to a place where there are several roads, and a guide-board indicating where each one leads. If he disregards the guide-board, and takes whichever road seems to him to be right, he may be ever so sincere, but will in all probability find himself on the wrong road.

God has given us his Word that we may become acquainted with its teachings, and know for ourselves what he requires of us. When the lawyer came to Jesus with the inquiry, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" the Saviour referred him to the Scriptures, saying, "What is written in the law? how readest thou?" Ignorance will not excuse young or old, to release them from the punishment due for the transgression of God's law, because there is in their hands a faithful presentation of that law and of its principles and its claims. It is not enough to have good intentions; it is not enough to do what a man thinks is right, or what the minister tells him is right. His soul's salvation is at stake, and he should search the Scriptures for himself. However strong may be his convictions, however confident he may be that the minister knows what is truth, this is not his foundation. He has a chart pointing out every waymark on the heavenward journey, and he ought not to guess at anything.

It is the first and highest duty of every rational being to learn from the Scriptures what is truth, and then to walk in the light, and encourage others to follow his example. We should day by day study the Bible diligently, weighing every thought, and comparing scripture with scripture. With divine help, we are to form our opinions for ourselves, as we are to answer for ourselves before God.

The truths most plainly revealed in the Bible have been involved in doubt and darkness by learned men, who, with a pretense of great wisdom, teach that the Scriptures have a mystical, a secret, spiritual meaning not apparent in the language employed. These men are false teachers. It was to such a class that Jesus declared, "Ye know not the Scriptures, neither the power of God." The language of the Bible should be explained according to its obvious meaning, unless a symbol or figure is employed Christ has given the promise, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." If men would but take the Bible as it reads, if there were no false teachers to mislead and confuse their minds, a work would be accomplished that would make angels glad, and that would bring into the fold of Christ thousands upon thousands who are now wandering in error.

We should exert all the powers of the mind in the study of the Scriptures, and should task the understanding to comprehend, as far as mortals can, the deep things of God; yet we must not forget that the docility and submission of a child is the true spirit of the learner. Scriptural difficulties can never be mastered by the same methods that are employed in grappling with philosophical problems. We should not engage in the study of the Bible with that self-reliance with which so many enter the domains of science, but with a prayerful dependence upon God, and a sincere desire to learn his will. We must come with a humble and teachable spirit to obtain knowledge from the great I AM. Otherwise evil angels will so blind our minds and harden our hearts that we shall not be impressed by the truth.

The Inquisition of Mexico

GEO. M. BROWN

The publishing house of Ch. Bouret, of Paris and Mexico, has recently brought out an interesting book under the above title. It consists of official records of the tribunal of the Inquisition as it existed in Mexico.

Among other heretics condemned by the "Holy Office" were some denominated New Christians, descendants of the Jews, who kept the Sabbath. They are also charged with observing the dead law of Moses, and with refusing to eat pork or lard. In the records which

No Room for Jesus

O plodding life! crowded so full
Of earthly toil and care;
The body's daily need receives
The first and last concern, and leaves
No room for Jesus there.

O busy brain! by night and day
Working, with patience rare,
Problems of worldly loss or gain,
Thinking till thought becomes a pain;
No room for Jesus there.

O throbbing heart! so quick to feel
In other's woes a share;
Yet human loves each power in thrall,
And sordid treasures fill it all;
No room for Jesus there.

O sinful soul! thus to debase
The being God doth spare;
Blood-bought, thou art no more thine own;
Heart, brain, life, all are his alone;
Make room for Jesus there.

Lest soon the bitter day shall come
When vain shall be thy prayer,
To find in Jesus' heart a place,
Forever closed the door of grace,
Thou'll find no entrance there.

The Judgments of God on Our Cities

MRS. E. G. WHITE

It was while we were still at Loma Linda, the second night after the dedication of the sanitarium, that there passed before me an awful scene of buildings shaken down and destroyed, with great loss of life. I have already described this scene, in the article, "The San Francisco Earthquake."

Terrible as was the representation that passed before me, that which impressed itself most vividly on my mind was the instruction given in connection with it. The angel that stood by my side declared that God's supreme rulership, and the sacredness of his law, must be revealed to those who persistently refuse to render obedience to the King of kings. Those who choose to remain disloyal, must be visited in mercy with judgments, in order that, if possible, they may be aroused to a realization of the sinfulness of their course.

Throughout the following day, I pondered the scenes that had passed before me, and the instruction that had been given. During the afternoon we journeyed to Glendale, near Los Angeles; and the following night I was again instructed regarding the holiness and binding claims of the ten commandments, and the supremacy of God above all earthly rulers. It seemed as if I were before many people, and presenting scripture after scripture in support of the precepts spoken by the Lord from Sinai's height.

(1) It has taken me many days to write out a portion of that which was revealed those two nights at Loma Linda and Glendale. I have not finished yet, as many other matters of urgent importance have come up for consideration. I hope soon to write several articles on God's law, and the blessings that are promised the obedient.

Our God is the Ruler of the universe. His law is of universal application. It is founded on love,— love to God, and love to our fellow men. Satan's supreme efforts are directed toward the setting aside of this law. In this work he has been largely successful. There is a marked disposition to exalt human enactments above the law of our Sovereign Ruler, the Monarch of the heavens and the earth. The world is filled with transgression. A spirit of lawlessness pervades every land, and is especially manifest in the great cities of the earth. The sin and crime to be seen in our cities is appalling. God can not forbear much longer. Already his judgments are beginning to fall on some places, and soon his signal displeasure will be felt in other places.

(2) There is to be, at this period, a series of events which will reveal that God is Master of the situation. The truth will be proclaimed in clear, unmistakable language. As a people, we must prepare the way of the Lord, under the overruling guidance of the Holy Spirit. The gospel is to be given in its purity. The stream of living water is to deepen and widen in its course. In all fields, nigh and afar off, men will be called from the plow and from the more common commercial business vocations that largely occupy the mind, and will be educated in connection with men of experience. As they learn to labor effectively, they will proclaim the truth with power. Through most wonderful workings of divine providence, mountains of difficulties will be removed, and cast into the sea. The message that means so much to the dwellers upon the earth, will be heard and understood. Men will know what is truth. Onward, and still onward the work will advance, until the whole earth shall have been warned. And then shall the end come.

The startling and stupendous events connected with the warning of the world are fraught with momentous results. The messengers who proclaim the truth for this time are laboring in co-operation with all the forces of heaven. In tender compassion God himself is speaking to an impenitent world through judgments; and he will continue to speak in this manner. For many years we have known that the great cities would be visited with divine judgments because of long-continued disobedience. In no uncertain words the Lord has warned us not to establish large institutions in the cities. "Out of the cities; out of the cities,"— this is the message that has often come to us. And this is one reason why the Lord has been opening the way so wonderfully for our publishing houses and sanitariums and schools to be located in country places.

(3) The cities must be worked. The millions living in these congested centers are to hear the third angel's message. This work should have been developed rapidly during the past few years. A beginning has been made, for which we praise God. Outpost centers are being established, from whence, like Enoch of old, our workers can visit the cities and do faithful service.

This was the burden of my message to the brethren and sisters assembled in conference at Los Angeles. On the morning of the San Francisco earthquake, April 18, the second day after the scene of falling buildings had passed before me, I spoke in the Carr Street church, and bore a decided testimony on the necessity of our doing all we can to acquaint the people with the teachings of God's Word. I referred to the great work that must be done in the cities of our land, and of our inability to do this work by establishing institutions in the heart of these cities. We must learn to labor from outpost centers, and to place our dependence, not on buildings or display, but on the power of the Word of God. The Holy Spirit will impress the honest heart. Our dependence is in God.

(4) "Out of the cities; out of the cities!"— this is the message the Lord has been giving me. The earthquakes will come; the floods will come; and we are not to establish ourselves in the wicked cities, where the enemy is served in every way, and where God is so often forgotten. The Lord desires that we shall have clear spiritual eyesight. We must be quick to discern the peril that would attend the establishment of institutions in these wicked cities. We must make wise plans to warn the cities, and at the same time live where we can shield our children and ourselves from the contaminating and demoralizing influences so prevalent in these places.

(5) Since the San Francisco earthquake, many rumors have been current regarding statements I have made. Some have reported that while in Los Angeles, I claimed that I had predicted the San Francisco earthquake and fire, and that Los Angeles would be the next city to suffer. This is not true. The morning after the earthquake, I said no more than that "the earthquakes will come; the floods will come;" and that the Lord's message to us is that we shall "not establish ourselves in the wicked cities."

Not many years ago, a brother laboring in New York City published some very startling notices regarding the destruction of that city. I wrote immediately to the ones in charge of the work there, saying that it was not wise to publish such notices; that thus an excitement might be aroused which would result in a fanatical movement, hurting the cause of God. It is enough to present the truth of the Word of God to the people. (6) Startling notices are detrimental to the progress of the work.

Under date of Aug. 9, 1903, I further wrote regarding this sensational report: —

(1) ["How comes the word that I have declared that New York is to be swept away by a tidal wave? This I have never said. I have said, as I looked at the great buildings going up there, story after story, 'What terrible scenes will take place when the Lord shall arise to shake terribly the earth! Then the words of Rev. 18: 1-3 will be fulfilled.' The whole of the eighteenth chapter of Revelation is a warning of what is coming on the earth. But I have no light in particular in regard to what is coming on New York, only that I know that one day the great buildings there will be thrown down by the turning and overturning of God's power. From the light given me, I know that destruction is in the world. One word from the Lord, one touch of his mighty power, and these massive structures will fall. Scenes will take place the fearfulness of which we can not imagine.]

"But I have sent cautions to the brethren working in New York, saying that these flaming, terrifying notices should not be published. When my brethren go to extremes, it reacts on me, and I have to bear the reproach of being called a false prophet. . . .

"The destroying angels are to-day executing their commission. Death will come in all places. This is why I am so anxious for our cities to be warned. There is a work to be done by canvassing in our cities that has not yet been done. . . . The blessing of God rests on the workers who warn those that are unready to meet him. . . . Now is our time to work."

For the past twenty years, and particularly since my return from Australia, I have borne a most decided testimony in favor of proclaiming the third angel's message in the cities of America.

About thirty years ago, when my husband and I were planning for the building of a house of worship in San Francisco, some, when they saw the plan, said, "It is too large. The house will never be filled." At the same time, we were erecting the first building of the Pacific Press and the meeting-house in Oakland. How great was the anxiety felt, and how earnest the prayers offered to God that he would open the way for the advancement of these enterprises!

At that time, I dreamed that I saw two beehives, one in San Francisco and one in Oakland. In the hive in Oakland, the bees were diligently at work. Then I looked at the hive in San Francisco, and saw very little being done. The hive in Oakland seemed to be far the more promising. After a time my attention was again called to the hive in San Francisco, and I saw that an entire change had taken place. Great activity was seen among the bees. They were earnestly at work.

When I related this dream, it was interpreted to mean that in San Francisco there was a great work to be done. There were among us at that time only a few men to whom we could look for large financial assistance. Believers were few in number, and we needed much courage and much faith to brace us for the work.

We prayed much in regard to the necessities of the cause and the meaning of the dream, and resolved to venture out in accordance with the light given. My husband and I decided to sell our property in Battle Creek, that we might use the proceeds in this work. We wrote to our brethren, "Sell everything we have in Battle Creek, and send us the money at once." This was done, and we helped to build the churches in Oakland and San Francisco. And the Lord revealed to us that although at first the work in San Francisco would move slowly, yet it would make steady advancement, and San Francisco would become a great center. The Lord would inspire men by his Holy Spirit to carry forward the work with faith and courage and perseverance.

Before leaving Australia, I dreamed that I was standing before a large congregation in San Francisco; that the Lord gave me a message to bear, and freedom in bearing this message. The people had ears to hear, and hearts to understand.

(2) [Sabbath morning, Nov. 10, 1900, we entered the San Francisco church, and found it crowded to its utmost capacity. As I stood before the people, I thought of the dream and the instruction which had been given me so many years ago, and I was much encouraged. Looking at the people assembled, I felt that I could indeed say, The Lord has fulfilled his word.

During the past few years, the "beehive" in San Francisco has been indeed a busy one. Many lines of Christian effort have been carried forward by our brethren and sisters there. These included visiting the sick and destitute, finding homes for orphans, and work for the unemployed; nursing the sick, and teaching the truth from house to house; the distribution of literature, and the conducting of classes on healthful living and the care of the sick. A school for the children has been conducted in the basement of the Laguna Street meeting-house. For a time a working men's home and medical mission was maintained. On Market Street, near the city hall, there were treatment rooms, operated as a branch of the St. Helena Sanitarium. In the same locality was a health food store. Nearer the center of the city, not far from the Call building, was conducted a vegetarian café, which was open six days in the week, and entirely closed on the Sabbath. Along the water front, ship mission work was carried on. At various times our ministers conducted meetings in large halls in the city. Thus the warning message was given by many.]

I have carried a constant burden for our work in the large cities. Nearly two years after meeting with our brethren and sisters in the San Francisco church since my return to America, I wrote the following (Sept. 1, 1902): —

"The all-wise God is working on minds, leading men to see the advantage of getting away from the congested cities into the country. . . . It would be a mistake for us to purchase or erect large buildings in the cities of southern California for sanitarium work; and those who see advantages in doing this are not moving understandingly. A great work is to be done in preparing these cities to hear the gospel message; but this work is not to be done by fitting up in them large buildings for the carrying forward of some wonderful enterprise.

"Well-equipped tent-meetings should be held in the large cities, such as San Francisco; for not long hence these cities will suffer under the judgments of God. San Francisco and Oakland are becoming as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the Lord will visit them in wrath."

In this same manuscript, the opening of hygienic restaurants was mentioned as "a work that God would have done in the cities. If wisely conducted, these restaurants will become missionary centers."

Some weeks later, Oct. 8, 1902, I wrote: "For years I have been given special light that we are not to center our work in the cities. The turmoil and confusion that fills these cities, the conditions brought about by the labor unions and the strikes, would prove a great hindrance to our work."

Oct. 30, 1902: "To parents who are living in the cities, the Lord is sending the warning cry, Gather your children into your own houses; gather them away from those who are disregarding the commandments of God, who are teaching and practising evil. Get out of the cities as fast as possible. Parents can secure small homes in the country, with land for cultivation, where the children will not be surrounded with the corrupting influences of city life. God will help his people to find such homes outside the cities."

Nov. 28, 1902: "A great work is to be done. I am instructed by the Spirit of God to say to those engaged in the Lord's work, that the favorable time for our message to be carried to the cities has passed by; and this work has not been done. I feel a heavy burden that we shall now redeem the time."

April 20, 1903: "The message of warning should be sounded in the large, wicked cities, such as San Francisco. San Francisco and Oakland are becoming as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the Lord will visit them. Not far hence they will suffer under his judgments."

June 20, 1903: "The judgments of God are in our land. The Lord is soon to come. In fire and flood and earthquake, he is warning the inhabitants of this earth of his soon approach. O that the people may know the time of their visitation!

"We have no time to lose. We must make more determined efforts to lead the people of the world to see that the day of judgment is at hand. . . . O, if our people would feel as they should the responsibility resting upon them to give the last message of mercy to the world, what a wonderful work would be done! We need the impartation of the Holy Spirit, that we may realize how closely heavenly things are bound up with God's church on this earth."

June 3, 1903: "There are many with whom the Spirit of God is striving. (1) The time of God's destructive judgments is the time of mercy for those who have no opportunity to learn what is truth. Tenderly will the Lord look upon them. His heart of mercy is touched; his hand is still stretched out to save, while the door is closed to those who would not enter. Large numbers will be admitted who in these last days hear the truth for the first time. The Lord calls upon every believer to consecrate himself wholly to his service. All are to work for him, according to their several ability."

Nov. 12, 1902: "The time is nearing when the great crisis in the history of the world will have come, when every movement in the government of God will be watched with intense interest and inexpressible apprehension. In quick succession the judgments of God will follow one another,— fire and flood and earthquakes, with war and bloodshed. Something great and decisive will soon of necessity take place."

May 27, 1903: "The mercy of God is shown by his long forbearance. He is holding back his judgments, waiting for the message of warning to be sounded to all. There are many who have not yet heard the testing truths for this time. The last call of mercy is to be given more fully to our world. The truths of the eighteenth and nineteenth chapters of Revelation should be read and understood by all."

April 9, 1903: "The divine statutes have been set aside. The time will soon come when God will vindicate his insulted authority. 'The Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: and the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain.' 'Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?'"

Shall Satan Succeed?

H. F. KETRING

"I SAW that Satan bade his angels lay their snares for those who were looking for Christ's second appearing, and keeping all the commandments of God. Satan told his angels that the churches were asleep. He would increase his power and lying wonders, and he could hold them. 'But,' said he, 'the sect of Sabbath-keepers we hate; they are continually working against us, and taking from us our subjects, to keep the hated law of God. Go, make the possessors of lands and money drunk with cares. If you can make them place their affections upon these things, we shall have them yet. They may profess what they please, only make them care more for money than for the success of Christ's kingdom or the spread of the truths we hate. Present the world before them in the most attractive light, that they may love and idolize it. We must keep in our ranks all the means of which we can gain control. The more means the followers of Christ devote to his service, the more will they injure our kingdom by getting our subjects. . . . Discourage and dishearten their ministers; for we hate them. Present every plausible excuse to those who have means, lest they hand it out. Control the money matters if you can, and drive their ministers to want and distress. This will weaken their courage and zeal. Battle every inch of the ground. Make covetousness and love of earthly treasures the ruling traits of their character. As long as these traits rule, salvation and grace stand back. Crowd every attraction around them, and they will be surely ours. And not only are we sure of them, but their hateful influence will not be exercised to lead others to heaven. When any shall attempt to give, put within them a grudging disposition, that it may be sparingly.'"—"Early Writings," pages 128, 129.

Commentary, Vol. 7 (1) p. 979

It will be seen from the foregoing speech made by the prince of demons to his associates that the prime object of their campaign against the "Sabbath-keepers" is to cause their destruction. This he is determined to accomplish by making them care more for money and the pleasures of this world "than for the success of Christ's kingdom." He knows that when the traits of "covetousness and love of earthly treasures" rule, "salvation and grace stand back," and he will "have them yet."

Thus, upon this fourth of July, he is going to crowd the world in upon us, to get us to devote our means to worldly enjoyment, so that it may not be used to advance Christ's kingdom and the truths that Satan hates. He is determined to control the money matters and "drive their ministers to want and distress." The object of this is to "weaken their courage and zeal."

While many of our ministers and workers have left their friends and comfortable homes in this country, and have gone to foreign lands, and are there deprived of many of the comforts of home, can it be possible that Satan will cause us so far to forget God's cause and our dear brethren in other lands that we shall spend money unnecessarily, for mere selfish gratification? He says that if he is successful in this, he will have us yet.

O my brethren, shall we not deny ourselves these selfish pleasures, and encourage our families to do the same? God's message is speeding to the ends of the earth. Almost every field is entered. Soon Jesus will come. O, let us who know this truth have a part in heralding his coming to a dying world!

South Lancaster, Mass.

Deceptive Statements

PERHAPS good men do not mean to be deceptive when they write as the editor of one of our exchanges did concerning the late Sunday-school lesson, the topic of which was "Jesus and the Sabbath." The writer showed in detail how Jesus kept the Sabbath, quoting here and there from the New Testament, and discussing what acts and duties constitute Sabbath observance. He used the words Sabbath, Sunday, and Lord's day as equivalents, confounding them, and leading his readers to think of them as one and the same. Among other things he said: "We have not, however, any right to defer such work to the Lord's day if it can be done during the week. In many instances works of charity are deferred until the Lord's day because no time will then be lost out of the week day's business or pleasure." Continuing the discussion with the evident purpose of transferring the thought of Jewish observance of the Sabbath to the present observance of Sunday, the writer said: "This reference will make quite clear to all readers how the apostles kept the Sabbath. Acts 20:7, with other familiar references, will show how the first day took the place of the Jewish Sabbath." Referring to Acts 20:7, and adding "other familiar references," etc., the writer perverts truth. Acts 20:7 is the only place in the book of Acts in which the first day of the week is mentioned in any way. It is mentioned but once in all the epistles. When, therefore, this writer intimates that there are "other familiar texts" which "show how the first day took the place of the Jewish Sabbath," he misleads the uninformed reader, thus perverting the real facts in the case. If he has studied the Bible, even in a slight degree, he knows that there are no other familiar references, and that the New Testament nowhere even suggests, much less states, that the first day of the week took the place of the Sabbath, in either the teachings or practises of Christ or his apostles. It is a matter of sorrow, and of condemnation, when good men thus lead their readers astray, and thereby weaken themselves and the cause of truth and righteousness. If there be good ground for the observance of Sunday rather than the Sabbath, let that ground be plainly set forth. To assume that there are "similar references" which one writing upon so important a question does not take time to quote, thus giving the general reader the impression that authority exists where it is not, comes close to handling the Word of God deceitfully. Such perversion of a record in a court of justice would subject a witness to punishment. Are not Christian writers morally under oath to tell "nothing but the truth"?—The Sabbath Recorder.

Rescue the Perishing

WHAT if your own were starving,
Fainting with famine-pain,
And yet you knew
Where golden grew
Rich fruit and ripened grain?
Would you hear their wail,
As a thrice-told tale,
And turn to your feast again?

What if your own were thirsting,
And never a drop could gain,
And you could tell
Where a sparkling well
Poured forth its cooling rain?
Would you turn aside,
While they gasped and died,
And leave them to their pain?

What if your own were darkened,
Without one cheering ray,
And you alone
Could show where shone
The pure, sweet light of day?
Would you leave them there
In their dark despair,
And sing on your sunlit way?

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The Southern California Conference

THE annual meeting of the Southern California Conference was held in Los Angeles, April 16-20. I was present only a portion of the time.

The reports presented at the conference were most encouraging. It was stated that about a year ago, there was a deficit of nearly eight thousand dollars, which has all been paid; and at the time of the meeting, there was about six thousand dollars in the treasury. The gifts to missions amounted to nearly three thousand dollars. It was further stated that the debt on the Fernando School is now twelve thousand dollars — just about half the total debt a few months ago. According to the financial report, the medical institutions in Los Angeles, including the restaurant and the Glendale Sanitarium, earned nearly nine thousand dollars during the past nine months. A large portion of this sum has been used to lessen the debts on these institutions.

I was especially pleased to learn of the efforts put forth during the past year in the tourist centers of this conference. A special work is to be done in places where people are constantly coming and going. Christ labored in Capernaum much of the time, because this was a place through which travelers were constantly passing, and where many often tarried. There are now twenty-six churches and nine companies in the Southern California Conference, with a membership of over fifteen hundred. What a work could be done in this field, if all these brethren and sisters were to improve every opportunity to let the light of truth shine forth!

The Glendale Sanitarium

During the Los Angeles meeting, we were entertained at the Glendale Sanitarium. This institution, which was opened in the latter part of 1904, has been well patronized by a good class of patients. The blessing of the Lord has attended the efforts put forth for restoration of health. Nor have the spiritual interests been lost sight of. Brother C. N. Marvin, the chaplain, reports that some who have come to the sanitarium have been brought into the truth. The physicians and helpers are of good courage. They have had some remarkable experiences in answer to prayer. The Lord has worked upon hearts, and some who were indifferent have responded to the influences of the Holy Spirit, and are now having a good Christian experience. A deep interest has been manifested in the study of the Bible.

Brother W. R. Simpson, the manager, told me that the earnings of the institution are sufficient to make possible a reduction of the debt. For some time the sanitarium has been filled with patients. There are those who can not go far from Los Angeles for treatment. The close proximity of the Glendale Sanitarium to Los Angeles, makes it possible for such ones to patronize this institution. Glendale is a very important member of the sisterhood of medical institutions in southern California. Let us continue to praise the Lord that he has given us this institution to use for the honor of his name.

Sabbath Sermon in San Diego

Upon reaching Paradise Valley, April 20, I was very weary; but the next morning we attended the San Diego church, where I spoke to the people on the first chapter of Second Peter. Since my former visits to San Diego, Elders W. W. Simpson and Wm. Healey have held a series of meetings there, and as the result many were added to the church-membership. The church building was crowded. As I looked for the first time into the faces of these new converts, I was drawn out to speak words of counsel and encouragement to them.

In connection with the injunction of Peter that we are to add "to temperance, patience," I referred to the blessings of health reform, and the advantages to be gained by the use of proper combinations of simple, nourishing foods. The close relationship that eating and drinking sustain to the state of one's mind and temper, was dwelt upon. We can not afford to develop a bad temper through wrong habits of living. Whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, we are to keep in mind the glory of God. We are the purchased possession of the blood of the Son of God.

To the parents I made an appeal in behalf of the church in the home. Fathers and mothers have the privilege of studying the Bible with their children, and of training and disciplining them for service in the Master's cause. In every instance where discipline is necessary, the tenderness and patience that God manifests toward us, is to be revealed. Correction administered in love will touch and tender the hearts of the children, and accomplish far more than would sternness and harshness. As parents pray, and strive to deal wisely with their children, heavenly angels will work in their behalf.

God desires parents to take hold of their work intelligently, because we have only a little time in which to prepare for the return of the Saviour. We are admonished of the nearness of the end by the calamity that has befallen San Francisco. Christ declared that earthquakes and other judgments would be seen in divers places. By these he desires to demonstrate that he hates iniquity, and that at last he will punish transgressors. He will forbear, and forbear, and forbear; but finally he can forbear no longer.

In the days of Abraham the Lord declared, "The iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." He would not at that time allow them to be destroyed. In this is revealed the long-sufferance of God. The Amorites were at enmity against his law; they believed not in him as the true and living God; but among them were a few good persons, and for the sake of these few, he forbore long. Centuries afterward, when the Israelites returned from Egypt to the promised land, the Amorites were "cast out before the children of Israel." They finally suffered calamity because of continued wilful disregard of the law of God. (1)

Our brethren and sisters in the San Diego church, and in many other churches as well, have the privilege of training the youth so conscientiously in a knowledge of the truths of God's Word that these youth will be able to meet the people where they are, and introduce the third angel's message into many homes. Thus many of our youth will develop rapidly into missionaries who can labor from house to house.

It is difficult to find capable young men and young women who can enter the cities and do effective service. In these tourist centers where many travelers come for health and pleasure, we greatly need young men who are thoroughly grounded in the truths of the third angel's message, to go around among the people, and minister to them, speaking a word in season to this one, and offering encouragement to another. (2) We greatly need consecrated women who, as messengers of mercy, shall visit the mothers and the children in their homes, and help them in the every-day household duties, if need be, before beginning to talk to them regarding the truth for this time. You will find that by this method you will have souls as the result of your ministry. (3)

Dedication of the Paradise Valley Sanitarium

While we were at the Paradise Valley Sanitarium, this institution was dedicated. Early in the afternoon of April

Evangelism p. (2) 586; (3) 459; Welfare Ministry p 146 (3)

24, the invited guests and many friends of the sanitarium began to arrive. The dedicatory exercises passed off very pleasantly.

Elder S. N. Haskell was on the program as the first speaker, but his train was late, and so I spoke first, on the theme, "In Touch with Nature." I began by reading a portion of the forty-second of Isaiah, in which scripture are emphasized the power of Jehovah, his care for his people, and his yearning desire to bring under his beneficent care those who are ignorant of his purposes concerning them. Through the prophet Isaiah, "Jehovah, he that created the heavens, and stretched them forth; he that spread abroad the earth and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein," declares to his people: "I, Jehovah, have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thy hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles; to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the dungeon, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison-house. . . . Sing unto Jehovah a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth."

I related some of my early experiences in caring for the sick, and showed how outdoor life, exercise, and good food, in connection with the best of treatments and faith in God's healing power, will do wonders in the restoration of health.

Elder Haskell spoke next, on the healing of the one "sick of the palsy." Brother J. F. Ballenger offered the dedicatory prayer. Elder Reaser was chairman of the afternoon service.

While many of the guests were looking over the buildings and grounds, I had a very interesting interview with Dr. Mary L. Potts, the one who formerly owned the property now known as the Paradise Valley Sanitarium. Mrs. Potts is a woman of ability. She is an excellent speaker, and is still going from place to place to deliver public lectures on health and temperance. During the evening exercises she spoke before the large assembly, and told the story of her effort to establish and maintain a sanitarium home in this beautiful place, and of her pleasure because the work she was unable to carry on, is now taken up by us. She seemed to be very thankful that the place is in such good hands.

With the three-story addition, including ample treatment rooms, sun parlors, and rooms for the nurses, there are now about eighty rooms; these, with the cottage on the sanitarium grounds, are sufficient for the accommodation of about seventy-five patients. Through the sacrificing liberality of our brethren and sisters, this institution has been placed on vantage-ground. May the Lord continue to bless those who have given of their means for the establishment of the Paradise Valley Sanitarium.

The Loma Linda Bakery

On the morning of April 26, we returned to Loma Linda, to attend a meeting called for the consideration of the health food business in southern California.

We shall have a work to do at Loma Linda in supplying health foods, in a limited way, to the surrounding cities; but it has been presented to me that in the establishment of a large food factory, the managers of the sanitarium would be disappointed in their expectations. The light given me is that in a food business large enough to supply southern California through the regular channels of trade, it would be difficult to avoid bringing in a spirit of commercialism; and if the perplexing details were not attended to most carefully, there would be more expense than income. The sanitarium managers could ill afford to spend the time that would be required to make the business a success.

Loma Linda is a place that has been especially ordained of God to make a good impression upon the minds of many who have not had the light of present truth. Every phase of the work in this place, every movement made, should be so fully in harmony with the sacred character of present truth as to create a deep spiritual impression.

Everything connected with the institution at Loma Linda should, so far as possible, be unmingled with commercialism. Nothing should be allowed to come in that would in anywise hinder our efforts for the saving of souls. In the management of a small sanitarium bakery, the commercial idea is to be lost sight of. In the carrying forward of every line of sanitarium work, we are to leave upon the minds of our patients the impression that we are keeping constantly in view the glory of God.

When Will He Come?

F. M. BURG

THERE is not another question that is of more interest to the waiting Christian at this time than the above. Brother, sister, how long have you been waiting and looking for the coming of the Lord and the day when the weary pilgrim will enter into rest? Do I hear you say that you have waited much longer than you at first thought you would have to wait for his return?

Are you weary with the many years of watching and longing for that day? I trust that you have no less confidence now, than when you first believed, in the hope of the Saviour's coming. "Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward; . . . for yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Heb. 10:35, 37. It seems as if the Lord foresaw that some would be in danger of losing their confidence in the truth of God and his work for this time; hence he is now, as suggested by this text, sending to his people a reassuring message,—"yet a little while," it will not be long, and "he that shall come," who has promised to come again, "will come, and will not tarry." "There shall be delay no longer." Then let the child of God take courage and look up, "for our redemption draweth nigh."

But are you bewildered as you think of the great work which remains to be done for the world before that day? "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. 24:14. From this we see that there is but one answer to the question, "When will he come?" He will come when all nations have heard the good tidings of the coming King. And yet we are not to say from this that that looked-for day will be indefinitely delayed. There are limitations fixed by the Saviour himself: "This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." Matt. 24:34. That generation is very far advanced now,—we are in its gray hairs; but "heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Verse 35. Hence we are abundantly assured that the tarrying time is short. And knowing this, what about the great work which must be done for the world in so short a time? Confronted as we are with a situation like this, it must appear to every one that if our work for the world is accomplished in the time that remains, it calls for a thorough consecration by us to this cause. The exhortation of the prophet is timely now: "Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes; for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left." Isa. 54:2, 3. We must plan for a work of world-wide proportions. We must lift up our eyes and look on the fields beyond our own local conferences. The planning which we do in our home fields must be with definite reference to the world-wide work. There are teeming millions of men and women in the countries beyond the seas where only the faintest efforts have as yet been put forth in the spread of this great message. These people must be warned, and we who have the truth are to give it to them. How shall we do the work? We can not go, perhaps, to speak in person to them the words of life. But we can do something; we can have a part in the work.

Means must be supplied for the support of those who are called of God to these distant fields. Are we paying a faithful tithe? I give a quotation from the spirit of prophecy in regard to tithe paying: "There is lack of ministers because ministers have not been encouraged. Some ministers who have been sent to foreign lands, to enter fields never worked before, have been given the instruction, 'You must sustain yourselves. We have not the means with which to support you.' This ought not to be, and it would not be if the tithe, with gifts and offerings, was brought into the treasury." This instruction is very plain, and should be heeded. Note, too, that gifts and offerings are mentioned as well as the tithe. In this may be involved the plan which has been

The Joy of Incompleteness

If all our life were one broad glare
Of sunlight, clear, unclouded;
If all our path were smooth and fair,
By no soft gloom enshrouded;
If all life's flowers were fully blown
Without the sweet unfolding,
And happiness were rudely thrown
On hands too weak for holding —
Should we not miss the twilight hours,
The gentle haze and sadness?
Should we not long for storms and showers
To break the constant gladness?

If none were sick, and none were sad,
What service could we render?
I think if we were always glad,
We scarcely could be tender.
Did our beloved never need
Our patient ministration,
Earth would grow cold, and miss indeed
Its sweetest consolation!
If sorrow never claimed our heart,
And every wish were granted,
Patience would die, and hope depart,
Life would be disenchanted.

And yet in heaven is no more night;
In heaven is no more sorrow!
Such unimagined new delight,
Fresh grace from pain will borrow.
As the poor seed that underground
Seeks its true life above it,
Not knowing what will there be found
When sunbeams kiss and love it;
So we in darkness upward grow,
And look and long for heaven,
But can not picture it below
Till more of light be given.

A Visit to Mountain View

On the morning of May 2, we left Loma Linda, and started on our homeward journey. Passing through Los Angeles, we rested an hour or two at the treatment rooms, and took the afternoon north-bound train over the Coast Line.

I had planned to spend a day at Fernando, but on account of a severe cold recently contracted, dared not undertake labor there. I did not want to see the ruins of San Francisco, and dreaded to stop at Mountain View. But the next morning, as we neared Mountain View, we decided to stop over for a few hours.

The board of managers of the Pacific Press Publishing Company felt the need of counsel, and urged that we remain over the Sabbath. We finally consented to do so. Thursday afternoon we met with the brethren in council. I spoke a short time. The following day I was ill, and very weak. The cold had taken a firm hold on my system. I doubted if I should be able to speak on the morrow. However, I ventured to allow the brethren to make an appointment for me to address the people Sabbath forenoon. I made the Lord my entire dependence; for I knew that unless he should be my helper, I could not speak more than a few words. My throat and head were greatly troubled. I was so hoarse that I could scarcely speak aloud.

Sabbath morning I felt no better. At the appointed hour, I went over to the chapel, and found it crowded. I feared I should fail, but began talking. The moment I began to speak, strength was imparted. I was relieved of hoarseness, and spoke without difficulty for nearly an hour. My illness seemed to disappear, and my mind was clear. As soon as I finished speaking, the hoarseness came upon me again, and I began coughing and sneezing as before.

To me, this experience was a marked evidence of divine help. I am so grateful to my Heavenly Father for this special miracle of his power, which gave me no chance to entertain any doubt but that he had a message for me to bear to the people. I was very ill in the afternoon, and restless during the night; but Sunday I was able to sit up in bed and write a few pages. Monday, May 7, we returned home, passing through San Francisco en route.

The Sabbath Sermon

The last prayer of Christ, as recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John, formed the basis of my remarks. Standing in the shadow of the cross, the Saviour here presented principles that lie at the foundation of all true Christian experience. Lifting up his eyes unto heaven, he said: "Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee: as thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

Fathers and mothers may find special encouragement in these words. Their greatest desire in behalf of their children should be to train them in the knowledge of "the only true God, and Jesus Christ," who was sent by the Father to bring to us the gift of life eternal. Of Abraham, the great Searcher of hearts declared, "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment." There will be no betraying of truth, no yielding to the temptation of Satan to allow the children and the household to control. By the influence of decided authority mingled with love, the wise parent will rule his household in the fear of God.

In connection with the petition of Christ, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth," I felt impelled by the Spirit of God to appeal to the youth to study the Word. Let every one covenant with God to study the Word. Dear youth, cease to read the magazines containing stories. Put away every novel. In the days of Paul, those who were converted at Ephesus burned their magical books. We would do well to clear our houses of all the story magazines and the publications containing ridiculous pictures — representations originated by satanic agencies. The youth can not afford to poison their minds with such things. "What is the chaff to the wheat?" Let every one who claims to be a follower of Christ, read only that which is true and of eternal value. "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

May the Lord help us to appropriate the instruction that Christ gave his disciples just prior to his crucifixion. We are to build up one another in the most holy faith. A Christian can not mingle with worldlings as one of their number. Though living in the world, we are not to be of the world. He who acts as a worldling, while retaining his name on the church book, greatly dishonors God.

In his prayer the Saviour has revealed his desire that our conduct be such that the Father can have the same love for us, and the same interest in our salvation, that he had for his only begotten Son. He desires that we shall partake freely of the divine nature, and thus escape the corruption that is in the world.

We must prepare ourselves for most solemn duties. A world is to be saved. The work is advancing in a most marvelous manner in foreign lands; and even within the shadow of our doors there are many, many opportunities for communicating to others the saving truths of the third angel's message. Publications are to be distributed like the leaves of autumn. This is the message that has been coming to us from the Lord for many years. In view of the great work to be done, how can any one afford to waste precious time and God-given means in doing those things that are not for his best good or for the glory of God? The Scriptures are to be studied diligently, and are to be made the man of our counsel. None can afford to neglect this source of strength and blessing.

A Solemn Message to Our Youth

While in Mountain View, I was instructed, as God's messenger, to appeal to the youth connected with our institutional work. This message is applicable to all young men and young women who claim to be Sabbath-keepers, and especially to those who are laboring in our institutions: —

Dear youth, there is great need of your examining yourselves. Many perished in the fearful calamity at San Francisco. How many who were destroyed by that awful earthquake, were prepared for death? How many who are still alive, will be admonished? None of us can foretell where the next destructive earthquake may be permitted to come. Who are prepared?

Our young people need to be surrounded with wholesome, uplifting influences. They are to be kept in the love of the truth. The standard set before them should be high. Some feel a desire to be left without restraint, that they may do as they please. Those who are connected with our institutions in positions of responsibility should take upon themselves the burden of caring for the souls of those placed under their charge.

The fathers and mothers, too, in the church, are under sacred obligation to watch for the souls of their children as they that must give an account. Let none, neither parents nor the youth, begin to believe that amusements are essential, and that a careless disregard of the Holy Spirit during hours of selfish pleasure, is to be looked upon as a light matter. God will not be mocked. Let every young man, every young woman, consider: "Am I prepared to-day for my life to close? Have I the heart preparation that fits me to do the work which the Lord has given me to do?"

Every youth should make God's Word his guide, and daily gather from the Word the instruction given. If some refuse to be guided by this instruction, they are sowing seeds that the enemy has placed in their hands, and they will not care to reap the harvest. In view of the abundant opportunity given every one to walk in the light of God's Word, is it not sad to think that some are choosing their own way of careless pleasure?

Every talent of influence is to be sacredly cherished and used for the purpose of gathering souls to Christ. Young men and young women should not think that their sports, their evening parties and musical entertainments, as usually conducted, are acceptable to Christ.

Light has been given me, again and again, that all our gatherings should be characterized by a decided religious influence. If our young people would assemble to read and understand the Scriptures, asking, "What shall I do that I may have eternal life?" and then place themselves unitedly upon the side of truth, the Lord Jesus would let his blessing come into their hearts.

O that every church-member, every worker in our institutions, might realize that this life is a school in which to prepare for examination by the God of heaven, with regard to purity, cleanness of thought, unselfishness of action! Every word and act, every thought, is recorded on the record books of heaven.

As God's messenger, I am now instructed to speak to all, including the youth: We are still spared; and now we have a precious opportunity to think to some purpose. Some of our Sabbathkeepers who have had great light, have allowed their children to have very much their own way, until the leaven of an evil influence has permeated other households. The parents are to be called to an account, if they do not bring sound doctrine into their home life; for only by doing their duty faithfully may they hope to see sound practises in the lives of their children. The form of sound words is to be fully appreciated; but unless these words lead to right acts, the work has been left unfinished.

To all, old and young, the word of the Lord is: Let the truth of God be inwrought in mind and soul. Let your prayer be, "O Lord, preserve my soul, that I shall not dishonor thee." Let your prayers ascend to God, that he may sanctify the soul in thought, in word, in spirit, in every transaction. Plead with God that not one thread of selfishness shall be woven into the fabric of your character. Let the prayer be offered: "Sanctify my heart through the truth. Let thy angels keep my soul in strict integrity. Let my mind be impressed with the simple, searching maxims in thy Word, given to guide me in this life as a preparation for the future, eternal life."

It is through the power and prevalence of truth that we must be sanctified, and elevated to the true dignity of the standard set forth in the Word. The way of the Lord can be learned only through most careful obedience to his Word. Study the Word.

Manifesting the Glory

D. T. SHIREMAN

IN "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VI, page 11, we read: "All the light of the past, all the light which shines in the present and reaches forth into the future, as revealed in the Word of God, is for every soul who will receive it. The glory of this light, which is the very glory of the character of Christ, is to be manifested in the individual Christian, in the family, in the church, in the ministry of the word, and in every institution established by God's people. All these the Lord designs shall be symbols of what can be done for the world. They are to be types of the saving power of the truths of the gospel. They are agencies in the fulfilment of God's great purpose for the human race. God's people are to be channels for the outworking of the highest influence in the universe."

Dear reader, will you kindly stop and read over slowly and thoughtfully the preceding paragraph two or three times? It seems to me it is time for every believer in the Word of God to get these thoughts so fixed in his mind that they will shine out in his every-day life so clearly that all around him will see, and thus be warned of the great day of God. The people of the Lord will be ready for translation when all the light of the past and of the present shines out in their lives. Beloved, let us believe all that God has shown us. Let us reflect the light the Lord has given us.

Are there things in us that must be laid aside? Let us lay them aside to-day; let us not wait for a more convenient time. Is there anything we should do that we are not doing to bring us the blessing of the Lord? Let us do it, and let us begin now, for in neglecting our duty we are on dangerous ground, and our lives are not safe a moment. Somebody will be ready when our High Priest lays aside his priestly garment. Somebody will be hoping to be ready, but will not be.

The Lord is calling for you and me to be representatives of his divine character. The number of the redeemed will soon be made up of the true, honest men and women who are walking in the light. The light of present truth is shining upon these honest persons from the heavenly sanctuary. All the angels of God are engaging in the closing work of bringing the light to them.

Our Heavenly Father is waiting to reveal himself to his people. All heaven is astir. Satan, too, understands this; and many are parleying with him, and will lose their souls at last. This old earth is groaning under its load of sin and suffering, and is soon to fall to rise no more. All the wicked must sink with it, while the righteous dead will come forth from their dusty beds in robes of immortal beauty, and the living saints, changed in a moment, will mount up to meet their Lord, and take their journey through the air to the city of God. O praise the Lord for his goodness and mercy! it endureth forever.

Moral Backbone and No Compromise

JOHN M. HOPKINS

"THEREFORE, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." 1 Cor. 15:58. "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." 1 Cor. 16:13.

In one sense every one stands alone. Every one has his individual realm, his circle in which to operate, his niche in life to fill, and no other person can occupy that place. That particular place is where he is to move, to toil, to develop and grow, or to reveal to all around him whatever weakness may be peculiar to himself. And just here comes the test of loyalty, the real proof of true manhood and true womanhood, of true loyalty to principle and duty.

It is no difficult matter to glide or drift along with the tide. It is not difficult to float down stream. A few days ago the writer, in company with an old fisherman, was some distance from land on one of our beautiful lakes in Minnesota. He did not find it at all hard to manage the boat when there was no wind, or to let her drive with the strong gale. But when it was necessary to "tack about" and force the boat against the gale and the rolling waves, it was a very different thing. So it is in Christian living.

The Christian may not always consult or follow inclination. He may not at all times be surrounded with agreeable environments. It may be that sometimes his lot is cast in a place that is altogether opposed to his tastes, may even be very distasteful to him. Congeniality, pleasant associations, and those things that brighten and sweeten life for him,

As Thy Day

As this my day! O, promise blest!
Sweet words of comfort, words of rest!
No more with boding fear I wait
To read to-morrow's hidden fate.
Whate'er its toils, whate'er its tears,
Whate'er its perils, pains, and fears,
While sun and stars and worlds endure,
The old, sweet promise standeth sure.

The Hand that holds the world upbears
My weary heart with all its cares.
The Eye that slumbers not has seen
My graveyard mounds with grasses green.
My Father's pitying love has read
The pain behind the tears I shed.
How comforting his words to me,
"Child, as thy day, thy strength shall be."

As this my day! my little day!
My broken, troubled, thwarted day;
The day whose roseate morning bloom
Was quenched and darkened into gloom!
The morn of gifts! the noon of loss!
The lengthening shadow of the cross!
Once more, my Father, say to me,
"Child, as thy day, thy strength shall be."

A Messenger

MRS. E. G. WHITE

My Life Today, p. 261 (3)

Welfare Ministry p 321-322 (5)

LAST night, in vision, I was standing before an assembly of our people, bearing a decided testimony regarding present truth and present duty. After the discourse, many gathered about me, asking questions. They desired so many explanations about this point, and that point, and another point, that I said, "One at a time, if you please, lest you confuse me."

And then I appealed to them, saying: "For years you have had many evidences that the Lord has given me a work to do. These evidences could scarcely have been greater than they are. Will you brush away all these evidences as a cobweb, at the suggestion of a man's unbelief? That which makes my heart ache is the fact that many who are now perplexed and tempted are those who have had abundance of evidence and opportunity to consider and pray and understand; and yet they do not discern the nature of the sophistries that are presented to influence them to reject the warnings God has given to save them from the delusions of these last days."

(1) Some have stumbled over the fact that I said I did not claim to be a prophet; and they have asked, Why is this?

I have had no claims to make, only that I am instructed that I am the Lord's messenger; that he called me in my youth to be his messenger, to receive his word, and to give a clear and decided message in the name of the Lord Jesus.

(1) Early in my youth I was asked several times, Are you a prophet? I have ever responded, I am the Lord's messenger. I know that many have called me a prophet, but I have made no claim to this title. My Saviour declared me to be his messenger. "Your work," he instructed me, "is to bear my word. Strange things will arise, and in your youth I set you apart to bear the message to the erring ones, to carry the word before unbelievers, and with pen and voice to reprove from the Word actions that are not right. Exhort from the Word. I will make my Word open to you. It shall not be as a strange language. In the true eloquence of simplicity, with voice and pen, the messages that I give shall be heard from one who has never learned in the schools. My Spirit and my power shall be with you.

"Be not afraid of man, for my shield shall protect you. It is not you that speaketh: it is the Lord that giveth the messages of warning and reproof. Never deviate from the truth under any circumstances. Give the light I shall give you. The messages for these last days shall be written in books, and shall stand immortalized, to testify against those who have once rejoiced in the light, but who have been led to give it up because of the seductive influences of evil."

Why have I not claimed to be a prophet? — Because in these days many who boldly claim that they are prophets are a reproach to the cause of Christ; and because my work includes much more than the word "prophet" signifies. (2) When this work was first given me, I begged the Lord to lay the burden on some one else. The work was so large and broad and deep that I feared I could not do it. But by his Holy Spirit the Lord has enabled me to perform the work which he gave me to do.

God has made plain to me the various ways in which he would use me to carry forward a special work. Visions have been given me, with the promise, "If you deliver the messages faithfully and endure to the end, you shall eat of the fruit of the tree of life, and drink of the water of the river of life."

The Lord gave me great light on health reform. In connection with my husband, I was to be a medical missionary worker. I was to set an example to the church by taking the sick to my home and caring for them. This I have done, giving the women and children vigorous treatment. I was also to speak on the subject of Christian temperance, as the Lord's appointed messenger. I engaged heartily in this work, and spoke to large assemblies on temperance in its broadest and truest sense.

(3) I was instructed that I must ever urge upon those who profess to believe the truth, the necessity of practising the truth. This means sanctification, and sanctification means the culture and training of every capability for the Lord's service.

I was charged not to neglect or pass by those who were being wronged. I was specially charged to protest against any arbitrary or overbearing action toward the ministers of the gospel by those having official authority. Disagreeable though the duty may be, I am to reprove the oppressor, and plead for justice. I am to present the necessity of maintaining justice and equity in all our institutions.

If I see those in positions of trust neglecting aged ministers, I am to present the matter to those whose duty it is to care for them. Ministers who have faithfully done their work are not to be forgotten or neglected when they have become feeble in health. Our conferences are not to disregard the needs of those who have borne the burdens of the work. (4) It was after John had grown old in the service of the Lord that he was exiled to Patmos. And on that lonely isle he received more communications from heaven than he had received during the rest of his lifetime.

(5) After my marriage I was instructed that I must show a special interest in motherless and fatherless children, taking some under my own charge for a time, and then finding homes for them. Thus I would be giving others an example of what they could do.

Although called to travel often, and having much writing to do, I have taken children of three and five years of age, and have cared for them, educated them, and trained them for responsible positions. I have taken into my home from time to time boys from ten to sixteen years of age, giving them motherly care, and a training for service. I have felt it my duty to bring before our people that work for which those in every church should feel a responsibility.

While in Australia I carried on this same line of work, taking into my home orphan children, who were in danger of being exposed to temptations that might cause the loss of their souls.

In Australia we also worked as Christian medical missionaries. At times I made my home in Cooranbong an asylum for the sick and afflicted. My secretary, who had received a training in the Battle Creek Sanitarium, stood by my side, and did the work of a missionary nurse. No charge was made for her services, and we won the confidence of the people by the interest that we manifested in the sick and suffering. After a time the Health Retreat at Cooranbong was built, and then we were relieved of this burden.

(1) To claim to be a prophetess is something that I have never done. If others call me by that name, I have no controversy with them. But my work has covered so many lines that I can not call myself other than a messenger, sent to bear a message from the Lord to his people, and to take up work in any line that he points out.

When I was last in Battle Creek, I said before a large congregation that I did not claim to be a prophetess. Twice I referred to this matter, intending each

Ques. on Doct., p. 92 (1); Messenger to the Remnant p. 125 (2) time to make the statement, "I do not claim to be a prophetess." If I spoke otherwise than this, let all now understand that what I had in mind to say was that I do not claim the title of prophet or prophetess.

I understood that some were anxious to know if Mrs. White still held the same views that she did years ago when they had heard her speak in the sanitarium grove, in the Tabernacle, and at the camp-meetings held in the suburbs of Battle Creek. I assured them that the message she bears to-day is the same that she has borne during the sixty years of her public ministry. She has the same service to do for the Master that was laid upon her in her girlhood. She receives lessons from the same Instructor. The directions given her are, "Make known to others what I have revealed to you. Write out the messages that I give you, that the people may have them." This is what she has endeavored to do.

I have written many books, and they have been given a wide circulation. Of myself I could not have brought out the truth in these books, but the Lord has given me the help of his Holy Spirit. These books, giving the instruction that the Lord has given me during the past sixty years, contain light from heaven, and will bear the test of investigation.

At the age of seventy-eight I am still toiling. We are all in the hands of the Lord. I trust in him; for I know that he will never leave nor forsake those who put their trust in him. I have committed myself to his keeping.

"And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry."

Our Duty in the Present Crisis

GEO. O. STATES

In every age in the history of God's people they have been brought at different times to a crisis where everything depended on their taking the right position. Such a crisis was reached when Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, "Who is on the Lord's side?" Elijah, who was a type of those who will be translated, came many times where he had to stand almost alone, and on one occasion he was accused of being the one who had made all the trouble, yet he stood boldly before Ahab and said. "I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord."

It has always been true that in the midst of trying circumstances those who remained loyal to God's truth have been accused of making all the trouble. There is no doubt in my mind that we have reached such a crisis in our work, and I find those among our people who feel that there is too much being said in the Review relating to the issues in Battle Creek, and that our leaders are making too much of those things. Brethren, the facts are that the very pillars of this message are being attacked, and that we have come to a time when every one who believes the third angel's message will be forced to take his stand firmly on the truth that has stood the test from the very beginning of this message to the present time.

We have reached a time when every loyal Seventh-day Adventist must take a decided stand for the whole message, for unless we do, the curse of Meroz will rest upon us. What had that people done? — Simply nothing. God's work had reached a crisis, and men and women were needed to stand firm for principles of right; their sin lay in doing nothing. Before God's people are translated, they will come to as close tests as did Enoch, and only those who stand firm in the midst of bitter opposition will be redeemed from among men.

T. E. BOWEN

"Christ's oft-repeated statement that his kingdom was not of this world offended Judas. He had marked out a line upon which he expected Christ to work. He had planned that John the Baptist should be delivered from prison. But lo, John was left to be beheaded. . . . He thought that if Jesus would not prevent the disciples from carrying out their schemes, the work would be more successful. He marked the increasing enmity of the Jewish leaders, and saw their challenge unheeded when they demanded from Christ a sign from heaven. His heart was open to unbelief, and the enemy supplied thoughts of questioning and rebellion. Why did Jesus dwell so much upon that which was discouraging? Why did he predict trial and persecution for himself and for his disciples? The prospect of having a high place in the new kingdom had led Judas to espouse the cause of Christ. Were his hopes to be disappointed? Judas had not decided that Jesus was not the Son of God; but he was questioning, and seeking to find some explanation of his mighty works. . . .

"Christ's discourse in the synogogue concerning the bread of life was the turning-point in the history of Judas. He heard the words, 'Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.' He saw that Christ was offering spiritual rather than worldly good. He regarded himself as far-sighted, and thought he could see that Jesus would have no honor, and that he could bestow no high position upon his followers. He determined not to unite himself so closely to Christ but that he could draw away. He would watch. And he did watch."—"Desire of Ages," pages 718, 719.

Judas proposed to be safe. He would burn no bridges behind; for later they might be of use to him. He therefore would not incur too much displeasure of the church. He would be friendly with all. The little band might come to grief and need the friendly assistance of the rabbis.

He now began to express doubts which greatly confused the disciples. "He introduced controversies and misleading sentiments, repeating the arguments urged by the scribes and Pharisees against the claims of Christ. . . . He would introduce texts of Scripture that had no connection with the truths Christ was presenting. These texts, separated from their connection, perplexed the disciples, and increased the discouragement that was constantly pressing upon them. Yet all this was done by Judas in such a way as to make it appear that he was conscientious. . . . In all that Christ said to his disciples, there was something with which, in heart, Judas disagreed. Under his influence the leaven of disaffection was fast doing its work. The disciples did not see the real agency in all this; but Jesus saw that Satan was communicating his attributes to Judas, and thus opening up a channel through which to influence the other disciples. This, a year before the betrayal, Christ declared. 'Have not I chosen you twelve,' he said, 'and one of you is a devil?' Yet Judas made no open opposition, nor seemed to question the Saviour's lessons."—Ibid., pages 719, 720.

"Jesus, seeing that to antagonize was but to harden, refrained from direct conflict. The narrowing selfishness of Judas' life Christ sought to heal through contact with his own self-sacrificing love. In his teaching he unfolded principles that struck at the root of the disciple's self-centered ambitions. Lesson after lesson was thus given, and many a time Judas realized that his character had been portrayed, and his sin pointed out; but he would not yield."

"Jesus reproved his disciples, he warned and cautioned them; but John and Peter and their brethren did not leave him. Notwithstanding the reproofs, they chose to be with Jesus. And the Saviour did not, because of their errors, withdraw from them. He takes men as they are, with all their faults and weaknesses, and trains them for his service, if they will be disciplined and taught by him. But there was one of the twelve to whom, until very near the close of his work, Christ spoke no word of reproof."—"Education," pages 91, 92. And that disciple was Judas.

Thus step by step Judas was led on to work out the will of Satan, while professedly being a servant of Christ. All this pleased the enemy well; for well did he understand that could he get his evil insinuations, his strife and discord, into that inner circle of Christ's trusted followers, he could perplex Jesus much, and he hoped thus ultimately to compass their ruin. And well-nigh did his scheme carry; for every disciple forsook Christ and fled when the crucial test came upon them. Had it not been that Christ's faithful pleadings for them had been recorded, all would have been sifted out. "And the Lord said, Simon,

To Be Alive

"How beautiful it is to be alive!"
To wake each morn as if the Maker's grace
Did us afresh from nothingness derive,
That we might sing, "How happy is our case!
How beautiful it is to be alive!"

To read in God's great Book, until we feel
Love for the love that gave it, then, to kneel
Close up to him whose truth our souls will shrive,
While every moment's joy doth more reveal
How beautiful it is to be alive!

Rather to go without what might increase
Our worldly standing, than our souls deprive
Of frequent speech with God, or than to cease
To feel, though having wasted health or peace,
How beautiful it is to be alive!

Not to forget, when pain and grief draw nigh,
Into the ocean of time past to dive
For memories of God's mercies, or try
To bear all, sweetly hoping still to cry,
How beautiful it is to be alive!

Aggressive Work to Be Done

MRS. E. G. WHITE

To Ministers and Physicians,—

There is a heavy burden resting on my soul. I pray the Lord to impress the hearts of his people with the solemnity of the time in which they are living, and with the necessity of making straight paths for their feet. Some who have long known the truth are confused by leaders who have been walking in false paths.

"I am the way, the truth, and the life," Christ declares. "No man cometh unto the Father, but by me." Those who have a living connection with Christ will reveal it by their works. "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone."

We have reached an important chapter in our experience. We have advance movements to make. Straightforward work must be done. Faith without works is dead, unproductive of good. Faith works by love, and purifies the soul; faith must be revealed and substantiated by works. There is a spurious faith, which does not work to the point, because the heart is decidedly opposed to the truth. Some may take comfort in the thought that God will number them with his people because they make a profession. We may have a measure of faith, a knowledge of the theory of truth, but unless self dies, unless we live Christ's life of obedience, our profession is worthless.

Nothing can take the place of obedience to a "Thus saith the Lord." Knowledge that does not lead to a practise of self-denial and self-sacrifice, to a daily walk in the footsteps of Christ, but rather to self-exaltation and self-sufficiency, is opposed to practical godliness. God calls for obedience.

Self-sufficiency, exercised in a family or an institution, means great injury to the work of God. It is destructive to the spiritual life of those who cherish it. True faith leads away from selfish plans and from the self-pleasing life. Obedience, in order to be acceptable to God, must be the whole-souled obedience that Christ ever offered to the Father.

In response to the question, Who shall enter the kingdom of heaven? Christ says, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

What must we do to inherit eternal life? The answer is, Keep the commandments. To the question, Who are the blessed? Christ answers, "Blessed are they that hear the Word of God, and keep it." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie."

The theories that lead to unbelief in the Word of God and to a lack of the faith that works by love and purifies the soul, are theories of the enemy. They may be very pleasing, and very attractive, but they develop into strange doctrines, which unsettle faith in the past experience of God's people, and take away the foundation pillars. These theories have come in among us, and have been a seductive power, robbing some of the faith that enables human beings to see where they are living in the history of the world. They are false theories, leading away from the truth into subtle errors.

When physicians are diligent students of the Scriptures, when our ministers live in accordance with the Word of God, making this Word their text-book, then the truth will be proclaimed with power, and souls will be converted.

Christ, our divine Teacher, and the greatest Medical Missionary that ever trod this earth, came to our world at great sacrifice to show human beings the correct light in which to regard God. He has given his life as our example in all things. I have been instructed that those who in the daily life heed not the instructions of the Bible, do not know God or Christ, whom he has sent. Those who have not lived the Scriptures will invent sophistries to occupy the mind and absorb the attention, and teach things that the One who owns men— body, soul, and spirit — has not said should be taught.

Just before his ascension, Christ gave his disciples a wonderful presentation, as recorded in the twenty-eighth chapter of Matthew. This chapter contains instruction that our ministers, our physicians, our youth, and all our church-members need to study most earnestly. Those who study this instruction as they should will not dare advocate theories that have no foundation in the Word of God. My brethren and sisters, make the Scriptures, which contain the alpha and the omega of knowledge, your study. All through the Old Testament and the New there are things that are not half understood.

"Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

The giving of this message is our work in the world. Those of our people who are living in large centers would gain a precious experience, if, with their Bibles in their hands, and their hearts open to the impressions of the Holy Spirit, they would go forth to the highways and byways of the world with the message they have received. (1) There is aggressive work to be done. Evangelistic work, opening the Scriptures to others, warning men and women of what is coming upon the world, is to occupy more and still more of the time of God's servants. (2)

Regarding the messages he had written out, John the Revelator declared: "I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things,"— to lessen the force of their meaning,— "God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book." Many will make the words of the Revelation a spiritualistic mystery, robbing them of their solemn import. God declares that his judgments shall fall with increased dreadfulness upon any one who shall try to change the solemn words written in this book — the Revelation of Jesus Christ. "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein; for the time is at hand." "If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book. He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

"Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey?" Study these words. Study the instruction found in Matt. 25:14-46. Compare this instruction with your life record. Let every man put away his boasting. Self-sufficiency is a fearfully dangerous thing for any one to entertain. It leads men to make of no effect the words of Christ.

Let us walk in the footsteps of Christ,

Evangelism p. 50, 17 (1) (2)

in all the humility of true faith. Let us put away all self-trust, committing ourselves, day by day and hour by hour, to the Saviour, constantly receiving and imparting his grace. I beg those who profess to believe in Christ to walk humbly before God. Pride and self-exaltation are an offense to him. "If any man will come after me," Christ declares, "let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Those only who obey this word will he recognize as his believing ones. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

"And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." O, wonderful condescension! The Prince of heaven, the Commander of the heavenly hosts, stepped down from his high position, laid aside his royal robe and kingly crown, and clothed his divinity with humanity, that he might become the divine Teacher of all classes of men, and live before human beings a life free from all selfishness and sin, setting them an example of what, through his grace, they may become.

"The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth." Praise God for this wonderful statement! The possibilities that it presents seem almost too great for us to grasp, and put to shame our weakness and our unbelief. Let us praise God that we can see our Saviour by faith. Let us grasp the great gift. Our only hope in this life is to reach forth the hand of faith, and grasp the hand outstretched to save. Daily we are to "behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." If we would look away from self to Jesus, making him our guide, the world would see in our churches a power that it does not now see.

T. E. BOWEN

Coming down to the close of Christ's work, the last night the Saviour spent with his disciples, the crisis is reached in the life of Judas. When he had decided in his own mind not to identify himself so fully with Christ and his cause but that he could easily get out of it, in case it did not succeed,— and his was the worldly standard for success, sure failure in the spiritual,— he opened the way for his last terrible work of betraying his Lord into the hands of his enemies.

He already had bargained to deliver Christ into the hands of the chief priests for thirty pieces of silver. But he did not consider this as a very wicked thing to do. He reasoned this way: He keeps saying that he must go up to Jerusalem and die. If he does that, then his work is a failure anyhow — no deliverance for Israel as the Scriptures have plainly foretold [misapplied scripture]. If he is really the Messiah, then my delivering him over into the hand of the chief priests will only give him another opportunity of manifesting his divine power, as he so many times has done in the past, in escaping their hand. In this case the cause will be ahead thirty pieces of silver. In either case, I shall be safe myself, and whichever way it turns, I shall have the glory. Anyhow, I will bring the matter to a decision.

With all this in the mind of Judas, and the betrayal bargain made, Jesus and the disciples assembled for the passover feast. No one but Jesus knew that it was the last night he would spend with them. He had told them he was soon to leave them, but they were so bent on getting the most honorable place that they heeded not what was said. This contention and strife made the heart of the Lord very sorrowful. He would give them one more lesson in true greatness — true humility. Judas had pressed to what he supposed the highest place next to Christ. John was on the other side. Jesus then arose, and, as a servant, began to wash Judas's feet. The heart of Christ longed for Judas. Divine love was loath to give him up. "When the Saviour's hands were bathing those soiled feet, and wiping them with the towel, the heart of Judas thrilled through and through with the impulse then and there to confess his sin." Had he done so, life and forgiveness would have been his. "But he would not humble himself. He hardened his heart against repentance; and the old impulses, for the moment put aside, again controlled him. Judas was now offended at Christ's act in washing the feet of his disciples. If Jesus could so humble himself, he thought, he could not be Israel's king. All hope of worldly honor in a temporal kingdom was destroyed. Judas was satisfied that there was nothing to be gained by following Christ, . . . and he resolved to complete the work he had agreed to do in betraying his Lord." Had Judas yielded then while Jesus and God's Spirit were yearning for his soul, his sin would even then have been forgiven him. Again they gather around the table. Every eye is upon the Lord. All are impressed with the solemnity of the occasion. With trembling lips Jesus said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me." The disciples in consternation look from one to another, and ask, "Is it I?" until all have spoken but Judas. Seeing that all were looking at him, he, too, repeats the question, "Is it I?"

Let it be noted that up to this crucial moment Judas had passed as one of the twelve, not one of the disciples thinking him disloyal to the cause and work of Christ.

Still Judas might have broken down and confessed his awful treachery. "He it is," Jesus said, "to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas." Then, his treachery being exposed, Judas gave himself over to the enemy, and the record says, from that time "Satan entered into him." When Judas closed the door behind him, he shut himself forever away from the pardoning love of Christ — simply because he had refused it — and went out into night — that awful darkness and night of a ruined, lost soul.

The next we see of Judas, he is at the head of a mob with swords and clubs and torches, bent on the arrest of Jesus. Think of the awful gulf spanned by Judas between the time when he decided, after hearing Jesus tell those about him that they must eat his flesh and drink his blood, that he would not too closely unite his interests to the cause of Christ, and the time when he is standing at the head of this murderous mob. Little did he think then that it would come to this, and yet this was all in that other decision he had made when none but God knew.

Without much trouble on Judas's part they find the Saviour. They are greeted differently than they had expected. No fight, no struggle, but with a calm bearing, Jesus meets the mob with the question, "Whom seek ye?" "They [the mob] answered him, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am he. And Judas also, which betrayed him, stood with them." Notice, the work of Judas was all unnecessary after all. He was along with the mob for the express purpose of identifying Jesus. This was all they wanted of Judas. They knew that he knew him, and they were very anxious not to get the wrong man, so Judas was hired to point him out. How foolish Judas must have felt as he stood there, with the mob, and yet without a single thing for him to do. Christ gave himself up, but asked protection for the eleven that were standing with him.

When Jesus finished saying, "I am" [the word "he" being supplied], a mighty angel, that one who had just strengthened the Lord, passed between the mob and the Saviour. Instantly they, and Judas with the rest, became as dead. When they came to and had risen to their feet, they were again met with that same question, "Whom seek ye?" Judas, then thinking of his forgotten task, approaches the Lord. As he did so, Jesus made it plain to him, as well as to all who heard, that he read his heart; for he asks, "Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss?" But the traitorous kiss is given, and quickly the mob seize upon their coveted prey.

When Judas beheld his Master meekly permit his hands to be bound, again he was surprised, for he expected to see Christ perform a mighty miracle and release himself. Thus worldly policy and wisdom again fail. The human is sure to err. The wisdom of earth becomes foolishness when arrayed against the purposes of Jehovah. Judas knew nothing of that terrible experience through which his divine Lord had passed the night before, which brought the Son to where even he could say, "Not my will, but thine, be done." He was a stranger

The Heavenly Presence

O! He wakes me from my dreaming
To behold him face to face;
And he saves and keeps me ever
With the fulness of his grace.
And he does not keep me waiting
Till I reach the home above,
But he satisfies me daily
With the sweetness of his love.

Though my way leads o'er the hilltops,
With the sunshine beaming fair,
And the rarest flowers, nodding,
Breathe a welcome everywhere;
Or a-down the lonely valley,
With the shadows falling drear —
Still he satisfies me fully,
For I feel his presence near.

Hold Fast the Beginning of Your Confidence

MRS. E. G. WHITE

For many months I have been troubled as I have seen that some of our brethren whom God has used in his cause are now perplexed over the scientific theology which has come in to lead men away from a true faith in God. Sabbath night, a week ago, after I had been prayerfully studying over these things, I had a vision, in which I was speaking before a large company, where many questions were asked concerning my work and writings. (1)

I was directed by a messenger from heaven not to take the burden of picking up and answering all the sayings and doubts that are being put into many minds. "Stand as the messenger of God anywhere, in any place," I was bidden, "and bear the testimony I shall give you. Be free. Bear the testimonies that the Lord has for you to bear in reproof, in rebuke, in the work of encouraging and lifting up the soul; 'teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.'"

After the vision I prayed aloud with great fervor and earnestness. My soul was strengthened; for the words had been spoken: "Be strong, yea, be strong. Let none of the misleading words of ministers or physicians distress your mind. Tell them to take the light given them in publications. Truth will always bear away the victory. Go straight forward with your work.

"If the Holy Spirit is rejected, all my words will not help to remove, even for the time being, the false representations that have been made, and Satan stands ready to invent more. If the evidence already given is rejected, all other evidence will be useless until there is seen the converting power of God upon minds. If the convincing impressions of the Holy Spirit made in the past will not be accepted as trustworthy evidence, nothing that can be presented hereafter will reach them, because the bewitching guile of Satan has perverted their discernment."

To those who have been convinced again and again as the Holy Spirit has borne witness, all the words that can now be said can not be as forcible as the impression made by the Holy Spirit of God.

To my brethren I say, Go forward. Be of good courage. Whenever the Spirit of God is entertained in the place of the underworking of evil influences on mind and heart, those who have been working against God will come to their right bearings. A great work is to be done now in convicting souls. The message must in no case be changed from what it has been. As has been foretold in the Scriptures, there will be seducing spirits and doctrines of devils in the midst of the church, and these evil influences will increase; but hold fast the beginning of your confidence firm unto the end.

Let not souls be drawn into Battle Creek. Warnings are to be given. A message similar to that borne by John the Baptist is to be heard. But beware of men; for they will seek to divert the mind from the necessity of heeding the true issues for this time. Carry on the work now for those who need the truth, and who have not resisted evidences of the truth for fallacies and scientific imaginations.

[The time is at hand when Satan will work miracles to confirm minds in the belief that he is God. All the people of God are now to stand on the platform of truth as it has been given in the third angel's message. All the pleasant pictures, all the miracles wrought, will be presented in order that, if possible, the very elect shall be deceived. The only hope for any one is to hold fast the evidences that have confirmed the truth in righteousness.] Let these be proclaimed over and over again, until the close of this earth's history.] (2)

The perils of the last days are upon us. Devote not precious time in trying to convince those who would change the truth of God into a lie. Proclaim the third angel's message. Bear a straightforward, clear-cut message.

Thus I was speaking before a perplexed company just before I called them to take their stand on the right side. If some choose another position, let them alone. Labor for those who have never had the evidence of truth. So long as men hold fast to men, and believe men in the place of the word of God, you can do little to help them. You are working against principalities and powers, as is represented in Eph. 6:12.

We are to revive the truth; to stand in the truth. Whoever is determined to depart from the faith can not be helped by you. All your reasoning will be as idle tales.

Take the banner of truth and hold it aloft, higher and still higher. The Lord calls for faithful minutemen. Go into the cities that need the message of a soon-coming Saviour. Thousands of unbelievers in our cities need to hear the last message of warning.

It is Satan's plan to produce these variances, to keep our minds on dissensions and unprofitable problems until the last woe shall come upon the world. Time now is too precious to be lost through confusion. Proclaim to the world that Christ is soon coming.

Gather not at Battle Creek; spoil not the minds of youth, physicians, and ministers. Set at work in the cause of God every soul who has heeded the words of warning given.

I have been instructed that it is not extravagant display which is now required in giving the last message of mercy to our world. We must go forth in the simplicity of true godliness. Our sanitariums, our schools, our publishing houses, are to be God's instrumentalities to represent the humble manner of Christ's teaching. In a marked manner the Lord will be the strength and power of his people. Maintain simplicity; and pray in faith, constantly. Wherever you are, your only safety is in prayer. Hold fast the beginning of your confidence firm unto the end.

Beware of the leaven of evil. Talk less; criticize less. Let every one remember that he is now on test and trial for life, eternal life.

God now calls for all who choose to serve him, to stand firmly on the platform of eternal truth. Let those who have brought about the present state of confusion by making the division that exists, stop to consider seriously before going any further. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." "If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him."

A Steadfast Faith

H. F. PHELPS

There are some things in the Bible that I do not understand. Is this a thing to cause wonder? The Bible is the product of an infinite mind, thoughts of an infinite God? Is it to be expected that a finite man shall comprehend and readily grasp all that is revealed in the Bible? Shall I accept the tenets of the Higher Critics, and sit in judgment upon such portions as, to my mind, seem incomprehensible? To this we present a most emphatic, No! while faith says, I will believe all that I do understand, and feast my soul upon it; and I will believe all that I am not able to understand, and patiently wait until my Saviour shall make everything plain. He will do this in the future life, if not in this.

Some fifty or more years ago, the writer had the privilege of reading "Early Writings," the first production of the spirit of prophecy among us as a people. I believed it. It was a feast to my soul. In after years I was thrown under an influence that led me into doubting castle. I did not mention my doubts to any soul, but waited patiently till God led me into the light again. This was mainly through reading the "Spirit of Prophecy" and "Testimonies for the Church."

Medical Ministry, p. 15 (2)

Time passed on. Added pages, communications, and volumes have come from the same source. But the very same Spirit of God permeates the whole. To say that I can explain every utterance, that I perfectly understand the whole, would be saying too much. There are some things that I do not understand. Shall I accept the principle of higher criticism and sit in judgment and dissect that which breathes the Spirit of God?—Once more a most emphatic, No! I have been in doubting castle once, and that will do. My faith says, I will believe what I do understand, and will rejoice in it and feast upon it; and I will also believe what I do not understand, and will wait until Christ my Redeemer shall make plain to his sanctified, glorified saints all that seemed dark to them here in this land of mist and darkness. Thus living, I expect to meet him, when he comes, with rejoicing.

Lessons From Past Experiences —No. 2

GEO. O. STATES

Soon after that meeting in Sylvan a meeting was called by H. S. Case to learn how many were disposed to stand by him in his work of opposing the visions of Sister White. When the test came, about one half the believers took their stand with him. They all declared how firmly they believed the Sabbath and other parts of the message; that every part was right except the visions; and that they would always keep the Sabbath and firmly stand for the truth.

They soon started a paper called the Messenger of Truth, which was filled with misrepresentations of our work, and set forth the great things they expected to accomplish when those who were led by a woman had gone down. This was indeed a trying time for the believers, as we were ridiculed for standing by the Testimonies.

For a time it looked very discouraging, and the time of our loyal ministers was occupied in exposing the falsehoods which were uttered by the Messenger party. As fast as one falsehood was exposed, another was invented, and we thought surely that must be exposed. About this time Sister White was shown that if we would keep at our work, preaching the truth regardless of any such people as the Messenger party, they would yet go to war among themselves, and soon our numbers would be doubled. Following this instruction from the Lord, our work advanced as never before, and the leaders in the opposition began quarreling among themselves. The leader, H. S. Case, soon gave up the Sabbath, and for years lived in northern Michigan, working at fishing. He became a very profane man, and died in that condition.

When his paper ceased, his followers either gave up the Sabbath or took their stand for the whole message. Thus ended the first open opposition, proving the truthfulness of 2 Chron. 20:20: "Believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper." In following later oppositions we shall see that they have all been of the same character as the first.

*The Christian Nurse

This hour marks the end of one epoch in the history of this class and the beginning of another. It closes the period of toil and trial incident to acquiring the technical education of their profession and the training essential to its profitable application. It introduces the period of eternal service for God and humanity, proficiency in which is the noble object they have striven to attain. This motive has nerved them to endure the hardship and privation of preparation, and it alone can inspire and sustain them during a career of self-sacrifice and ardent toil. In a certain sense these two epochs are as one, because to an almost vital degree the achievements of the latter must be written in the light of the history of the former.

The source of their power, the sterling character and the gentle firmness of the truly representative trained Christian nurse, was well voiced by the Psalmist David when he wrote,—

"For who is God, save the Lord?
And who is a rock, beside our God?
The God that girdeth me with strength,
And maketh my way perfect.
He maketh my feet like hinds' feet:
And setteth me upon high places.
He teacheth my hands to war;
So that mine arms do bend a bow of brass.
Thou hast also given me the shield of thy salvation:
And thy right hand hath holden me up,
And thy gentleness hath made me great."

Likewise, King Solomon announced that great principle which is the foundation of the high esteem in which those of this profession are held, when he wrote, "That which maketh a man to be desired is his kindness."

The demand for your work is inherent in that great basic principle of all honorable avocations,—the needs of the human race. The remarkable increase of disease, both in variety and virility, requires that it be intelligently and persistently combated. Without this, modern civilization must soon perish from the earth. The correspondingly great increase in the knowledge of medical science makes necessary a skill in application of which the patient and his friends who do not possess professional training are utterly incapable. Under such conditions the most learned physician often finds that his skill acquired by many years of diligent research is utterly valueless without your aid. On the other hand, you, likewise, are helpless without the physician's direction. This suggests a principle, and it would be well indeed for all the world were it more universally recognized and respected; namely, that all honorable professions and avocations are to a vital degree interdependent and co-operative.

The most enlightened and useful among all classes of men have come to realize that the high standard of morals and the self-control characteristic of those who yield obedience to the requirements of the gospel, result in the prevention of crime, disease, idleness, dishonesty, and distress. They therefore accord to the gospel ministry their most earnest approval and hearty co-operation.

Also, such men recognize that normal physical health is essential to the highest development of spiritual life, is invaluable in preventing crime, in enabling men to endure the strain incident to thorough preparation for life's work and its proper execution during after-years. They therefore co-operate most earnestly with the medical profession in their efforts to combat disease and secure more intelligent conformity to the laws of health.

They likewise appreciate the inestimable value of an education that makes possible the more noble and effective use of inherent ability. They therefore most heartily co-operate with educators in an endeavor to stimulate the increase of knowledge, and secure to all men the blessings of modern science and invention.

They highly value the blessings that are the result of honorable industry; they deprecate the curse that accompanies idleness; they appreciate the greater security to life, honor, property, and all that is most dear to Christian civilization, resulting from a proper regulation of the industrial, commercial, and social relations of men, and the restraint of those who are viciously inclined. They therefore co-operate most earnestly with civil rulers, legislators, judges, and attorneys in the honest and intelligent maintenance of civil government.

Not the least among the many rewards of your profession is the privilege of commanding the approbation and co-operation of such men, and of spending your lives amid such associations in the most noble of occupations.

The diplomas you receive afford such favorable introduction. They are in a certain sense a testimonial to your good moral character. Also they are an evidence that you have been tried and have proved your patience, fortitude, and skill under severe practical test, and are competent and worthy to be entrusted with the responsibilities of your profession.

The privileges of your calling will be many and gratifying. I will first mention that of saving human life. Besides the great boon thus conferred upon him whose days are lengthened, you will often

I Shall Not Pass This Way Again

I SHALL not pass this way again!
The thought is full of sorrow;
The good I ought to do to-day
I may not do to-morrow.
If I this moment shall withhold
The help I might be giving,
Some soul may die, and I shall lose
The sweetest joy of living.

Only the present hour is mine —
I may not have another
In which to speak a kindly word,
Or help a fallen brother.
The path of life leads straight ahead;
I can retrace it never;
The daily record which I make
Will stand unchanged forever.

To cheer and comfort other souls,
And make their pathways brighter;
To lift the load from other hearts,
And make their burdens lighter,
This is the work we have to do —
It must not be neglected.
That we improve each passing hour,
Is of us all expected.

I shall not pass this way again!
O! then with high endeavor
May I my life and service give
To Him who reigns forever.
Then will the failures of the past
No longer bring me sadness,
And his approving smile will fill
My heart with joy and gladness.

Teachers as Examples of Christian Integrity

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I HAVE a message for those standing at the head of our educational institutions. I am instructed to call the attention of every one occupying a position of responsibility, to the divine law as the basis of all right conduct. I am to begin by calling attention to the law given in Eden, and to the reward of obedience and the penalty of disobedience.

In consequence of Adam's transgression, sin was introduced into the fair world that God had created, and men and women became more and still more bold in disobeying his law. The Lord looked down upon the impenitent world, and decided that he must give transgressors an exhibition of his power. He caused Noah to know his purpose, and instructed him to warn the people while building an ark in which the obedient could find shelter until God's indignation was overpast. For one hundred and twenty years Noah proclaimed the message of warning to the antediluvian world; but only a few repented. Some of the carpenters he employed in building the ark, believed the message, but died before the flood; others of Noah's converts backslided. The righteous on the earth were but few, and only eight lived to enter the ark. These were Noah and his family.

The rebellious race was swept away by the flood. Death was their portion. By the fulfilment of the prophetic warning that all who would not keep the commandments of heaven should drink the waters of the flood, the truth of God's word was exemplified.

After the flood the people once more increased on the earth, and wickedness also increased. Idolatry became well-nigh universal, and the Lord finally left the hardened transgressors to follow their evil ways, while he chose Abraham, of the line of Shem, and made him the keeper of his law for future generations. To him the message came, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee." And by faith Abraham obeyed. "He went out, not knowing whither he went."

Abraham's seed multiplied, and at length Jacob and his sons and their families went down into Egypt. Here they and their descendants sojourned for many years, till at last the Lord called them out, to lead them into the land of Canaan. It was his purpose to make of this nation of slaves a people who would reveal his character to the idolatrous nations of the world. Had they been obedient to his word, they would soon have entered the promised land. But they were disobedient and rebellious, and for forty years they journeyed in the wilderness. Only two of the adults who left Egypt entered Canaan.

It was during the wilderness wandering of the Israelites that God gave them his law. He led them to Sinai, and there, amid scenes of awful grandeur, proclaimed the ten commandments.

We may with profit study the record of the preparation made by the congregation of Israel for the hearing of the law. "In the third month, when the children of Israel were gone forth out of the land of Egypt, the same day came they into the wilderness of Sinai. For they were departed from Rephidim, and were come to the desert of Sinai, and had pitched in the wilderness; and there Israel camped before the mount. And Moses went up unto God, and the Lord called unto him out of the mountain, saying, Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel: Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself. Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine."

Who, then, is to be regarded as the Ruler of the nations? — The Lord God Omnipotent. All kings, all rulers, all nations, are his, under his rule and government.

"And Moses came and called for the elders of the people, and laid before their faces all these words which the Lord commanded him."

What was the response of the congregation, numbering more than a million people?

"And all the people answered together, and said, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do. And Moses returned the words of the people unto the Lord."

Thus the children of Israel were denominated as a special people. By a most solemn covenant they were pledged to be true to God.

Then the people were bidden to prepare themselves to hear the law. On the morning of the third day the voice of God was heard. Speaking out of the thick darkness that enshrouded him, as he stood upon the mount, surrounded by a retinue of angels, the Lord made known his law.

God accompanied the proclamation of his law with manifestations of his power and glory, that his people might be impressed with a profound veneration for the Author of the law, the Creator of heaven and earth. He would also show to all men the sacredness, the importance, and the permanence of his law.

The people of Israel were overwhelmed with terror. They shrank away from the mountain in fear and awe. The multitude cried out to Moses, "Speak thou with us, but let not God speak with us, lest we die."

The minds of the people, blinded and debased by slavery, were not prepared to appreciate fully the far-reaching principles of God's ten precepts. That the obligations of the decalogue might be more fully understood and enforced, additional precepts were given, illustrating and applying the precepts of the ten commandments. Unlike the decalogue, these were delivered privately to Moses, who was to communicate them to the people.

Upon descending from the mountain, Moses "came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, and said, All the words which the Lord hath said will we do. And Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, and rose up early in the morning, and builded an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel. And he sent young men of the children of Israel, which offered burnt offerings, and sacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the Lord. And Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basons; and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar. And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient. And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words."

Thus by a most solemn service the children of Israel were once more set apart as a peculiar people. The sprinkling of the blood represented the shedding of the blood of Jesus, by which human beings are cleansed from sin.

Once more the Lord has special words to speak to his people. In the thirty-first chapter of Exodus we read: —

"The Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. . . . Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed. And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communicating with him upon Mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God."

Many other scriptures on the sacredness of God's law have been presented before me. Scene after scene, reaching down to the present time, passed before me. The word spoken by God to Israel was verified. The people disobeyed, and only two of the adults who left Egypt entered Canaan. The rest died in the wilderness. Will not the Lord to-day vindicate his word if the leaders of his people depart from his commandments?

The New Birth

J. N. LOUGHBOROUGH

"Is the new birth at conversion, or at the resurrection?" is a question that has been propounded to me.

It may seem strange, in view of the interesting Sabbath-school lessons of last quarter on this subject, that such a query should be raised. Still there have been, and still there are, people who teach that the new birth is not at conversion, but at the resurrection of the just.

In the year 1851, while I was with the First-day Adventists, some of the ministers were teaching this very doctrine. Their principal proof-text, and reaily their starting-point, for that peculiar doctrine, is found in Isa. 66:8, which reads: "Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children." As the Lord's coming is mentioned in verses 5 and 15 they claimed that this birth of a nation in a day related to the resurrection of the righteous.

Even admitting that construction of the text, and that in that case the resurrection was compared to a birth from the earth, it does not follow that the new birth spoken of by our Saviour and his apostles was simply and only the final resurrection of the righteous from their graves.

Those advocating this doctrine claimed that the work of conversion was only the begetting of the believer, and as the assurance of the final reception of the reward depended on the faithful life of the consecrated one, so the final reckoning day must decide whether he should be truly born, or whether in his case it was only an abortion. With that idea in mind they construed the words of Christ to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God," as if he had said, "Except you have part in the first resurrection, you can not see the kingdom of God."

To maintain the idea that conversion was only a begetting, and not the new birth, they so construed the following texts: "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures." James 1:18. "For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers; for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." 1 Cor. 4:15. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." 1 Peter 1:3. "Every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him." 1 John 5:1.

There is no question that these texts refer to the conviction of the sinner, and the implantation in the heart, by the Holy Spirit, of the "word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." 1 Peter 1:23. But that work is spoken of also as a birth: "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."

If the new birth spoken of by Christ to Nicodemus simply referred to the resurrection, it would seem strange that he, being a Pharisee, whose prominent characteristic was faith in the resurrection, should wonder "how" these things could be. The very answer of Nicodemus to Christ shows that he understood Christ to refer to a new life that was to be entered upon here in this world, else why should he make reference to the natural birth?

Let us consider a few of the texts that mention the new birth as applicable to the present state: "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." John 1:12, 13. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." 1 John 5:1. Paul speaks thus of himself: "And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time." 1 Cor. 15:8. Speaking further of his conversion, he says, "When it pleased God, . . . to reveal his Son in me." Gal. 1:15, 16. Of Christ's dwelling in the heart by faith, he speaks on this wise: "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." 2 Cor. 5:17. The margin of the Revised Version has for "new creature," "a new creation." The apostle said of the Galatians, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you." Gal. 4:19. In the same chapter, speaking of Ishmael and Isaac, he says, "But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now." Verse 29.

The apostle Peter, speaking of those newly come to the faith, says, "As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." 1 Peter 2:2. The apostle John writes: "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God." 1 John 4:7. In this same epistle he says, "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." 1 John 5:18. Surely there will be no keeping from sin and from the wicked one in the resurrection state, when Satan and sin will be forever destroyed.

The same apostle declares, "If ye know that he [Christ] is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him." 1 John 2:29. Again, "For whosoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." 1 John 5:4.

It is in this world that the overcoming is accomplished. It is here that the good fight of faith is to be fought, and not after the resurrection. It is here that the Lord accomplishes for those who yield themselves to him that which he promised through the prophet Ezekiel: "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and will give you a heart of flesh. And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them." Eze. 36:26, 27. Those who are thus filled with the Spirit of life divine from heaven, are born by the Spirit from above, and are spoken of as "born again."

"How Art Thou Fallen From Heaven, O Lucifer, Son of the Morning!"

R. A. UNDERWOOD

The exclamatory sentence at the head of this article is one of the scriptures which was written aforetime "for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come." Lucifer, one of the bright stars in heaven, posed as a reformer. He set up the claim that the "administration" of God's government was oppressive, and held its subjects in bondage. However, he professed loyalty to God, yet he proposed to bring about reformation in the government of God that would bring liberty and freedom to the angels and all created beings not enjoyed under the existing "administration."

The preceding statements are clearly sustained in "Patriarchs and Prophets," pages 37-42. "While claiming for himself perfect loyalty to God, he [Lucifer] urged that changes in the order and laws of heaven were necessary for the stability of the divine government. . . . He denounced them [the angels] as deluded

Divine Protection

Under His wing — when the trial and sorrow,
Of life's weary load, that belongs to the morrow,
Is laid at the feet of "an infinite Love,"
We rest, and gain strength from the Power above.

Under his wing — when the heart grows in gladness,
And joy in the soul takes the place of our sadness,
We rise to a higher and holier frame,
And dwell with delight on our Saviour's loved name.

Under his wing — how the world grows in brightness!
Beauty and grace are the marks of its lightness,
Peace and the love of a Father befriended,
All the way through, till life's journey is ended.

Under his wing — in the mansions of glory,
We'll sing the new song, as we tell the old story
Of grace and of love, by the God-man, who gave
His life as a ransom, the sinful to save.

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I WAS referred to the fourth chapter of Deuteronomy. The whole of this chapter is to be studied. Notice particularly the statement: "Know therefore this day, and consider it in thine heart, that the Lord he is God in heaven above, and upon the earth beneath: there is none else. Thou shalt keep therefore his statutes, and his commandments, which I command thee this day, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days upon the earth, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, forever."

The eighth and eleventh chapters of Deuteronomy also mean much to us. The lessons that they contain are of the greatest importance, and are given to us as verily as to the Israelites. In the eleventh chapter God says: —

"Behold, I set before you this day a blessing and a curse; a blessing, if ye obey the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you this day: and a curse, if ye will not obey the commandments of the Lord your God, but turn aside out of the way which I command you this day, to go after other gods, which ye have not known."

I have been instructed, as God's messenger, to dwell particularly upon the record of Moses' sin and its sad result, as a solemn lesson to those in positions of responsibility in our schools, and especially to those acting as presidents of these institutions.

Of Moses God's Word declares, "Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth." Long had he borne with the rebellion and obstinacy of Israel. But at last his patience gave way. They were on the borders of the promised land. But before they entered Canaan, they must show that they believed God's promise. The supply of water ceased. Here was an opportunity for them to walk by faith instead of by sight. But they forgot the hand that for so many years had supplied their wants, and instead of turning to God for help, they murmured against him.

Their cries were directed against Moses and Aaron: "Why have ye brought up the congregation of the Lord into the wilderness, that we and our cattle should die there? And wherefore have ye made us to come up out of Egypt, to bring us in unto this evil place? it is no place of seed, or of figs, or of vines, or of pomegranates; neither is there any water to drink."

The two brothers went before the multitude. But instead of speaking to the rock, as God had directed, Moses smote the rock angrily, crying, "Hear now, ye rebels; must we fetch you water out of this rock?"

Bitter and deeply humiliating was the judgment immediately pronounced. "The Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them." With rebellious Israel they must die before crossing the Jordan.

From the experience of Moses the Lord would have his people learn that when they do that which gives prominence to self, his work is neglected, and he is dishonored. The Lord will work counter to those who work counter to him. His name, and his alone, is to be magnified on the earth.

For more than twenty years strange things have at different times been coming in among us. Those who have become unfaithful, who have not exalted the principles of righteousness, need now to seek the Lord with deep humiliation of soul, and be converted, that God may heal their transgressions.

The one standing at the head of a school is to put his undivided interests into the work of making the school just what the Lord designed it to be. If he is ambitious to climb higher and still higher, if he gets above the real virtues of his work, and above its simplicity, and disregards the holy principles of heaven, let him learn from the experience of Moses that the Lord will surely manifest his displeasure because of his failure to reach the standard set before him.

Especially should the president of a school look carefully after the finances of the institution. He should understand the underlying principles of bookkeeping. He is faithfully to report the use of all moneys passing through his hand for the use of the school. The funds of the school are not to be overdrawn, but every effort is to be made to increase the usefulness of the school. Those entrusted with the financial management of our educational institutions, must allow no carelessness in the expenditure of means. Everything connected with the finances of our schools should be perfectly straight. The Lord's way must be strictly followed, though this may not be in harmony with the ways of man.

To those in charge of our schools I would say, Are you making God and his law your delight? Are the principles that you follow, sound and pure and unadulterated? Are you keeping yourselves, in the life practise, under the control of God? Do you see the necessity of obeying him in every particular? If you are tempted to appropriate the money coming into the school, in ways that bring no special benefit to the school, your standard of principle needs to be carefully criticized, that the time may not come when you will have to be criticized and found wanting. Who is your bookkeeper? Who is your treasurer? Who is your business manager? Are they careful and competent? Look to this. It is possible for money to be misappropriated without any one's understanding clearly how it came about; and it is possible for a school to be losing continually because of unwise expenditures. Those in charge may feel this loss keenly, and yet suppose they have done their best. But why do they permit debts to accumulate? Let those in charge of a school find out each month the true financial standing of the school.

My brethren in responsibility, exalt the law of Christ's kingdom by giving to it willing obedience. If you are not yourselves under the control of the Ruler of the universe, how can you obey his law, as required in his Word? Those who are placed in positions of authority are the very ones who need most fully to realize their amenability to God's law and the importance of obeying all his requirements.

In some respects, many of those connected with our schools should be standing on a higher platform. We know that it is the determined purpose of some to be obedient to every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Such men and women will be given power of intellect to discern the difference between righteousness and unrighteousness. They have the faith that works by love and purifies the soul, and they reveal God to the world.

We all need to gain a much deeper experience in the things of God than we have gained. Self is to die, and Christ is to take possession of the soul temple. Physicians, ministers, teachers, and all others in responsible positions, must learn the humility of Christ before he can be revealed in them. Too often self is so important an agency in the life of a man that the Lord is not able to mold and fashion him. Self rules on the right hand and on the left, and the man presses his way forward as he pleases. Christ says to self, Stand out of my path. Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. Then I can accept him as my disciple. In order to serve me acceptably, he must do the work I have given him in harmony with my instructions.

A Significant Movement

Federation Among the Catholics

(Special Correspondence)

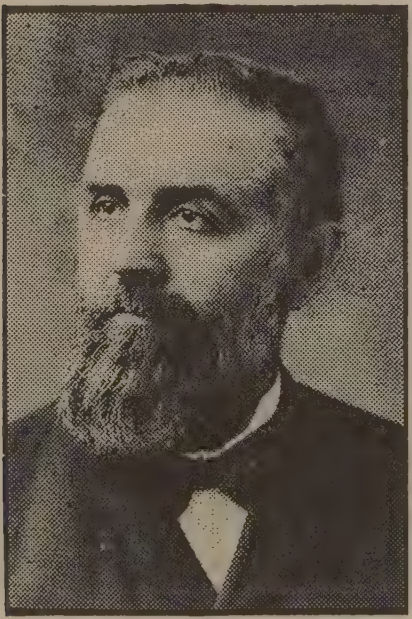
The fifth annual convention of the American Federation of Catholic Societies was held in Convention Hall, Buffalo, N. Y., July 29 to August 1, inclusive. It was a representative gathering of Catholic citizens whose official acts and utterances are worthy of attention. One who attended the Inter-Church Conference on Federation of Protestant churches in New York City, Nov. 15-23, 1905, and the Buffalo Convention of Catholic Societies, was profoundly impressed with the singular similarity of the two conventions, respecting the causes that gave rise to the federation movement, concert of action, expressed design, and the ultimate end to which federation is rapidly gravitating. In fact, the speeches and action taken by the Catholic convention were so very much like the proceedings and addresses of the Protestant conference that, barring an exception of minor importance, one could easily have believed it to be an adjourned session, or part and parcel, of the Inter-Church Conference.



J. B. OELKERS, CHAIRMAN OF THE CONVENTION

"Civic Righteousness, God in the Home, the School, the Nation," is the watchword of both conferences. To root out prevailing and ruining national evils is to be the chief object of these federations, and according to The Catholic Union and Times it is a "patriotic undertaking in which Catholic and non-Catholic may join hands." The fight against unlimited divorce, against intemperance, against socialism, against the social evil, for the regulation of capital and labor, and the Sabbath, is to be a common cause in which Protestant and Catholic federations may unite. "To promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life," declared the Inter-Church Conference: "to renovate public and private life in conformity with the teachings of Jesus Christ," says the Catholic Federation. So much for concomitancy of expressed opinion and avowed purposes.

Its Origin, Character, and Purpose

The American Federation of Catholic Societies is only five years old. It was founded in Cincinnati in April, 1901. Since that time it has advanced by leaps and bounds. The Knights of Saint John were active in promoting it, and it is said that the original suggestion of union came from them. At the very outset such leading church prelates as Archbishop Messmer and Bishop McFaul gave it their combined strength and influence, working indefatigably for the extension of its principles and its power, realizing beyond doubt that it was destined to play an important rôle for the church in the "game of politics." The federation and its purposes have received the unqualified indorsement of the pope. Its motto is, "Unity for the common good," words used by the late Pope Leo XIII. The movement is backed by eleven State, four hundred county, and fourteen national organizations; in short, by the Catholic laity of the United States and her possessions.

In this convention the powerful Catholic organization known as the Ancient Order of Hibernians was admitted to membership. The cosmopolitan character of the federation is indicated by the fact that two Indian chiefs and a Porto Rican were among the many delegates of various nationalities. Altogether, one million five hundred thousand members of the federated societies were represented by the hundreds of delegates present. Leading prelates and priests lent dignity and influence to the convention, among whom were Archbishop Messmer of Milwaukee, Bishop McFaul of Trenton, and the far-famed Bishop Colton of the diocese of Buffalo.

In a trenchant editorial, the Union says: "With the blessings of the Holy Father, the voyage has commenced: may the federation be the triumph the successor of St. Peter desires it, and may it meet our trust in its prowess. The federation has no fear, and it asks no favors. Catholics are not apologists for their presence in America. They are the true leaven of the body politic."

Its Political Influence

Catholic federation disclaims any intention upon its part to enter the domain of partizan politics, and strenuously opposes the charge that it will yet wield a political influence. Perhaps not partizan politics, but that it will wield its influence in the sphere of the political is as apparent as anything can be. From the proceedings of the fourth national convention we may read: "The Catholic Church in this country will never be in

Praise to God

N. W. VINCENT

O thou God of love, our Father!
  O blest Son of the Most High!
Great and countless are thy mercies,
  Thy dear name we glorify!
Boundless might and perfect wisdom
  Through thy wondrous doings shine;
Now we praise thee for thy goodness
  And thy majesty divine.

Reign forever, gracious Father,
  Reign, O high, exalted Son!
Heirs of heaven, we'll sing Thy praises,
  Who have heard the great "Well done."
Thou didst bear our ill deservings
  In earth's gloom and grief and shame.
Hail, O Christ, our life, our beauty,
  Ever glorious be thy name!

Correct Views Concerning the Testimonies

A Reply to an Inquirer

Sanitarium, Cal., June 14, 1906.

Dear Brother: Your letter came to me while in southern California. For some weeks the consideration of matters connected with the development of our sanitarium work there, and the writing out of the views given me regarding the earthquake and its lessons, have taken my time and strength.

But now I must respond to the letters received from you and others. In your letter, you speak of your early training to have implicit faith in the Testimonies, and say, "I was led to conclude and most firmly believe that every word that you ever spoke in public or private, that every letter you wrote under any and all circumstances, was as inspired as the ten commandments."

My brother, you have studied my writings diligently, and you have never found that I have made any such claims. Neither will you find that the pioneers in our cause have made such claims.

In my preface to "Great Controversy," pages c and d, you have no doubt read my statement regarding the ten commandments and the Bible, which should have helped you to a correct understanding of the matter under consideration. Here is the statement: —

"The Bible points to God as its Author; yet it was written by human hands; and in the varied style of its different books it presents the characteristics of the several writers. The truths revealed are all 'given by inspiration of God' (2 Tim. 3:16); yet they are expressed in the words of men. The Infinite One by his Holy Spirit had shed light into the minds and hearts of his servants. He has given dreams and visions, symbols and figures; and those to whom the truth was thus revealed, have themselves embodied the thought in human language.

"The ten commandments were spoken by God himself, and were written by his own hand. They are of divine, and not of human, composition. But the Bible, with its God-given truths expressed in the language of men, represents a union of the divine and the human. Such a union existed in the nature of Christ, who was the Son of God and the Son of man. Thus it is true of the Bible, as it was of Christ, that 'the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us.' John 1:14.

"Written in different ages, by men who differed widely in rank and occupation and in mental and spiritual endowments, the books of the Bible present a wide contrast in style, as well as a diversity in the nature of the subjects unfolded. Different forms of expression are employed by different writers; often the same truth is more strikingly presented by one than by another. And as several writers present a subject under varied aspects and relations, there may appear, to the superficial, careless, or prejudiced reader, to be discrepancy or contradiction, where the thoughtful, reverent student, with clearer insight, discerns the underlying harmony.

"As presented through different individuals, the truth is brought out in its varied aspects. One writer is more strongly impressed with one phase of a subject; he grasps those points that harmonize with his experience or with his power of perception and appreciation; another seizes upon a different phase and each, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, presents what is most forcibly impressed upon his own mind; a different aspect of the truth in each, but a perfect harmony through all. And the truths thus revealed unite to form a perfect whole, adapted to meet the wants of men in all the circumstances and experiences of life.

"God has been pleased to communicate his truth to the world by human agencies, and he himself, by his Holy Spirit, qualified men and enabled them to do this work. He guided the mind in the selection of what to speak and what to write. The treasure was entrusted to earthen vessels, yet it is, none the less, from heaven. The testimony is conveyed through the imperfect expression of human language; yet it is the testimony of God; and the obedient, believing child of God beholds in it the glory of a divine power, full of grace and truth."

In perfect harmony with this, are my statements found in the article, "The Testimonies Slighted," written June 20, 1882, and published in "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. V, No. 31, pages 62-84. From this I quote for your consideration, several paragraphs: —

"Many are looking with self-complacency upon the long years during which they have advocated the truth. They now feel that they are entitled to a reward for their past trials and obedience. But this genuine experience in the things of God in the past, makes them more guilty before him for not preserving their integrity and going forward to perfection. The faithfulness for the past year will never atone for the neglect of the present year. A man's truthfulness yesterday will not atone for his falsehood to-day.

"Many excuse their disregard of the Testimonies by saying, 'Sister White is influenced by her husband; the Testimonies are molded by his spirit and judgment.' Others are seeking to gain something from me which they could construe to justify their course, or to give them influence. It was then I decided that nothing more should go from my pen until the converting power of God was seen in the church. But the Lord placed the burden upon my soul. I labored for you earnestly. How much this cost both my husband and myself, eternity will tell. Have I not a knowledge of the state of the church, when the Lord has presented their case before me again and again for years? Repeated warnings has been given, yet there has been no decided change. . . .

"Yet now when I send you a testimony of warning and reproof, many of you declare it to be merely the opinion of Sister White. You have thereby insulted the Spirit of God. You know how the Lord has manifested himself through the spirit of prophecy. Past, present, and future have passed before me. I have been shown faces that I had never seen, and years afterward I knew them when I saw them. I have been aroused from my sleep with a vivid sense of subjects previously presented to my mind; and I have written at midnight letters that have gone across the continent, and, arriving at a crisis, have saved great disaster to the cause of God. This has been my work for many years. A power has impelled me to reprove and rebuke wrongs that I had not thought of. Is this work of the last thirty-six years from above, or from beneath? . . .

"When I went to Colorado, I was so burdened for you, that, in my weakness, I wrote many pages to be read at your camp-meeting. Weak and trembling, I arose at three o'clock in the morning, to write to you. God was speaking through clay. You might say that this communication was only a letter. Yes, it was a letter, but prompted by the Spirit of God, to bring before your minds things that had been shown me. In these letters which I write, in the testimonies I bear, I am presenting to you that which the Lord has presented to me. I do not write one article in the paper, expressing merely my own ideas. They are what God has opened before me in vision — the precious rays of light shining from the throne. . . .

"What voice will you acknowledge as the voice of God? What power has the Lord in reserve to correct your errors, and show you your course as it is? What power to work in the church? If you refuse to believe until every shadow of uncertainty and every possibility of doubt is removed, you will never believe. The doubt that demands perfect knowledge, will never yield to faith. Faith rests upon evidence, not demonstration.

The Lord requires us to obey the voice of duty, when there are other voices all around us urging us to pursue an opposite course. It requires earnest attention from us to distinguish the voice which speaks for God. We must resist and conquer inclination, and obey the voice of conscience, without parleying or compromise, lest its promptings cease, and will and impulse control. The word of the Lord comes to us all who have not resisted his Spirit by determining not to hear and obey. This voice is heard in warnings, in counsels, in reproof. It is the Lord's message of light to his people. If we wait for louder calls, or better opportunities, the light may be withdrawn, and we left in darkness. . . .

"It pains me to say, my brethren, that your sinful neglect to walk in the light, has enshrouded you in darkness. You may now be honest in not recognizing and obeying the light; the doubts you have entertained, your neglect to heed the requirements of God, have blinded your perceptions so that darkness is now to you light, and light is darkness. God has bidden you to go forward to perfection. Christianity is a religion of progress. Light from God is full and ample, waiting our demand upon it. Whatever blessings the Lord may give, he has an infinite supply beyond, an inexhaustible store from which we may draw. Skepticism may treat the sacred claims of the gospel with jests, scoffing, and denial. The spirit of worldliness may contaminate the many and control the few; the cause of God may hold its ground only by great exertion and continual sacrifice, yet it will triumph finally.

"The word is, Go forward; discharge your individual duty, and leave all consequences in the hands of God. If we move forward where Jesus leads the way, we shall see his triumph, we shall share his joy. We must share the conflicts, if we wear the crown of victory. Like Jesus, we must be made perfect through suffering. Had Christ's life been one of ease, then might we safely yield to sloth. Since his life was marked with continual self-denial, suffering, and self-sacrifice, we will make no complaint if we are partakers with him. We can walk safely in the darkest path, if we have the Light of the world for our guide. . . .

"When the Lord last presented your case before me, and made known to me that you had not regarded the light which had been given you, I was bidden to speak to you plainly in his name, for his anger was kindled against you. These words were spoken to me, 'Your work is appointed you of God. Many will not hear you, for they refuse to hear the Great Teacher; many will not be corrected, for their ways are right in their own eyes. Yet bear to them the reproofs and warnings I shall give you, whether they will hear, or forbear.' . . .

"Our people are making very dangerous mistakes. We can not praise and flatter any man without doing him a great wrong; those who do this will meet with serious disappointment. They trust too fully to finite man, and not enough to God who never errs. The eager desire to urge men into public notice is an evidence of backsliding from God, and friendship with the world. It is the spirit which characterizes the present day. It shows that men have not the mind of Jesus; spiritual blindness and poverty of soul have come upon them. Often persons of inferior minds look away from Jesus to a merely human standard, by which they are not made conscious of their own littleness, and hence have an undue estimate of their own capabilities and endowments. There is among us as a people an idolatry of human instrumentalities, and mere human talent, and these even of a superficial character. We must die to self, and cherish humble, childlike faith. God's people have departed from their simplicity. They have not made God their strength, and are weak and faint, spiritually. . . .

"I have been shown that unbelief in the Testimonies has been steadily increasing as the people backslide from God. It is all through our ranks, all over the field. But few know what our churches are to experience. I saw that at present we are under divine forbearance; but no one can say how long this will continue. No one knows how great the mercy that has been exercised toward us. But few are heartily devoted to God. There are only a few who, like the stars in a tempestuous night, shine here and there among the clouds. . . .

"Many have exalted science, and lost sight of the God of science. This was not the case with the church in the purest times.

"God will work a work in our day that but few anticipate. He will raise up and exalt among us those who are taught rather by the unction of his Spirit, than by the outward training of scientific institutions. These facilities are not to be despised or condemned; they are ordained of God, but they can furnish only the exterior qualifications. God will manifest that he is not dependent on learned, self-important mortals."

Lessons From Past Experiences —No. 4

GEO. O. STATES

Soon after the Messenger Party went down, my people moved away from Sylvan, and for some years lived where there were none of our people. My father, having become disgusted with the Messenger Party, did not make any profession for years, but mother always took the Review and remained faithful to the truth amid all these trying circumstances, and taught the truth to us children. There were a few times when work was quite pressing that father had my brother and me help, but generally he did not interfere with our keeping the Sabbath.

In 1860 we moved near Battle Creek, where we lived a number of years. Grandpa Harmon (Sister White's father) lived in Battle Creek, and used to visit us, sometimes staying a few days. Although he was quite an old man, yet he seemed to enjoy getting out in the field with us boys and helping hoe and rake. Although I was quite young, yet his earnest talks about the first angel's message and the power attending it are still fresh in my memory.

At night he used to take charge, at mother's request, of the family worship. I shall always remember as we sat around the family circle his interesting talks explaining the truth, especially to father, and of the mighty power accompanying his daughter's visions. We used to enjoy his visits very much, and his talks had much to do in establishing father on points of truth that had been troubling him, especially in regard to the Testimonies, and he soon took his stand again for the whole truth, and was baptized by Elder Loughborough, uniting with the Battle Creek church.

Brethren and sisters, there is one thing I am positive of, and that is, in those early days we believed, appreciated, and studied this important gift as we have not in later years. Many in our ranks are regretting that, as their children become of age, they are leaving the message. There is certainly a reason, and I believe it is right on this point; we have not appreciated and studied the truth as we did back in the memory of us who have grown gray in this truth. As the work has grown, and has necessarily been divided into more departments, is it not possible that we as ministers and leading brethren have studied plans for carrying on the different phases of work until we have neglected more important matters? All the way along the Lord has been sending us counsel on this point. Years ago we were told that, as ministers and those in responsible positions, "many are satisfied with business activity in the cause of God, while their hearts are destitute of love and compassion one for another. They know nothing of the tender sympathy that dwelt in the bosom of Jesus; and unless their characters are transformed, unless the heart is made tender, and they become partakers of the divine nature, they will make grave blunders, and fail to become inhabitants of heaven."

I am so glad that our ministers are now having more to say about the Testimonies. I can hear a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees, and I do believe God is stirring up our people in these matters, and I know parents are becoming more faithful in instructing their children. In the early days of this message parents taught this truth to their children in the house, walking by the way, before retiring, and when rising, and so must we teach it at this critical time. The most important thing in this world to-day is the third angel's message, and as we return to the old paths, lead-

Correct Views Concerning the Testimonies

A Reply to an Inquirer

(Concluded)

The statement which you quote from "Testimony," No. 31, that "in these letters which I wrote, in the Testimonies I bear, I am presenting to you that which the Lord has presented to me. I do not write one article in the paper, expressing (1) merely my own ideas. They are what God has opened before me in vision — the precious rays of light shining from the throne," is correct. It is true concerning the articles in our papers and in the many volumes of my books. I have been instructed in accordance with the Word in the precepts of the law of God. I have been instructed in selecting from the lessons of Christ. Are not the positions taken in my writings in (1) harmony with the teachings of Jesus Christ? If not, point it out to me. (1)

To some of the questions you have asked, I am not to answer Yes or No. I must not make statements that can be misconstrued. I see and feel the peril of those who I have been instructed were endangering their souls at times by listening to deceptive representations regarding the messages that God has given me. Through many twistings and turnings and false reasonings on what I have written, they seek to vindicate their personal unbelief. I am sorry for my brethren who have been walking in the mist of suspicion and skepticism and false reasoning. I know that some of them would be blessed by messages of counsel if the clouds obscuring their spiritual vision could be driven back, and they could see aright. But they do not see clearly. Therefore I dare not communicate with them.

When the Spirit of God clears away the mysticism, there will be found just as complete comfort and faith and hope in the messages that I have been instructed to give as were found in them in years past.

Truth will surely bear away the victory. One who gave His life to ransom man from the delusions of Satan is not asleep, but watching. When his sheep turn away from following the voice of a stranger whose sheep they are not, they will rejoice in the life of Christ. The envious Pharisees misinterpreted the acts and words of Christ, which, if properly received, would have been beneficial to their spiritual understanding. Instead of admiring his goodness, they charged him, in the presence of his disciples, with impiety — "Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners?" Instead of addressing our blessed Saviour himself, whose answer would at once have convicted them of their malice, they talked with the disciples, and made their charges where, as a leaven of evil, they would do great harm. If Christ had been an impious man he would have lost his hold upon the hearts of his believing followers. But because of their confidence in Christ, the disciples would not give ear to the insinuations of his wicked accusers.

Desiring to bring censure upon the disciples, these wicked accusers went again and again to Christ with the question, Why do thy disciples that which is not lawful? And when they judged our Lord to have transgressed, they spoke not to himself, but to his disciples, to plant the seeds of unbelief in the hearts of his followers. Thus they worked to bring in doubt and dissension. Every method was tried to bring doubt into the hearts of the little flock, that it might cause them to watch for something that would check the good and gracious work of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Work of this same character will be brought to bear upon true believers to-day. The Lord Jesus reads the heart; he discerns the intents and purposes of the thoughts of all men concerning himself and his believing disciples. He answers their thoughts concerning the fault-finding ones. "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." The insolent Pharisees had an exalted idea of their own piety and holiness, while they were ready to pass censure on the lives of others.

On one occasion those who were guilty of many secret sins, brought to Christ a woman who had been taken in sin. They thought that he would pronounce judgment against her, and then they could accuse him of taking judgment into his own hands. While they were presenting the case, Christ was busy writing on the sand. He said nothing, and when they pressed him for a decision, he was in no hurry to pronounce judgment. One after another came near to him to see what he was writing, and there in the sand they saw the record of their own sins. Then Christ said to them, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone." But not a stone was cast, and they went away, leaving the woman with him. He said to her, "Where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee?" She said, "No man, Lord." Christ answered, "Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more."

The Lord Jesus beheld the whole plot and the arrogance of the ones who had arranged it, who were worthy of condemnation and punishment, and when they saw that he knew their lives, they left and went out, having failed in their desire to bring about the condemnation of Christ.

Let no one complain. True religion is free from the exaltation of self. If we have not a sense of our interest, heart and mind and soul, in our Saviour, if we have not the grace and the intelligent Bible knowledge to apply to ourselves his merits and disposition of character, through the merits of the atonement, we shall obtain no ease, on assurance.

Bear in mind that it is none but God that can hold an argument with Satan. The sentiments of the enemy are to be met with a plain "Thus saith the Lord." Human infirmity, I am instructed, will not be able to resist the devil. Always keep aloof from secret science. If the mind is once open to this evil, Satan has the mastery. Flee from this unequal conflict. Let it ever be our individual care to keep clear of Satan's mysterious devisings. He will ever be making efforts to give power to secret science by which to overcome us, and then follows the sin of secret disobedience.

The law of the Lord is to be written on the heart. If it is not, we never obey it in truth. I am having deeply impressed upon my mind the history of the children of Israel while the awful presence of God was before them, as recorded in Ex. 19:16. "And it came to pass on the third day in the morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so all the people that was in the camp trembled. And Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God; and they stood at the nether part of the mount. And Mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the Lord descended upon it in fire: and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly. And when the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder, Moses spake, and God answered him by a voice."

This was the all-important occasion when God and angels came from heaven to the armies of Israel. Here was the law spoken in awful solemnity. The Lord God manifested himself to his people who were delivered out of Egyptian bondage. But this very people, while waiting before the mount for Moses to return, were tempted to doubt, by the suggestion of some that perplexities were arising, and notwithstanding the most solemn impressions that had been recently made upon their minds, they now by their attitude of questioning and doubt, invited the tempter to come in as an honored guest. Growing doubt soon led to a demand for a substitute for Moses.

Only a few days before, the presence of the Lord was manifest in such power that they were terribly afraid and asked that Moses might hear the words of God, and then speak the same to them. But now they wanted something present that they could depend upon.

They might, at this time, have been learning precious lessons, which the Lord was ready to give them, if they had trusted fully in him. But [the result of their murmuring and unbelief was that (1) Aaron made them a golden calf to represent God. He proclaimed this idol to be God, and a great deal of enthusiasm was created over this false god.] If instead of doing this, he had called to mind the wonderful deliverance which God had wrought for them, and every mind had been drawn upon to express gratitude to God for all his rich mercies in delivering his people from Egyptian bondage, they might have been placed on vantage-ground, to glorify the Lord God who had wrought such wonderful deliverance from degradation and slavery.

Growth in Bible Distribution

THE Bible in the World reports this remarkable advance in the circulation of the Scriptures the whole world over: —

"Two years ago we received tidings of a marked revival springing up in Madagascar. Last year the total sales in that island were 26,000 copies, against 15,000 copies the previous year; and during the first six months of 1905 the society granted a further supply of 10,000 Malagasy Bibles, 5,000 Testaments, and 10,000 Gospels in response to urgent requests from the missions in Madagascar.

"In Spain, despite the adverse conditions attending all Protestant work, 113,000 copies were circulated, against 88,000.

"In Greece, although the New Testament in modern Greek is prohibited, the output of Scriptures last year was nearly 13,000, against the previous total of 12,500.

"Central South Africa circulated nearly 32,000 copies, mostly Bibles and Testaments, against 24,000 in 1903.

"In Korea the circulation was 52,000, against 28,800 in 1903.

"North Malaysia reports an increase of 12,000, while the circulation in South Malaysia increased by 19,000 copies." — Record of Christian Work.

A Plea for the Large Books

E. R. ALLEN

I HAVE been watching with much interest the canvassers' reports from several States, both North and South, and from these I notice a strong tendency to handle the cheaper books. The question constantly arises, Why are not those books being sold which the spirit of prophecy has told us should be sold just now, namely, "Great Controversy," "Daniel and the Revelation," and "Patriarchs and Prophets"?

True, all our books are good books, and I doubt not many an agent consoles himself with this thought when urged by the Spirit of God to take up advanced work with the larger books. Some of the smaller books are splendid works for beginners in canvassing, and possibly quite appropriate for the more experienced agent to sell in certain localities. Yet it is my opinion that one who will read and understand the smaller works will also understand and be much more benefited by such books as "Great Controversy."

To sell these cheaper books over a territory, and not follow with some work giving the whole message (which all must admit these books do not do), is as if one should put up a tent, preach a few sermons on general topics, the coming of Christ, etc., and remove to another place without saying anything about the Sabbath, the mark of the beast, and other important subjects treated so clearly and forcibly in the three books mentioned by the spirit of prophecy as "meat in due season" just now. As late, I believe, as June, 1905, the Lord designated the three books which I have named as the books for the times.

Some may say the higher-priced books can not be sold, but this has been demonstrated to be untrue. The best binding of some of our smaller books is but little less than the drab cloth binding of "Great Controversy." The majority of people who will pay the price for the former, can be induced to take the latter if properly shown.

One day lately I worked in a territory previously canvassed for one of these smaller books, and about the only good I could discern was that it had somewhat prepared the way for "Great Controversy," of which I sold five. This result I believe will always follow, especially if the same agent will follow the cheaper with the more important works. If the State agents would see to it that every district worked with the cheap books was recanvassed a few months later with the books giving the whole message, our efforts to hasten the coming of Christ would not be so nearly lost. Are we really advancing the cause at all when we sell the cheaper books because we can make more money, or because we are afraid the people will not like the books which give the message with no uncertain sound?

I long to see the time when our more experienced agents will take to heart the lessons on pages 44 and 45 of "Manual for Canvassers," and go forth with power to warn the world as quickly as possible, even though they do not make as much money, and even though they awaken the ire of the enemy by so doing.

"If our canvassers are controlled by the spirit of financial gain, if they circulate the books upon which they can make the most money, to the neglect of others that the people need, I ask, In what sense is theirs a missionary work? Where is the missionary spirit, the spirit of self-sacrifice? The work of the intelligent, God-fearing canvasser has been represented as equal to that of the gospel minister. Then should the canvasser feel at liberty, any more than the minister, to act from selfish motives? Should he be unfaithful to the principles of missionary work, and sell only those books that are cheapest and easiest to handle, neglecting to place before the people books which will give most light, because by so doing he can earn more money for himself? How is the missionary spirit here revealed? Has not the canvassing work ceased to be what it should be? How is it that no voice is raised to correct this state of things?"

If our work is not "equal to that of the gospel minister," is it not because we are not "intelligent and God-fearing canvassers"? Let us not be satisfied with our attainments, but ever seek higher and wider fields of usefulness, and see to it that God himself is directing our steps and shaping our plans from day to day.

Lilesville, N. C.

"THE Bible unfolds truth with a simplicity and an adaptation to the needs and longings of the human heart, that has astonished and charmed the most highly cultivated minds, while to the humble and uncultured, it also makes plain the way of life. 'The wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.' No child need mistake the path. Not one trembling seeker need fail of walking in pure and holy light. Yet the most simply stated truths lay hold upon themes elevated, far-reaching, infinitely beyond the power of human comprehension — mysteries that are the hiding of his glory — mysteries that overpower the mind in its research, while they inspire the sincere seeker for truth with reverence and faith. The more we search the Bible, the deeper is our conviction that it is the Word of the living God, and human reason bows before the majesty of divine wisdom."

The Glorious Home Land

UP to the mansions of bliss above,
Up to the realms of infinite love;
In limitless space, in a glorious clime,
In a radiant region of rapture sublime,
In the spheres of endless, eternal peace,
There the songs of redemption never cease.
No pain, no sorrow, no clouds, no night,
No shadows, but everlasting light;
No tears in the holy land are shed,
But joys ecstatic, supernal instead.
Ear hath not heard, nor can eye behold,
The treasures unseen, the glories untold,
The fathomless ocean of God's pure love,
The measureless bliss in the courts above.
O desolate hearts, by anguish riven,
Life's shadows disperse in the light of heaven!
We are redeemed, for the Saviour hath died;
In his likeness we there shall be satisfied,
When hope gives place to glad fruition,
And steadfast faith to sight's transition;
By the crystal sea on the shining shore,
We'll chant his praises forevermore,
And join with the angelic blood-washed throng,
In the exultant notes of the glad new song.

*Love Toward God and Man

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"A CERTAIN lawyer stood up," and tempted Christ, "saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life? He said unto him, What is written in the law? how readest thou? And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself."

"Thou hast answered right," Christ declared; "this do, and thou shalt live."

In the question, "What is written in the law?" the Saviour referred to the ten commandments communicated to the Israelites at Sinai. Those to whom had been entrusted the sacred oracles had well-nigh lost sight of these precepts. There came a time when Christ saw that Satan was gathering the whole world, as it were, in his grasp. The enemy was working with the intensity with which he had worked in the heavenly courts, when first he refused to yield to the mighty Monarch of the universe. Satan was rapidly leading the world to act counter to God's law, counter to the principles of righteousness that should have been made their rule of action.

Christ saw that the time had come when Satan's power over mankind must be broken. Before the fall of man, the Son of God had united with his Father in laying the plan of salvation. God was to be manifested in Christ, "reconciling the world unto himself." And now, thousands of years later, the fulness of time came for the infinite sacrifice to be made. Divinity was to be communicated to humanity through a divine-human Saviour. The great Life-giver was to purchase the whole world by giving his own life as a ransom.

Christ came, but not in the brightness of his divine glory. He laid aside his royal robe and kingly crown, clothed his divinity with humanity, and came to live upon the earth as a man among men. Had he come in the full power and glory of his divinity, sinners could not have stood in his presence without being destroyed. He came to meet humanity in its most sinful and corrupt form. Thus divine love was manifested toward erring mortals.

The Saviour gained victories over temptation through power imparted from above in answer to prayer. He met the enticements of the enemy with the sword of the Spirit — God's Word. Again and again he declared, "It is written." And when the lawyer stood up to question him while he was teaching the people, he drew from the questioner the answer desired, by appealing to the lawyer's knowledge of God's Word.

It was to vindicate the just claims of the law of God, and to establish the supreme authority of its divine Author, that Christ came to this earth. The lawyer, while trying to prove that Christ lightly regarded the law given from Sinai, found himself a lawbreaker. Rather than repent, he sought to justify himself by putting another question, "Who is my neighbor?"

By a short story Jesus brought to view the duty of man toward his fellow man and toward God. "A certain man," he said, "went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead. And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side. And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side."

Not all who claim to keep God's law — a law given by One who is full of compassion, long-sufferance, and loving-kindness — reveal a love for their neighbor as great as their love for themselves. Not all reveal, in word and deed, that they comprehend God's great love for humanity.

"But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn; and took care of him. And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee."

Fixing his eyes upon the lawyer, in a glance that seemed to read his soul, the Saviour inquired, "Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him that fell among the thieves?"

The lawyer answered, "He that showed mercy on him." Jesus said, "Go, and do thou likewise." Show the same tender kindness to those in need. Thus you will give evidence that you keep the whole law.

[In giving this lesson, Christ presented the principles of the law of God in a direct, forcible way, showing his hearers that they had neglected to carry out these principles. His words were so definite and pointed that the listeners found no opportunity to cavil or raise objections.] (1)

Those who study this lesson aright will see that in order to keep the law it is necessary to have a knowledge of God; for the law is a transcript of his character, and his character is love. Moses prayed, "I beseech thee, show me thy glory. And he said, I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee." "And the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth."

The lawyer asked, "Who is my neighbor?" The despised Samaritan of whom Jesus told, acted as Jesus would have acted toward the suffering Jew robbed by the wayside and left to perish. He fulfilled the command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," thus showing that he was more righteous than those by whom he was despised. This Samaritan represents Christ. The Saviour stooped from the position of commander in the heavenly courts to become a servant. He clothed his divinity with humanity, that humanity might touch humanity. He was the Majesty of heaven, the King of glory, yet he humbled himself. His whole life was one of poverty and self-denial. For our sake he became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. He did not live to please himself. His life is the mystery of godliness.

Jesus was the foundation of the Jewish economy, the author of all the laws, statutes, and requirements of his chosen people. How his soul was pained and his heart filled with grief as he saw those who claimed to be the depositaries of truth, mercy, and compassion, so destitute of the love of God!

In the providence of God, the priest and the Levite were brought in contact with a suffering fellow creature, that they might minister to him. Christ is constantly weaving the web of human events. He placed this suffering man where one who had sympathy and compassion would give attention to his needs. [The Lord permits suffering and calamity to come upon men and women to call us out of our selfishness, to awaken in us the attributes of his character,— compassion, tenderness, and love.

(1) Divine love makes its most touching appeals when it calls upon us to manifest the same tender compassion that Christ manifested. He was a Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief. In all our afflictions he is afflicted. He loves men and women as the purchase of his own blood, and he says to us, "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."

The Gift of Prophecy

S. N. HASKELL

God has selected one gift as his mouthpiece —"the prophet speaking from the mouth of the Lord." 2 Chron. 36:12. This is illustrated by the relation of Aaron to Moses: "And the Lord said unto Moses, See, I have made thee a god to Pharaoh: and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet." Ex. 7:1. Moses was to speak unto Aaron and put words in his mouth, and then God promised to be with Moses' mouth that he might speak the right words, and with Aaron's mouth that he might translate correctly into the language of the Egyptians. Ex. 4:15, 16.

God could not talk with man directly because of sin, but he could talk with his Son, and his Son could send an angel to communicate the message to a prophet, and the prophet could speak to the people. Rev. 1:1. With all this divine help it is often difficult for the prophet to find words with which to express the message in language that can be understood by the people. When the apostle was caught up into paradise, he "heard unspeakable words, which it is not possible for a man to utter." 2 Cor. 12:4, margin. And yet this is God's method of communicating to the human family.

The prophets of God are called in two ways. First, there are prophets that were ordained prophets and sanctified before they were born. Jer. 1:5. This is because the conditions that would make them prophets were strictly followed by their parents. There are a few instances in the Bible that illustrate this. When God had a very important work for a prophet to do, angels were sent to give instructions that should be strictly followed by his parents. These being followed, the mold of character was given to the child, so he was ordained a prophet before he was born. Luke 1:13-15.

Second, there were other men called to be prophets who did not have these qualifications, but they were called to the work to supply a want because of a lack on the part of others. God is never short of instrumentalities to accomplish his work. Amos was such a prophet, for we read that he said to Amaziah, "I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit: and the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and the Lord said unto me, Go prophesy unto my people Israel." Amos 7:14, 15.

There is another consideration that should not be forgotten. Some men are more than prophets. To use the term "prophet" would be to limit their calling. John was more than a prophet. Paul was more than a prophet, for he possessed three gifts,— the gift of an apostleship, the gift of an evangelist, and the gift of prophecy. And yet of Paul it is said, he was as "one born out of due time;" and he claims that he was not worthy to be an apostle because he had persecuted the church of God.

These principles are most clearly laid down in the Bible. Many a prophet has taken the place of some one whom God previously called to prophesy; and then was laid upon him a twofold gift (Luke 19:24, 25), and in some instances even more than this. When God gave the gospel in its proper setting in the third angel's message, these principles were restored in the development of the spirit of prophecy. It is no marvel that the work of a prophet is not always appreciated, neither is it a marvel that his work is not comprehended. There are several reasons for this. One is that men are not spiritually minded, and "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. 2:14. Some of the simplest things in nature can not be comprehended by man, neither can they be explained. Who can explain the growth of the grass, or how the lilies of the field grow?

There are many statements in the Bible which at first appear to be contradictory simply because the finite mind is unable to comprehend them, and yet experience testifies to their truthfulness. See John 3:7-11. If some of these simple things in nature can not be comprehended, how much more so will it be with divine things! And yet it is absolutely necessary, if man would understand the workings of God, that he should at first believe,— believe it is God that speaks,— and then the way is prepared to understand what God says. God has not given his people the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. And the apostle Paul exhorts Timothy to "consider what I say; and the Lord give thee understanding in all things." 2 Tim. 2:7. Again, "I speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say." 1 Cor. 10:15. And again, the angel Gabriel, when the prophet failed to understand, said, "O Daniel, a man greatly beloved, understand the words that I speak unto thee." Dan. 10:11. We are to seek to understand the words of the prophet, to believe that his words are the words of God. Then the mind is in a condition for God to give it understanding. If men would believe God, it would open to their darkened minds floods of light.

Another consideration should be borne in mind, and that is that God does not always reveal everything to his prophet. This is not always comprehended. When the Shunammite came to Elijah and caught the man of God by the feet, and Gehazi came near to thrust her away, "the man of God said, Let her alone; for her soul is vexed within her: and the Lord hath hid it from me, and hath not told me." 2 Kings 4:27. This principle has been an occasion of trial to some who believe in the spirit of prophecy, and they have concluded that the prophet made a mistake because he did not see both sides of the same question at once, and so did not comprehend the entire situation until after a further revelation was made to him. So it might be said that Moses made a mistake when there was no mistake. On a certain occasion he reproved the sons of Aaron, saying, "Wherefore have ye not eaten the sin offering in the holy place, seeing it is most holy, and God hath given it you to bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the Lord? Behold, the blood of it was not brought in within the holy place: ye should indeed have eaten it in the holy place, as I commanded." Lev. 10:17, 18. Here it is supposed that Moses made a mistake because Aaron was justified in not eating the sin offering in the holy place. When Aaron explained to Moses how it really was, then "he was content." Lev. 10:19, 20. Did Moses make a mistake? He reproved Aaron justly, provided that circumstances were as he saw them or supposed they were, but when further information was conveyed to Moses, he saw that Aaron was justifiable. So in this God was vindicated, and Aaron justified. The same principle will explain the case of Nathan when he said to David, "Go, do all that is in thine heart; for the Lord is with thee;" and afterward the Lord appeared to Nathan and sent him with a message to his servant David: "Thus saith the Lord, Shalt thou build me an house for me to dwell in?" 2 Samuel 7. When God presented to Nathan the other side of this question, and he saw that because of certain experiences of David he was not a proper person to build the house, then the message was changed. There are many instances in the Bible concerning which, should they happen at the present day, men would say that the prophet contradicted himself, or that some one had influenced him.

There is still another principle which at times makes the words of a prophet appear untrue, what he says not taking place. God reveals what is in the heart to prevent the thing itself from happening. The prophet said to Gehazi, "Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and olive-yards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and men servants, and maid servants?" Gehazi had received only two talents of silver and two changes of raiment; but the prophet revealed what was in his heart to obtain from Naaman. 2 Kings 5:20-27.

Isaiah was sent to Hezekiah, who was

Waiting at the Door

Open the door, O, open the door!
I know you closed it to one before,
But I faint with hunger and cold;
The one that knocked and prayed your grace —
The man with agony writ on his face —
You refused, but I am bold.

I own I have sinned in the bitter past,
My birthright squandered with living fast,
But you — have you no sin?
As you carefully earned and meted your gold,
Did you ever wander from the fold,
Whence you were gathered in?

I'm a starving man, open the door;
I have wandered far and returned footsore;
"Starving for bread?" — Nay, nay;
I am hungry for faith, for the bread of life,
I am weary of evil's bitter strife;
Show me a better way.

You say you walk in the steps of a Lord
Who lived and died for the common horde,
And all their misery bore;
Who turned not one man hungry away;
O Christian brother of Christ, I pray,
I hunger, open the door!

I have begged of the wise, they gave me a stone;
I have followed the world, but it left me alone,
A scorpion sting in my breast.
But you should have pity, the child of grace;
Alas, you turn away your face:
Where, where shall I find rest?

Is there no one who may guide my feet
To a home of plenty, and waters sweet —
Who will open the door to me?
O God, if there be a God above,
If thy Saviour Son hath a pitying love,
His face then let me see.

It is late — but what is that light
Shining from out the darkness, so bright?
Ah, a Friend with a welcome face!
"I have come to seek that which was lost;
To offer you bread that my life-blood cost;
Wide stands the door of my grace.

"From door to door you long have strayed;
At feet of wise and worldling laid
Your need, that all might see.
Can souls of men on learning live?
The worldling, what has he to give
The famishing to feed?

"And he, called falsely by my name,
Had naught to give thee, ah, the shame
Of such a gilded life:
His long robes and phylacteries
Hide leaner souls than worldlings wise.
With all their evil rife.

"But thou, take all and fill thy soul
With bread of life, and from the whole
Feed thou my wandering sheep;
Go up the mountain, down the dale;
Where'er thou hearest a hunger wail,
Go seeking, find and keep.

"Then you shall know that as you break
This bread to others for my name's sake,
Need you shall never know.
Often as you shall ope the door
To souls grown weary, sad, and poor,
Your joy shall overflow."

*Love Toward God and Man

(Concluded)

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Last night I was in a sleepless state much of the time. Many representations passed before me. One was a scene in a council meeting where several were present. One man arose and began finding fault with one of his brethren. I looked at the speaker's garments, and saw that they were very undesirable.

Another person arose, and began to state his grievance against a fellow laborer. His garments were of another pattern, and they, too, were undesirable. Still another, and yet another arose, and uttered words of accusation and condemnation regarding the course of others. Every one had some trouble to speak of, some fault to find with some one else. All were presenting the defects of Christians who are trying to do something in our world; and they declared repeatedly that certain ones were neglecting this or that or the other thing, and so on.

There was no real order, no polite courtesy, in the meeting. In their anxiety to speak, some crowded in while others were still talking. Voices were raised, in an effort to make all hear above the din of confusion.

The dress of the speakers was unbecoming and grotesque. This, I was shown, was a representation of defective character.

When many had spoken, One of authority appeared, and repeated the words: "Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then thou shalt see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

O, how can Christians afford to speak words of criticism and fault-finding,— words that stir up the worst passions of the human heart? The talent of speech is too precious a gift to be abused in this way. Let us refrain from uttering any words that would stir up a spirit of antagonism or retaliation. When irritated, let us remain silent.

In this council meeting that I saw in the visions of the night, Christ himself was present. An expression of pain came over his countenance as one after another would come forward, with uncouth dress, to expiate upon the faults of various members of the church.

Finally the heavenly Visitant arose. So intent were those present on criticizing their brethren, that it was with reluctance that they gave him opportunity to speak. He declared that the spirit of criticism, of judging one another, is a source of weakness in the church to-day. Things are spoken that should never find utterance. Every one who by word of mouth places an obstruction in the way of a fellow Christian, has an account to settle with God.

With earnest solemnity the Speaker declared: "The church is made up of many minds, each of whom has an individuality. I gave my life in order that men and women, by divine grace, might blend in revealing a perfect pattern of my character, while at the same time retaining their individuality. No one has the right to disparage the individuality of any other human mind, by uttering words of criticism and fault-finding and condemnation."

These words he repeated with solemn earnestness; and then he turned and grasped a standard, and held it aloft. From this standard, in burning letters, clear and distinct, gleamed God's law. The Speaker declared: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself."

As the light from the uplifted standard flashed upon these men in council, they shrank from it as if it were a burning flame. Some prostrated themselves; some turned and went away.

As I looked upon the scene, the names of the fault-finders appeared before them, and opposite each name were written out the faults of the erring one. None were free from defects of character. In the light of the uplifted standard, all were guilty.

The churches have had light, great light. Infinite light and power are promised those who go forth in the name of the Master to do his bidding. While all do not labor in the same manner, or say the same things, yet the words of one will balance the words of another. In the midst of diversity there will be a beautiful harmony.

Let every one attend to his own individual case before God. Let every one confess his own sins with humility of mind. Let every one appropriate the rich promises of God's Word, and while working out his own salvation with fear and trembling, labor for the salvation of others as well.

"Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor."

* A discourse given at the Oakland, Cal., camp-meeting, Sabbath, July 21, 1906.

All who love God supremely will love their neighbor as themselves. The keeping of the new commandment is to the believer a step heavenward. That which will give God's people the supremacy is obedience to the injunction, "These things I command you, that ye love one another." "Neither pray I for these alone," Christ said, "but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

"These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you."

Two Important Features in Teaching

The cause of God from the earliest times bears two characteristics. Every institution, every organization, that furthers the work of God on the earth has these two prominent features. When these are wanting, the work will fail of accomplishing the object it has in view. The institution that has these characteristics will be strictly religious and educational in its work. When God brought his people out of Egypt, they were to build a sanctuary that he might dwell among them. They were about a year in building it. It was built after the heavenly model. The building was educational, and was of great importance to Israel. It was to teach them that there was a personal God dwelling in a real place, and as sin had separated man from his Creator, the services and sacredness of the sanctuary were to educate man how to approach God. Sin was to be put away, for God was holy, and the sanctuary service taught men how to separate from sin; consequently the priests were teachers. They were to teach the people all the statutes of the Lord that had been given to Moses, and to put a difference between the holy and the profane, between the unclean and the clean. Lev. 10:8-11.

Instruction was given in regard to the following: their eating and drinking (Deut. 14:2, 3; Lev. 11:33-36); their garments, the material of which their garments were made (Deut. 22:11, 5); the seed they sowed in the field (verse 9); their manner of cultivating the soil (verse 10); building their houses (verse 8); their goings out and their comings in. Deut. 6:7. Their entire life was educational. The trades they followed and all they set their hands to contained lessons that pointed them to a life of holiness and to the Redeemer who would really take away the sins of the world. It has been Satan's studied plan to break up this arrangement and separate the labor and work from the spiritual experience.

The medical profession has lost out of it the missionary spirit. It is a science of itself. It matters not in the eyes of the world whether a medical man has any regard for the religion of the Bible if he has passed certain examinations in that science. It is the same in the religious teaching; if a man has a certain theological training, and has passed certain examinations, he is educated, and can, if he chooses, be a minister,— a teacher of the people. When Israel was without a teaching priest, they suddenly relapsed into idolatry, and were without the true God or his law. Then the Lord taught them by trouble to turn unto him; for "nation was destroyed of nation, and city of city: for God did vex them with all adversity." 2 Chron. 15:3-7.

In the gospel of Christ is a resetting of all these principles. Every one of them centered in Christ. He became our example in all things. He was the greatest teacher that ever walked this earth. He was a foreign missionary sent from God to a planet that had severed its connection with the great continent of heaven. He was a home missionary; for he was born of humanity and took human nature with all its liability. He was a medical missionary; for he healed all manner of diseases wherever he went. He was an evangelist; for he brought salvation to every one who accepted him and followed in his steps. He was "the Apostle and High Priest of our profession." Heb. 3:1. He taught the truth upon all these points in two ways,— first, by precept; second, by his life. It is a blending of all these principles that constitutes true religion.

There are lords many, and gods many. So there are many religions. They are seen in every community. Their adherents are found in every neighborhood. The Christian religion is after the pattern and model of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Christian physicians will exemplify their Founder. They will relieve the sick while preaching the word. "And he preached the word unto them. And they came unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four." Christ blended the healing of the sick one's body and the forgiving of his sins. It was the same power that forgave the sins that healed the body. "Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk? But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins (he saith to the sick of the palsy), . . . Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house." To acknowledge this and confess Christ, was to glorify God. "He rose up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own house, glorifying God. And they were all amazed, and they glorified God, and were filled with fear, saying, We have seen strange things to-day." They said, "We never saw it on this fashion." Mark 2:2-13; Luke 5:18-26.

Every physician ought to be a preacher after this heavenly model. Every true preacher or teacher in Israel ought to be a physician. This is in harmony with God's method; but it would break up the present custom of society. It would revolutionize our medical schools. It would reform our preachers, and make health reformers of every one of them. When Christ sent forth his disciples, he said to them, "As ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give." This original commission given to the twelve was renewed to the seventy. Matt. 10:7-15; Luke 10:1-11. This commission was to continue to the end of the world.

This old, original commission is to be revived. Those who are Christ's representatives are to blend these principles. They are to teach, and to preach, and to live the principles of health. Then Christ, through them, will heal the sick. So with our publishing houses, so with our schools, so with every institution to further the cause of God on the earth. Every principle of righteousness should be connected with them all. Many will say when this is the case, as they did in Christ's day, "We never saw it on this fashion;" but it is God's plan. God is even now at work in the world to bring about the accomplishment of his great purpose concerning man.

Ground of Hope, Courage, and Confidence

O. A. OLSEN

The special providences of God as manifested in this work have been most marked. From the very beginning the evidence of God's leading and guiding hand have been no less prominent than in the time of the children of Israel; but, like them, our faith has been at fault.

God came very near to Israel, giving them very definite instruction on all matters that pertained to their well-being. Had they believed and obeyed God, great blessings and prosperity would have come to them, and they in turn would have become a great blessing in the earth.

In like manner has the Lord wrought among this people. From the very beginning the spirit of prophecy has been connected with this work, and the value of the help and blessings that have come to us through these communications can never be fully estimated or appreciated. How often has the message of the Lord saved us in times of peril and confusion! Truly it has been as the still voice, saying, "This is the way," when we in our human blindness would have gone astray. It has come in the way of counsel, instruction, encouragement, reproof,

My Prayer

MRS. R. J. COUTANT

THOU only Source of love divine,
To me thy strength impart,
And may thy peaceful presence find
A home within my heart.

Subdue my will, make all my powers
Yield to thy wise control;
Thy quickening Spirit on me breathe,
And sanctify the whole.

O feed me with the living bread
Which in thy Word is found!
And may the graces it reveals
Within my life abound.

When o'er my path dark clouds arise
And earth-born shadows roll,
Hold thou my trembling hand and guide,
Sure Pilot of my soul.

Let this sweet hope that thou art mine
Be with me to the end.
Sweet rest in heaven then may I find,
With Christ the sinners' Friend.

"Behold, What Manner of Love!" *

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"BEHOLD, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

What a precious privilege is this,— that we may be sons and daughters of the Most High, heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ! What love, what matchless love, that, sinners and aliens as we are, we may be brought back to God, and adopted into his family!

It is sin that alienates from God. "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin. Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whoso sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him."

To every one who surrenders fully to God is given the privilege of living without sin, in obedience to the law of heaven.

"Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous. He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin."

God requires of us perfect obedience. We are to purify ourselves, even as he is pure. By keeping his commandments, we are to reveal our love for the Supreme Ruler of the universe. And the Lord has not left us in ignorance regarding his law. While enshrouded in a thick cloud, he repeated from Mount Sinai the holy precepts of the decalogue distinctly and with solemn impressiveness. So deeply were the people impressed when they "saw the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the noise of the trumpet, and the mountain smoking," that "they removed, and stood afar off."

"Speak thou with us," they pleaded with Moses, "and we will hear: but let not God speak with us; lest we die." "And Moses said unto the people, Fear not: for God is come to prove you, and that his fear may be before your faces, that ye sin not." Every provision against sin has been made in our behalf.

The importance of obedience was further impressed upon the minds of the Israelites by the Lord himself, when, as recorded in the thirty-first of Exodus, he "spake unto Moses, saying, Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. . . . Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed.

"And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon Mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God."

In the providence of God, these same commandments that were written with the finger of Jehovah and entrusted to the Israelites, are now committed to our care. Upon us rests the solemn obligation of proclaiming God's law to an impenitent world. The last great conflict over the question of loyalty to God, will turn on obedience to the Sabbath commandment, which is so plainly enforced by the Lord himself, "for a perpetual covenant." Men will labor with an intensity from beneath to make of no effect God's command regarding the observance of the seventh day; but we are not to be influenced by anything that man may do. Our allegiance to the King of kings must ever be made a matter of paramount importance. We can not afford to be out of harmony with the Creator of the universe.

Men may make laws to enforce Sunday observance, but they have no Scriptural authority for so doing. We can not do otherwise than obey the law of Jehovah, irrespective of any conflicting law enacted by man. When man-made laws are contrary to God's sacred enactments, we must choose to obey God rather than man. While respecting earthly authorities in so far as they do not interfere with our allegiance to God, we are ever to acknowledge our divine Ruler as the Supreme Authority. And in all our efforts to remain true, we are to keep constantly in mind the words of the beloved disciple, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God."

The final conflict is near at hand, but many are asleep regarding the responsibilities of the hour. "See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil. Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is."

Years ago, in the early days of our denominational work on the Pacific Coast, my husband and I united with a few faithful brethren and sisters in an effort to build meeting-houses in San Francisco and in Oakland. At that time there were not many believers, and we had to make heavy personal sacrifices in order to secure sufficient means with which to erect churches and establish institutions. But we realized that San Francisco and Oakland must be worked, and so we toiled and struggled until the Laguna Street church in San Francisco and the first church in Oakland were built.

San Francisco has been visited with a terrible calamity. The Lord in mercy spared life, in order that the people may still have opportunity to repent. The wickedness practised in San Francisco, and in Oakland as well,— though in a lesser degree,— has been opened before me again and again. No tongue can describe the conditions that existed before the earthquake; words are inadequate to portray the awful iniquity carried on. To an unusual extent, many were "lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers," "heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God."

God has manifested his displeasure in a signal manner in San Francisco. He is seeking, to teach men that they can not always disregard his authority with impunity. He has given to us a law, which, sooner or later, we must acknowledge as holy, and just, and good. The Ruler of the universe bears long with those who trample on his law and disregard his holy Sabbath; but in the fulness of time he arises to vindicate his supreme authority.

In his judgments, God remembered mercy. He spared life. We now have a solemn work to do in San Francisco.

* A discourse given at the Oakland, Cal., camp-meeting, July 25, 1906.

The third angel's message is to be proclaimed in San Francisco with power. If possible, the people are to be aroused to a realization of their peril. By this stroke of God's providence they are to understand that it requires but a single touch from the One in supreme authority to break up the foundations laid by man, and to bring destruction to the works of human hands. God's judgments are not sent for naught. They are given in order that all may take warning. Every one should inquire, Have I a hope in God? Do I believe in him? Can I take hold of him by living faith?

In the midst of the confusion caused by the earthquake and the fire, the people are to be taught to discern the wondrous import of the words, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." (2)

(1) [Diligent work is now called for. In this crisis, no half-hearted efforts will prove successful. In all our city work, we are to hunt for souls. Wise plans are to be laid, in order that such work may be done to the best possible advantage.] More and more, as wickedness increases in the great cities, we shall have to work them from outpost centers. This is the way Enoch labored in the days before the flood, when wickedness was rife in every populous community, and when violence was in the land.

God in his providence has spared Oakland, and thousands are flocking to it. We have a present duty to perform in Oakland. We are now to give this city a decided warning; for God has spared it in order that we may do a thorough and a quick work here. Let not those who are in this place become discouraged over the outlook. The Lord has a message to be borne just now to the people in Oakland. Decided efforts are to be made to lead men and women to see that God is Supreme Ruler, and that his commandments are to be obeyed.

In the night season there have passed before me many presentations, in figures, regarding the work to be done in Oakland. Among other things, I saw One from heaven standing before the people in Oakland and in the surrounding cities, and bearing the proclamation, "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."

To the members of the Oakland church I would say: Do not be discouraged because many of your brethren and sisters are going away in response to the counsels given that our people should leave the cities. Do not feel that Oakland is to be left without a witness. Help and strength must be given to the work in Oakland. God may touch Oakland, but he has spared it thus far, in order that those who have never heard the third angel's message, may be warned and converted and saved. Those who choose to stand on the Lord's side shall behold "what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God."

Much missionary work is to be done in Oakland, and in the surrounding communities. We expect to stand by the brethren and sisters of the Oakland church; and we shall expect you to unite heartily with the conference laborers by rallying around the standard and by doing much personal work among your neighbors and friends. Money will also be needed for the maintenance of the laborers. Let every church-member deny self as Christ denied himself. Let us study the closest economy because of the many pressing calls for means to advance the message. As we sacrifice willingly, God will not fail us in time of need. The Source of all our blessings, he will not allow us to suffer because of our liberality.

[More and more, as time advances, our people will have to leave the cities. For years we have been instructed that our brethren and sisters, and especially families with children, should plan to leave the cities as the way opens before them to do so. Many will have to labor earnestly to help open the way. But until it is possible for them to leave, so long as they remain, they should be most active in doing missionary work, however limited their sphere of influence may be.] As they yield their talents and their all to God to be used as he may direct; as they live out their consecration by engaging in practical missionary work wherever opportunity affords, God will bless them with wisdom and discretion, and in his own way and time he will make it possible for them to place themselves where they will not be surrounded constantly with the contaminating influences of modern city life.

O, how much we need genuine missionaries! How much we need men and women who will labor under the supervision of the Almighty, in the power of his Spirit! How much we need those who know that God has called them to his service! It is when the work goes hard, that living missionaries reveal by their courage and fortitude and their trust in God that they are led and taught by the Holy Spirit.

"He That Sanctifieth"

E. M. H.

In order that man may be led to recognize, confess, and forsake sin, he must believe that there is one who is able to free him from its power.

"Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" was the question of the trembling keeper of the prison. The answer came, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." Acts 16:30, 31. "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever," was set apart from the foundation of the world as man's Saviour from sin. Rev. 5:6; 13:8. When he came to this world, he said, "Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart." Ps. 40:7, 8.

Again in John 17:19 he says, "I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." Christ, then, is he that sanctifieth. "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren."

Does the sanctified include every man in the world? For answer let us take the Lord's own words: "I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine." John 17:9. How does Christ in his prayer show that man is sanctified? "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." John 17:17.

Believing on the Lord Jesus Christ with all the heart, and walking as "dear children," obedient to his holy law, man has his natural heart, which receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, changed, the enmity against God is set aside, and the love of God takes its place.

The first psalm draws a sharp contrast between the sanctified one of God and the man of the world: "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper. The ungodly are not so: but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away."

Christ will not be ashamed of those of whom we read in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, "of whom the world was not worthy," nor will he be ashamed of any child of his sanctified through his truth.

"And O, may this my glory be,
That Christ is not ashamed of me!"

Give to Finish the Work

G. W. WELLS

We are proclaiming to the world what we are pleased to call the third angel's message, and it is certain that this is the closing message of the gospel. We know, too, that when the work involved in giving this message shall have been finished, the whole gospel work will close. The time has come when this work is to be done. We have but this one generation — and that very near its close — in which to complete it; yet "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

However great may be the work yet to be done, God's hand is shaping events, and "he will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness: because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth."

How clear it must appear to all that the progress of the work to be done

The River of Years

IN the Sunrise land, when the morning ray
Was flushing the hills and valleys with gold,
My life-bark was launched on its venturesome way,
Freighted with treasures of value untold;
For who can measure the worth, alone,
Of a human soul, with its hopes and fears,
Embarked on a voyage to a port unknown,
On the mystical river — the River of Years?

'Twas a gentle current that carried me on,
And fair was the shore on either hand;
The crystal wavelets rippled and shone
Over glittering beds of silver sand;
No storm-clouds threaten, no thunders affright,
And life like a dream of enchantment appears,
While idly drifting, by day and by night,
Afloat on the tranquil River of Years.

But perils there were that I soon must try,
Of tortuous channels and treacherous waves,
Where hidden rocks 'neath the surface lie,
And the hungry torrent madly raves.
On the turbulent waters my bark is tossed,
Each thrilling moment new danger appears,
Faith yields to terror, and hope is lost
In the angry rush of the River of Years!

But One was near, whose omnipotent word
The tempest obeys on sea and land;
My despairing cry for succor he heard,
And quickly extended his saving hand.
My battered bark from the rocks set free,
He calmed my terror and dried my tears,
And promised henceforth my pilot to be,
Till I finish my course on the River of Years.

Closing Days at the Oakland (Cal.) Camp-Meeting

MRS. E. G. WHITE

IT was my privilege to attend the Oakland camp-meeting from beginning to close, July 19-29. The meeting was held on a large block in a residence district of Oakland, within easy access of San Francisco and neighboring Bay cities, by trolley and railway. It was reported that there were about two hundred tents pitched for the accommodation of over six hundred campers. The attendance of our brethren and sisters from the surrounding towns was good, and on Sabbaths and Sundays the large pavilion was well filled.

For several weeks prior to this meeting I had been somewhat feeble. But I went trusting in God, and he wonderfully sustained me. I spoke seven times, with no feeling of weariness. Despite the fact that the congregations were often large, and I was under the necessity of speaking so as to make all hear, I was refreshed physically, and was able to do much writing every day. A feeling of peace seemed to take possession of mind and heart from day to day.

The closing Sabbath was a day marked by many rich blessings. At the morning service, the large tent was literally packed with people. Every seat was taken. Elder S. N. Haskell opened the meeting with prayer. I then spoke for about forty-five minutes, on the privileges and the responsibilities of the Christian life, as brought to view in the first chapter of Paul's epistle to the Colossians.

This scripture very clearly teaches us that we may constantly grow in spirituality through Christ our Lord. "To the saints and faithful brethren in Christ which are at Colosse," the apostle Paul wrote: "Grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints, for the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the gospel; which is come unto you, as it is in all the world; and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth also in you, since the day ye heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth."

Paul rejoiced in the fact that the church-members at Colosse manifested a spirit of brotherly love toward one another. "For this cause we also," he declared, "since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding; that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God." To every one who constantly yields his will to the will of the Infinite, to be led and taught of God, there is promised an ever-increasing development in spiritual things. God fixes no limit to the advancement of those who are "filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding."

Through prayer, through watchfulness, through growth in understanding, we are "strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and long-suffering with joyfulness." Thus we are prepared to communicate the word of the living God, the truth for this generation, acceptably to all with whom we are brought into contact. O, let us give "thanks unto the Father," who, in the language of the inspired apostle, "hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light: who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son."

God's plan for us is so broad, so full, so complete, that we have every reason for co-operating whole-heartedly with him in carrying it out. There is no reason for hesitancy on our part. The sacrifice of Christ atones for every sinner. Christ is the One "in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." All that is required on our part is a complete surrender of our thoughts and purposes, our will, all that we have and are, to God, to be used as he may direct.

It matters not how great the sin: he who returns to God, with full purpose of heart, is assured of pardon and peace. "You, that were sometime alienated," the apostle continues, "and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh through death."

And what rich assurances are given to the steadfast,— to those who remain true to their allegiance to the God of heaven! "If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled," the promise reads, "and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven," the Redeemer will "present you holy and unblameable and unreproveable" in the presence of his Father in the kingdom of glory. Wonderful, wonderful assurance! How cheering, indeed, is the hope of the Christian! Naught in this world can compare with the reward set before those who will "be not moved away from the hope of the gospel."

As these thoughts were dwelt upon before the great congregation Sabbath morning, my heart was moved with an intense desire that not one soul in that vast assembly should fail of appropriating the rich promises of the gospel. I appealed to the parents to unite with their children in making sure work for eternity. In these closing hours of probation, none can afford to be listless or half-hearted. A world is to be warned. To every Christian God has given some work to do for the saving of souls. O that every one who claims to be a follower of Jesus, would labor as the Saviour labored for mankind! This would bring untold blessing both to the laborers and to those whom they would be able to lead to the foot of the cross. (2) To every one who has named the name of Jesus, is given the commission to go and tell others that which they have learned of the way of salvation. As they go, Jesus declares, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Anointed by the Holy Spirit, as were the disciples of old, they are to labor in tender sympathy and love for souls ready to perish.

I appealed to the brethren and sisters in Oakland and in the surrounding cities, to rise to their opportunities, gird on the Christian armor, and labor for God in whatever way he may direct. If the members of the Oakland church do all that it is possible for them to do through the power imparted by the Holy Spirit, a great missionary work will be done in this city — a work exceeding anything that has ever been done heretofore in this portion of the Lord's vineyard.

A work of this character must necessarily be accomplished through daily consecration and earnest prayer, through faithful and continued searching of the Scriptures, and through obedience to all the divine commands. (1) We need to draw fresh supplies daily from the great storehouse of God's Word. This will give no time for novel reading, or for anything else that does not edify and strengthen for every good work.

May the Lord help us to choose this day whom we shall serve. Let us make our decision now, at this meeting, to serve God forevermore. The riches of heaven are at the command of God's children. There is set before us the hope of a life that measures with the life of the Eternal. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." Make thorough work for eternity.

After I had finished speaking, the order of the meeting was changed, and Elder G. B. Thompson led out in an earnest revival effort. He appealed most urgently to the unconverted and the backslidden, and called upon all who had not made a full surrender, but who today desired to stand wholly on the Lord's side, to come forward.

The response was most encouraging. The front seats were vacated, and a large number who desired special prayer and help came forward. Every vacated seat was filled. A second move was made to make room for others coming to the front. Several more rows of seats were rapidly filled. I was so thankful to God for this evidence of the working of his Holy Spirit upon hearts.

While the people were coming forward, there was singing by the choir; then several prayers were offered. The Lord Jesus was in our midst. While praying, I felt that it was my privilege to lay hold on the arm of the Infinite, and to cling fast in behalf of the ones who so much needed divine help and blessing. I pleaded for a full surrender on the part of all who signified their determination to leave the ranks of the enemy and to take their position henceforth under the standard of Prince Emmanuel.

Many children and youth were among the number who bowed low before God in repentance and confession of sin, while God's servants offered prayer in behalf of these trembling souls. Afterward, the general congregation was dismissed, and those who had come forward were separated into two groups,— the children, and the older ones. A special season of prayer and of counsel was held with each group. Of the children who gathered in the kindergarten tent, thirty gave in their names for baptism the following day. Several of the older ones, including some whose heads were gray, also followed their Lord in baptism.

Those who bore the responsibilities of this camp-meeting felt as if the good work begun must not be allowed to remain unfinished, and so they decided to leave the large tent standing, and continue evening meetings. A company of workers remained encamped on the grounds, and have daily engaged in house-to-house labor.

At the urgent request of the California Conference Committee, Elder S. N. Haskell and his wife consented to conduct a Bible training-school for workers while this special effort is being put forth for Oakland. They are now training a group of workers for effective service.

It is planned that Elder W. W. Simpson shall begin a series of meetings in Oakland within a very few weeks. With him should be associated a strong force of house-to-house workers. Bible readings should be held in the homes of the people, and our literature should be circulated. Truth, precious truth from the Word of God, is to be presented, both in public and in house-to-house visitation. We have a message that is to prepare a people to stand amid the perils of the last days, and in proclaiming this message we need many men and women filled with the Holy Spirit and with a knowledge of God's Word.

Only a little time remains in which to labor. Now is our golden opportunity to give the third angel's message in the large cities. This is especially true of Oakland. Nothing of an ordinary character will be effective in awakening the people of Oakland to a realization of the times in which they are living, and the meaning of signs rapidly fulfilling. A powerful message must be borne, and faithful house-to-house work must be done by consecrated laborers. May the Lord lay upon many the burden of service.

Work Among the Jews

F. C. GILBERT

We are glad to state that not only is the Lord working upon the hearts of the Jews in Boston and its vicinity, but in other places also we hear of their inquiring concerning the teachings of this people, and why we believe so nearly as they do. At a number of the camp-meetings in the Lake Union, as well as in the Atlantic Union Conferences, we have seen many of the Jews present. Some of them seemed very anxious to know about these things, and if it is really true that Jesus is the Christ. It seems so strange to the Jews to find a people so like themselves. They almost feel as if we were brethren. A canvasser called on a Jewish family, and told them, among other things, that he was a Sabbath-keeper, and did not eat pork. The Jew held forth his hand, and said to the canvasser, "We are brothers."

At the eastern Pennsylvania camp-meeting which was held at Sunbury, there were present some of the time as many as one hundred Jews, and some of the young men would come and stay one or two hours at a time to listen to what was said from the Word of God. They literally begged for reading-matter, saying they really wanted to know. Some of the poor Jews are so discouraged that they say it is no use any more. They feel that the Lord has been away from them so long he will not hear their cries, and therefore it is no use hoping that he ever will hear again.

While at the Chicago camp-meeting it was blessed indeed to see one Jewish man, after a hard and bitter struggle, give in, and accept the Lord Jesus as the Christ.

At the camp-meeting recently held at Lawrence, Mass., there were quite a number of Jews present, and we had two meetings for them. The Lord indeed blessed us, and his Spirit moved upon the hearts of many of them, so that some actually confessed that it was the truth. But their experiences of the past with those whom they considered Christians, came up before them, and it seemed hard for them to yield. The great need in this work is the mighty power of the Holy Spirit to convince the hearts of the Jews so that they will readily see that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God.

One sister who lives in Pennsylvania recently came in contact with some Jews. They soon found out her belief, and were quite surprised to learn that she was a Sabbath-keeper, and did not eat swine's flesh. As a result seven Jews drove over one evening to have an interview with her, and to find out what her belief was. They were very much interested, and desired to know more about this. Is it not true, as the spirit of prophecy has said, "The time has come when the Jews are to be given light"?

The work in Boston is encouraging, and we are looking to the Lord to greatly bless the work this fall and winter.

Some weeks ago we took the children of the sewing school for an outing. They had looked forward to this with much pleasure; and their hearts were made glad when they had the opportunity given them to actually see flowers, and be able to pick them as their very own. They greatly enjoyed the day, and we were certainly blessed as we endeavored to tell them some things about the blessed Lord.

We expect to start our sewing school again soon. We would like to have twice as many children this winter as we had last spring, and we are sure the blessing of the Lord will attend the work. Of course we have to furnish everything free, material, needles, etc. It would be greatly appreciated if any one would assist in securing materials necessary for this branch of the work, as it would give us many more opportunities to go into the people's homes.

While at the camp-ground at Lawrence, Mass., four little Catholic girls came, each with a penny. I asked them what they wanted done with the pennies.

Trifles

You little thought the word you lightly spoke
  Would sear the heart of one you called your friend,
  And through long days cause him to writhe and bend
In voiceless agony beneath its yoke.

You did not know that half-contemptuous smile
  Would send a tottering faith far down the height,
  And hide from him that inner mystic light
That leads a struggling soul from durance vile.

You deemed a thought hid deep within your breast
  Was all your own, and none would ever know
  Its secret presence in your life, when, lo,
It stands revealed — a monstrous, bidden guest.

Universal Guilt During the Time of the End

MRS. E. G. WHITE

There is coming, rapidly and surely, an almost universal guilt upon the inhabitants of the great cities because of the steady increase of determined wickedness. God has given life to man, in order that through a knowledge of the Word and by practising its principles, the human agent may become one with God, obedient to the divine will. But Satan has been working constantly by many devisings to bring man into disfavor with God.

In the antediluvian world, human agencies brought in all manner of devisings and ingenious practises to make of no effect the law of Jehovah. They cast aside his authority, because it interfered with their schemes. As in the days before the flood, so now the time is right upon us when the Lord God must reveal his omnipotent power. Even many of those who claim to believe the truth do not practise the truth. They have the Word, but they do not live in accordance with its precepts. Their business affairs are not conducted in harmony with its teachings. In the plans devised by men who desire to execute their own purposes, is revealed the masterly hand of the enemy. Satan is not asleep; he is wide awake, to make of no effect the sure word of prophecy. With skill and deceptive power he is working to counterwork the expressed will of God, made plain in his Word. For years Satan has been gaining control of human minds, through subtle sophistries that he has devised to take the place of the truth. In this time of peril, right-doers, in the fear of God, will glorify his name by repeating the words of David, "It is time for thee, O Lord, to work; for they have made void thy law."

Through his prophet Zephaniah the Lord specifies the judgments that he will bring upon evil-doers: —

"I will utterly consume all things from off the land, saith the Lord. I will consume man and beast; I will consume the fowls of the heaven, and the fishes of the sea, and the stumbling-blocks with the wicked; and I will cut off man from off the land, saith the Lord. I will also stretch out mine hand upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and I will cut off the remnant of Baal from this place, . . . and them that worship the host of heaven upon the housetops; and them that worship and that swear by the Lord, and that swear by Malcham; and them that are turned back from the Lord; and those that have not sought the Lord, nor inquired for him. Hold thy peace at the presence of the Lord: for the day of the Lord is at hand: for the Lord hath prepared a sacrifice, he hath bid his guests.

"And it shall come to pass in the day of the Lord's sacrifice, that I will punish the princes, and the king's children, and all such as are clothed with strange apparel. In the same day also will I punish all those that leap on the threshold, which fill their master's houses with violence and deceit.

"And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord, that there shall be the noise of a cry from the fish gate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills. Howl, ye inhabitants of Maktesh, for all the merchant people are cut down; all they that bear silver are cut off. And it shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with candles, and punish the men that are settled on their lees: that say in their heart, The Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil. Therefore their goods shall become a booty, and their houses a desolation: they shall also build houses, but not inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, but not drink the wine thereof.

"The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord: the mighty man shall cry there bitterly. That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, a day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers. And I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord: and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dung. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy: for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land.

"Gather yourselves together, yea, gather together, O nation not desired; before the decree bring forth, before the day pass as the chaff, before the fierce anger of the Lord come upon you, before the day of the Lord's anger come upon you.

"Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger. . . . Woe unto the inhabitants of the seacoast, the nation of the Cherethites! the word of the Lord is against you; O Canaan, the land of the Philistines, I will even destroy thee, that there shall be no inhabitant."

In many places there exist conditions that make these words of warning applicable in this our day. Should not the terrible earthquake that has caused almost complete destruction of San Francisco, one of the largest cities of America, awaken a most earnest interest to seek the Lord while he may be found? Let not our ministers, in their discourses, dwell upon commonplace matters. Now is a time when there should be a humbling of the heart before God. Let us seek him while he is to be found on the pardoning side, and not on the judgment side. Wake up, my brethren and sisters. You have no time to lose. Call upon the Lord while he may be found.

"Wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey: for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger: for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy. . . .

"The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth: for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid."

In this our day, some whose tongues are deceitful have been presenting as truth many things that they themselves have originated,— as if the law of truth were in their heart and coming from their lips. But the Lord will surely punish every deceitful, lying tongue that has caused his people to err and to turn from the righteousness of Christ.

"Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem. The Lord hath taken away thy judgments, he hath cast out thine enemy: the King of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee: thou shalt not see evil any more. In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear thou not: and to Zion, Let not thine hands be slack. The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; he will save, he will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing. I will gather them that are sorrowful for the solemn assembly, who are of thee, to whom the reproach of it was a burden.

Behold, at that time I will undo all that afflict thee: and I will save her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out; and I will get them praise and fame in every land where they have been put to shame.

"At that time will I bring you again, even in the time that I gather you: for I will make you a name and a praise among all people of the earth, when I turn back your captivity before your eyes, saith the Lord."

"Go, Strengthen Thyself"

GEO. M. BROWN

THERE had been a great battle between Ahab, king of Israel, and Benhadad, king of Syria, and Ahab was the victor. To this victorious king in his hour of triumph came the prophet with the warning: "Go, strengthen thyself, and mark, and see what thou doest: for at the return of the year the king of Syria will come up against thee." 1 Kings 20:22.

To the casual observer it might seem strange that such a warning should be sent to one who had been so successful, but after carefully considering the circumstances, it will be apparent that the admonition was timely. Ahab, because of his success, was liable to be careless, and feel that, having defeated his enemy once, it would be easy to do so again. It was immediately after the great victory over Jericho that Israel fled from the men of Ai, and the Lord saw that Ahab was in danger of suffering from self-confidence and lack of preparation. God also saw the plottings of Benhadad against Israel, and knew that his defeat had not discouraged him, but had increased his eagerness for another battle by adding a thirst for revenge to his desire for conquest, thus giving him a double incentive for renewing the war.

How is it in the Christian warfare, my brother? Have not some of your most disastrous defeats followed closely after great victories? Have you not sometime attended a good meeting where you received a great blessing and renewed your vows of consecration to God, feeling that never again would you doubt him or yield to Satan's temptations? Soon after, perhaps before you reached home, did not something unexpected arise, and before you recognized it as a snare of the enemy, you were caught, thus losing your victory and falling into sin and discouragement? Why was this? It was because carelessness and self-confidence took the place of watchfulness and trust in God. You did not strengthen yourself to meet the return of the enemy. Had you heeded the warning given to Israel's king, the victory would have been a call to strengthen yourself, and then when the enemy came, he would have found you prepared, and he would have been the defeated one instead of you.

The pride and unbending will which led Lucifer to rebel, when an angel in glory, leads him to persist in his warfare against God and his people, and he will not give up the struggle because he loses a battle or two. No! he simply redoubles his efforts, and masking his batteries more skilfully, renews his attack.

Our Captain knows all the enemy's arts and devices, and if we follow him, he will instruct us and strengthen us so that we may go forward, conquering and to conquer until the final victory is won, and we stand on the sea of glass and sing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

Paul said: "When I am weak, then am I strong." The reverse is also true, and no one is in greater danger than he who, thinking he is strong, is overconfident and careless. Much has been said and written to encourage the discouraged and defeated. These few words are written to caution the confident and successful against the feeling of security which leads to that carelessness which invites attack from the enemy of our souls, and ends in discouragement and defeat. "Go, strengthen thyself, and mark, and see what thou doest."

Appetite and Its Results

ALBERT C. ANDERSON

MAN must overcome on the points where he was overcome; that is, upon appetite and the desire for unlawful knowledge. These are the two points upon which God's people are sorely tempted to-day, and this pernicious seed sown by the arch rebel in Eden must be completely uprooted.

I wish to call the reader's attention to the instruction found in the book "Christian Temperance:"—

"Infinite wisdom immediately devised the scheme of redemption, which placed man on a second probation, by giving him another trial, with the great Redeemer to help him in the work of forming a perfect character. And to say the very least, it is reasonable to suppose that, in the second probation, men would be tested just where God tested our first parents in Eden, and that the indulgence of the appetite and passions would be the greatest moral evil in this world during the period of human probation."

"In the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking," that is, giving loose rein to appetite, thus allowing Satan an opportunity to work upon the carnal passions. And the Saviour's warning to his people living just prior to his second advent is, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting [overeating], and drunkenness, and cares of this life [what we shall eat and drink, etc.], and so that day come upon you unawares." It is true that the Bible speaks about the eating of clean meats, but God now, once and forever, desires to bring his people back to the original diet given at creation; and by the light given us through the spirit of prophecy we know we are going contrary to his will if we refuse to come back. God has plainly told us, through the spirit of prophecy, "that no longer are we to be a mixed multitude, and that now, just now, we are passing through the crisis that will bring deliverance to the people of God."

By refusing to come back to the original diet which God gave man at creation, we confess that we do not believe that God will again restore our Eden home. In the new earth God will not permit us to take the lives of his beautiful animals to gratify our lustful appetites. It was by yielding to appetite that man lost his Eden home, and it is by a complete victory over this desire and all other evil desires that we shall be reinstated in our Eden home again. Then the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, the calf and the young lion and the fatling shall lie down together, and none shall make them afraid; and furthermore, a little child shall lead them. Even the lion will then have no desire to live on a flesh diet; this carnivorous desire will have left both man and beast. See Hosea 2:18; Isa. 11:6-9.

When the Lord was leading Israel out of Egypt to the promised land, he chose for them the bill of fare which he saw was best for them; and they were a type of modern Israel who are going into the heavenly Canaan. "But with many of them God was not well pleased: for they were overthrown in the wilderness. Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted." And every one who had greater love for the fleshpots of Egypt, with the cucumbers, leeks, and onions, than for the prize set before them, fell in the wilderness. 1 Cor. 10:5, 6; Ex. 16:2-4; Num. 11:4-6. The man who striveth for the mastery must be temperate in all things, and "yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully."

The Redeemer began his work on the very point where man failed. He was not surrounded with all manner of good things which it was lawful to eat, but he was in the wilderness, and "when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungred." Then is when the tempter came to him, and said, "If thou be the son of God, command that these stones be made bread." Think of it,—he, the Lord of all creation, could turn the stones into bread immediately, yet he hungered; was not this a temptation? May we, like our Saviour, prove that we are his children, by living up to all the light given us.

"Again and again I have been shown that God is trying to lead us back, step by step, to his original design,—that man should subsist upon the natural products of the earth. Among those who are waiting for the coming of the Lord, meat eating will eventually be done away; flesh will cease to form a part of their diet. We should ever keep this end in view, and endeavor to work steadily toward it. I can not think that in the practise of flesh eating we are in harmony with the light which God has

Forgive and Forget

Forgive and forget; the world would be lonely,
The garden a wilderness left to deform,
If the flowers remembered their chilling winds only,
The fields gave no verdure for fear of the storm.

Still in thy sojourn, emblem the flower,
Give fragrance of feeling to sweeten life's way;
Prolong not again the brief cloud of an hour,
With unkindness that darkens the rest of the day.

Forgive and forget; no heart so unfeeling
But some gentle thoughts of affection there live.
The best of us all require some concealing;
A heart that with love can forget and forgive.

Then away with the cloud from those stern-looking eyes;
That brow was no home for such frowns to have met.
How could you hope for a home in the skies,
Should Jesus refuse to forgive and forget?

"Nineveh, That Great City"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up before me."

This is the special message that God bade his servant Jonah bear in the ancient and populous city founded by Asshur, the son of Shem, who "went forth" from "the land of Shinar" about the time of the dispersion from Babel, "and builded Nineveh" along the fertile bank of the Tigris, over two hundred miles to the northward from Babylon.

Jonah was bidden to "cry against" the city, but he was averse to bearing any such message. Instead of obeying, he "rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord, and went down to Joppa; and he found a ship going to Tarshish: so he paid the fare thereof and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord."

God in his providence taught Jonah, by severe affliction, the lesson of obedience that enabled him to fulfil God's purpose in behalf of the inhabitants of Nineveh. The record of his experience, as given in the first and second chapters of Jonah, is worthy of most careful study.

"The word of the Lord came unto Jonah the second time, saying, Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee. So Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, according to the word of the Lord. Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city of three days' journey, . . . and he cried, and said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.

"So the people of Nineveh believed God and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them. For word came unto the king of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and he laid his robe from him, and covered him with sackcloth, and sat in ashes. And he caused it to be proclaimed and published through Nineveh by the decree of the king and his nobles, saying, Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste anything: let them not feed, nor drink water: but let man and beast be covered with sackcloth, and cry mightily unto God: yea, let them turn every one from his evil way, and from the violence that is in their hands. Who can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not?"

As the people of Nineveh humbled themselves before God, and cried to him for mercy, he heard their cry. "And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil that he had said that he would do unto them; and he did it not."

But Jonah revealed that he valued the souls in that wretched city less than he valued his reputation. He feared lest he should be regarded as a false prophet. The compassion shown by God toward the repentant people "displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry." "Was not this my saying," he inquired of the Lord, "when I was yet in my country? Therefore I fled before unto Tarshish: for I knew that thou art a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repentest thee of the evil."

When Jonah saw the Lord exercising his compassionate attributes in sparing the city that had corrupted its ways before him, he should have co-operated with God in his merciful design. But he lost sight of the interests of the people. Again he yielded to his feelings, and, as the result, he was not grieved over the thought that so large a number must perish because they had not been taught to do right. He felt as if he would rather die than live to see the city spared; and in his dissatisfaction he exclaimed, "Now, O Lord, take, I beseech thee, my life from me; for it is better for me to die than to live.

"Then said the Lord, Doest thou well to be angry? So Jonah went out of the city, and sat on the east side of the city, and there made him a booth, and sat under it in the shadow, till he might see what would become of the city. And the Lord God prepared a gourd, and made it to come up over Jonah, that it might be a shadow over his head, to deliver him from his grief. So Jonah was exceeding glad of the gourd."

Then the Lord gave Jonah an object-lesson. He "prepared a worm when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd that it withered. And it came to pass, when the sun did arise, that God prepared a vehement east wind; and the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die, and said, It is better for me to die than to live. And God said to Jonah, Doest thou well to be angry for the gourd? And he said, I do well to be angry, even unto death.

"Then said the Lord, Thou hast had pity on the gourd, for the which thou hast not labored, neither madest it grow; which came up in a night, and perished in a night: and should not I spare Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons that can not discern between their right hand and their left hand; and also much cattle?"

Our God is a God of compassion. With long-sufferance and tender mercy he deals with the transgressors of his law. And yet, in this our day, when men and women have so many opportunities for becoming familiar with the divine law as revealed in Holy Writ, the great Ruler of the universe can not behold with any satisfaction the wicked cities, where reign violence and crime. If the people in these cities would repent, as did the inhabitants of Nineveh, many more such messages as Jonah's would be given.

Of the disobedient, God now declares: "Although they have been cumberers of my ground, I will forbear with them as long as there is a possibility of their repenting. Toward those who will choose to leave the ranks of the transgressors of my law, and to stand under the blood-stained banner of Prince Emmanuel, I will show mercy and forgiveness. But the end of my forbearance with those who persist in disobedience is approaching rapidly."

Ought men to be surprised over a sudden and unexpected change in the dealings of the Supreme Ruler with the inhabitants of a fallen world? Ought they to be surprised when punishment follows transgression and increasing crime? Ought they to be surprised that God should bring destruction and death upon those whose ill-gotten gains have been obtained through deception and fraud? Notwithstanding the fact that increasing light regarding God's requirements has been shining on their pathway, many have refused to recognize Jehovah's supreme rulership, and have chosen to remain under the black banner of the originator of all rebellion against the government of heaven.

The forbearance of God has been very great,— so great that when we consider the continuous insult to his holy commandments, we marvel. The Omnipotent One has been exerting a restraining power over his own attributes. But he will certainly arise to punish the wicked, who so boldly defy the just claims of the decalogue.

Not long ago, in the visions of the night, I was in a large assembly, where the sacredness of God's law was being pointed out. With solemn earnestness a speaker read the one hundred and nineteenth, the one hundred and twenty-sixth, and the one hundred and twenty-seventh psalms. He declared that the wickedness of the world has reached a point where the Lord will certainly interfere. These words were repeated: "The Lord is slow to anger, and of great power, and will not at all acquit the wicked. The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and in the bowels of the earth, and in the clouds wherewith he hides himself."

By studying the story of the Amorites, we may learn a lesson regarding God's dealings with the transgressors of his law. God promised Abraham and his posterity the land of Canaan; but centuries passed by before this promise was fulfilled. One reason given was that the iniquity of the Amorites was not yet full. Though practising idolatry, they had not yet reached the full measure of guilt that was to bring upon them the vengeance of God. Finally, when their period of probation was ended, the command was given for their destruction.

God allows men a period of probation; but there is a point beyond which divine patience is exhausted and the judgments of God are sure to follow. The Lord bears long with men, and with cities, mercifully giving warnings to save them from divine wrath; but a time will come when pleadings for mercy will no longer be heard, and the rebellious element that continues to reject the light of truth, will be blotted out in mercy to themselves and to those who would otherwise be influenced by their example.

Lessons From Past Experiences
No. 7

GEO. O. STATES

In the spring of 1861, when the war broke out in this country, President Lincoln called for seventy-five thousand men for three months. Few believed the war would last that long. Those who believed what had been shown Sister White in Parkville, Mich., Jan. 12, 1861, knew something serious was before this nation. "We knew that a most terrible war was before us, which would cause great distress and anguish." As the war progressed, the North was confident of final victory, not realizing how well the South was prepared for the conflict.

In "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. I, pages 266 and 267, is given a vivid account of the disastrous battle of Manassas, Va. The people of the North were greatly astonished at the unexpected defeat of the Northern army. As time went on and the war continued, becoming more and more serious, draft after draft was proclaimed. During these trying times as our ministers went out to preach the word, they found the people so absorbed with the terrible carnage that was going on that it was almost impossible to call their attention to the third angel's message.

Conditions were growing more serious. Many of our people were drafted, and had to go into the war or pay three hundred dollars. At this time meetings of counsel were held in the Battle Creek church, and the leading brethren advised all to pray much and talk little. In the winter of 1865 large bounties were paid for substitutes, and it began to look as if some of the European nations would take sides with the South, and thus bring about a general war.

Thus matters stood when in the Review of Feb. 21, 1865, there appeared a long article setting before our people the seriousness of the situation, appointing a four-day season of prayer for the end of the war, and urging our people to put away all differences, humble their hearts, and seek God earnestly. This they did.

Those of us who participated in those experiences knew what it was to plead with the Lord. Brethren and sisters who had differences confessed their wrongs, and as far as possible made matters right. We all felt that we were doing a special work, and that God was going to hear and answer our petitions. We felt that the only way that the work of God could be carried on was for the war to cease, and so we earnestly pleaded for that definite object.

Immediately after these four days of fasting and prayer the Northern army began to gain victories. Soon the news flashed over the wires, "Richmond is taken, Lee has surrendered, and the war is over." This all took place within a few weeks after God's people fasted and prayed. It was brought about so soon that men of the world were amazed. A peace convention was held, I think in Washington, D. C., and a large banner was stretched across one of the main thoroughfares, with these words, "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes," showing how astonished men of the world were at the unexpected termination of the war. God's people, who spent those four days in earnestly seeking the Lord, knew it was in answer to prayer.

The Beginning of Day

J. N. LOUGHBOROUGH

"Where is the way where light dwelleth? and as for darkness, where is the place thereof, that thou shouldest take it to the bound thereof, and that thou shouldest know the paths to the house thereof?" Job 38:19, 20. These are among the words spoken by the Lord to Job when correcting him and his unwise comforters. In these questions is really involved the thought, Where is the exact point where light separates from darkness? or in other words, Where is the line of day? Where does one day begin, and another end?

The Lord gave the sun to rule the day. Ps. 136:8. When he was appointing days to be observed by his people, he said they should regard them "from even unto even." Lev. 23:32. And in his Word we learn that "at evening" is "when the sun did set." Mark 1:32. So in the revolution of the earth on its axis, causing the recurrence of day and night, the setting of the sun is God's signal for the beginning of a twenty-four-hour day.

In no place in his Word has he ever told us the precise point we must begin to reckon those sun settings. At the close of creation week, when God sanctified the seventh day (commanded it to be kept holy) those to whom it was first given were in the garden of Eden. But in the settlement of the earth, their posterity went east from Eden, as well as west. Now if Eden was an exact longitudinal point from which they must reckon the course of day, then those who went east from Eden would begin their Sabbath just as those west of Eden were closing the Sabbath day. We have no hint in all the Bible that any such difference ever existed among the Edenic race.

After the flood the descendants of Noah — the posterity of Shem, Ham, and Japheth — divided the territory of the Eastern continent (Gen. 9:19), settling in Europe, Asia, and Africa. Thus they were scattered hundreds of miles apart, and far away from any point that has been conjectured as the ancient site of Eden. Being thus far away, east and west, from that point, did they differ one day in reckoning the days of the week, or in the keeping of the Lord's Sabbath? There is nothing in the Scriptures from which we could infer any such thing.

The facts in the case are these: As mankind settled the world, they went east and west until they had covered the land portion. They took their day reckoning with them, as measured by God's great timekeeper,— the sun,— and never knew any necessity for any other "day line" until they began to cross the Pacific Ocean. Going from either side to the other, they found a difference of a day in the reckoning of the day of the week. All the nations on the lands thus settled were agreed in their reckoning of the days of the week. They still thus agree, as may be demonstrated by the "chart of the days of the week," compiled by William Meade Jones and Prince Lucien Bonaparte, of London, England. This agreement is in itself a proof that none of these have ever recognized an Edenic day line.

As before stated, men circled the land portion of the earth, from the west side of the Pacific Ocean —Asia — to the east side — America — all in the whole round were in perfect harmony in their week, and day reckoning. They began to cross the Pacific Ocean, and, whether going east or west, if they took their day reckoning with them, they would find themselves out of harmony with those on the other side. This demonstrated a stubborn fact, which was this: In God's providence, in the settling of this world, following the Lord's timekeeper — the sun — days were fixed to this earth, and

Looking This Way

Over the ocean, across the wild wave,
Heathen are dying, with no one to save;
No one to rescue from grief and dismay,
The heathen are waiting and looking this way.

Looking for you, brother, happy in grace;
Living each day in the light of His face.
Looking for you, sister, how can you stay
When the heathen are looking and calling this way?

Think of the grace that to you has been giv'n,
Knowledge of Jesus, the Saviour in heaven,
God's Holy Bible, the light of life's way,
Unknown to the heathen still looking this way.

Show us the light which to you has been giv'n,
Bright Sun of Righteousness, sent down from heaven;
Come over and help us; send messengers, pray;
We are fainting and dying by thousands to-day.

Idols of stone can not help us we know;
But where is your God? O, where shall we go?
Going to judgment without one glad day,
The heathen are waiting and looking this way.

Jesus, the Saviour, bright Morning Star,
Looking for lost ones, straying afar;
Be his glad messenger, speed on your way
To the millions of heathen waiting to-day.

Drunkenness and Crime

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) In these times, when the daily newspapers are filled with many horrible details of revolting drunkenness and terrible crime, there is a tendency to become so familiar with existing conditions that we lose sight of the significance of these conditions. Violence is in the land. More intoxicating liquor is used than has ever been used heretofore. The story of the resultant crime is given fully in the newspapers. And yet, notwithstanding the many evidences of increasing lawlessness, men seldom stop to consider seriously the meaning of these things. Almost without exception, men boast of the enlightenment and progress of the present age.

Upon us, to whom God has given great light, rests the solemn responsibility of calling the attention of thinking men and women to the significance of the prevalence of drunkenness and crime with which they are so familiar. We should bring before their minds the scriptures that plainly portray the conditions which shall exist just prior to the second coming of Christ. Faithfully should we uplift the divine standard, and raise our voices in protest against the sanctioning of the liquor traffic by legal enactment.

(2) For a time after the great earthquake along the coast of California, the authorities in San Francisco and in some of the smaller cities and towns ordered the closing of all liquor saloons. So marked were the effects of this strictly enforced ordinance, that the attention of thinking men throughout America, and notably on the Pacific Coast, was directed to the advantages that would result from a permanent closing of all saloons. During many weeks following the earthquake in San Francisco, very little drunkenness was seen. No intoxicating drinks were sold. The disorganized and unsettled state of affairs gave the city officials reason to expect an abnormal increase of disorder and crime, and they were greatly surprised to find the opposite true. Those from whom was expected much trouble, gave but little. This remarkable freedom from violence and crime was traceable largely to the disuse of intoxicants.

The editors of some of the leading dailies took the position that it would be for the permanent betterment of society and for the upbuilding of the best interests of the city, were the saloons to remain closed forever. But wise counsel was swept aside, and within a few short weeks permission was given the liquor dealers to reopen their places of business, upon the payment of a considerably higher license than had formerly been paid into the city treasury.

In the calamity that befell San Francisco, the Lord designed to wipe out the liquor saloons that have been the cause of so much evil, so much misery and crime; and yet the guardians of the public welfare have proved unfaithful to their trust, by legalizing the sale of liquor. Those who have been placed in positions of official responsibility, and who in the recent past have become thoroughly familiar with the advantages of the closed saloon, now deliberately choose to enact laws sanctioning the carrying on of the liquor traffic. (3) They know that in doing this, they are virtually licensing the commission of crime; and yet their knowledge of this sure result deters them not.

(4) The evils that are so apparent at the present time, are the same that brought destruction to the antediluvian world. "In the days that were before the flood" one of the prevailing sins was drunkenness. From the record in Genesis we learn that "the earth also was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence." Crime reigned supreme; life itself was unsafe. Men whose reason was dethroned by intoxicating drink, thought little of taking the life of a human being.

"As the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." The drunkenness and the crime that now prevail, have been foretold by the Saviour himself. We are living in the closing days of this earth's history. It is a most solemn time. Everything betokens the soon return of our Lord. (4) The very conditions we see in the great cities of our land; the mad acts of men whose minds have been inflamed by drugged liquor sold under sanction of human enactments; the dead and the dying whose destruction can be traced to the use of poisonous liquor,— all these evils are but a fulfilment of our Saviour's prophecy, whereby we may know that Jesus will soon appear in the clouds of heaven.

O, what a work there is before the faithful watchman who must quickly warn the people of the perils of these last days! How important it is that God's messengers shall call the attention of statesmen, of editors, of thinking men everywhere, to the deep significance of the drunkenness and the violence now filling the land with desolation and death! As faithful colaborers with God, we must bear a clear, decided testimony on the temperance question. (5)

The Lord can not bear much longer with an intemperate and perverse generation. In days of old, when Moses was rehearsing the desire of Jehovah concerning his people, there were uttered against the drunkard the following words: —

"The Lord will not spare him, but then the anger of the Lord and his jealousies shall smoke against that man, and all the curses that are written in this book shall lie upon him, and the Lord shall blot out his name from under heaven."

The people of San Francisco must answer at the judgment bar of God for the reopening of the liquor saloons in that city. (6) O that our cities might reform! In places where the judgments of heaven have fallen, God is now proving those whose lives he has spared, as to whether they will continue to allow health and reason to be destroyed by the sale of maddening drink. To-day, in many places, men are being tried in courts of justice, because under the influence of drugged liquor they have committed all manner of violence and sin. Satan looks on, highly gratified over the persistent determination of men to sell and use these poisonous drinks.

Well could it be said of the cities in our world to-day, as the Saviour declared of the cities "wherein most of his mighty works were done," "Woe unto thee!" "The men of Nineveh shall rise up in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it; because they repented at the preaching of Jonah." When the Lord sees men whom he has spared as he spared the inhabitants of Nineveh, continue to legalize and carry on the liquor traffic, the next stroke of the Infinite will be to destroy life. God has given men an opportunity to repent, to prepare to meet death with Christ's armor on, if death must come; and yet they continue in the wicked works that brought the cities under the rebuke and the chastening hand of God, and caused the devastation of that in which they took so much pride.

(1) (2) (3) (4) (5) (6)
Temperance p. 251; 26; 26-27; 25; 251; 27

Human lives have been wonderfully preserved. Should there not be an acknowledgment of the Lord's mercy? Should there not be heartfelt repentance? Should not the liquor saloons that have wrought so much evil, be entirely abolished?

God is now withholding further vengeance, in order that a faithful work may be done by his ministers. Let there be proclaimed, with no uncertain sound, the message: "Watch; . . . for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." In every place is to be heard the voice of the faithful sentinel of truth. God is now calling upon his servants to engage in this closing work of warning the world. Those whose talents have heretofore been tied up in mercantile and other worldly pursuits, are now to plan to use their talents speedily in proclaiming the third angel's message. Let not Satan keep you from engaging in this work. Count the cost of delay. Souls are perishing in sin. We must now improve every opportunity.

The world is to be warned; soon Jesus will come. We are to allow nothing to interpose between us and the work God has given us to do. The people must hear the truth in clear, distinct lines. Just at this time we must make special efforts to bring the truth before those who live in our cities. As we near the close of this earth's history, we shall see repeated in many other places the calamity that befell San Francisco. (1) Now is our golden opportunity to co-operate with heavenly intelligences in enlightening the understanding of those who are studying the meaning of the rapid increase of crime and disaster. As we do our part faithfully, the Lord will bless our efforts to the saving of many precious souls.

The Blessed Hope

G. W. WELLS

He is coming, the Saviour of the world is coming again! This thought should fill every Christian's heart with joy. It has been the long-looked-for, long-hoped-for event of all the past ages. The glorious consummation of all the prophetic utterances is reached in that day. The cruel reign of sin will then cease forever. O day of joy and gladness and rapturous delight!

"My longing heart cries out, O, come!
  Creation groans for thee!
The weary pilgrim sighs, O come!
  Bring immortality."

Jesus said to his disciples, shortly before he left this world, "Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow me afterward." No doubt this statement filled their hearts with sorrow; they did not comprehend its true meaning. Peter said, "Why can not I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy sake." Their love for their Commander was warm and fervent, and they found pleasure in his presence. To cheer their hearts, and to comfort his followers in all future time, he uttered this most assuring promise, "I will come again." "I go to prepare a place for you," and "I will come again." What for? — To "receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14: 1-3.

No promise have we of entering into his presence, of being with him, until "that day." "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Thank God for the assurance of the resurrection, without which even those "fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." These are words of comfort: for those of our loved ones who have fallen asleep in Jesus, and are sweetly resting in "their beds" (Isa. 57: 1-3), now come forth glorified, and they with us are made immortal, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound; and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." 1 Cor. 15: 52. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

If then, as we see by these irrevocable statements, our being with him, our seeing him as he is, our entering into our reward and being made immortal; if the bringing to an end of iniquity and sin, and the ushering in of the reign of righteousness and peace, the gathering together of all the redeemed, yea, the joy of being with him where he is,— if all this is contingent on his second coming, how important that we prepare for, and look forward to, that day of all days! "Looking for that blessed hope, and glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ"— him who made himself a friend of sinners, him whose hand was ever ready to minister to suffering humanity, him whose ear was never deaf to the cry of the unfortunate, him whose lips spoke only pardon and hope. The "chiefest among ten thousand," the One "altogether lovely," is coming again. That is his promise.

For six thousand years sin has reigned in the hearts of men and held sway in the earth. O, what rivers of scalding tears, multitudes of broken hearts, and blasted hopes, and ruined lives, this old world has witnessed! But now it is in its last struggle. The King of Peace is soon to come. What will ever stay the deadening tide of intemperance and crime that is blighting the homes and lives of millions? What will ever bring to an end the cruel, thoughtless, heart-sickening oppression of the poor and the needy? What, O what, but the glorious appearing of Jesus? Praise God, that day is "near, it is near, and hasteth greatly." Glorious will be the deliverance and rich the reward of the faithful in that day, and together the redeemed will join in the universal anthem of praise, saying, "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and power, and might, be unto our God forever and ever."

Our Lord's Teachings About Money

One huge barrier always more or less obstructs the mission work of the church — the want of money. The fear of debt often prevents forward movement, and the fact of debt compels retrenchment. Even when men offer to go, Boards are often unable to send and support them. We believe that all this ought not to be so. Our Lord's teachings as to money gifts, if obeyed, would forever banish both these limitations on church work and all concern about supplies. These teachings are radical and revolutionary. So far are they from practical acceptance that, although perfectly explicit, they seem more like a dead language that has passed out of use than a living tongue that millions know and speak. Yet, when these principles and precepts of our Lord on giving are collated and compared, they are found to contain the materials of a complete ethical system on the subject of money, its true nature, value, relation, and use. Should these sublime and unique teachings be translated into living, the effect not only upon benevolent work, but upon our whole spiritual character, would be incalculable.

Brevity compels us to be content with a simple outline of this body of teaching, scattered through the four Gospel narratives, but gathered up and methodically presented by Paul in that exhaustive discussion of Christian giving in 2 Cor. 7: 9.

1. The basis of Christ's teaching about money is the fundamental conception of stewardship (Luke 12: 42; 16: 1-8). Not only money, but every gift of God is received in trust for its use. Man is not an owner, but a trustee, managing another's goods and estates, God being the one original and inalienable owner of all. The two things required of stewards are that they be "faithful and wise," that they study to employ God's gifts with fidelity and sagacity — fidelity, so that God's entrustments be not perverted to self-indulgence; sagacity, so that they be converted into as large gains as possible.

There is a perfectly plain and simple basal principle, yet it is not the accepted foundation of our money making and using. The vast majority, even of disciples, practically leave God out of their thoughts when they engage in finance. Men consider themselves owners; they "make money" by their industry, economy, shrewdness, application; it is theirs to do as they will with it. There is little

He Knoweth Your Need

I would not worry, if I were you;
The days will come, and the days will go,
And anon the sky will be gray or blue,
And the earth be covered with flowers or snow;
The sun will shine, or the rain will fall,
But God stands over and under all.

Some days will be dark, with scarcely a sign
That God ever gave you a loving thought;
And his face will be hid with his love benign,
And your soul lie prone with a fight ill fought;
And life will seem empty of every joy —
A worthless bauble, a broken toy.

But I would not worry, if I were you,
It will all come right, pretty soon, depend;
The rain will cease, and the sky grow blue,
And God to your heart will kindly send
His message of love — and by and by
You will wonder why you should be sad and cry.

Bide close to the Father, let come what may,
Reach out for his hand in rain or shine;
He will turn your night into sweetest day,
And share his bounty of love divine.
He never forgets for a single day —
Why need then to fret and worry alway?

"Prepare Ye the Way of the Lord"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

In John the Baptist God raised up a messenger to prepare the way of the Lord. He was to bear to the world an unflinching testimony, reproving and denouncing sin. The angel, in announcing John's mission and work, said: "He shall go before Him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord."

John had not been educated in the schools of the rabbis. He had obtained no human scholarship. The forerunner of Christ did not expose himself to evil conversation and the corrupting influences of the world. He chose to have his home in the wilderness. Here his surroundings were favorable to habits of simplicity and self-denial. Uninterrupted by the clamor of the world, he could here study the lessons of nature, of revelation, and of providence, and preserve a sacred sense of the majesty of God.

To prepare the way before Christ, one was needed, who, like the prophets of old, could summon the degenerate nation to repentance, and the voice of John was lifted up like a trumpet. His commission was, "Show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins." He presented no long arguments, no fine-spun theories, elaborately delivered in their "first," "secondly," and "thirdly." Pure, native eloquence was revealed; every word carried with it certainty and truth.

And all went forth into the wilderness to hear him. Unlearned peasants and fishermen came from the surrounding country. The Roman soldiers from the barracks of Herod came to hear him. Chieftains came, with their swords girded at their sides, to put down anything that savored of rebellion. The avaricious tax-gatherers came from the regions round about, and from the Sanhedrin came the phylacteried priests. All listened as if spellbound; and all came away, even the Pharisee, the Sadducee, and the cold, unimpressible scoffer, with the sneer gone, and cut to the heart with a sense of their sins.

John called every class to repentance. He met sin with open rebuke, in men of humble occupation, and in men of high degree. He declared the truth to kings and nobles, whether they would hear or reject it. And kings and nobles, Pharisees and Sadducees, Roman soldiers, and officers trained in all court etiquette, wily, calculating tax-gatherers and world-renowned men, listened to his words. They had confidence in his plain statements, and were convicted of sin.

In this age, just prior to the second coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven, God calls for men who will prepare a people to stand in the great day of the Lord. Just such a work as that of John is to be carried on in these last days. The Lord has given messages to his people, through the instruments he has chosen, and he would have all give heed to the admonitions and warnings he sends. The message preceding the public ministry of Christ was, Repent, publicans and sinners. Repent, Pharisees and Sadducees. Repent, "for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Our message is not to be one of peace and safety. As a people who believe in Christ's soon appearing, we have a message to bear,—"Prepare to meet thy God." We are to lift up the standard and bear the third angel's message. Our message must be as direct as was the message of John. He rebuked kings for their iniquity. Notwithstanding that his life was in peril, the truth did not languish upon his lips. And our work in this age must be as faithfully done.

The inhabitants of the world at this time are represented by the dwellers upon the earth at the time of the flood. The wickedness of the antediluvians is plainly stated: "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." God became weary of this people whose thoughts were only of sinful pleasure and indulgence. They sought not the counsel of God who had created them, nor cared to do his will. The rebuke of God was upon them because they followed the imagination of their own hearts; and there was violence in the land. "And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth. . . . and, behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth. And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and, behold, I will destroy them from the earth."

In his teachings Christ referred to this. "But as the days of Noe were," he said, "so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

Look at the picture which the world presents to-day. Dishonesty, fraud, and bankruptcies, violence and bloodshed, exist on every hand. The widows and the fatherless are robbed of their all. Plays, horse-races, and amusements of every kind occupy the mind. In the church, sins have become fashionable. They are glossed over and excused. The right hand of fellowship is given to the very men who bring in false theories and sentiments. Thus the discernment and sensibilities have become deadened as to what constitutes right principles. Conscience has become insensible to the counsel and reproofs which have been given. The light given, calling to repentance, has been shut out by the thick cloud of unbelief and opposition brought in by human plans and human inventions.

The inhabitants of the antediluvian world had the warning given them prior to their overthrow; but the warning was not heeded. They refused to listen to the words of Noah; they mocked at his message. Righteous men lived in that generation. [Before the destruction of the antediluvian world, Enoch bore his testimony unflinchingly.] (1) And in prophetic vision he saw the condition of the world at the present time. He said, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. These are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lust; and their mouth speaketh great swelling words, having men's persons in admiration because of advantage." Jude leaves the testimony for the believers: "But, beloved, remember the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; how they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit."

It is living earnestness that God requires at this time. Ministers may have but little learning from books; but if they do the best they can with their talents; if they work as they have opportunity; if they clothe their utterances in the plainest and most simple language; if they walk in carefulness and humility, seeking for heavenly wisdom; if they work for God from the heart, actuated by love for Christ and the souls for whom Christ has died, they will be listened to by men of even superior ability and talents. There will be a charm in the simplicity of the truths they present.

The men who have spent long terms in the study of books are not all revealing in their lives that earnest ministry which is essential for this time. Some do not have a simple, straightforward testimony. Among ministers there is a need of the infusion of the Spirit of God. The prayerful, earnest appeals that come from the heart of the whole-hearted messenger, will create conviction. It will not need the learned men to do this; for often they depend more on their own learning than upon their knowledge of God, and of Jesus Christ, whom he has sent. All who know the only true and living God, will know Jesus Christ, the only begotten of the Father, and they will preach Christ and him crucified.

The Individual Cup

[The following article, contributed to The Welcome Visitor by Elder H. H. Burkholder, president of the Ohio Conference, deals with a subject which is agitating the minds of many of our people. We believe that the reasons here presented in favor of the use of the individual cup at the communion service are worthy of candid and thoughtful consideration.— ED.]

AT our recent camp-meeting many of the local church elders present spent an hour each day in the study of various questions concerning government, order, and discipline in local church management. It was the writer's privilege to attend these meetings, and he believes the time was well and profitably spent.

One of the questions quite thoroughly discussed was the use of the individual cup at the communion service. The purpose of this ordinance should not be robbed of any of its sanctity by indifference or neglect on our part. Neither should the communicants be deprived of the full enjoyment of the sacrament by a failure to conduct this service in the most careful and impressive manner.

With a knowledge of the fact that many of the diseases of the present time are either contagious or infectious, we believe it to be the inalienable right of every individual to protect himself in every consistent way against contamination, and to use every precaution to preserve his health. This position, with the knowledge, too, that it frequently occurs that persons well advanced with tubercular trouble are present at communion services, and wish to share its enjoyment, which should not be denied them, it was the unanimous opinion of all present that the use of the individual cup at communion services should be encouraged in all our churches. This can be done with but little expense, and the results will be far more safe and satisfactory in the end. This plan is already in use in a number of our churches, and is well liked wherever tried. Personally, I favor the use of the individual cup, and most heartily approve the action of the local elders in this matter.

Prayer

THE life of Jesus was one of incessant toil, yet he felt the need of divine strength as he went forth for duty. We read that the divine Son of God was in constant communion with his Father, and that the Father imparted to him everything, even his sorrows. We find in his early life a record like this: "Rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed." "And he withdrew himself into the wilderness, and prayed." "And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer."

How is it with us? Perhaps we pray at morning, noon, and night; but is there not a tendency to let the cares of life so absorb our time that this privilege of going to Jesus and telling him our needs in times of trial, perplexity, or grief, is sadly neglected? Thus we try to bear life's burdens alone, when the Saviour is ever near to help us, and he bids us come to him. How much stronger we should be if we accepted his offers of help in times of need!

Praising God

Can you praise God, from whom all blessings flow, under all circumstances? When everything moves along smoothly, perhaps we can; but when things look dark and discouraging, and we can not see how it is all coming out, how then? If our Father stands at the helm guiding this frail bark, why not trust him to help us through all life's conflicts, be they small or great.

Trusting

"O, how sweet to trust in Jesus!" must be sung as heartily one time as another, or we shall never sing it in "the sweet by and by." Let us cultivate real faith and a firm trust in our blessed Redeemer. J. Hudson Taylor once said: "When I came to a place of testing when my faith was most needed, I found it gradually going, and then I learned to look less to my faith, and to depend more on God's faithfulness."

Denying the Lord

G. B. THOMPSON

MUCH is said in the Scriptures concerning the sin of denying the Lord. Paul speaks of some who "profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate." Titus 1:16. Again he tells us that "if we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he also will deny us." 2 Tim. 2:12. Jesus also said, "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven." Matt. 10:32, 33.

It is certainly important that we understand what is meant by denying the Lord. We may profess to love him, yet in works deny him. The following clear statement of how we may in our lives deny the Lord should be studied:—

"Men may deny Christ by evil-speaking, by foolish talking, by words that are untruthful or unkind. They may deny him by shunning life's burdens, by the pursuit of sinful pleasure. They may deny him by conforming to the world, by uncourteous behavior, by the love of their own opinions, by justifying self, by cherishing doubt, borrowing trouble, and dwelling in darkness. In all these ways they declare that Christ is not in them."—"Desire of Ages," page 357.

We should not pass these statements idly by. Have we been guilty of speaking evil of others when they were not present? Have we allowed unkind or insinuating words to fall from our lips, such as we would not have spoken if the persons themselves had been present? If so, in this we have denied the Lord. What about foolish talking? Are our minds filled with vain and frivolous things each day? Do we speak any idle words? Think over the record of the day just past. What have we said that in the day of God we shall wish had never been said? And remember constantly that in this way we can and do deny the One who has purchased us.

In a failure to bear life's burdens, too, we may deny our Lord. Have we murmured and complained beneath the load which is daily imposed upon us? Have we shunned duty, and left responsibilities, which we should have carried, for others to struggle with? If so, in this way we have denied our blessed Lord. Have we been conforming to the vain things of this world, and failed to maintain that nearness to the Lord which we should have done? Have we been justifying self, and cherishing doubt? Many have, and in doing this they deny him who has purchased them with his own blood. Have we been borrowing trouble, and as a result been living in darkness, and walking in sparks of our own kindling? Many are living in continual dread of things which never happen. This is all unbelief, and an outward sign that Christ is not dwelling within

A Simple Prayer

My life-bark swings on the billow
  That rides o'er a boundless sea,
And the sea-gull rocks on the pillow
  That is only for him and me.
My vessel is drifting, drifting,
  To a land that is dim and gray,
O'er a tide that is shifting, shifting,
  But aye to myself I say:
    Hope for the long to-morrow;
      Strength for the brief to-day;
    Faith to guide o'er the waters wide,
      And love in my heart alway.

Ah well I know the haven,
  And whither the journey tends,
Though my soul at times is craven
  When the storm-wraith raves and rends.
Then a whisper comes to cheer me:
  "Peace! For the winds obey
The One who is ever near thee,"
  And again to myself I say:
    Hope for the long to-morrow;
      Strength for the brief to-day;
    Faith to guide o'er the water wide,
      And love in my heart alway.

'Tis a simple refrain only,
  Unknowing the schoolman's lore. (1)
Yet still when my heart is lonely,
  It haunteth me more and more;
Till I turn to the One who heeds us,
  Where he sits in the blue divine,
And tenderly guides and leads us,
  And he knows that the prayer is mine:
    Hope for the long to-morrow;
      Strength for the brief to-day;
    Faith to guide o'er the waters wide,
      And love in my heart alway.

A Solemn Message to the Church

MRS. E. G. WHITE

We are rapidly nearing the close of this earth's history. The end is very near, much nearer than many suppose, and I feel burdened to urge upon our people the necessity of seeking the Lord earnestly. Many are asleep, and what can be said to arouse them from their carnal slumber? The Lord would have his church purified, before his judgments shall fall more signally upon the world.

"Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness."

Christ will remove every pretentious cloak. No mingling of the true with the spurious can deceive him. "He is like a refiner's fire," separating the precious from the vile, the dross from the gold.

Like the Levites, God's chosen people are set apart by him for his special work. Every true Christian bears priestly credentials. He is honored with the sacred responsibility of representing to the world the character of his Heavenly Father. He is to heed well the words, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

"But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts.

"Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and the judgments. Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."

I am instructed to urge upon our people most earnestly the necessity of religion in the home. Among the members of the household there is ever to be a kind, thoughtful consideration. Morning and evening let all hearts be united in reverent worship. At the season of evening worship, let every member of the family search well his own heart. Let every wrong that has been committed be made right. If, during the day, one has wronged another, or spoken unkindly, let the transgressor seek pardon of the one he has injured. Often grievances are cherished in the mind, and misunderstandings and heartaches are created that need not be. If the one who is suspected of wrong be given an opportunity, he might be able to make explanations that would bring relief to other members of the family.

"Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another," that ye may be healed of all spiritual infirmities, that sinful dispositions may be changed. Make diligent work for eternity. Pray most earnestly to the Lord, and hold fast to the faith. Trust not in the arm of flesh, but trust implicitly in the Lord's guidance. Let each one now say, "As for me, I will come out, and be separate from the world. I will serve the Lord with full purpose of heart."

"For we are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more (for they could not endure that which was commanded. And if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart: and so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake): but ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel.

"See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven: whose voice then shook the earth: but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which can not be shaken may remain. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which can not be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: for our God is a consuming fire."

Shall we heed the warnings that God has given? The Lord will show his loving favor to those who will keep his commandments. The Word, the living Word, received and obeyed, will be a savor of life unto life. (1) The reception of the truth will regenerate and cleanse the sinful soul.

This work of individual purification of character can not be safely delayed. Let our brethren and sisters take hold diligently of this work, co-operating with him who "loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."

Put away all deception. Let no one idolize his own opinions. Take your position decidedly to be fully consecrated to truth and righteousness. Christ is ready to receive all who will come to him. Exercise a firm faith in all the promises of God. With confession and prayer, take your stand to be wholly the Lord's henceforth and forever.

To my ministering brethren I would say, Unite in a work of humbling your souls before God. Some have lost their first love, and need a new experience. Be determined that you will not yield to the enemy. Be patient toward all men, remembering that Christ has died for them. Improve every capability for the Lord's work, and labor faithfully, untiringly, to save souls. Seek to arouse the churches by your own zeal. Thus you may be the Lord's helping hand, laborers together with him.

We all have a part to act in the Lord's great plan for his work in the earth. We shall all have something to do, though it may be in jots and tittles, as opportunities present themselves.

If these warnings are not heeded, if diligent work is not made to overcome and put away defects of character, God will soon have finished the work of judgment, and many will be found wanting. Shall we now, at once, cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God? We can not afford to delay this

(1) work of confession and humbling of soul, that our offerings may be acceptable unto God. Fulness of joy is to be found in an entire surrender to God.

The Cause of Our Disappointment

As Published in 1853

Why were those disappointed who looked for Jesus in 1844? This important question, we believe, can be answered in the most satisfactory manner. Our disappointment did not arise from mistaking the beginning of the seventy weeks. The argument by which the original date is sustained, is, as we have seen, invulnerable. Nor did our disappointment arise from a mistake in believing that the seventy weeks form a part of the twenty-three hundred days; for every part of that argument, as we have shown, still stands good. These two points being susceptible of the clearest proof, we were not mistaken in believing that the twenty-three hundred days would terminate in the seventh Jewish month, 1844. Neither did our disappointment arise from believing that at the end of the twenty-three hundred days the work of cleansing the sanctuary would take place. For it is plainly stated, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

But when we said that this earth, or a part of this earth, was the sanctuary, and that Christ must descend from heaven at the end of the twenty-three hundred days, to purify the earth by fire, we looked for that which the Bible did not warrant us to expect. Here was the cause of our disappointment. For we have seen that there is no Scriptural authority to support the view that any part of the earth is the sanctuary, or that the burning of the earth, and the melting of the elements, is the cleansing of the sanctuary. 2 Peter 3.

By a multitude of witnesses, we have proved that the tabernacle of God is the sanctuary to be cleansed, and that its cleansing is a work performed in that sanctuary, with blood, and not with fire. Our disappointment, then, arose from a misunderstanding of the work to take place at the end of the days.

Our evidence established the fact that the sanctuary should be cleansed at the end of the twenty-three hundred days, and that they would terminate in the seventh month, 1844. The types in the example and shadow of heavenly things, set before us the work of the high priest in the seventh month; namely, his act of passing from the holy place to the holiest of all, to cleanse the sanctuary. We reasoned that as the paschal lamb, which was slain on the fourteenth day of the first month, met his antitype in the death of the Lamb of God, on that day (Ex. 12:3-6; 46; 1 Cor. 5:7; John 18:28; 19:36); and the offering of the first-fruits on the sixteenth day of that month, met its antitype in the resurrection of Christ, on that day, the first-fruits of them that slept (Lev. 23:10-15; 1 Cor. 15:20, 23); and the feast of the Pentecost met its antitype on the day of its occurrence (Lev. 23:15-21; Acts 2:1, 2); so the cleansing of the sanctuary in the seventh month (Leviticus 16) at that time of the year when the twenty-three hundred days would end, we believed would meet its antitype at the end of that period.

Could we then have understood the subject of the sanctuary, our disappointment would have been avoided.— J. N. Andrews.

Our Prophetic Responsibility

"He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law." Isa. 42:4.

In the days of Isaiah the knowledge of geography, as compared with the present time, was small indeed, but in prophetic vision he looked down the stream of time and saw the great island fields, and in prophesying of the work of Christ, makes the statement given above.

The prophecy, "The isles shall wait for his law," calls for a definite fulfilment. In direct response to this there must be some movement having as one of its chief aims the proclamation of the law of God. There is one, and only one, direct answer to this prophecy, and that is found in the threefold message of Revelation 14. In these three messages we have combined every phase of the everlasting gospel, the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus.

These messages must be proclaimed to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. Verse 6. This, of course, includes every island, as foreseen by Isaiah. The third angel's message (verses 9-12) is that part of the everlasting gospel which deals with God's law, and the result of preaching this message to every nation is the development of a people who "keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." This is the only message given in prophecy, applicable to the last days, that is to work a reform in obedience to God's law. The context shows that this is the very last message of warning that will be given to the world, and as soon as the message has accomplished its work, Christ will come to reap the harvest of the earth. Isaiah saw the isles waiting for this last message; he saw the repairing of the breach (Isa. 58:12, 13), and beheld the redeemed in the new earth, coming up from one Sabbath to another to worship the Lord. Isa. 66:22, 23.

Let us notice the nature of the third angel's message. It is a positive warning against a certain power, the beast. This beast, we are told, has power given to him "over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Rev. 13:7, 8.

Can the message warning against this power be less extensive in its proclamation than the power and influence exercised by the beast? — Certainly not; therefore it follows that the third angel's message must be proclaimed to "all kindreds, and tongues, and nations." The revelator saw, in vision, a company who had gotten the victory over the beast (Rev. 15:2), in which all nations were represented. As there is no other warning given against this power, it is evident that this company will "stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God," because they have obtained the victory through the third angel's message.

Our responsibility in giving the message becomes a matter of the utmost importance. To do the work the Lord has given us to do, we can not stop short of giving the message to every kindred, tongue, and nation. Whether we, as individuals, have a place finally among that victorious company depends on the attitude we sustain to the work of proclaiming this definite message to all nations.

There is a special commandment to which we desire to call attention, in connection with our responsibility in giving the message: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Matt. 28:19, 20. In obeying this commandment, Isaiah's prophecy will be fulfilled, and the waiting isles will receive his law. How many have considered that to be commandment-keepers they must obey this commandment? The responsibility rests equally upon every believer. But is it possible for all to go? — Yes, it is possible, to the extent of fulfilling the obligation of this commandment. Age and other reasons keep some from crossing the seas to distant waiting lands, but their prayers and their means can go to sustain the work, and thus they have a part. Many, more than have thought it possible, can actually go. How much longer must millions of perishing souls be kept waiting? How many are ready to keep this commandment? "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." The answer to your prayer may be a call to go yourself. Are you ready if the Lord should say, "Go work to-day in my vineyard"? Jesus was a commandment-keeper, and if we would see him as he is, we must be like him, in order to share in the commandment-keeper's reward. Rev. 22:14. "Here am I, Lord, send me."

"Far and near the fields are teeming
 With the sheaves of ripened grain:
Far and near their gold is gleaming
 O'er the sunny slope and plain.

"O thou whom thy Lord is sending,
 Gather now the sheaves of gold!
Heavenward then at evening wending
 Thou shalt come with joy untold."

For the Day of Death

A. W. SPAULDING

Lieth a day all broken, broken,
Stained with the blood of mangled hearts,
Clasping a grief that can not be spoken,
Deep where the fount of anguish starts,
And the light of life departs.

Cometh a day all glory, glory,
Fused with the light of the city of gold,
Rounding the tale of an old, old story
That can not for wonder be fully told
Till the books of God unfold.

Dawneth a day with rapture throbbing,
Banishing thought of Death's alarms,
When babes for the breasts of mothers sobbing
(Last of the echoes of sorrow's storms)
Shall burden the angels' arms.

Christian Liberality

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Under the Jewish system, God's chosen people were required to cherish a spirit of liberality, both in sustaining his cause and in supplying the wants of the needy. At the harvest and the vintage, the first-fruits of the fields — corn, wine, and oil — were to be consecrated as an offering to the Lord. The gleanings and the corners of the fields were reserved for the poor. The first-fruits of the wool when the sheep were shorn, and of the grain when the wheat was thrashed, were to be offered to the Lord; and at the feast it was commanded that the poor, the widows, the orphans, and the strangers should be invited. At the close of every year all were required to make solemn oath whether or not they had done according to the command of God.

This arrangement was made by the Lord to impress upon the people that in every matter he must be first. They were, by this system of benevolence, reminded that their gracious Master was the true proprietor of their fields, their flocks, and their herds; that the God of heaven sent them sunshine and rain for their seed-time and harvest; and that everything which they possessed was of his creation. All was the Lord's, and he had made them stewards of his goods.

The liberality of the Jews in the construction of the tabernacle evinced a spirit of benevolence which has not been equaled by the people of God at any later date. The Hebrews had just been freed from their long bondage in Egypt; they were wanderers in the wilderness; yet scarcely were they delivered from the armies of the Egyptians who pursued them in their hasty journey, when the word of the Lord came to Moses: "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring me an offering: of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart ye shall take my offering."

His people had small possessions, and no flattering prospect of adding to them; but an object was before them,— to build the tabernacle of God. The Lord had spoken, and they must obey his voice. They withheld nothing. All gave with a willing hand, not a certain amount of their increase, but a large portion of their actual possessions. They devoted it gladly and heartily to the Lord. They honored him by so doing. Was it not all his? Had he not given them all that they passessed? If he called for it, was it not their duty to give back to the Lender his own? No urging was needed. The people brought even more than was required; and they were told to desist, for there was already more than could be appropriated.

Again, in building the temple, the call for means met with a hearty response. The people did not give reluctantly; they rejoiced in the prospect that a building would be erected for the worship of God. They gave more than enough for the purpose. David blessed the Lord before all the congregation, and said, "But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? for all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee." Again, in his prayer David gave thanks in these words: "O Lord our God, all this store that we have prepared to build thee an house for thine holy name cometh of thine hand, and is all thine own."

David well understood from whom came all his bounties. Would that those of this day who rejoice in a Saviour's love could realize that their silver and gold is the Lord's, and should be used to promote his glory, not grudgingly retained to enrich and gratify themselves. He has an indisputable right to all that he has lent his creatures. All that they possess is his.

There are high and holy objects that require means; thus invested, it will yield to the giver more elevated and permanent enjoyment than if expended in personal gratification or selfishly hoarded for the greed of gain. When God calls for our treasure, whatever the amount may be, the willing response makes the gift a consecrated offering to him, and lays up for the giver a treasure in heaven that moth can not corrupt, nor fire consume, nor thieves break in and steal. The investment is safe. The money is placed in bags that have no holes.

Can Christians who boast of a broader light than had the Hebrews, give less freely than they? Can Christians, living near the close of time, be satisfied with their offerings when not half so large as were those of the Jews? Their liberality was to benefit primarily their own nation; the work of God in these last days extends to the entire world. The message of truth is to go to all nations, tongues, and people; its publications, printed in many different languages, are to be scattered abroad like the leaves in autumn.

It is written, "Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind;" and again, "He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked." Let us inquire, What would our Saviour do in our circumstances? what would be his efforts for the salvation of souls? This question is answered by the example of Christ. He left his royalty, laid aside his glory, sacrificed his riches, and clothed his divinity with humanity, that he might reach men where they were. He laid down his life for sinners.

The spirit of liberality is the spirit of heaven. The spirit of selfishness is the spirit of Satan. Christ's self-sacrificing love is revealed upon the cross. He gave all that he had, and then gave himself, that man might be saved. The cross of Christ appeals to the benevolence of every follower of the blessed Saviour. The principle illustrated there is to give, give. This, carried out in actual benevolence and good works, is the true fruit of the Christian life. The principle of worldlings is to get, get, and thus they expect to secure happiness; but, carried out in all its bearings, the fruit is misery and death.

To carry the truth to the population of the earth, to rescue them from their guilt and indifference, is the mission of the followers of Christ. Men must have the truth in order to be sanctified through it; and we are the channels of God's light. Our talents, our means, our knowledge, are not merely for our own benefit; they are to be used for the salvation of souls, to elevate man from his life of sin, and bring him, through Christ, to the infinite God.

We should be zealous workers in this cause, seeking to lead sinners, repenting and believing, to a divine Redeemer, to impress them with a sense of God's love to man. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." What an incomparable love is this! a theme for the most profound meditation! the amazing love of God for a world that did not love him! The thought has a subduing power upon the soul, and brings the mind into captivity to the will of God. Men who are crazy for gain, and are disappointed and unhappy in their pursuit of the world, need the knowledge of this truth to quiet the restless hungering and thirsting of their souls.

Missionaries for God are wanted to carry light to those who sit in the shadow of death. Experienced hands are needed, in the meekness of wisdom and the strength of faith, to lift weary souls to the bosom of a compassionate Redeemer. O, selfishness! what a curse! It prevents us from engaging in the service of God. It prevents us from perceiving the claims of duty, which should set our hearts aglow with fervent zeal.

Ours is a great work. Yet how many who profess to believe these sacred truths are paralyzed by the sophistry of Satan, doing nothing for God, but rather hindering his cause! When will they act like those who wait for the Lord? When will they show a zeal in accordance with their faith? Many who are able to give liberally when the cause is in need, selfishly retain their means, and soothe their conscience with a plan for doing some great thing for the cause of God after their death. They make a will, giving a large sum to the church and its various interests, and then settle down with a feeling that they have done all that is required of them. Wherein have they denied self by this act? They have, on the contrary, revealed selfishness. When they have no further use for their money, they propose to give it to God. But they will retain it as long as they can, till they are compelled to relinquish it by a messenger that can not be turned aside.

God has made us all his stewards, and in no case has he authorized us to neglect our duty or leave it for others to do. The call for means to advance the cause of truth will never be more urgent than now. Our money will never do a greater amount of good than at the present time. Every day of delay in rightly appropriating it, is limiting the period in which it will do good in the saving of souls. If we leave others to accomplish that which God has left for us to do, we wrong ourselves and him who gave us all we have. How can others do our work of benevolence any better than we can do it ourselves? So far as practicable, God would have every man an executor of his own will in this matter, during his lifetime.

Adversity, accident, or intrigue may cut off forever intended acts of benevolence, when he who has accumulated a fortune is no longer by to guard it. It is sad that so many neglect the golden opportunity to do good in the present, but wait to be cast out of their stewardship before giving back to the Lord the means which he has lent them to be used for his glory.

One marked feature in the teachings of Christ is the frequency and earnestness with which he rebuked the sin of covetousness, and pointed out the danger of worldly acquisitions and the inordinate love of gain. In the mansions of the rich, in the temple, and in the streets, he warned those who inquired after salvation: "Take heed, and beware of covetousness." "Ye can not serve God and mammon."

It is this increasing devotion to money getting, the selfishness which the desire for gain begets, that deadens the spirituality of many in the church, and removes from them the favor of God. When the head and hands are constantly occupied with planning and toiling for the accumulation of riches, the claims of God and humanity are forgotten.

If God has blessed us with prosperity, it is not that our time and attention should be diverted from him and given to that which he has lent us. The giver is greater than the gift. We have been bought with a price; we are not our own. Have we forgotten that infinite price paid for our redemption? Is gratitude dead in the heart? Does not the cross of Christ put to shame a life of selfish ease and indulgence?

What if Christ had left his work, becoming weary in consequence of the ingratitude and abuse that met him on every side! What if he had never reached that period when he said, "It is finished!" What if he had returned to heaven, discouraged by his reception! What if he had never passed through that soul-agony in the garden of Gethsemane that forced from his pores great drops of blood!

Christ was joined to his plan of labor to work out redemption for the race, by a love that is without parallel and an unswerving devotion to the Father's will. He toiled for the good of man up to the very hour of his humiliation. He spent his life in poverty and self-denial, for the degraded sinner. In a world that was his own he had no place to lay his weary head. We are reaping the fruits of this infinite self-sacrifice; and yet, when labor is to be done, when our money is wanted to aid the work of the Redeemer in the salvation of souls, many shrink from duty and pray to be excused. Ignoble sloth, careless indifference, and wicked selfishness seal the senses of many to the claims of God.

O, must Christ, the Majesty of heaven, the King of glory, bear the heavy cross, and wear the thorny crown, and drink the bitter cup, while we recline at ease, glorify ourselves, and forget the souls he died to redeem by his precious blood? No; let us give, while we have the power. Let us do, while we have the strength. Let us work, while it is day. Let us devote our time and our means whole-heartedly to the service of God, that we may have his approbation, and receive his reward.

The Burdens to Be Lifted

A. T. ROBINSON

Whenever a work of reform ceases to be aggressive, it loses its power and vitality, and settles down to a round of forms and ceremonies. This has been the outcome of every great religious movement in the past.

We profess to be engaged in the last great religious reformation that will ever be carried forward in this world. This movement is destined to prepare a people for the second coming of the Saviour. In the very nature of such a movement, it must never cease to be aggressive. In the very words of the message for this time, it must continue to be aggressive until it shall have reached earth's remotest bounds; until it shall have been proclaimed to "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."

So long as a religious reformation continues to be an aggressive movement, constantly becoming more and more world-wide in the scope of its operations, its needs must ever increase, and its demands upon those charged with the responsibility of carrying forward the work must ever increase. We can never, in this movement, look forward to some point of time beyond which we may expect the calls for means to carry forward the work to become less frequent or less urgent. Unless we shall prove traitors to our Commander, we are enlisted in this warfare until the conflict is ended, and the glorious, eternal victory is won. To the full extent of the talents entrusted to us, we are indebted to a world in perishing need of this message. Let us turn our thoughts for a moment to the calls for the present hour.

One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollar Fund

After a careful study of the immediate demands on our work in the great Southern fields, the completion of the work at Washington, D. C., the work of the Pacific Press of California, and some pressing demands on the work in foreign lands, it was at first decided that a call must be made for not less than two hundred thousand dollars. At the recent session of the General Conference Committee and presidents of conferences, held at Washington, D. C., the estimates were carefully revised, the corners were cut at every point where any reduction seemed possible, and the decision was arrived at to make a call for one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Here is a call which demands that every true-hearted believer in our ranks shall put his shoulders squarely beneath the load and lift every pound he can lift, and then ask the Lord for strength to lift again.

Our Annual Offerings

We are within a few short weeks of the time for our annual offerings for foreign missions. Can we be content to think that our annual offerings to foreign missions will be less this year because of these other calls? Before deciding thus, let us think what this would mean to our hundreds of workers in far-away lands, who receive their support for quite a portion of the year from the money contributed in annual offerings. It seems imperative that our annual offerings this year be made on even a larger scale than heretofore.

Surely the work of the third angel's message has reached gigantic proportions. Instead of pointing out on the map of the world, as we did a few years ago, a few places where the message has been planted, we can now point to but few places where a beginning has not already been made. There is no stopping place now. There is no place where we can say to the Mission Board, You must retrench. We must meet the issue. We must bear the burdens and responsibility resting upon us. We must put our backs to the load to be lifted this year, that we may thus gain added strength for the heavier load of next year, and thus go on from strength to strength as the years go by, until the task is performed, and the Master shall say, "It is finished."

work, a union conference was organized last summer. Mexico, which for years was a hard and unresponsive field, reports a new spirit of inquiry. The Lord is visiting these Catholic fields. Brother Tanner writes from the island of Hayti of baptism after baptism, and says: "This progress among Catholics has been an astonishment to the Protestants here, who have never made very much progress among Catholics." Some have called on him to explain it. The only explanation is that this third angel's message is the special truth of God for these last days.

Our South American brethren also thank God that his Spirit is working with new power in dark Catholic fields. When news of the San Francisco disaster reached South America, people stood aghast. Now they have had a similar visitation in Valparaiso. The message of the approaching end is being punctuated with earthquake and tempest. The Lord is warning the world. The message of hope and salvation from the things coming upon the earth must go swiftly. And we are to carry it. It will mean all we have and are on the altar to go to the finish with this message.

The Macedonian cry comes from over every sea. Let us answer it in our prayers and gifts, first giving our own selves. This week-of-prayer offering to missions ought to be the largest ever given, as our surrender and consecration ought to be the most determined and complete. Some parents must give children to go to the fields. Conferences and institutions must give workers who can not be spared without sacrifice. God is calling. Not a soul can view the wondrous working of the Lord throughout the world-wide field to-day without repenting before God with awe-struck heart; for to watch the movements in the fields is to see God actually cutting short the work of human salvation and bringing eternity near.

But it is a glad truth to the advent believers in all lands. All round this world are earnest hearts rejoicing in the "blessed hope." They are praying for it. One Sabbath day, after weary weeks at sea, I landed in Buenos Ayres, South America, and went directly to a Sabbath-school in our mission rooms in the heart of that great city. Their language was strange to my ears, but I understood their spirit with my heart. It was the spirit of the one old-fashioned third angel's message. Then we studied the map of our mission fields, and through the interpreter they were helped to see how swiftly the work is going. As we told them that the advent people were almost home at last, it touched my heart to see that little company all weeping tears of joy. Brethren and sisters, this hope is the dearest hope on earth to the pilgrims homeward bound. And the Lord Jesus will never disappoint his children, who to-day are praying in many tongues that last prayer of the Scriptures, "Even so, come [quickly], Lord Jesus."

The New Earth

MEMORY VERSE: 2 Peter 3:10.

(Introduce the lesson by a brief talk about the beauty of the earth when God first made it, and the reasons why it is necessary for him to make it over again.)

1. What does the memory verse say about this earth?

2. Of what have we the promise? 2 Peter 3:13.

3. Has any one ever seen the new earth? Rev. 21:1, 2. (If there is time, read extracts from "Early Writings," pages 9-15.)

4. Will there be children there? Isa. 11:8; read "Early Writings," page 14.

5. Describe briefly the new earth, using the following texts: Isa. 35:1-10; 33:24; Rev. 21:4; Isa. 11:6-9; 65:25.

6. We can even sleep in the woods and not be afraid. Eze. 34:25, 28.

7. We need not be afraid of the dark. Rev. 21:25; 22:5.

8. What is said of the homes in the new earth? Isa. 65:21.

9. What will the people do on the Sabbath? Isa. 66:23.

10. Who are to enjoy the blessings of the new earth? Rev. 22:14.

"Even at the Door"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Reading for Sabbath, December 22)

JESUS is coming again. Before parting with his disciples on the earth, he gave them the promise of his return. "Let not your heart be troubled," he said; "in my Father's house are many mansions: . . . I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."

The exact day and hour of Christ's coming have not been revealed. The Saviour told his disciples that he himself could not make known the hour of his second appearing. But he mentioned certain events by which they might know when his coming was near. "There shall be signs," he said, "in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars." "The sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars of heaven shall fall." Upon the earth, he said, there shall be "distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

"And they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."

The signs in the sun, moon, and stars have been fulfilled. Since that time earthquakes, tempests, tidal waves, pestilence, and famine have multiplied. The most awful destructions, by fire and flood, are following one another in quick succession. The terrible disasters that are taking place from week to week speak to us in earnest tones of warning, declaring that the end is near, that something great and decisive will soon of necessity take place.

Probationary time will not continue much longer. Now God is withdrawing his restraining hand from the earth. Long has he been speaking to men and women through the agency of his Holy Spirit; but they have not heeded the call. Now he is speaking to his people, and to the world, by his judgments. The time of these judgments is a time of mercy for those who have not yet had opportunity to learn what is truth. Tenderly will the Lord look upon them. His heart of mercy is touched; his hand is still stretched out to save. Large numbers will be admitted to the fold of safety who in these last days will hear the truth for the first time.

The Lord calls upon those who believe in him to be workers together with him. While life shall last, they are not to feel that their work is done. Shall we allow the signs of the end to be fulfilled without telling people of what is coming upon the earth? Shall we allow them to go down in darkness without having urged upon them the need of a preparation to meet their Lord? Unless we ourselves do our duty to those around us, the day of God will come upon us as a thief. Confusion fills the world, and a great terror is soon to come upon human beings. The end is very near. We who know the truth should be preparing for what is soon to break upon the world as an overwhelming surprise.

As a people, we must prepare the way of the Lord, under the overruling guidance of the Holy Spirit. The gospel is to be proclaimed in its purity. The stream of living water is to deepen and widen in its course. In fields nigh and afar off, men will be called from the plow, and from the more common commercial business vocations, and will be educated in connection with men of experience. As they learn to labor effectively, they will proclaim the truth with power. Through most wonderful workings of divine providence, mountains of difficulty will be removed. The message that means so much to the dwellers upon earth will be heard and understood. Men will know what is truth. Onward, and still onward, the work will advance, until the whole earth shall have been warned. And then shall the end come.

The day of Christ's coming will be a day of judgment upon the world. When the multitude of the lost — those whom God has favored with great light, but who rejected the light; those who might have been saved, had they obeyed God's law, but who refused to obey — when these see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, they will understand the great sacrifice made in their behalf: they will understand the unmeasured love of the Redeemer, his incarnation, the sweat-drops of blood, the marks of the nails in his hands and feet, the pierced side; and they will ask to be hidden from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. They see as in reality the condemnation of Christ, and hear the loud cry, "Release unto us Barabbas." They hear the question, What shall be done with Jesus? and the answer, "Crucify him, crucify him!"

The reign of appearance and pretense is over. The righteous Judge speaks with awful emphasis as he utters the sentence, "I never knew you: depart from me."

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left.

"Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Thus he welcomes them, to live hereafter in eternal communion with himself. And every voice in the heavenly mansions echoes and echoes the welcome, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

IN GERMAN EAST AFRICA

The Friedensthal school, one of the three stations conducted by the German Union Conference.

(1) [Jesus is coming, coming with clouds and great glory. A multitude of shining angels will attend him. He will come to honor those who have loved him and kept his commandments, and to take them to himself. He has not forgotten them or his promise.] (2)

(3) [There will be a re-linking of the family chain.] When we look upon our dead, we may think of the morning when the trump of God shall sound, when "the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."]

That time is near. A little while, and we shall see the King in his beauty. A little while, and he will present his faithful ones "faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

No human language can fully describe the reward of the righteous. It will be known to those only who behold it. There the heavenly Shepherd leads his flock to fountains of living water. The tree of life yields its fruit every month, and the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations. There are ever-flowing streams, clear as crystal, and beside them waving trees cast their shadows upon the paths prepared for the ransomed of the Lord. There the wide-spreading plains swell into hills of beauty, and the mountains of God rear their lofty summits. On those peaceful plains, beside those living streams, God's people, so long pilgrims and wanderers, shall find a home.

"My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting-places." "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise."

"They shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: . . . mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands."

There will be no more tears, no funeral trains, no badges of mourning. "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, . . . for the former things are passed away." "The inhabitants shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity."

In the earth made new, only righteousness shall dwell. "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple."

Since God Converted Me *

F. D. STARR

"What think you, parson, is there hope
For such a wretch abhorred?
Or must he in the darkness grope,
Rejected of the Lord?

"Think you the vilest of the vile
(There's none more vile than he)
Can ever share the Saviour's smile,
Or heaven's beauty see?"

The parson, with reflective pause
And with a kindling eye,
A lesson from experience draws,
And thus he makes reply:

"I surely can not doubt the power
Of Christ to set men free,
Since that eventful, happy hour
When God converted me.

"Of poor lost sinners I was chief,
Sunk in the depths profound;
Conversion brought my soul relief,
Grace did much more abound."

"Since God converted me." Ah, yes;
An epoch here begins
Of everlasting righteousness,
Forgiveness of my sins.

This epoch is the boundary line
Since which doubt can not be;
The skeptic's creed can not be mine
Since God converted me.

When Satan's darts come thick and fast,
And would o'erpower my soul,
Faith's retrospective glance I cast,
And Jesus makes me whole.

The Work in Oakland and San Francisco — No. 1

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Ever since the close of the camp-meeting held at Oakland, Cal., July 19-29, 1906, aggressive labor has been put forth in that city. For a time, the large tent and about twenty of the family tents were left standing, to accommodate the workers that remained. [Elder S. N. Haskell, assisted by Elder E. J. Hibbard, had charge of the company of laborers.

Sabbath and Sunday, August 18 and 19, I spent in Oakland. The meetings were still in progress. Elder and Mrs. Haskell were conducting Bible studies in the forenoons, and in the afternoons the workers in training were going out and visiting from house to house. These missionary visits, and the sale of many books and periodicals, opened the way for the holding of Bible readings. About forty men and women were attending the morning classes, and a goodly number of these students engaged in the afternoon work.] While in Oakland, I had the privilege of speaking to these workers, and to our brethren and sisters from the Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, and San Francisco churches. All assembled in the large tent for a union service. The Lord gave me freedom in the presentation of truth.

The labors of Elder and Mrs. Haskell have been greatly blessed of God. One day a woman, a stranger, slipped two coins into Sister Haskell's hand. Sister Haskell thought them to be two twenty-five-cent pieces, but when she looked, she saw that they were twenty-dollar gold pieces. Sister Haskell asked the stranger if she had not made a mistake, but she replied that she had not. The woman refused to give her name, but it has since been learned that she is not of our people.

A few days later, our brethren were obliged to vacate the place they had been occupying with the tents, as a circus was coming to occupy the grounds.

Friday, August 31, I made another trip to Oakland. As the large tent had been taken down, our people secured the use of the Congregational church, corner Eighteenth and Market Streets, for our Sabbath services. A few months ago our own church building in Oakland was sold, and our brethren and sisters are meeting in this rented church until some more permanent arrangement can be made.

On Sabbath morning Elder Haskell spoke in the Laguna Street church in San Francisco — the church that was not destroyed by the earthquake; Elder Hibbard spoke in Oakland, others in Alameda and Berkeley. In all these churches the appointment was given out that I would speak in the afternoon.

When I reached the church, I found the room crowded. I felt impressed to urge upon all our people present the necessity of taking a decided interest in working Oakland. We must not allow the enemy to come in and sow his tares among the precious seeds of truth that have already been sown. There are many religious movements, many "isms," but Christ will identify himself with the needy souls who are seeking after truth. We need true workers,— workers whose hearts and minds are imbued with the truth, workers who will act a part in bringing the truth to other minds. Every Christian should be a missionary, working for the salvation of souls.

The children in our families need thorough instruction in the Bible. Let every soul put his talent of means, and his talent of speech, into the service of God. We are not to condemn others, but we must win them to a knowledge of the truth.

Because of the importance of this work, I have urged that Elder Haskell and his wife, as ministers of God, shall give Bible instruction to those who will offer themselves for service. God will use humble men. He will make of every consecrated man a light-bearing Christian. Not the most eloquent in speech, not those who are the best versed in so-called theology, are always the most successful, but those who will work diligently and humbly for the Master. The blessing of God rests upon those who are meek and lowly,— upon those who have the faith that works by love and purifies the soul.

Before the close of the discourse, I asked all to arise who would stand faithfully by Elder Haskell and his wife, by Elder Hibbard, and by those who were laboring with them. I urged the brethren and sisters to consider that now is the opportune time to work Oakland, and that to every man is given his work. I asked, "How many will pledge themselves to be in earnest in this work?" The whole congregation responded by rising, and we were encouraged to hope that much good would be accomplished by their united efforts.

On Sunday afternoon, I spoke again to our people assembled in the Congregational church.

A short time later, a vacant lot was found in a good residence district; and here a large tent and several smaller tents were pitched. The Bible training-school was continued daily, and evening services were held.

During the month of September I made two more visits to Oakland, speaking to our people in the Congregational church each time, and also speaking in the tent.

I have felt stirred with an intense desire to do all in my power to encourage the faithful workers in Oakland, as I have realized that many souls in this city and in near-by cities are in great peril. Satan is doing all in his power to make of no effect the merciful warnings of Jehovah. Notwithstanding the heavy judgments of God, the wickedness in San Francisco and in Oakland is increasing.

Thursday, October 18, I visited Oakland for the fifth time since the close of the July camp-meeting. The California Conference had just perfected all arrangements for beginning a series of tent-meetings in the very heart of the city, on Broadway, half a block south of the post-office. Elder Wm. W. Simpson is bearing a large share of the burden of these meetings, and is doing everything in his power to present the third angel's message in such a manner that all who hear may understand that the Bible lies at the foundation of all his statements. His strongest arguments are based on the plain words of the Old and New Testaments.

Brother Simpson's first meeting was held in the First Congregational church, corner Twelfth and Clay Streets, Thursday evening, the eighteenth. An intelligent class of people listened attentively for a full hour, as he spoke on the Millennium. Friday evening his first meeting was held in the large tent. The attendance was good. Saturday night the attendance was considerably larger, and many for the first time listened to an exposition of the first two chapters of Daniel. These evening discourses have been continued regularly, and the attendance is reported to be on the increase.

* A clergyman being asked if he ever doubted the power of God to convert hardened sinners, replied, "Not since God converted me." (1)

Evangelism p. 470

Brother Simpson dwells especially on the significance of the prophecies in the books of Daniel and the Revelation. By means of ingeniously contrived charts and symbolic representations, he holds the attention of the people, while he endeavors to preach the word. Through this effort hundreds will be led to a better understanding of the Bible than they ever had before, and we trust that there will be many conversions. Those who attend his lectures and are not converted, must practically reject the Word of God.

Elder Haskell and his wife, with some helpers, have just opened a Bible training-school in San Francisco, with headquarters at the Laguna Street church. The Lord blessed their efforts in Oakland, and they helped lay the foundation for a broad work to be carried forward in that city. Now, they enter San Francisco to do a similar work.

From town to town, from city to city, from country to country, the warning message of present truth is to be proclaimed, not with outward display, but in the power of the Spirit, by men of faith. In the golden censer of truth, as presented in the Scriptures, there is that which will convict and convert souls. As the truth that our Saviour came to this world to proclaim, is presented in the simplicity of the gospel, the power of the message will make itself felt. In this age, a new life coming from the Source of all life is to take possession of every faithful laborer. O, how little do we comprehend the breadth of our mission! We need to have earnest, determined faith, and unshaken courage in the Lord. Our time to work is short, and we are to labor with unflagging zeal.

An Important Question

C. D. M. WILLIAMS

"What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" We all love to think of the grace of God, and wonder that he could so love the world as to give his only begotten Son to save us. This has filled the world with astonishment, and around it cluster the hearts of the Christian people. Upon the thought of God's love, his forbearance, his long-suffering, Christians have come to dwell so fully that they continually say, "God will forgive if I do make a mistake. He 'so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son.' I believe; so he will forgive me my shortcomings, and finally in his own good time I shall come to be what he wants me to be; so, although I know that I am not what he wants me to be now, finally I shall be saved. His grace is abundant, so I know that he will forgive me now for these little things."

But the Word of God says, "What shall we say then?" Is this the thing that we shall say? The Lord would have us consider the answer carefully; for he says, "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound?" His grace is abundant, he is long-suffering, he does love; but shall we continue in sin, that this may be so? This is the question that the Lord asks, and most forcible is his answer: "God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?"

First, God forbids such a course in life; therefore as a commandment-keeping people we must not do this; for if we do, we cease to be a commandment-keeping people, and are no longer to be numbered with the saints.

Second, "How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" Is it possible for one who is dead to anything to do that thing? The very fact of his doing it shows that he is not dead to it. Therefore, what shall we say, brethren? Shall we continue in sin? Is it not time for every soul of us to lay aside every weight and sin, even though it has in the past easily beset us?

Is not the inheritance reserved for those who are kept by the power of God? Before his translation, Enoch had the testimony that he pleased God; and as he is a representative of those who will be translated when the Lord comes, is it not time that we separate ourselves from all sin, and come out and walk with God in such a way that we may also have this testimony that we please God?

One More Victory

W. S. RITCHIE

"In all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin," is the statement of the Sacred Word regarding our Saviour's life in human flesh. Let us study, then, the temptations that came to him.

First, he was tempted on appetite: "If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread." That is where we all begin the battle with temptation. The church of God has had to struggle there, and thank God, has come off victorious. Let us hold fast the victories we have gained.

Next came to our Saviour the temptation of presumption. "Cast yourself down," the tempter said. Has not God given his angels charge concerning you to bear you up? Here in the sacred precincts of the temple, surely he will allow no harm to come to you even if you depart somewhat from the written word and launch out into space. How exhilarating it will be to find yourself borne through the air, overcoming the natural law of gravitation to which you have so long been subject.

The church has had its experience here, too. It has been tempted with false theories and speculations, to accept which would have been like walking off into the air. But, thank God, the church has again gotten the victory.

But there still remains another temptation; and can we say that the people of God have gotten a complete victory over it? If so, then the work is about to be finished, for it is the last temptation and trial that is to come to the children of the kingdom to fit them for their return home. The glory and riches of the kingdom of this world were as a crowning temptation held out to our Elder Brother. What charming scenes of riches and glory passed before his vision as the satanic moving pictures merged one into another in the bewitchery of the deceitfulness of riches. Our Saviour seemed for the first time fully to recognize in this temptation who it was that was seeking to lead him astray, for he addressed the enemy directly, "Get thee behind me, Satan." And the great deceiver, being fully discovered in this his last temptation, and having no other temptation by which he might hope to achieve success, departed from the Saviour, leaving him exhausted, but victorious.

Is it not significant that there should be so much pertaining to financial affairs in the closing up of the work of God on earth? Is it not to give his people an opportunity to become victorious over this last great temptation of earthly riches that the many openings to invest means in the cause appear around us? The church of God, following its Saviour, must be wholly victorious here also. Its means will be consecrated and laid upon the altar. The deceptive inventions of the enemy as he presents to us the desirability of retaining them will be fully discovered. The veil will fall from our eyes in this temptation more than in all the others; and we shall be victorious, though exhausted; and the holy angels will come and minister to us, and the work will close with the power and glory and love they bring to us.

The Sunday Crusade in Canada

H. I. MORSE-FARNUM

An idea of the aims and the actuating spirit of the Lord's Day Alliance of Canada may be obtained from a few of the statements of one of its representatives, Rev. T. Albert Moore, given in a recent address at Peterboro, Ontario. The following were some of his most striking utterances: —

"A nation's progress depends upon the observance of Sunday. We Canadians have much to be proud of as we now have the strongest and best Sunday law of any country in the world. Let us hand down to posterity this great boon — a sacred regard for the Sabbath — which has been handed down from generation to generation until it is our own. Since the Lord's Day Alliance has conquered in the late legislative fight, what is our present work? Answer.— To arouse public sentiment, for without it laws are not worth the paper they are written on.

"Public sentiment is a mighty power, as the following incident shows: A certain member of Parliament was opposed to the Sunday bill; but I arranged with persons of his constituency to write fifty letters the next week urging him to rep

The Blessing of Unity

EMMA L. PARDON

Psalm 133

Good and pleasant 'tis to see
Brethren dwell in unity;
Naught can be of greater worth
To the pilgrims of this earth;
Scenes like these we may behold,
Far outweighing this world's gold —
Far surpassing earthly powers,
Scenes like those in Eden bowers.

Like the precious oil that flowed
Over Aaron's robes, and showed Consecration to the Lord
In accordance with his word,
So shall Christian love endure,
Always fragrant, always pure;
So sweet peace, like heavenly dove,
Sways the Christian heart in love.

As on Zion's mount the dew
Soft descends, life to renew,
So our Saviour, in his love,
Gives us hope of joys above.
All our sins for us he bore,
Grants us "life forevermore;"
From the mount at God's command,
Blessings flow from his right hand.

The Work in Oakland and San Francisco — No. 2

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) When a special effort to win souls is put forth by laborers of experience in a community where our own people live, there rests upon every believer in that field a most solemn obligation to do all in his power to clear the King's highway, by putting away every sin that would hinder him from co-operating with God and with his brethren.

This has not always been fully understood. Satan has often brought in a spirit that has made it impossible for church-members to discern opportunities for service. Believers have not infrequently allowed the enemy to work through them at the very time when they should have been wholly consecrated to God and the advancement of his work. Unconsciously they have wandered far from the way of righteousness. Cherishing a spirit of criticism and fault-finding, of pharisaical piety and pride, they grieve away the Spirit of God, and greatly retard the work of God's messengers.

This evil has been pointed out many times and in many places. Sometimes those who have indulged in a censorious, condemnatory spirit have repented and been converted. These God has been able to use to his name's honor and glory.

Experiences in Europe

We met this evil in Europe more than once. At the Basel missionary conference, Sept. 17, 1885, I spoke to the delegates regarding methods of labor, and appealed to them to "preach the truth with the meekness of simplicity." "There are always those in the church and out," I declared, "who have not the love of Jesus in their souls, and who have, in the place of true religion, a criticizing, exacting spirit, a desire to find something to condemn in their brethren and sisters." I referred to instances that had come under my notice, of professed Christians' accusing one another at times when general meetings of the most solemn interest were in progress. "All the religion many have," I continued, "is to pick flaws. I once knew a lady whose religion was of just this character, and in her family she was so overbearing that they could hardly live with her. A tent-meeting was held near the place where she lived, but instead of taking hold to help those who were laboring very hard in the meetings, or to receive help herself, this woman stood back to criticize. . . . We shall ever have just such people to deal with in this world." God calls upon all such to repent, and be reconverted.

In November, 1885, I bore a plain message to our brethren and sisters in Christiania, Norway. It was at a time when plans for aggressive work had been laid — when every church-member should have stood ready to lend a willing hand in upholding the servants of God sent to Scandinavia to proclaim the third angel's message by voice and pen in that part of the world. From the report of the words spoken by me to the Christiania church, I quote the following: —

"If those who indulge in unkind criticism or idle talk could realize that an angel of God is noting down their words, and that all are to appear against them in the judgment, they would be far more careful as to what is entered on that book of records. How must the continual fault-finding appear to the heavenly messengers who are sent forth to minister to God's people? Would that the eyes of all might be opened, that they might see the holy angels walking among them. Surely they would be more guarded; instead of judging their brethren and sisters, and talking of their weaknesses, they would be seeking God with the whole heart. . . .

"Let no Christian be found an accuser of the brethren. Satan is the one who bears this title; he accuses them before God day and night, he stirs up the enemies of our faith to accuse us, and he prompts those of like precious faith to criticize and condemn one another. We are not to take part in his work. These are days of trial and of great peril; the adversary of souls is upon the track of every one; and while we stand out separate from the world, we should press together in faith and love. United, we are strong; divided, we are weak. . . .

"In our labor for the Christiania church we faithfully presented before them the far-reaching requirements of God's law, and the great need, on the part of the members, of thorough repentance and returning unto the Lord. During our meetings, the dear Saviour came very near to us again and again. A good work was begun. We called them forward for prayers several times, and though this was a new experience to them, there was a quick and hearty response. Earnest, heartfelt confessions were made. Several had become discouraged and backslidden because of the accusing spirit manifested, and the lack of love for God and for one another. These humbly confessed their own wrong in allowing their faith in God and the truth to become weakened. . . . Others acknowledged that they had indulged a critical, fault-finding spirit. Many said that they had never realized as now the importance of the truth, and the influence that it must have upon the life and character. Not a few testified with gratitude that they had received God's blessing as never before.

"We were very thankful for every token that this dear people were obtaining a sense of their true condition. But some who should have been personally interested, were looking on as if they had no interest at stake. The testimonies which the Lord gave them did not seem to be received. They did not break the bands that held them under condemnation of the Spirit of God. The Saviour was knocking at the door of their hearts, but they were unwilling then and there to remove the rubbish that barred his entrance. The Lord's time was not their time. Had they cleared the way, the Lord would have given them an experience of the highest value."

Experiences in Australia

By divine direction, we made special efforts in Australia to reach men and women in cities through wisely conducted camp-meetings. It was thus that the work in Newcastle, New South Wales, was started, late in 1898. It was "thought that the time had fully come for us to make a decided effort to present the truth to the eighty thousand people of Newcastle and its surrounding towns; and we knew that the best possible way to do this was by holding a camp-meeting, following it with tent-meetings, accompanied by visiting, Bible work, the selling of the Bible Echo and religious and health books, and by Christian Help work, and the establishment of a medical mission."

For several weeks before the beginning of this meeting, I carried a very heavy burden. Into the church at Cooranbong there had come a spirit very displeasing to God,— a spirit of fault-finding and criticism. Sabbath after Sabbath, I bore a plain message regarding this sin. Before the opening of the Newcastle meeting, I wrote regarding these efforts to a brother in responsibility, as follows: —

"On Sabbath, December 3, the burden was heavy upon me. I spoke the words the Lord gave me. In the early morning I had written out a message for the church, which I read and commented upon. Notwithstanding the appeal made, in the social meeting there was no break. Very good testimonies were borne by some, but I felt that we had no special victory. I then knelt down and prayed, and yet there seemed to be the same tied-up spirit. . . .

"Last Sabbath, December 10, I again read important matter. As I read, the power of God was upon me, and I spoke very plainly. The Lord must impress the heart. I can only speak to the ear.

"I entreated, I pleaded with the people to set their hearts in order before the camp-meeting. We are living amid the perils of the last days, and we must gather up and appreciate every ray of light. Our testimony must be plain, truthful, and searching. But it must not reveal in any degree a censorious, fault-finding spirit. . . . Satan can do the fault-finding for the whole world. We may grieve, but we must not fret. We can be sorrowful; we will not scold. I know the battle is often severe. We can not avoid the injunction, 'Warn them that are unruly; comfort the feeble-minded; support the weak; be patient toward all men.'"

It was to the members of the Cooranbong church that we looked largely for help at the Newcastle meeting. Newcastle was unentered territory, and much depended on the spiritual condition of the brethren and sisters who would attend from Cooranbong. This is one reason why I was so burdened over the spirituality of this church. Special opportunities for service would be afforded in Newcastle, and God desired that those who claimed to be his representatives should be prepared to bear their share of the responsibilities of the meetings and house-to-house work.

An Impressive Dream

It was at the very beginning of this meeting, and immediately after the weeks of anxious labor to rid the Cooranbong church of the spirit of criticism, that the Lord revealed the spiritual condition of many, through an impressive dream. This dream was afterward published; but it contains instruction which throws much light on conditions existing to-day in some of our churches where every member should be wide awake to improve unusual opportunities for soul saving. The dream, with the accompanying instruction, as published, is as follows: —

"During the night of the first Sabbath of the Newcastle meeting, I seemed to be in meeting, presenting the necessity and importance of our receiving the Spirit. This was the burden of my labor, — the opening of our hearts to the Holy Spirit. . . .

"In my dream a sentinel stood at the door of an important building, and asked every one who came for entrance, 'Have you received the Holy Ghost?' A measuring-line was in his hand, and only very, very few were admitted into the building. 'Your size as a human being is nothing,' he said. 'But if you have reached the full stature of a man in Christ Jesus, according to the knowledge you have had, you will receive an appointment to sit with Christ at the marriage supper of the Lamb; and through the eternal ages, you will never cease to learn of the blessings granted in the banquet prepared for you.

"'You may be tall and well-proportioned in self, but you can not enter here. None can enter who are grown-up children, carrying with them the disposition, the habits, and the characteristics which pertain to children. If you have nurtured suspicions, criticism, temper, self-dignity, you can not be admitted; for you would spoil the feast. All who go in through this door have on the wedding garment, woven in the loom of heaven. Those who educate themselves to pick flaws in the characters of others, reveal a deformity that makes families unhappy, that turns souls from the truth to choose fables. Your leaven of distrust, your want of confidence, your power of accusing, closes against you the door of admittance. Within this door nothing can enter that could possibly mar the happiness of the dwellers by marring their perfect trust in one another. You can not join the happy family in the heavenly courts; for I have wiped all tears from their eyes. You can never see the King in his beauty if you are not yourself a representative of his character.

"'When you give up your own will, your own wisdom, and learn of Christ, you will find admittance into the kingdom of God. He requires entire, unreserved surrender. Give up your life for him to order, mold, and fashion. Take upon your neck his yoke. Submit to be led and taught by him. Learn that unless you become as a little child, you can never enter the kingdom of heaven.

"'Abiding in Christ is choosing only the disposition of Christ, so that his interests are identified with yours. Abide in him, to be and to do only what he wills. These are the conditions of discipleship, and unless they are complied with, you can never find rest. Rest is in Christ; it can not be found as something apart from him.

"'The moment his yoke is adjusted to your neck, that moment it is found easy; then the heaviest spiritual labor can be performed, the heaviest burdens borne, because the Lord gives the strength and the power, and he gives gladness in doing the work. Mark the points: "Learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart." Who is it that speaks thus? — The Majesty of heaven, the King of glory. He desires that your conception of spiritual things shall be purified from the dross of selfishness, the defilement of a crooked, coarse, unsympathetic nature. You must have an inward, higher experience. You must obtain a growth in grace by abiding in Christ. When you are converted, you will not be a hindrance, but will strengthen your brethren.'

"As these words were spoken, I saw that some turned sadly away and mingled with the scoffers. Others, with tears, all broken in heart, made confession to those whom they had bruised and wounded. They did not think of maintaining their own dignity, but asked at every step, 'What must I do to be saved?' The answer was, 'Repent, and be converted, that your sins may go beforehand to judgment, and be blotted out.' Words were spoken which rebuked spiritual pride. This pride God will not tolerate. It is inconsistent with his Word and with our profession of faith. Seek the Lord, all ye who are ministers of his. Seek him while he may be found, call upon him while he is near. 'Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.'"

Methods for Working Our Large Cities — No. 1

The Need of the Hour

W. H. GRANGER

During the past few months I have received numerous letters from different parts of the United States, asking for an explanation of the method of work which is now in operation in this city under the Berean Bible Institute. To answer all these inquiries as they should be, consumes much time; and as I believe the question of effectively and quickly warning our large cities has become one of vital interest to our people in general, I shall take the liberty to set forth, in a short series of articles, what my experience leads me to believe to be the most practical method for accomplishing this gigantic undertaking.

I will first call the reader's attention to the task before us, and show the absolute necessity for a radical change in our methods of work. There are, in the United States alone, more than three hundred cities with a population of over twenty-five thousand each; fifty of this number have a population ranging from one hundred thousand to nearly four million each.

To help the reader to better understand the urgent need of a change in our past methods of warning these cities, I will briefly set forth, as nearly as my observation permits me to know, the approximate extent to which the work has been and is now being carried on in most of these populous centers. Say, for instance, here is a city of over one hundred thousand inhabitants. It has a church of one hundred members. They are taking a small club of the Signs or Watchman, and occasionally purchase a small assortment of tracts, which are given away promiscuously, without any system of follow-up work. In such churches there are usually one or two members who hold readings with a few persons. But putting it all together, most churches are doing less than what one good live member should be doing. In addition to this, there is usually located in such cities a minister and one or more Bible workers. The minister's efforts to warn the city, outside of what he does in the church, are usually confined to a few widely separated families with whom he holds weekly Bible readings. The Bible workers seldom give more than ten readings a week, with an average attendance of about four regular readers at each study. This would give

Reaping

ELIZABETH B. ZACHARIASEN

WHILE the years are swiftly passing,
As we watch them come and go,
Do we realize the maxim,
"We must reap whate'er we sow"?

When the past comes up before us,
All our thoughts, our acts, and deeds,
Shall they glean for us fair roses,
Or a harvest bear of weeds?

Are we sowing seeds to blossom?
We shall reap some day, somewhere,
Just what here we have been sowing,
Worthless weeds or roses fair.

All around us whispering ever,
Hear the voice of nature speak,
Teaching all the selfsame lesson,
"As you sow so shall you reap."

The Work in Oakland and San Francisco — No. 3

MRS. E. G. WHITE

SABBATH afternoon, October 20, I felt impelled by the Spirit of God to appeal once more to our brethren and sisters living in Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, and San Francisco, to rise nobly to their high privileges, and fulfil the purpose that God desires to work through them. I spoke in the Oakland church, as follows: —

In the fifteenth of Romans the apostle Paul declares: "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification. For even Christ pleased not himself; but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me."

Mark especially the words, "The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me." O, that these words might sink deep into the heart of every one who thinks he is doing God's service while finding fault with others! This is the weakness, the besetting sin, of many in this congregation, and our great desire is that you shall get rid of this evil before the Lord gets rid of you. The reproaches with which we reproach the servants of the Lord, fall upon Christ himself.

"For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope."

We are to be Bible Christians. We are to study the Word, and to carry out this Word in every particular. Then we shall know that Christ Jesus is our efficiency, our healer, our strength, our front-guard and our rearward. Then we shall have the help and the power that God alone can give.

God desires that his commandment-keeping people shall stand on vantage-ground. He desires that they shall stand before him without fault. In order to do this, they must perfect holy characters through the merits of Christ. They must look unto Jesus, the author and finisher of their faith. As they become changed into his image, the salvation of God will be revealed through them, and unbelievers will be converted. Unbelievers will see and understand that God's Word means something to those who claim to believe it.

"Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be likeminded one toward another according to Christ Jesus." Why? That we shall be of a great variety of minds? — O, no! The apostle exhorts you to be "likeminded one toward another according to Christ Jesus: that ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God."

What does this injunction entail? — It places us under obligation to God. It leaves us where we must understand that we are amenable to him alone. It leads us to realize that when the Holy Spirit is abiding in our hearts and working through us, we shall love one another, in the place of manifesting animosity toward one another.

My dear brethren and sisters, God is not pleased with a spirit of criticism and faultfinding. We must humble our hearts daily before God, and seek for a new conversion, that we may be brought into right relationship with Christ Jesus. Those who are striving to keep the commandments of God, ought to be in harmony, and to show a spirit of humility and love. God is not in any of the differences that are so apparent. He does not inspire words of faultfinding. He is now calling upon us to humble ourselves under the hand of the Almighty, in order that he may lift us up.

The apostle continues: "Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers: and that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy name."

God's people are to stand as lights in the world. They are to realize that upon them rests the solemn responsibility of reflecting rays of light upon the pathway of those who are not keeping the commandments of God. Christ himself has declared, "Ye are the light of the world." We are to seek to be light-bearers. And when the light of divine truth shines forth with distinctness from the words and works of God's children, will there be seen any quarreling, any backbiting, among the light-bearers? The world will see no dissension in the lives of those from whom the light of heaven is shed abroad. Brethren and sisters, as you let your light shine before men, they will "see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." As the result of these good works, an influence will go forth that will bring salvation to those who behold it. God desires us to keep our light constantly shining.

In the night season God has revealed to me the spiritual condition of the church-members living in Oakland and the near-by cities. A large standard was uplifted at a time when many were complaining and finding fault and speaking to the detriment of one another; and this standard was turned around until it appeared before them as a great looking-glass, from the face of which every one who looked saw reflected himself with all his faults and sins. The whole erring company, convicted of the sinfulness of their course, prostrated themselves before God, and immediately began to confess their own wrong-doing; and, O, what a scene of repentance and confession there was! A most wonderful cleansing of the camp followed, and the mighty power of God was revealed.

I shall never be satisfied until just such an experience comes into the church here. We want to see the salvation of our God. We want the truth to go forth with mighty power; and why, O why, do we continue to stand in the way? Why do we grieve the Holy Spirit of God? Why do we put him to open shame, by carrying with us our selfish, unconverted dispositions, and yet all the while claiming to be Christians? God grant that every one of us may have clear eyesight to discern what we can do, by looking unto Jesus and by realizing how our course must appear in his sight, and how he must regard envy and strife. God help us to put away our individual defects of character. We want to see the power of God revealed in this community. If it were not for this, I should not leave my home and come down here to speak to you so often. But night after night I can not sleep more than a few hours; and often, in the hours of the night I find myself sitting up in bed, praying to God in behalf of those who do not realize their spiritual condition; and then I arise and walk the room, and say, O Lord, set thy people in order, before it shall be everlastingly too late!

At times during these seasons of intercession, when the burden rests heavily, my heart is drawn out with great longing, and the tears start from my eyes, and I wring my hands before God, because I know there are souls in peril in the churches at Oakland and near-by places,— souls who, in their condition of mind, know no more regarding how they stand before God than they would know had they never professed religion.

God desires that every one of us shall be susceptible to the influence of the Holy Spirit, by which we shall be fashioned into the likeness of the Divine. There remains now only a little while in which we can work to save our own souls and the souls of others; and all that God has given us should be cleansed and sanctified to his service. We should clear the King's highway, in order that God's messengers shall not be impeded as they try to advance. We should come into working order, and into perfect unity with one another. Let us, in tenderness, "admonish one another," and seek to help one another. Let us pray with one another, and put away everything that would keep us from entering into and following that narrow path which leads to life everlasting.

O, that every soul would prostrate himself before God, yielding himself unreservedly to him, and solemnly vowing that with Heaven's help he will henceforth keep his lips from all guile; that he will keep the life sanctified; that in every word and act he will honor and glorify the Lord! If thorough work were done, what a missionary company we should have with which to work these cities! O, what numbers we could have to send into places where the people have never heard the third angel's message!

As you engage heartily in this work, the converting power of God will be revealed. Your own hearts will be softened and subdued under the influence of the Holy Spirit.

There is a great work to be done, and many are unready to engage in sacred service. The judgments of God are soon coming upon all our cities, and I desire that we shall all be prepared. I greatly desire that we shall confess our sins, and be converted. If any of you desire to have your hearts softened and broken before God, it is best for you to clear the King's highway this afternoon, without delay. Prepare the heart for the reception of the Holy Spirit, that it may have free course in the entire being. Open the door of the soul-temple, and let the Saviour in. "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock," he says. "If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."

We ought to long with all the heart for a thorough reconversion, that the truth may be enthroned in heart and mind, and that, by the aid of the Holy Spirit, we may be prepared to present the third angel's message before others who need it so much. Now is our opportunity. May God help us, that we may be converted.

Dear brethren and sisters, if there are any of you who desire to say anything this afternoon, be free to speak. Are you ready to rededicate yourselves to God? Christ is ready; he is waiting, watching, longing. Angels are in this room. Wicked angels are here, and holy angels are here. Which side shall gain the victory over your heart here to-day, my brother, my sister? These are the hours of the Sabbath; you can not spend them any better than by clearing the King's highway. Remove the root of bitterness from your heart. Do not break off the top of it. Root it out, lest springing up again, many shall be defiled. You can not afford to be content with half-hearted work. Dig it out by the roots; and then God will help you to be reconverted.

As I spoke these and many like words to the brethren and sisters assembled, I felt the power of God thrilling me through and through. My talk was followed by a social meeting, and before the service closed, I offered a prayer to God for his converting power to rest upon those who are not yet prepared to co-operate with God and their brethren, in the special efforts now being put forth.

As we arose from prayer, the whole congregation united in singing one of my favorite hymns, "Jesus, Lover of my soul." A deep solemnity seemed to pervade the entire assembly as the people separated to return to their homes. We hope for better days as the result of this meeting.

Lessons from Past Experiences — No. 10

GEO. O. STATES

As I attend our Sabbath-school at the present time, I often think of the advantages our children have over those of us who lived in the early days of our message. I shall always remember the first Sabbath-school I ever attended, and how the teacher simply took his Bible and opened to the chapter, and then explained verse after verse, and gave us all a chance to ask questions as we passed along. We did not have any of the helps we now have. The lessons brought out from the Word have always remained, and frequently when reading them over, my mind goes back to the days long ago.

It was very seldom in those early days that we had preaching, for we all believed the Lord was soon coming, and were anxious for the few messengers to put in their time in going into new places and giving the truth to those who had never heard it. Once in a great while we had a minister, and it was truly a feast for us to listen to the present truth.

To the best of my memory every Seventh-day Adventist always had family prayers night and morning, and especially at night all members of the family took part, and as the parents and children prayed for the messengers who were out in new fields, that the truth might be presented in its purity and search out the honest hearts, the Lord did certainly come near and greatly bless in our family devotions.

We expected nothing else than that as soon as the children were old enough, they would be baptized and unite with the church, and many of our active ministers of to-day are simply some of those children who grew up under those influences.

My heart has been made sad many times as I have visited churches in my own conference, where I have lived most of the time for over twenty years, to find, in some families, all the children that were brought up in the truth drifting into the world and making no profession of the truth. As I see these things, I can but believe there is a reason for it, and I know there must be a lack somewhere. The Lord's people are spoken of as a "holy people unto the Lord thy God, and the Lord hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all the nations that are upon the earth." "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world."

Brethren, if our children are not in the truth, there certainly must be a reason, and we do well carefully and prayerfully to study what may have been that reason.

"We are living in an unfortunate age for children. A heavy current is setting downward to perdition, and more than childhood's experience and strength is needed to stand against this current, and not be borne down by it.

"Parents, help your children. Arouse from the lethargy which has been upon you. By earnest prayer and living faith, great victories will be gained. Some parents have not realized the responsibilities resting upon them, and have neglected the religious education of their children. In the morning the Christian's first thoughts should be upon God. Worldly labor and self-interest should be secondary."

This counsel was first given us over forty years ago, and it is certainly timely, for it is a fact that in many homes of those who profess this truth there is not so much time spent in prayer as there once was. If the downward influence was so strong over forty years ago, how must it be now when we are just that much nearer the coming of Christ? I know the timely counsel of my mother has had much to do in holding me in the hour of temptation, and as I think of the many earnest prayers in behalf of us children, I know that the hour of family worship has been a wall about my whole life. This is a duty that we as a people owe our children in this degenerate age.

Methods for Working Our Large Cities — No. 2

How to Prepare to Begin Work

W. H. GRANGER

In the Review of October 25, the word is given that "just at this time we must make special efforts to bring the truth before the people who live in our cities." I do not believe this means a spasmodic effort, but an effort that will increase in intensity until the work is finished. The making of such an effort demands that the work in our cities be placed on a basis that will be equal to the task before us. This does not necessarily require that the present number of conference workers in our cities be largely increased, but rather that the talent already there be organized and put into active operation. This is a duty that belongs to the workers and church officers. They must be the leaders. Unless they do lead out in this work, but little can or will be accomplished. A lifeless church is a direct reflection on its leaders.

To attempt to preach life into a church is a waste of time. The only remedy is to enlist every member in active service. But those at the head of the work can not do this by saying and not doing. They must inspire the church to activity by their own example.

Life's Discipline

ELIZA H. MORTON

The flowers lift their tiny heads
And simply grow,
Although the beating of the rain
Oft lays them low,
And like a slowly swinging bell
The day and night
Succeed each other in their course —
Now dark, now light.

The mighty trees send down their roots
By waters wide,
The nestling birdlings try their wings
Beside the tide;
But no resistance there is found —
God works his will
Through trees and days and buttercup
And daffodil.

And thus should we give up our ways
And simply grow
In grace and strength and godliness,
For all we owe
Our God will pay, and lead us on
To conquer sin;
Though his the battle, ours will be
The discipline.

The Work in Oakland and San Francisco — No. 4

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) [About four years ago, when Elder Haskell and others were conducting a Bible training-school and evening services in New York City, the word of the Lord to the workers there was: "Let the believers living near the place where you are holding meetings, share the burden of the work. They should feel it a duty and a privilege to help make the meetings a success. God is pleased by efforts to set them at work. He desires every church-member to labor as his helping hand, seeking by loving ministry to win souls to Christ."]

"The large cities should have been worked just as soon as the churches received the light. But many have carried no burden for souls, and Satan, finding them susceptible to his temptations, has spoiled their lives. God asks his people to repent, be converted, and return to their first love, which they have lost by their failure to follow in the footsteps of the self-sacrificing Redeemer."

[And to the church in Los Angeles, over a year ago, when the Lord was mightily stirring the people through the tent-meetings in progress, was sent the word: —

(2) "Let the Los Angeles church have special seasons of prayer daily for the work that is being done. The blessing of the Lord will come to the church-members who thus participate in the work, gathering in small groups daily to pray for its success. Thus the believers will obtain grace for themselves, and the work of the Lord will be advanced.

"This is the way we used to do. We prayed for our own souls and for those who were carrying on the work. The Lord Jesus declares that where two or three are gathered together in his name, he is in the midst of them, to bless them. Let there be less talking, and more sincere, earnest prayer.

(2) "I fear that the effort that is being made to proclaim the truth in Los Angeles will not be appreciated. Let every man come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty foe. Where a special effort is made, as has been revealed by the evangelistic work done in Los Angeles, let every member of the church draw near to God. Let all search their own hearts with the light that shines from the Word. If sin is discovered, let it be confessed and repented of. Let every helper be in good working order. The Lord will hear and answer prayer. Let not the church-members think that efforts should be put forth for them by the one who is impressed to labor for those who have been neglected, those in whose behalf special efforts have not heretofore been put forth.

"Where such an effort is made as has been made in Los Angeles, let the members of the church clear the King's highway, and help with their means in the work being done. Let them show that they are in perfect harmony. Let them be on hand at the meetings, armed and equipped for service, ready to talk with any one who may be interested. Let them pray and work for the lost sheep.]

"Let the second chapter of Second Timothy be impressed on the heart and brought into the practical life. Let not this season pass and leave the church uninfluenced by the truth that has been proclaimed. There is danger of the church's being in a self-satisfied, indifferent, backslidden condition during this time of special blessing, when the Word of God is being presented. Awake, my brethren, awake, and do not let angels see that you feel but little obligation to act your part in sustaining the work that is being done. Be wide awake. Pray while going about your daily duties. Draw strength from Christ; and let your hearts be filled with the deepest gratitude that the Lord is working. Be laborers together with him.

"This is Los Angeles' opportunity. If the members of the church will come humbly before God, putting all that is wrong out of their hearts, and consulting him at every step, he will manifest himself to them, and will give them courage in him."

This instruction is specially applicable to the churches at Oakland, Alameda, Berkeley, and San Francisco. Long has the light of present truth been shining upon the pathway of the believers in these churches. In a peculiar sense have they been favored with unusual light and unusual privileges. And now, when the judgments of heaven have led thinking men and women to pause and reflect what these things mean, a golden opportunity is given every believer to co-operate heartily with the messengers of truth who have come to tell the people that Jesus is soon coming again.

In this time, when God's message of warning is being so clearly proclaimed in these cities, every believer should carefully study and take heed to the words of counsel written by Paul to Timothy: —

"Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

"I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom: Preach the Word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry."

If, in this opportune time, the members of the churches will come humbly before God, putting out of their hearts all that is wrong, and consulting him at every step, he will manifest himself to them, and will give them courage in him. We must be ready to use our God-given capabilities in the work of the Lord. We must be ready to speak words in season and out of season,— words that will help and bless.

As the church-members do their part faithfully, the Lord will lead and guide his chosen ministers, and strengthen them for their important work. In much prayer let us all unite in holding up their hands, and in drawing bright beams from the heavenly sanctuary. We are soul-hungry to see the work advancing as it should. Christ is our alpha and our omega. Only in his strength can we gain success.

The New Birth *

HOK SIN

"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." John 3:7. This new birth is the most important thing that a believer in Christ should obtain; it is the door of salvation. If a man hears the gospel for many years, but has not yet been born again, he has no part in the kingdom of heaven. "Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God." John 3:3.

Search the Scriptures, and you will see that man from his childhood is evil, and that every imagination of his heart is evil continually. See Gen. 8:21; 6:5. When a man already has evil imaginations in his heart, they are sure to appear on the surface and be revealed in his actions. "O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things." Matt. 12:34, 35.

* Translated from the Chinese by W. C. Hankins.

Evangelism p. 111; 111-112

When a man has evil desires sown in his heart, he will certainly bring forth evil fruit. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. 6:7, 8. See also Gal. 5:19-21. This kind of man, who does evil, abides in death; for it is written: "And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins." Eph. 2:1. Being dead, if he would obtain the kingdom of God, he must surely be born again.

But man of himself can not be born again. He can not rise up from death and perform any work. A man living in the midst of sin has no power in himself to bring about the new birth and serve God. "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." Rom. 8:7.

Whence does man obtain the new birth? "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." John 1:12, 13.

He obtains it from Christ; for, "If ye know that he [Christ] is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him." 1 John 2:29.

He obtains it from the Spirit. Jesus answered, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." John 3:5.

God uses many ways to cause a man to be born again, but that which he is always sure to use, is his true gospel, not a false gospel. "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures." James 1:18; see also 1 Peter 1:23.

Brethren, the Bible is the true gospel, a shining gospel that can not be destroyed. God uses it to cause us to be born again. Therefore we should always search the Scriptures to see whether the gospel which we have received agrees with the Bible. If it is based, even a very little, upon the ideas of men, then it is not the true gospel. I hope we may all search the Scriptures until we find the true gospel of God.

When a man has been born again, by what name is he called in the Bible? "Wherefore if any man is in Christ, there is a new creation." 2 Cor. 5:17. "And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." Col. 3:10; see also Gal. 6:15. The Bible tells us that God created Adam after his own likeness. Gen. 1:26, 27. At that time man's heart was good, but after Adam's fall into sin, man's heart became evil. Gen. 6:5.

When God causes us to be born again, it is as if he recreates us and gives us a good heart just like the one Adam had when he was created; therefore he calls a man who has been born again, "a new creation."

He is one raised from the dead. "But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ (by grace ye are saved): and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Eph. 2:4-6; see also Rom. 6:4; Col. 2:12.

Previously we obeyed the lusts of the flesh and did that which we should not, but now we must obey the Holy Spirit and walk according to his commands, "not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit." Rom. 8:4, 5.

What does a man who has been born again receive?

"A new heart also will I give you." Eze. 36:26, first part.

"And I will put a new spirit within you." Eze. 11:19.

"And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." Eph. 4:24.

"But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." John 1:12, 13.

How does a man walk who has been born again?

The following scriptures will show: —

"We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and the evil one toucheth him not." 1 John 5:18.

"For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world." 1 John 5:4. Our overcoming of the world is not by making use of battle-ships, large guns, or great strength, but by using good to overcome the evil of the world.

"We know that we have passed from death into life, because we love the brethren." 1 John 3:14.

What is the proof of the new birth? — Love for the brethren (1 John 3:15, 16, 23); obedience to God and trust in him (Rom. 8:4, 14-16); peace with God. 1 John 3:19-22.

Thus we see the importance of the new birth. And not only can we be assured of having been born again, because of the presence of the Holy Spirit in our hearts, but our actions will manifest the fact to others.

Brethren, let us all examine our hearts, that we may know whether we have been really born again or not. If we have, then we may be glad, and if we have not yet obtained the new birth, let us quickly ask the Holy Spirit to dwell in our hearts and cause us to be born again.

And those who have already been born again should not think that this is sufficient, but should, "as new born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." 1 Peter 2:2. Then we may be one with Christ and bring forth the "fruit of the Spirit," "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Gal. 5:22, 23.

How to Begin and Follow up the Work

W. H. GRANGER

In my judgment, the duty of paying for literature used in an effort of this kind belongs to the church; for it often happens that those capable of doing the greatest amount of work are financially unable to purchase as much literature as they would gladly circulate; while very frequently persons who are financially able to pay for literature are either not qualified or perhaps not in a position to do much work. It is a burden which belongs to all alike, and what is lacking in one can frequently be supplied by another, where all co-operate in the work. Where the church pays for the literature, however, all donations received from the readers should be turned over to the church home missionary fund, as not infrequently sufficient can be obtained in contributions from interested readers to pay for the lessons distributed, besides what may be secured through book sales.

We now come to the question of how to begin work with the lessons. The place to begin is in your immediate neighborhood. Take No. 1 of the course, and as you call at the homes of the people, tell them of the Bible study that is being taken up in the city, and after mentioning some of the interesting features of the course, and your relation to the effort to assist the people along these lines, give them the first lesson, and invite them to become regular readers, promising to bring them an advanced lesson each week until the entire course of twenty-eight lessons has been read. This can be repeated with each family, care being taken that none are missed, until the desired number of readers is obtained.

The pleasantness of this experience will be a surprise to those who engage in this work for the first time. Many are hungering for an opportunity to learn more about the Bible. On making your return visits, call as nearly as possible at the same hour each week, and your readers will soon learn to look for your coming, and will manifest a greater interest in the lessons. Punctuality and

The Coming of His Feet

In the crimson of the morning, in the whiteness of the noon,
  In the amber glory of the day's retreat,
In the midnight, robed in darkness, or the gleaming of the noon,
  I listen for the coming of His feet.

I heard his weary footsteps on the sands of Galilee,
  On the temple's marble pavement, on the street,
Worn with weight of sorrow, faltering up the slopes of Calvary:
  The sorrow of the coming of his feet.

Down the minster-aisles of splendor, from betwixt the cherubim,
  Through the wondering throng, with motion strong and fleet,
Sounds his victor-tread, approaching with a music far and dim:
  The music of the coming of his feet.

Sandaled not with sheen of silver, girded not with woven gold,
  Weighted not with shimmering gems and odors sweet;
But white-winged and shod with glory, in the Tabor-light of old —
  The glory of the coming of his feet.

He is coming, O my spirit! with his everlasting peace,
  With his blessedness, immortal and complete;
He is coming, O my spirit! and his coming brings release —
  I listen for the coming of his feet.

How Shall We Observe the Holidays?

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich."

Shall we follow Christ as our pattern? In his life of self-sacrifice was seen not one jot or tittle of selfishness. He who had been rich in the heavenly courts, left all his wealth and power, and came to this world, clothed in the humble garb of humanity. For our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. Like him, his followers are by lives of self-denial to be a blessing to the world. If in the lives of all God's people the character of Christ were revealed, we should see thousands more converted to the truth.

If men would only remember that every favor they receive is a gift from God, would they not do very much more than they are now doing to relieve his work of the embarrassment of poverty? Would they not act a noble part in rendering to the Lord that which is his own?

Wealth hoarded will become a curse. Often the Lord can not preserve and bless the possessions of men, because the owners feel little or no obligation to assist in the great work of proclaiming the truth in new fields. Their substance, generously divided with their brethren who are laboring with meager facilities in destitute fields, would bring in return rich blessings from God.

No charity is complete unless it reveals an appreciation of the gospel. Those who now, in this time of emergency, selfishly hold on to their means, will soon suffer the loss of all they have. Those who are truly converted, and who have more than sufficient for their immediate necessities, will freely impart of their abundance to help those who are poorer than they.

All should feel an intense interest in the advancement of the third angel's message. The work of proclaiming this message has already grown to large proportions; but it is to advance still more rapidly. We need many more laborers, and God's loyal people, filled with a spirit of self-denial, should now give cheerfully and liberally, in order that facilities may be provided for the entering of new territory. In many places the work has been retarded because of the scarcity of means. The rebuke of God will rest upon those who do not come up to his help against the mighty powers of darkness.

Shall we not, as a people, refrain from following the custom of the world in unnecessary indulgence during the present holiday season? O how much might be accomplished in needy mission fields with the money that is squandered in various ways at this season of the year by those who profess to be Christians!

Will not the Seventh-day Adventists in every place first consecrate themselves to the Lord, and then do their very best, according to their circumstances, to advance his work, by gifts and offerings? Will they show that they appreciate the blessings of the Lord, and that they are grateful for his mercy? Will they not now consider their obligations to God, at a time when the world especially seeks for pleasure, and expends large sums of money for gifts to those who are not needy?

(1) I have said to my family and my friends, I desire that no one shall make me a birthday or Christmas gift, unless it be with permission to pass it on into the Lord's treasury, to be appropriated in the establishment of missions.

I will greatly praise the name of the Lord if his people, at this time, by the exercise of benevolence, will increase the facilities for successful work in many needy fields. I long to see among Seventh-day Adventists an increase of faith and courage, and more praise and thanksgiving to God, so that where in the past there has been a withholding of means, there shall from henceforth be seen the evidences of a grateful heart, — the faithful bestowal of gifts and offerings, to supply the needs of many destitute fields.

Millennial Dawn — No. 2

GEO. B. THOMPSON

As before stated, the central idea of the "Millennial Dawn" belief is that of a second probation. The following quotations state their position on this matter: —

"During the millennial age, there will be a restitution of all things lost by the fall of Adam (Acts 3:19-21), and before its close all tears shall have been wiped away." — "Plan of the Ages," Vol. I, page 73.

"Those who do not receive a full knowledge and, by faith, an enjoyment of this favor of God in the present time (and such are the great majority, including children and heathen) will assuredly have these privileges in the next age, or 'world to come,' the dispensation or age to follow the present." — Id., page 129.

"And why should not the Sodomites have an opportunity to reach perfection and everlasting life as well as Israel, or as any of us? . . . Thus our Lord teaches (Gen. 19:24; Luke 17:29; Matt. 11:23) that the Sodomites did not have a full opportunity; and he guarantees them such an opportunity when he adds (verse 24), 'But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee.'" — Id., page 110.

These quotations are sufficient to show their positive teaching in reference to a second probation. At the risk of being thought harsh, we must say that Satan never invented a doctrine better calculated to ensnare souls than that of a "second chance," another "probation" in the millennial age. Here we are told that the besotted inhabitants of the city of Sodom, whose deeds were so revolting and wicked that the long-suffering God could no longer permit them to curse the earth, are to have another probation. What teaching is better calculated to confirm men in sin than this? It says to all who hate God, to the profane and wicked of every class, whoremongers, harlots, thieves, murderers, thugs, and sinners of every description which now defile the earth, Live on in the haunts of sin, and debauch yourselves amid the gilded halls of shame and infamy. Do despite to the Spirit of God as much as you please. Take your fill of iniquity; drink the cup of sin to its very dregs. Reject overy overture of mercy. Mock at the pleadings of Jehovah, and despise his loving counsel to repent and turn from your infamous revelings. You will have another chance. I will give you another trial when circumstances are more favorable! Such a heresy is well pleasing to the unregenerate heart, and is calculated, as nothing else ever can be, to lull sinners to sleep in carnal security, and land them in gehenna at last.

Temptation Removed, and Righteousness Compulsory

In the millennial age, we are told that sinners will be placed under "favorable opportunities" for attaining perfection. The literal description of the new earth in Isaiah 35 is given a symbolic explanation, and made to teach how men will be enabled to live a righteous life in the millennial age.

"Of that highway it is significantly stated in symbolic language that 'no lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there.' Isa. 35:9. How many frightful lions are now in the way of those who would be glad to forsake sinful ways, and to pursue righteousness! There is the lion of a degenerate public sentiment, which deters many from venturing to obey the dictates of conscience in matters of every-day life — dress, home, and business arrangements, etc. The lion of temptation to strong drink hinders thousands who would be glad to see it removed. Prohibitionists and temperance workers now find a herculean task on their hands, which only the authority and power of the next age can remove; and the same may be said of other worthy efforts at moral reform. 'Nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon.' No giant corporations, organized to advance selfish, individual interests at the expense of the general good, will be tolerated. 'They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain' (kingdom), saith the Lord. Isa. 11:9. Though there will be difficulties to labor against in overcoming propensities to evil, etc., yet, in comparison with the narrow way of this age, that will be an easy way. The stones (stumbling-stones) shall all be gathered out, and the standard of truth shall be lifted up for the people. Isa. 62:10. Ignorance and superstition will be things of the past, and righteousness will receive its due reward, while to evil will be meted out its just deserts. Mal. 3:15, 18. By wholesome chastisements, fitting encouragements, and plain instructions, as returned prodigals, mankind will be trained and disciplined up to the grand perfection from which father Adam fell."—"Plan of the Ages," Vol. I, page 217.

We will give one more quotation on this point: —

"Many erroneously suppose that when Christ's millennial kingdom is inaugurated, every one will be pleased with its ruling. But not so. Its regulations will be far more exacting than those of any previous government, and the liberties of the people will be restricted to a degree that will be galling indeed to many now clamoring for an increase of liberty. Liberty to deceive, to misrepresent, to overreach and to defraud others, will be entirely cut off. Liberty to abuse themselves or others in food or drink, or in any way to corrupt good manners, will be totally denied to all. Liberty or license to do wrong of any sort will not be granted to any. The only liberty that will be granted to any will be the true and glorious liberty of the sons of God — liberty to do good to themselves and others in any and in every way; but nothing will be allowed to injure or destroy in all that holy kingdom. Isa. 11:9; Rom. 8:21. That rule will consequently be felt by many to be a severe one, breaking up all their former habits and customs, as well as breaking up present institutions founded upon these false habits and false ideas of liberty."—Id., page 302.

With all the strong temptations of this life taken away, with no liberty to deceive, with all opportunity to misrepresent "entirely cut off," many would no doubt cease to do wrong. The devil himself could be a Christian under such circumstances as these. The Lord gave to man the power of choice in the beginning, and will never take from him the opportunity to sin if he chooses to do so. Such teaching utterly ignores the power of the gospel of our Lord and Saviour. The gospel of Christ is able to give a man the victory over sin, and enable him to live a pure and upright life in the midst of all the wickedness of this earth. It changes the corrupt passions of the heart. Noah was a righteous man even in the degenerate time in which he lived. Lot also walked with God in the midst of Sodom, and perfected a righteous life. This will ever stand as a proof that the inhabitants of Sodom had the opportunity to be saved. Only when men have lost sight of the power of the gospel, will they claim that in order to attain unto holiness it is necessary to remove temptation. Those who enjoy the bliss of the eternal ages will be those who have come up out of great tribulation, and perfected holiness in the midst of temptation.

A Delusive Hope

We are told that in the millennial age opportunities will be "favorable" for holy living. But read this: —

"When men come to life in the next age, they will come with the same characters and tastes and desires they had in this life. 'In the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be.' Eccl. 11:3. That means that no change will have taken place in men while they are dead. And when they come to life, they will attempt to live as they did before; liars and thieves will still be inclined to lie and steal, but they will find a new power in control; no policemen, no magistrates, no judges as we have them at present, no jails, and yet they will be punished by an invisible power, which they will strive in vain to resist."—"Millennial Hope and Prospects," page 6.

"Favorable opportunity" indeed! The wicked, we are told (and this is doubtless true) will come forth from the tomb with the same wicked desires which controlled them when living. Picture this terrible scene if you are able. The long-lived giants who defiled the earth so dreadfully before the flood are all to live here again. Then the Sodomites, whose evil deeds have been a synonym for sin from their time till the present, are all to live again on the earth; the Amalekites, Canaanites, Jezebel and all the prophets of Baal, with the entire heathen population who have lived since the fall of man; the crucifiers of Jesus, and all the persecutors of the church who have lived since Calvary; all the murderers, harlots, and drunkards, and those monsters of cruelty whose inhuman deeds, perpetrated during the Dark Ages in the name of Christianity, made savages shudder,— all these multiplied millions of rebels against the government of heaven are to live here during the millennial age, and to have the same "desires" as before. And this is to constitute the "favorable opportunity" for sinners to repent! What folly!

But we are told that there is to be a "new power in control," which this wicked host will "strive in vain to resist." What "new power" is this that is to be in control? There is no power in the universe stronger than the power of the gospel. "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." Rom. 1:16. What agency is there then which is more potent than this to save souls? To men now the Lord says, "Behold, I have given you power to tread upon serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you." Luke 10:19. To souls now, who are struggling to overcome the dark passions of sin, our Lord says, "Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." Jude 24. Thank the Lord, there is a power now before which the powers of sin must yield. The believer allies himself to a power which the hosts of darkness can not overcome. We do not have to look forward to some "millennial age" for a power to overcome sin. That power is here. The Holy Spirit has come, and through this agency the Lord is able to save to the uttermost, and those who disregard its powerful entreaties in this life will have no opportunity to be saved in a future age.

The fact that all are not saved is no evidence that the gospel is not able to save all. It is an omnipotent power, but the Lord does not force any. He has given to all the power of choice. To angels was given this power. Some of them chose to rebel, and fell from their first estate. Adam was left free to choose. And there will never come a time when some power will seize hold of men, which they will "strive in vain to resist." This is no part of the plan of God. He draws all, but compels none. The Spirit strives with all now, and those who resist it shut themselves away from life. They can yield and be saved, or resist and be lost.

Church Letters

J. N. LOUGHBOROUGH

That church letters of commendation are in harmony with New Testament usage is apparent from the following texts: "Need we as some others, epistles of commendation to you, or letters of commendation from you?" 2 Cor. 3:1. "Whomsoever ye shall approve by your letters, them will we send to bring your liberality unto Jerusalem." 1 Cor. 16:3. In harmony with this, in the order that has been established among Seventh-day Adventists, two kinds of letters

Phil. 4:8.

He Lay Asleep on a Pillow

He lay asleep on a pillow
While the skies with terror were rife,
And each white-toothed, black-throated billow
Was yawning to take his life,
Though twelve loved men
Were struggling then
In what seemed but a hopeless strife.

If duty had called him to aiding,
Would you find him a sluggard to lie?
No man ever saw him evading
Nor in toil standing selfishly by.
No need of his hand,
As they put out from land;
So he slept. 'Twas his Father on high;

'Twas his Father was Lord of the ocean;
To do his will was his care,
And Gennesaret's rage and commotion
Were nothing to him lying there.
To float or to fall,
As his Father might call,
In going to sleep was his prayer.

The blackness may cloud us, appalling
Our hearts and bedimming our sun;
If to labor his service is calling,
There'll be strength until vict'ry is won;
If duty be sleep,
Kind watch he will keep,
For the Storm-God and Father are one.

Our Need of the Holy Spirit

MRS. E. G. WHITE

During the past night I have received instruction regarding the carrying forward of the work in Oakland and San Francisco. A good work has been begun by Elder Simpson, and the Lord has greatly blessed the effort that has been put forth to lead souls to accept the truth. He desires that this effort shall be continued in the same spirit in which it has been begun. Let those who preach the Word follow Christ's methods, ever realizing the solemnity of the message they proclaim. A lack of foresight may close the door to the hearts of some precious souls.

Whenever a special effort is put forth along missionary lines in any place, the church-members in that vicinity should understand that each one of them has some part to act in making the work a success. He who is truly converted stands as a representative of Christ. Let our brethren and sisters remember that we are living on the verge of the eternal world. The cases of all are being tried in the heavenly courts, and it is high time to put away sin, and to work earnestly to save as many as possible.

Among God's people there should be, at this time, frequent seasons of sincere, earnest prayer. The mind should constantly be in a prayerful attitude. In the home and in the church, let earnest prayers be offered in behalf of those who have given themselves to the preaching of the Word. Let believers pray as did the disciples after the ascension of Christ.

The members of our churches need to be converted, to become more spiritual-minded. A chain of earnest, praying believers should encircle the world. Let all pray in humility. A few neighbors may meet together to pray for the Holy Spirit. Let those who can not leave home, gather in their children, and unite in learning to pray together. They may claim the promise of the Saviour: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

In the Lord's prayer, we have an example of a perfect petition. How simple, yet how comprehensive it is! This prayer should be taught to the children. Let all study carefully the principles contained in it.

In response to the prayers of God's people, angels are sent with heavenly blessings. The Lord desires us to be far more successful in our missionary efforts. Through daily prayer and consecration all may so relate themselves to their Heavenly Father that he can bestow upon them rich blessings.

Especially do those young in the faith need to be wide awake, and on their guard against the strategies of Satan. They must adhere steadfastly to an unwavering faith in the great atoning sacrifice. They need not continue in sin. Through prayer they may receive grace that will enable them to overcome. (2)

By artful devices the enemy is rapidly adding souls to the number of those who are deceived. Many of our church-members are sadly lacking in true missionary zeal. There is a dearth of tithes and offerings. We need to repent of our failure to unite with Christ as laborers together with God. Because of our indifference to the appeals of God, we have not reached one half of those who might be reached. Few have felt a heavy burden for souls. How much more might have been accomplished had the time spent by God's people in faultfinding been spent in encouraging one another, and in active service! How much better for voices to blend in prayer, in holy unison, than to be employed in finding fault! We have no time for faultfinding or criticism.

There are thousands, yes, millions, within the borders of our own country, who need the enlightenment of the Word of God. Vice and crime are rampant. Even in San Francisco, a city where God has spoken in judgment, the saloons are wide open, notwithstanding the fact that the sure results of the open saloon are well known. Will not God punish for this insult? The temperance work should be revived.

O, how differently many would act were God to draw aside the veil that hides him from our eyes, and reveal himself seated on his throne in the high and holy place, not in silent grandeur, but surrounded by ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands of holy, happy beings, waiting to do his bidding! He notes carefully every earthly transaction, marking with approval or condemnation the course of every inhabitant of the earth.

God's Great Love

(1) [When the fulness of time came, the windows of heaven were opened, and upon the world was poured a flood of heavenly grace. God made to our world the wonderful gift of his only begotten Son. In the light of this act, it could never be said by the inhabitants of other worlds that God could have done more than he did to show his love for the children of men. He made a sacrifice that defies all computation.] To save a fallen race he poured forth the whole treasure of heaven in one gift.

Christ laid aside his royal robe and kingly crown, and assumed the form of humanity, in order that humanity, through his merits, might partake of the divine nature, and escape the corruption that is in the world through lust. He was subjected to the fiercest assaults of Satan, but not for a moment did he yield to the terrible temptations brought against him, or become discouraged in his work of bringing redemption to the race. He gave his life for the salvation of a fallen race. Who can understand the depth and the breadth of love so amazing!

[In the world to come, Christ will lead the redeemed beside the river of life, and will teach them wonderful lessons of truth. He will unfold to them the mysteries of nature. They will see that a Master-Hand holds the worlds in position. They will behold the skill displayed by the great Artist in coloring the flowers of the field, and will learn of the purposes of the merciful Father, who dispenses every ray of light, and with the holy angels the redeemed will acknowledge in songs of grateful praise God's supreme love to an unthankful world. Then it will be understood that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."]

The Love of God

EUGENE LELAND

No one can ever expect to attain to success in the Christian life until the love of God is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost. With firm, unswerving purpose, the eye will ever be fixed upon the love of God as the one object toward which every energy of the mind and body will be directed. With Paul, the determination was to know nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified. With the love of God shed abroad in the heart, coupled with such a determination, one will not fail to live a godly life; and in him will be fulfilled the teaching that they "that will live godly

Lead the Way

M. E. YERGIN

"Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward."

THERE'S a world awaits the action of to-day;
Many millions anxious now to know the way
  From a woe too deep to tell,
  From a foe they can not quell,
  From the bands and thrall of hell.
Up! why wait a moment longer?
    Lead the way!

Mercy's hour is near its closing; soon the world
Into death's long, hopeless silence will be hurled.
  Seek the children in the gates,
  Where the hope of Israel waits;
  On their choosing hang their fates.
Up! the soul who lingers dies. On!
    Lead the way!

On the battlements of heaven, in its gates,
Host on host the angel army eager waits;
  Yea, the Spirit's mighty power
  Waits on us a little hour;
  If we linger, lost the dower;
Up! the goodly land is ours. On!
    Lead the way!

Lead the way. Ho! God's coworkers, lead the way!
Into darkness bring the light of heaven's day.
  Just once more the storm shall roar,
  A last time in fierceness pour,
  Then, forever, sin is o'er.
On! Fair heaven shines before us!
    Lead the way!

The Scriptures a Safeguard

MRS. E. G. WHITE

MANY a portion of scripture which learned men pronounce a mystery, or pass over as unimportant, is full of comfort and instruction to him who has been taught in the school of Christ. One reason why many theologians have no clearer understanding of God's Word is, they close their eyes to truths which they do not wish to practise. An understanding of Bible truth depends not so much on the power of intellect brought to the search as on the singleness of purpose, the earnest longing after righteousness.

The Bible should never be studied without prayer. The Holy Spirit alone can cause us to feel the importance of those things easy to be understood, or prevent us from wresting truths difficult of comprehension. It is the office of heavenly angels to prepare the heart to so comprehend God's Word that we shall be charmed with its beauty, admonished by its warnings, or animated and strengthened by its promises. We should make the psalmist's petition our own: "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." Temptations often appear irresistible because, through the neglect of prayer and the study of the Bible, the tempted one can not readily remember God's promises and meet Satan with the Scripture weapons. But angels are round about those who are willing to be taught in divine things; and in the time of great necessity, they will bring to their remembrance the very truths which are needed. Thus "when the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him."

Jesus promised his disciples, "The Comforter, the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you." But the teachings of Christ must previously have been stored in the mind, in order for the Spirit of God to bring them to our remembrance in the time of peril. "Thy word have I hid in mine heart," said David, "that I might not sin against thee."

All who value their eternal interests should be on their guard against the inroads of skepticism. The very pillars of truth will be assailed. It is impossible to keep beyond the reach of the sarcasms and sophisms, the insidious and pestilent teachings, of modern infidelity. Satan adapts his temptations to all classes. He assails the illiterate with a jest or sneer, while he meets the educated with scientific objections and philosophical reasoning, alike calculated to excite distrust or contempt of the Scriptures. Even youth of little experience presume to insinuate doubts concerning the fundamental principles of Christianity. And this youthful infidelity, shallow as it is, has its influence. Many are thus led to jest at the faith of their fathers, and to do despite to the Spirit of grace. Many a life that promised to be an honor to God and a blessing to the world, has been blighted by the foul breath of infidelity. All who trust to the boastful decisions of human reason, and imagine that they can explain divine mysteries, and arrive at truth unaided by the wisdom of God, are entangled in the snare of Satan.

We are living in the most solemn period of this world's history. The destiny of earth's teeming multitudes is about to be decided. Our own future well-being, and also the salvation of other souls, depends upon the course which we now pursue. We need to be guided by the Spirit of truth. Every follower of Christ should earnestly inquire, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" We need to humble ourselves before the Lord, with fasting and prayer, and to meditate much upon his Word, especially upon the scenes of the judgment. We should now seek a deep and living experience in the things of God.

We have not a moment to lose. Events of vital importance are taking place around us; we are on Satan's enchanted ground. Sleep not, sentinels of God; the foe is lurking near, ready at any moment, should you become lax and drowsy, to spring upon you and make you his prey.

Many are deceived as to their true condition before God. They congratulate themselves upon the wrong acts which they do not commit, and forget to enumerate the good and noble deeds which God requires of them, but which they have neglected to perform. It is not enough that they are trees in the garden of God. They are to answer his expectations by bearing fruit. He holds them accountable for their failure to accomplish all the good which they could have done, through his grace strengthening them. In the books of heaven they are registered as cumberers of the ground. Yet the case of even this class is not utterly hopeless. With those who have slighted God's mercy and abused his grace, the heart of long-suffering love yet pleads. "Wherefore he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. See then that ye walk circumspectly, . . . redeeming the time, because the days are evil."

When the testing time shall come, those who have made God's Word their rule of life will be revealed. In summer there is no noticeable difference between evergreens and other trees; but when the blasts of winter come, the evergreens remain unchanged, while other trees are stripped of their foliage. So the false-hearted professor may not now be distinguished from the real Christian, but the time is just upon us when the difference will be apparent. Let opposition arise, let bigotry and intolerance again bear sway, let persecution be kindled, and the half-hearted and hypocritical will waver and yield the faith; but the true Christian will stand firm as a rock, his faith stronger, his hope brighter, than in the days of prosperity.

Says the psalmist: "Thy testimonies are my meditation." "Through thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way."

"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom." "He shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit."

The Gift of Wisdom

MRS. B. J. CADY

"WHEREFORE be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is." Eph. 5:17.

And why should we fail to understand what the will of the Lord is, since we are told that if we lack wisdom, we may ask of God and it will be given us?

There is one condition given, and that is that we "ask in faith." Then since wisdom is such a desirable thing to have, in order that we may know how to do and say just the right things, and that our way be prospered, why is it that the children of God sometimes fail to have

What Should I Do?

If I were told that I must die to-morrow,
That the next sun
Which sinks should bear me past all fear and sorrow
For any one,
All the fight fought, all the short journey through,
What should I do?
I do not think that I should shrink or falter,
But just go on,
Doing my work, nor change nor seek to alter
Aught that is gone;
But rise and move and love and smile and pray
For one more day.
But if a wondrous hand from the blue yonder
Held out a scroll,
On which my life was writ, and I with wonder
Beheld unroll
To a long century's end its mystic clew,
What should I do?
What could I do, O blessed Guide and Master,
Other than this?
Still to go on as now, not slower, faster,
Nor fear to miss
The road, although so very long it be,
While led by thee;
Step after step, feeling thee close beside me,
Although unseen,
Through thorns, through flowers, whether the tempest hide thee
Or heaven serene,
Assured thy faithfulness can not betray,
Thy love decay.

Gifts and Offerings

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The end is fast approaching, and many of our churches are asleep. Let all now make it their chief business to serve the Lord. God has entrusted to his people the talent of means, some more, and some less than others. With many, the possession of wealth has proved a snare. In their desire to follow the fashions of the world, they have lost their zeal for the truth, and they are in peril of losing eternal life. In proportion as God has prospered them, men should return to him of the goods he has entrusted to their stewardship.

As members of the Lord's family we have a decided work to do. We must carefully examine our hearts to see if we are truly converted to God's service. Are we entirely free from the worldly habits, ideas, and customs that are abhorrent to God?

"Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."

Those who are living upon the earth when the intercession of Christ shall cease in the sanctuary above are to stand in the sight of a holy God without a mediator. Their robes must be spotless, their characters must be purified from sin by the blood of sprinkling. Through the grace of God and their own diligent efforts, they must be conquerors in the battle with evil. While the investigative judgment is going forward in heaven, while the sins of penitent believers are being removed from the sanctuary, there is to be a special work of purification, of putting away sin, among God's people on earth.

"Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye said, Wherein shall we return?"

The Lord reveals to his people their special sin. "Will a man rob God?" he asks. "Yet ye have robbed me." Still unconvicted of sin, the disobedient inquire, "Wherein have we robbed thee?"

Definite indeed is the Lord's answer: "In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord."

Here are important matters for our consideration. Read carefully the charge that God makes against those who have not fulfilled the conditions of their agreement with him. In his mercy, the Lord has bestowed rich bounties upon his people, and many have selfishly withheld from him the money for which he calls. Let all carefully examine into their business relations with their Creator. Those who will not hesitate to deal treacherously with their Maker will certainly not hesitate to deal treacherously with their fellow men.

I desire to impress upon all our people that God regards the withholding of tithes and offerings as robbery. We are merely stewards of God. We do not own the money that passes into our hands. In its disbursement we are to be colaborers with Christ.

We should feel an intense interest in the advancement of the work of God. This work has already grown to large proportions, but it is to advance still more rapidly. We need many more laborers, and there must be with all a spirit of self-denial, in order to provide facilities for the carrying forward of the message into new fields. In many places the work has been greatly retarded because of the scarcity of means. The rebuke of God will rest upon those who do not come up to his help.

In the Southern field a beginning has been made, but there is still a great work to be done for all classes. We now call upon all who love Christ to help with their means the work of God in this needy field.

There should be among us an army of people who are prepared to open the Scriptures to many who are perishing in their sins. Let spiritual-minded men and women take hold of this work where they are. As they find opportunity, let them pray for those for whom they labor. All classes are to be reached. Poverty need not hinder any one from coming to Jesus. We should manifest a decided interest for those who are more wealthy, and endeavor to lead them to lay up their treasure in the heavens, an enduring substance, that will never perish.

Let our church-members take up such work where they are, and let all unite in sustaining the work in the regions beyond. Wonderful progress has already been seen, but we still have an exceedingly large work before us, a work that calls for self-denial and cross-bearing.

As we close the year 1906, I plead with my brethren and sisters to make their record right with God, and to be faithful in rendering to him his own in tithes and offerings. May God help each one to act his part in the work of saving souls.

In the Lord's treasury there should be sufficient means to give an adequate support to those who devote their time to the work of saving souls. Their just wages should not be begrudged them. Those who are willing to labor for the Master should not be allowed to lack for the necessities of life. They should be enabled to live comfortably, and also to have enough so that they can make donations to the cause of God; for it frequently happens that they are expected to take the lead in making offerings.

(1) [In the great work of warning the world, those who have the truth in the heart, and are sanctified through the truth, will act their assigned part. They

Let not the want of economy in the home life render us unable to act our part in strengthening the work already established, and in entering new territory.]

Schools and sanitariums are to be established. These should be located out of the cities. Students should be fitted to engage in various lines of God's work. We have been greatly favored in securing land and buildings suitable for sanitarium work, at prices far below the original cost. Through the work done in these institutions, we may reach all classes, high and low. The work in behalf of the sick and suffering was ordained of God.

Christ's chief work was in the preaching of the gospel to the poor. He chose to minister to the needy, the ignorant. In simplicity he opened before them the blessings they might receive, and thus he awakened their souls' hunger for the truth, the bread of life. Christ's life is an example to all his followers. It is the duty of every one who has learned the way of life to teach others what it means to believe in the word of God.

There are many in the shadow of death, who need to be instructed in the truths of the gospel. Nearly the whole world is lying in wickedness, yet we have words of hope for those who sit in darkness.

"The land of Zebulon, and the land of Nepthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles; the people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up. From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

(2) [From Christ's methods of labor we may learn many valuable lessons. He did not follow merely one method; in various ways he sought to gain the attention of the multitude; and then he proclaimed to them the truths of the gospel.]

"And Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers. And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left their nets, and followed him. And going on from thence, he saw other two brethren, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ship with Zebedee their father, mending their nets; and he called them. And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed him.

"And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people. And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers disease and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them. And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan."

Christians are not only to give freely of their means to sustain the Lord's work; wherever they are, they are to labor disinterestedly for souls. They themselves are to be sanctified through the truth, to be purified and cleansed from all pride and selfishness. Then they will be prepared to meet their solemn obligations to God, and to enlighten the minds of others who are in darkness regarding Bible truth. Not one thousandth part of what should be done is being done by those who understand the plan of salvation. Every true Christian is so to represent the plan of salvation in his own consistent life, and in his unselfish efforts in behalf of others, that no one to whom he has access may say, "No man cares for my soul."

GEO. B. THOMPSON

The doctrine of a second probation appeals to the unregenerate heart. It makes entirely unnecessary any present repentance or any missionary operations in home or foreign fields. According to that teaching, the great missionary campaign of all time is to occur in the "succeeding age," when the church, the "royal priesthood," will bring all to an "accurate knowledge of the truth."

In Matthew 24 the signs which are to precede the coming of the Lord, and herald the end of the world, are given by our Saviour in response to the question of the disciples, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" In chapter 25 is given the experience of the church near the end of time, the period immediately preceding the coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven. The professed church is here represented by ten virgins, five of whom were wise and five foolish. "And while they [the foolish virgins] went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut." Verse 10. This is the time spoken of in Rev. 19:7: "For the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." Here Christ is represented as taking to himself a bride. The church is not the bride (Rev. 21:9, 10), but the invited guests present at the marriage supper. Rev. 19:7-9.

His going in before the Father to receive the bride, is thus described by the prophet: "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Dan. 7:13, 14. The "coming" here spoken of is not the coming of Jesus to this earth to receive his people, but his coming "to the Ancient of days," the Father, to receive from him the kingdoms of this world. That this is before his second coming is very clearly stated. "He said therefore, A certain nobleman [Christ] went into a far country [heaven] to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return."

No Second Probation

This is very clear; but note that at this time, before he comes, the door of mercy is shut. Matt. 25:10. Probation for man is ended, and some are shut out, and lost. "When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are." Luke 13:25. Here is a time when the door of mercy will be shut, and the reply to those on the outside from the One who has shut the door, holds out no hope of "a second probation." "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out." Verse 28.

But why should they weep and gnash their teeth if they are to have another chance to enter in? It is clear that they have no such chance, and fully understand that they are "thrust out" forever. We nowhere read that the "door" which is once "shut" is ever to be opened, and another "chance" offered to all the lost. It logically follows that if the Lord should do this for sinners, he would needs do the same for the devil and all the fallen angels. Why not give them another chance as well as man?

The great lines of prophecy in the book of Daniel throw much light upon this question. In the second chapter, under the symbol of a great metallic image, the history of the world from the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar till the final destruction of all the kingdoms of this world is given. Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome were to bear sway successively as universal monarchies. The fourth kingdom, Rome, symbolized by the legs of iron, was to lose its iron stability and become divided, as indicated by the mixture of iron and clay. Between the years A. D. 356 and 483 the Roman empire was divided into ten kingdoms; namely, the Alemanni, Franks, Vandals, Burgundians, Visigoths, Lombards, Ostrogoths, Suevi, Heruli, Anglo-Saxons. The territory of these ten kingdoms is to-day occupied by the nations of the Old World. The Lord further declares, "And in the days of these [ten] kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. 2:44.

Love, Light, and Joy

O Love that will not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in thee;
I give thee back the life I owe,
That in thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be.

O Light that followest all my way,
I yield my flickering torch to thee;
My heart restores its borrowed ray,
That in thy sunshine's blaze its day
May brighter, fairer be.

O Joy that seekest me through pain,
I can not close my heart to thee;
I trace the rainbow through the rain,
And feel the promise is not vain
That morn shall tearless be.

O Cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from thee;
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red
Life that shall endless be.

The Mother's Work

MRS E. G. WHITE

I WISH to arouse parents to see the importance of their position. Few parents take time to think of how much depends on the instruction and training a child receives during the early years of its life. It is at this time that the foundation of a child's character is laid. "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it," are the words of the wise man. The lessons a child learns at the mother's knee determine its future experience.

How few parents realize this as they should. As I have called mothers' attention to the wrong habits they were encouraging in their little ones, some have listened indifferently, while others have said, with a smile, "I can not bear to cross my children. They will do better as they grow older. They will then be ashamed of these passionate outbursts. It is not well to be too strict with little ones. They will outgrow the inclination to tell untruths, to meddle, to be indolent and selfish."

A very easy way truly to dispose of the matter, but a way that is not in harmony with the will of God. If a field is left uncultivated, a crop of weeds is sure to appear. So it is with children. If the soil of the heart is uncultivated, Satan sows his seeds of anger and hatred, selfishness and pride, and they quickly spring up, to bear a harvest that parents reap with bitter regret. Too late they see their terrible mistake. The wrong they have done can never be wholly undone. Even if the child, by patient, untiring care, is at last won to the Saviour, his character will always bear the marks of Satan's seed-sowing.

Children left to themselves grow up selfish, exacting, unlovable. Unable to enjoy their own society or the society of others, their lives are filled with discontent.

Aided by the grace of Christ, mothers have it in their power to do a great and grand work. This Satan knows, and he works with all his power to prevent them from doing this work. He seeks to fill the mind with thoughts of fashionable dress. Thus he absorbs the time and strength of even Christian mothers so that they have no time to give to the training of their children or to self-improvement. When the enemy thus secures the attention of the mother, he rejoices; for he knows how much he has gained. He looks on the children as an easy prey; for he has won the mother. She thinks more of display, more of what others think and say of her, than she does of the training of the precious souls in her care. As she sets her feet in the path of fashion, she becomes infatuated. In order to keep pace with the demands of the bondage in which she has sold herself, she works early and late, overtaxing mind and body. She becomes so wearied with remodeling unfashionable garments and making new ones, that she has no heart to read her Bible or to pray. She is too tired to give time to her children. She becomes perplexed and distressed. The yoke that she is trying to bear is very galling; but she imagines that it must be borne, and martyr-like she toils on, struggling under her self-imposed burden. Jesus is calling, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. . . . My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." But she does not hear the gracious invitation. The Saviour's voice is drowned by the clamorous demands of fashion.

Mothers, do not forget that God requires you to give your children constant, loving care. He does not want you to be a slave to your children, but he does want you to teach them to live for him. Day by day give them lessons that will prepare them for future usefulness. One lesson that you will have to repeat over and over again is the lesson of obedience. Teach your children that they are not to rule, that they are to respect your wishes, and yield to your authority. Thus you are teaching them self-control. Give them nothing for which they cry, even though your tender heart would lead you to indulge them. If they gain the victory once by crying, they will expect to do so again, and the next time they will be harder to control.

Children inherit inclinations to wrong, but they also have many lovely traits of character. These should be strengthened and developed, while the tendencies to evil should be carefully guarded against and repressed. Children should never be flattered, for flattery is poison to them; but parents should show a sanctified, tender regard for them, thus gaining their confidence and love.

When children lose their self-control, and speak passionate words, the parents should for a time keep silent, neither reproving nor condemning. At such times silence is golden, and will do more to bring repentance than any words that can be uttered. Satan is well pleased when parents irritate their children by speaking harsh, angry words. Paul has given a caution on this point: "Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged." They may be very wrong, but you can not lead them to the right by losing patience with them. Let your calmness help to restore them to a proper frame of mind.

Jesus loves children and youth. He rejoices when he sees Satan repulsed in his efforts to overcome them. Many a youth is in imminent peril through manifold temptations, but the Saviour has the tenderest sympathy for him, and sends his angels to guard and protect him. He is the good shepherd, ever ready to go into the wilderness to seek for the lost, straying sheep.

Mothers, do you sigh for a missionary field? In your home you have a missionary field in which you may labor with untiring energy and unflagging zeal, knowing that the results of your work will endure through all eternity. Are not the souls of your children of as much value as the souls of the heathen? Then tend them with loving care, bringing God into their thoughts.

Who can do this work so well as a God-fearing mother? The work of the mother who has a close connection with Christ is of infinite worth. Her ministry of love makes the home a Bethel. Christ works with her, turning the common water of life into the wine of heaven.

Christian parents, you are charged with the responsibility of showing the world the power and excellency of home religion. Be controlled by principle, not by impulse. Work with the consciousness that God is your helper. Allow nothing to divert you from your God-given mission. Be true to your trust. God will help you. Guided by him, your children will grow up to bless and honor you in this life and in the life to come.

The Wayfarer

ELLA M. ROBINSON

"O the hope of Israel, the savior thereof in time of trouble, why shouldest thou be as a stranger in the land, and as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night?"

I SEE Him; yes, I see amid the throng
The One whom I have sought for many a day;
I'll hasten to his side ere he be gone,
And ask him to abide with me to-day;
I hope — I know he will not turn away. (1)

And then perchance he longer will abide;
For why should he in whom all hearts delight
Be as a stranger,— one who turns aside,—
A wayfarer who tarries for a night,
And then is gone before the morning light?

The Saviour of us all in time of need —
How can we careless of his presence be?
Although his heart of pitying love doth bleed
For human love and human sympathy,
They must entreat who'd have his company.

And when we slight his love, divine, serene,
And seek the jostling, jesting crowd once more,
We find that he has slipped away unseen.
Can he who Calvary's awful torture bore,
And cruel taunts, endure for us no more? (2)

And is this why he hastes away? — Ah, no;
He knows 'twere best that we seek patiently
To find the blessing he would fain bestow.
He yearns for us;— divinest mystery
That he, the Prince of heaven, should so love me!

And so I plead: "O, never leave me more!
Though from thy presence I should turn away;
Though I should slight thee, as so oft before;
E'en though this heart deceitfully should say,
'Depart,' still, blessed Master, stay! O stay!

"When thou art gone, my heart is lone and chill;
No mockery of pleasure giveth rest, (3)
And naught I find the empty void to fill.
Ah, then I know, of all, I loved thee best,
And turn again to thee for peace and rest."

Self-Denial — Self-Sacrifice

MRS. E. G. WHITE

How many there are who accept Christ, and apparently live a Christian life, until their circumstances change! Perhaps they come into the possession of property. Thus God tests them, to see if they will be wise stewards. But they fail to endure the proving. They use for self-gratification that which they should devote to feeding the hungry and clothing the naked. In want and distress, God's children are calling to him. Many are dying for want of the necessaries of life. Their cries have entered the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. He will call to a strict account those who have neglected his needy ones. What will these selfish rich men do when the Lord asks them, "What did you do with the money I gave you to use for me?" "These shall go away into everlasting punishment." The Lord will say to them, "Depart from me, ye cursed; . . . for I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not." (3)

The wails of a world's sorrow are heard all around us. Sin is casting its shadow over us. Let us make ourselves ready to co-operate with the Lord. The pleasure and power of this world will pass away. No one can carry his earthly treasures into the eternal world. But the life spent in doing the will of God will abide forever. The result of that which is given to advance the work of God will be seen in the kingdom of God.

There is a world to be warned. To us has been entrusted this work. At any cost we must practise the truth. We are to stand as self-sacrificing minutemen, willing to suffer the loss of life itself, if need be, in the service of God. There is a great work to be done in a short time. We need to understand our work, and to do it with fidelity. Every one who is finally crowned victor will, by noble, determined effort to serve God, have earned the right to be clothed with Christ's righteousness. To enter the crusade against Satan, bearing aloft the blood-stained banner of the cross of Christ — this is the duty of every Christian.

This work calls for self-sacrifice. Self-denial and the cross stand all along the way of life. "He that will come after me," Christ said, "let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Those who secure the treasures of this world are obliged to toil and sacrifice. Should those who are seeking for an eternal reward think that they need make no sacrifices?

The most difficult sermon to preach and the hardest to practise is self-denial. The greedy sinner, self, closes the door to the good which might be done, but which is not done because money is invested for selfish purposes. But it is impossible for any one to retain the favor of God and enjoy communion with the Saviour, and at the same time be indifferent to the interests of his fellow beings who have no life in Christ, who are perishing in their sins. Christ has left us a wonderful example of self-sacrifice. He pleased not himself, but spent his life in the service of others. He made sacrifices at every step, sacrifices which none of his followers can ever make, because they have never occupied the position he occupied before he came to this earth. He was commander of the heavenly host, but he came here to suffer for sinners. He was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that through his poverty we might be made rich. Because he loved us, he laid aside his glory and took upon him the form of a servant. He gave his life for us. What are we giving for him? Shall we not, in the new year just before us, consecrate ourselves entirely to him? Shall we not make him a New-year's offering of a portion of the means he has given us? As we follow him in the path of self-denial, lifting the cross and bearing it after him to his Father's home, we shall reveal in our lives the beauty of the Christ-life. At the altar of self-sacrifice, — the appointed place of meeting between God and the soul,— we receive from the hand of God the celestial torch which searches the heart, revealing the need of an abiding Christ.

The Minister's Visit

DANIEL NETTLETON

IT was about the year 1865. We were living on our homestead in Nebraska. There were no railroads west of the Missouri River at that time. Nebraska was a territory, and Omaha its capital. We were in the wild West. The Indian's wigwam and the coyote's call were familiar. But the church bell call to prayer and the gospel hymns of praise were sounds unheard. Settlers came, and soon all the "claims" were taken. Then came also the pioneer Methodist preacher, the man that has done more to make the great Methodist Church what it is to-day than any other agency. He held meetings in the home of one of our neighbors, then organized a Sunday-school. Later he held a revival or "protracted meeting" in our schoolhouse.

There was no prayer or hymn of praise in father's home then. My parents were worldly people, "strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." But we attended the meetings, and the minister came to our home. I shall never forget his visit. When his horse was cared for, he entered our home, with saddle-bags on his arm, in which were his Bible, hymn-book, and gospel tracts. He talked with us a little about the weather and crops, but much about Jesus and his great salvation. He read in the Book of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused us to understand the reading. Then he sang one of those blessed gospel hymns, through which the Spirit of God finds access to the heart. Then he knelt with us and prayed, and as he prayed, his voice and countenance were altered. He wept over our sins, as

A Prayer

WORTHIE HARRIS HOLDEN

JEHOVAH, God of light and life,
We lift our thoughts to thee,
And fain through mists of sin and strife
Would view thy majesty.

We dwell too near the lowland plain,
Too nigh Despond and Doubt;
Ope thou our eyes to see again
Thy chariots round the mount.

Too oft, O God, our sordid mind
Unknowing doth profane;
We view thee as we do mankind,
And take thy name in vain.

Let, Holy, holy! be our cry,
Thy glory stand revealed,
Till e'en in mortals such as I
Thy character is sealed.

The Work in Oakland and San Francisco — No. 5

MRS. E. G. WHITE

ON Sabbath, November 3, and again on Sabbath, November 10, and on the following day, the Lord gave me strength to speak to his people in San Francisco. The meeting for Sunday afternoon was well advertised, and there was a good outside attendance from the city.

I was much pleased to have the privilege of speaking in the church at San Francisco. My husband and I and a few others worked together to obtain the means to erect this building, over thirty years ago. It would have been a heavy loss if this church had been destroyed; but it was not seriously injured by the earthquake.

The ventilation in the San Francisco church is not good, and after my return home, I suffered from the effects of breathing the impure air. The influenza was upon me. For over a month I felt unable to travel. However, my general health was good, and I was able to do considerable writing. And when, the second week in December, I received an invitation from Elder W. W. Simpson to come to Oakland and speak to the people on Sabbath, I had so far recovered from the influenza that I ventured to go.

Elder Simpson held meetings in Oakland for about two months. His labors were greatly blessed. For a few weeks after his meetings began, we were favored with remarkably good weather. The days were clear and mild, and the rainfall was very light. But the workers in Oakland had to meet difficulties; for the tent was blown down twice by severe wind-storms, and badly torn; and toward the close of the series of meetings it rained for several days, and the workers found it necessary to take down the tent for a few days, and temporarily discontinue the meetings.

The manner of Elder Simpson's work reminds me of the efforts that were put forth in 1843 and 1844. He does not make prominent his own words, but reads much from the Bible, explaining one scripture by another. He dwells largely on the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation, and uses many illustrations and suitable figures to impress the truth. To represent the beasts of Daniel and Revelation, he has prepared lifelike images of papier-mache.

Elder Simpson endeavors to avoid entering into controversy with opponents. He presents the Bible so clearly that it is evident that any one who differs, must do so in opposition to the Word of God.

Friday evening and Sabbath forenoon, December 15 and 16, Elder Simpson spoke upon the subject of Spiritual Gifts, dwelling especially upon the spirit of prophecy. Those who were present at these discourses say that he treated the subject in a clear, forceful manner.

Sabbath afternoon I filled my appointment in the large Congregational church that is now being used by our people. The room was filled, and the doors at one side were thrown up, that many might be accommodated in an adjoining room. I am told that between five and six hundred were present. It was with fear and trembling that I went to the service; for on Friday I was very poorly — so ill, in fact, that I hardly had strength sufficient to enable me to sit up. Sabbath afternoon I feared that it would be impossible for me to stand before the congregation for over half an hour. But as I spoke, the invigorating power of the Spirit of God came upon me, and I was enabled to continue speaking for one hour and fifteen minutes. Such experiences remind me of what I passed through frequently in the earlier days of the message.

For about a year after my husband died, I suffered greatly from sorrow. At that time, when I seemed to be hovering between life and death, my son Willie persuaded me to go a short distance in a phaeton to a camp-meeting in Healdsburg. A sofa had been placed on the platform in the large tent. Here I lay down, thinking I would deliver my farewell address. My face was as the face of one dead, without a particle of color.

After a few testimonies had been borne, I asked Willie to help me to arise to my feet, and let me lean on him. There I stood, and began to tell the people that this was probably the last time they would ever hear my voice in camp-meeting. But after speaking a few words, I felt the Spirit and power of God thrilling through every nerve of my body. Those who saw me said that the blood could be seen as it put color in my lips and reached my forehead. My flesh took on its natural appearance. One of the citizens of Healdsburg, in great surprise, turned to one of his neighbors, and exclaimed, "A miracle is being wrought in sight of this whole congregation!" I could not understand why all were looking so intently at me, some even rising to their feet. The Spirit of the Lord had rested upon me, and I had been healed in the presence of a large congregation. During the remainder of the camp-meeting, I spoke several times.

These special impartations of strength in times of great physical weakness, give me courage. The Lord is my helper. I praise him with heart and voice for his wonderful mercies and his sustaining power.

The efforts put forth in Oakland have borne fruit in the salvation of precious souls. Sunday morning, December 16, I attended a baptismal service at the Piedmont Baths. Thirty-two candidates were buried with their Lord in baptism, and arose to walk in newness of life. This was a scene that angels of God witnessed with joy. Several children were baptized first, and then the older ones. Occasionally a stanza of some hymn of praise was sung. There was no confusion. The entire service was impressive.

The Establishment of the Roman Catholic Church

B. G. WILKINSON

THE question has been asked, When, where, and by whom was the Roman Catholic Church established? There is no doubt that an answer to the question would be interesting to the readers of the REVIEW.

To come directly to the point, I would say that the Roman Catholic Church, as we know it now, was never, at any place, established by a divine authority. Its present form was developed by the political party which captured its organization after the great victory of the early Christians over the persecutions of pagan Rome. "Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried" (Rev. 2:10), said Jesus to the early Christian church. Through long years of severe suffering, the church came up to great victory — to gain what? To seize worldly power? — No! but to continue spreading the kingdom.

Such, however, was not the result. The persecution ended 312 A. D. By 325 the organization of the church had been captured by the worldly and political forces within it, which had long sought the mastery. I can no better relate this than by the famous report of Mr. Briand, whose bill in the French House of Congress became the law separating church and state: —

"The adoption of Christian ideas by Constantine (Roman emperor) inaugurated a new era in the history of Christianity. Since the day when Constantine presided over the Council of Nice (325 A. D.), since the moment when, after having been sovereign pontiff of the pagan religion, he proclaimed himself to have become Christian 'emperor and doctor, king and priest,' the tendencies of the religion of Jesus found themselves profoundly modified. The word of the Galilean, 'Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's,' was

Is It Nothing to You?

L. D. SANTEE

Is it nothing to you that the years fly so fast?
Is it nothing to you
That the summer will end, and the harvest be past?
Is it nothing to you
That Jesus no longer will cancel each stain,
But he that is filthy must filthy remain,
And prayers for forgiveness will then be in vain?
Is it nothing to you?

Is it nothing to you that the Saviour says come?
Is it nothing to you?
Died for you, pleads for you, welcomes you home —
Is it nothing to you?
Now while the seasons pass swiftly away, (1)
Grieve not the Spirit; O hear him today;
While he beseeches, no longer delay;
Is it nothing to you?

Is it nothing to you that salvation is free?
Is it nothing to you
That Jesus says, "Weary ones, come unto me"?
Is it nothing to you?
For you the affliction, the pain, and the cross;
Dare you refuse? Have you counted the cost?
Too late, you may find, to your infinite loss,
It was something to you.

The Work in Oakland and San Francisco — No. 6

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The Oakland brethren have decided on a location for their new church building,— on Twenty-fifth Street, near Telegraph Avenue. After the baptism, I drove with Brother and Sister Rice to see this property. It seems to be well located.

Sunday night, December 16, Elder Simpson gave his last discourse in this series of meetings, and the following day the tent was taken down. It was reported that at this service there were fully one thousand persons present to listen to his presentation of the subject, The United States in Prophecy. Those who would refuse to render homage to the beast and his image, were asked to arise, and nearly all present responded.

The expenses connected with these meetings have been fully one thousand dollars. Collections have been taken in the congregation only once a week, but these, with donations that some have given privately, have been sufficient to meet all the expenses, so the effort has cost the conference only the salaries of workers.

The liberality of many from the outside has been surprising. Elder and Mrs. Haskell, on several occasions, received liberal gifts from strangers. One afternoon, after I had spoken in the church, a man handed Elder Haskell one hundred dollars, and then left the building quickly and could not afterward be found. On another occasion, a lady slipped two coins into Sister Haskell's hand. These proved to be two twenty-dollar gold pieces. Sister Haskell afterward met the lady, but she did not wish to tell her name. These things have greatly encouraged our workers.

In these meetings, we have seen evidences of the deep moving of the Spirit of God. Truly the Lord has wrought on minds. Our people need now to be aroused from the lethargy that has come upon them. The language of every heart should be, Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth.

There is much house-to-house work to be done by faithful laborers. Our efforts are not to cease because public meetings have been discontinued for a time. So long as there are interested ones, we must give them opportunity to learn the truth. And the new converts will need to be instructed by faithful teachers of God's Word, that they may increase in a knowledge and love of the truth, and may grow to the full stature of men and women in Christ Jesus. They must now be surrounded by the influences most favorable to spiritual growth. The churches at Oakland and Berkeley should now purge out the old leaven of evil-speaking and hypocrisy, of jealousy and malice. The truth must be expressed in word and in spirit; every act should be a revelation of Christian refinement.

That there may be no cessation of effort during the rainy season, I have encouraged Elder S. N. Haskell and his wife to return to Oakland for a time. The Oakland brethren and sisters have offered them the use of the dwelling-house on the new church property. This will serve as a headquarters for city mission work and a Bible training-school.

The work in Oakland must not be cut short. For years I have pleaded that an earnest effort be put forth in this city, and now that this is being done, let us go straight forward in right lines. There is to be no variableness, neither shadow of turning, in the presentation of truth to the people in Oakland.

To my ministering brethren I would say: Every fresh display of the conviction of the grace of God upon the souls of unbelievers, is divine. Everything that you can do to bring souls to a knowledge of the truth, is a means of allowing the light to shine, the light of the glory of God, as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ. Direct the mind to him who guides and controls all things. Christ will be as manna and spiritual dew to these newly converted souls. In him is no darkness at all.

As faithful laborers of deep spiritual understanding conduct Bible studies with those who have accepted the Sabbath truth; as they instruct those new in the faith how to yield to the power of the Holy Spirit, that they may be fully and firmly established in the truth, the glory of God will be revealed.

In the discourses, let nothing of a theatrical nature be introduced, no sharp thrusts given. We can not expect that eyes that have been blind will be at once opened to see all things clearly. Let labor be put forth wisely for those who are interested. Show those who have seen the truth, how to experience its power in their hearts. Thus the truth imparted will be as a nail driven in a sure place. Many are ignorant of vital godliness — of truth in the life-practise. On the part of these uninstructed ones, there must be a practical reception of Bible truth. The Lord will work with power upon the hearts of all who seek him and who prayerfully study his Word.

The Lord Jesus sent a mighty angel to make plain to John, by the use of symbols, the things that were to come to pass until the coming of Christ. He was bidden to write the instruction in a book for the benefit of the seven churches. This writing we now have preserved in the book of Revelation, but this book is understood by only a very few. It contains the message for the last days, and we are to dwell much upon these prophecies.

Explaining scripture by scripture,— this is the work that should be done by all our ministers who are fully awake to the times in which we live. The Lord will guide his ministering servants. He will lead them in ways that they know not. They will bear aloft the lamp of life in the dark places of the earth, and hasten the coming of our King.

Christ's Presence with His Disciples

WM. COVERT

1. What words of comfort and promise did Jesus announce to his disciples near the time of his crucifixion?

"I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." John 15:1-3.

2. How did these words affect them?

"But now I go my way to him that sent me; and none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou? But because I have said these things unto you, sorrow hath filled your heart." John 16:5, 6.

3. What provision for the comfort of those who would believe on him did Jesus promise to make with the Father after ascending to heaven?

"I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever." John 14:16.

4. What other words did Jesus use in describing the Comforter, and who

"God So Loved the World"

CHARLES PELMULDER

Faith

I KNOW whom I've believed;
In him my faith abides;
When sinners, undeceived
By the eternal tides,
Shall see the things that be,
In one tumultuous hour
Cast in oblivion's sea
By God's almighty power,
Through fear their hearts will fail,
While I through faith prevail.

Hope

I know, should earth, our floor,
With its great tent of blue,
Dissolve and be no more
The ceaseless ages through,
Our house not made with hands
In heaven's eternal sphere
Securely anchored stands.
Therefore we will not fear;
Faith changed to sight will be;
Hope, to reality.

Love

Since faith and love control,
I want Christ's love, who died —
Who was (for love of souls)
In heaven not satisfied.
Myself, my all, I'll give
That some lost soul may live.
And now abide these three —
Faith, hope, and charity;
Of these the greatest — love —
Brings joy to heaven above.

Unity of Effort in Warning the Cities

SEE
9T109-112

MRS. E. G. WHITE

MORE and more, as the days go by, it is becoming apparent that God's judgments are in the world. Yet God is not executing his wrath without mercy. His hand is stretched out still. And in this time, when the cities of the nations are being visited with judgments, God's people have a special opportunity to give the last warning message to the inhabitants of these cities. Long have we neglected these centers, and now we must labor earnestly to redeem the time. The people must be shown how it is possible for God, by a touch of his hand, to destroy the property they have gathered against the last great day.

In connection with the proclamation of the message in large cities, there are many kinds of work to be done by laborers with varied gifts. Some are to labor in one way, some in another. The Lord desires that the cities shall be worked by the united efforts of laborers of different capabilities. All are to look to Jesus for direction, not depending on man for wisdom, lest they be led astray.

The Lord has given to some ministers the ability to gather and hold large congregations. This calls for the exercise of tact and skill. In the cities of to-day, where there is so much to attract and please, the people can be interested by no ordinary efforts. Ministers of God's appointment will find it necessary to put forth extraordinary efforts in order to arrest the attention of the multitudes. And when they succeed in bringing together a large number of people, they must bear messages of a character so out of the usual order that the people will be aroused and warned. They must make use of every means that can possibly be devised for causing the truth to stand out clearly and distinctly. The testing message for this time is to be borne so plainly and decidedly as to startle the hearers, and lead them to desire to study the Scriptures.

Those who do the work of the Lord in the cities must put forth calm, steady, devoted effort for the education of the people. While they are to labor earnestly to interest their hearers and to hold this interest, yet at the same time they must carefully guard themselves against everything that borders on sensationalism. In this age of extravagance and outward show, when men think that it is necessary to make a display in order to gain success, God's chosen messengers are to show the fallacy of expending means needlessly for effect. As they labor with simplicity, humility, and graceful dignity, avoiding everything of a theatrical nature, their work will make a lasting impression for good.

There will be necessity, it is true, for expending money judiciously in advertising the meetings, and in carrying forward the work solidly. Yet the strength of every worker will be found to lie not in these outward agencies, but in trustful dependence on God, in earnest prayer to him for help, in obedience to his Word. Much more prayer, much more Christlikeness, much more conformity to God's will, is to be brought into the Lord's work. Outward show, an extravagant outlay of means, will not accomplish the work to be done.

God's work is to be carried forward with power. We need the baptism of the Holy Spirit. We need to understand that God will add to the ranks of his people men of ability and influence, who are to act their part in warning the world. All in the world are not lawless and sinful. God has many thousands who have not bowed the knee to Baal. There are God-fearing men and women in the fallen churches. If this were not so, we should not be given the message to bear, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen. . . . Come out of her, my people." Many of the honest in heart are gasping for a breath of life from heaven. They will recognize the gospel when it is brought to them in the beauty and simplicity with which it is presented in God's Word.

Of equal importance with special public efforts, is house-to-house work in the homes of the people. As the result of the presentation of truth in large congregations, a spirit of inquiry is awakened; and it is specially important that this interest be followed up by personal labor. Those who desire to investigate the truth need to be taught to study diligently the Word of God. Some one must help them to build on a sure foundation. The Word of God is to be their counselor. At this critical time in their religious experience, how important it is that wisely directed Bible workers come to their help, and open to their understanding the treasure-house of God's Word.

A well-balanced work can be carried on best when a training-school for Bible workers is in progress while the public meetings are being held. Connected with this training-school, or city mission, should be experienced laborers of deep spiritual understanding who can give the Bible workers daily instruction, and who can also unite whole-heartedly in the general public efforts being put forth. And as men and women are converted to the truth, those standing at the head of the city mission should, with much prayer, show these new converts how to experience the power of the truth in their hearts. This united effort on the part of all the workers would be as a nail driven in a sure place.

When personal work is neglected, many precious opportunities are lost, which, were they improved, might advance the work decidedly. In our efforts in behalf of the multitudes dwelling in cities, we must strive to do thorough service. The work in a large center of population is greater than one man can successfully handle. God has different ways of working; and he has workmen to whom he entrusts varied gifts. In a large city, there are certain classes that can not be reached by public meetings. These must be searched out, as the shepherd searches for his lost sheep. Diligent, personal effort must be put forth in their behalf. Let no one feel, when another worker is sent to the place where he is working, that the efforts of one will be counterworked by the efforts of the other. Some will reject the truth as it is presented by one laborer, only to open their hearts to God's truth as it is presented in a different manner by another laborer. A Paul may plant, an Apollos may water, but God gives the increase.

The Lord desires his chosen servants to learn how to blend together. A decided influence for good is to be brought to bear on the inhabitants of the world. It may seem to some workers that the contrast between their gifts and the gifts of a fellow laborer is too great to allow them to unite in harmonious effort. But when they remember that there are varied minds to be reached, and that the Lord is their helper, they will labor together in unity. Their talents, however diverse, may all be under the control of the same Spirit. In every word and act, kindness and love will be revealed. And as each worker fills his appointed place faithfully, the prayer of Christ for the unity of his followers will be answered, and the world will know that these are his disciples.

A little longer will the voice of mercy

be heard; a little longer will be given the gracious invitation, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink." God sends his warning message to the cities everywhere. Let the messengers whom he sends work so harmoniously that all will take knowledge of them, that they have learned of Jesus.

Help Rendered

WILLIAM COVERT

1. To how many persons is the Spirit given, and for what purpose?

"But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." 1 Cor. 12:7.

2. What is said of God's power exercised toward us?

The Lord desires us to know "what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come." Eph. 1:19-21.

3. How much can we do without him?

"I am the vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing." John 15:5.

4. What can we do through him?

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." Phil. 4:13.

5. How much are we encouraged to hope for in him?

"But my God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." Phil. 4:19.

6. Where is our source of knowledge to be found?

"Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." 1 Cor. 2:12.

7. What depth of understanding and richness of experience does the Spirit make possible for Christians to have?

"But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." 1 Cor. 2:9, 10.

8. What does the Lord wish to accomplish through this mysterious power?

"I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfil the word of God; even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." Col. 1:25-28.

9. What is said of its influence upon the Christian worker?

"I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power, . . . that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ." Eph. 3:7-9.

10. What is stated relative to the strength of this spiritual power to keep the Christian and to work out God's purpose for him?

"Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages." Eph. 3:20, 21.

11. What earnest entreaty for Christian believers is expressed by the apostle?

"For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding; that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God." Col. 1:9, 10.

12. What is said of this Spirit as a teacher? and how much does it accomplish?

"But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him." 1 John 2:27.

13. What mind is brought into the believer through this abiding Spirit?

"Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. . . . Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." Phil. 2:3, 5.

14. In view of the mind of Christ dwelling in us what are we exhorted to do?

"For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Do all things without murmurings and disputings: that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life; that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither labored in vain." Phil. 2:13-16.

15. Since all these things have been done for us, what should our attitude to this world be?

"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3:1-4.

The Independent Church

C. F. WILCOX

Satan's latest attack seems to be on organization. The position is taken that the local church is the highest body under the gospel plan. It must then follow that each church is to use its own tithes and offerings, support its own work, send out its own missionaries, and in general engage in the work of the gospel. Is this principle of independent action correct?

Let us look at the logic of the principle. If the individual church is independent of all other churches, or combinations of like churches, then may not the individual families of that church likewise claim individual rights of independence in all Christian work and effort? — Certainly they may. And if each family may thus act, then each person in each of these families has the same right to independent action.

This principle applied to church order is disunion and anarchy. There would be no union, no fellowship, no members one of another, no oneness, no submitting one to another.

The whole trend of the principle is exactly in line with Satan's first apostasy in heaven. He claimed that so high and exalted beings as himself and the angels should be absolutely free from all law, subject to no order, independent of all higher control. As the result, Lucifer and many of the angels left, or withdrew, from "their own habitation," and were eventually expelled from heaven.

Then, here on the earth, this very principle was in operation from the gates of Eden to the flood. Every man was for himself, and against every other man. The ripened fruit of this principle can be seen in the conditions just before the flood. There is no necessity of experimenting with this false principle in the remnant church. Order, system, joint action, union, organized planning, is the need of the hour in carrying forward the work demanded by the gospel.

The Struggle for Religious Liberty in Peru

EDUARDO F. FORGA

(Concluded)

La Reforma has published nearly fifty thousand pamphlets, and altogether, with other publications, we have distributed nearly two million pages in the last two years. The fundamental idea of our propaganda has consisted in making the people see that the Roman Catholic Church and the gospel of Jesus Christ are opposite. This idea, which compelled me to combat the former, has made me feel the necessity of defending the liberty of thought, conscience, the free circulation of the Bible, and the separation of church and state. In different numbers of La Reforma we have reproduced the most notable writings of Peruvian

A Song of the Sinking Sun

A. W. SPAULDING

IN shadow and in brightness God's doomed fair world doth lie:
The low-dipped sun sinks swiftly upon the boding eye;
The swales and the hills catch glory, the hollows and dales are dim,
And thicker the shadows cluster, awesome, menacing, grim.
But yet for your courage, comrades, remember, amid the fens,
The sunlight bathes the hilltops, though purple are the glens.

O, but the night is gathering! Ominous fades day's light;
Chill is the steel that the heavens, dark'ning, bare to the sight.
The wail of the hoarse night-chorus — hounds of the nether world —
Up from the shattered canyons flat on the ear is hurled.
Yet, if the night grows darkly, and sight in the chasms fails,
The sunlight rests on the hilltops, though blackness hides the vales.

Over and over the message strikes with the sun's swift beams:
Courage, and let your vision rest where the glory streams!
God plans a hastened sunrise; fear not the falling night;
On with the work in patience, trust to the lingering light.
And, when the lowlands fail you, look where the headland leaps;
For the sunlight touches the hilltops, though lost in night are the deeps.

Faith not Feeling

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"EXAMINE yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." Some conscientious souls, on reading this, immediately begin to criticize their every feeling and emotion. But this is not correct self-examination. It is not the petty feelings and emotions that are to be examined. The life, the character, is to be measured by the only standard of character, God's holy law. The fruit testifies to the character of the tree. Our works, not our feelings, bear witness of us.

The feelings, whether encouraging or discouraging, should not be made the test of the spiritual condition. By God's Word we are to determine our true standing before him. Many are bewildered on this point. When they are happy and joyous, they think that they are accepted by God. When a change comes, and they feel depressed, they think that God has forsaken them.

God does not look with favor upon those self-confident ones who loudly exclaim, "I am sanctified, I am holy, I am sinless." These are Pharisees. who have no foundation for their assertion. Those who, because of their sense of utter unworthiness, dare scarcely lift up their eyes to heaven, are nearer to God than those who claim so much piety. They are represented by the publican, who, with his head on his breast, prayed, "God be merciful to me a sinner," and went to his house justified, rather than the self-righteous Pharisee.

But God does not desire us to go through life filled with a distrust of him. We owe our Heavenly Father a more generous view of his goodness than is accorded to him by our manifest distrust of his love. We have an evidence of his love — an evidence that amazes angels and is far beyond the comprehension of the wisest of human beings. "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." While we were yet sinners, God gave his Son to die for us. Can we doubt his goodness?

Behold Christ. Dwell upon his love and mercy. This will fill the soul with abhorrence for all that is sinful, and will inspire it with an intense desire for the righteousness of Christ. The more clearly we see the Saviour, the more clearly shall we discern our defects of character. Confess your sins to Christ, and with true contrition of soul co-operate with him by putting these sins away. Believe that they are pardoned. The promise is positive, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Be assured that the word of God will not fail. He who has promised is faithful. It is as much your duty to believe that God will fulfil his word and forgive you as it is to confess your sins.

Exercise faith in God. How many there are who go through life under a cloud of condemnation! They do not believe God's word. They have no faith that he will do as he has said. Many who long to see others resting in the pardoning love of Christ do not rest in it for themselves. But how can they possibly lead others to show simple, childlike faith in the Heavenly Father when they measure his love by their feelings?

Let us trust God's word implicitly, remembering that we are his sons and daughters. Let us train ourselves to believe his word. We hurt the heart of Christ by doubting, when he has given such evidence of his love. He laid down his life to save us. He says to us: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Do you believe he will do as he has said? Then, after you have complied with the conditions, carry no longer the burden of your sins. Let it roll upon the Saviour. Trust yourself with him. Has he not promised to give you rest? But to many he is obliged to say sorrowfully, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." Many manufacture for themselves burdens which are grievous to bear.

Look steadfastly to Jesus. Behold him, full of grace and truth. He will make his goodness pass before you while he hides you in the cleft of the rock. You will be enabled to endure the seeing of him who is invisible, and by beholding you will be transformed.

(1) [Faith is not feeling. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. There is a form of religion which is nothing more than selfishness. It takes pleasure in worldly enjoyment. It is satisfied with contemplating the religion of Christ, and knows nothing of its saving power. Those who possess this religion regard sin lightly because they do not know Jesus. While in this condition, they estimate duty very lightly. But a faithful performance of duty goes hand in hand with a right estimate of the character of God.]

There is earnest work to do for the Master. Christ came to preach the gospel to the poor, and he sent his disciples forth to do the same work he came to do. So he sends forth his workers today. Sheaves are to be gathered for him from the highways and hedges. The tremendous issues of eternity demand of us something besides an imaginary religion, a religion of words and forms, where the truth is kept in the outer court, to be admired as we admire a beautiful flower; they demand something more than a religion of feeling, which distrusts God when trials and difficulties come. Holiness does not consist in profession, but in lifting the cross, doing the will of God. Saying, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?" will not secure for us an entrance into the kingdom of heaven. "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected."

Learning to Pray

WILLIAM COVERT

1. What request was made on a certain occasion after Jesus had been praying?

"And it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples." Luke 11:1.

Doubtless the disciples had become deeply impressed by the Saviour's prayer, and were being led into a greater concern about praying than they had formerly experienced. If so, the request they made grew out of an earnest desire to know better how to seek and find God.

2. When a favor is to be sought from the Lord, how may it be obtained?

HOME AND HEALTH

A Voice in the Wilderness

ELIZA H. MORTON

THIS earth is sad and old;
  Its years are nearly spent —
A story almost told,
A chain not long to hold,
  A trembling tent.

There comes from far away,
  O'er land and sky and sea,
A voice that in our day
Cries out, "Prepare the way
  And bow the knee."

O ye that dwell below,
  List to that warning voice!
It brings from long ago
Straight truths you need to know.
  O make thy choice!

For thou must choose. Erelong
  Our Jesus will appear;
His mighty arm is strong,
He'll smite the wicked throng
  Who laugh and sneer.

The message sharp and clear
  Is sounding through the land.
'Tis wafted far and near;
O give a listening ear!
  The truth will stand.

Child Training

MRS. E. G. WHITE

OUR artificial habits deprive us of many privileges and much enjoyment, and unfit us for living as useful lives as we might otherwise live. A life of fashion is a hard, thankless life. How much time and money women sacrifice in order to make a sensation! At the cost of their health they beautify the dress. Thus they lose their self-control, overtax their patience, and encourage pride and vanity in their children. Many parents fail to realize that their every action tells upon the future of their children. Mothers complain of weariness. They say that they have so much to do that they can not take time to instruct their children. They have no time to sympathize with them in their little disappointments and trials. I have heard mothers refuse to gratify the innocent desires of their children. They were too hurried to grant their little ones that which would have been to them a great pleasure. The busy fingers and weary eyes were embroidering a garment. But children yearn for sympathy, and if they do not obtain it from their parents, they seek it from other sources, which may prove dangerous to their welfare.

Many mothers teach their daughters to vie with other girls in outward display. To dress as well as others dress — this is the ambition of their worse than useless lives. As the twig is bent, the tree is inclined. As the children approach manhood and womanhood, their parents deplore their errors. They forget that they have given these youth the lessons that have made them what they are. Parents, remember that the harvest you reap is the fruit of your own planting.

If half the time that mothers spend in preparing the dress in accordance with the demands of fashion, were spent in beautifying the characters of their children, what a change would be seen in families! The inspired apostle writes of women, "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." Outward display and needless adorning can bear no comparison with the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. The desire for outward show proceeds from the pride and vanity of a corrupt heart, and will perish with the user. The inward adorning is as enduring as eternity.

Many mothers spend much time in beautifying their houses. Cleanliness is next to godliness, and it is well to be clean; but this, like many other good things, can be carried too far, to the neglect of things of greater importance. Many mothers beautify their houses to the neglect of weightier matters — judgment, mercy, and the love of God.

Not long ago I heard a mother express great anxiety to see perfect arrangement and finish in the building of her home. I do not condemn this feeling, but I regretted that this mother could not have brought the same desire for symmetry into the government of her children. In her home she was building and fashioning characters, but she failed to realize the importance of this work, and therefore did not see the mistakes she was making. Passion and self-will ruled in the home. Her children were rough and selfish, uncourteous, and uncultured, seeming to have no sense of true politeness. Their character revealed no uniformity. As I looked upon these self-willed, stubborn pieces of humanity, mismatched indeed, symmetry painfully lacking everywhere, I asked myself involuntarily, Why is the mother so blind? Why is the arrangement of her house of so much more consequence in her eyes than the proper training of her children?

Parents, upon you God has laid the work of educating your children for usefulness. Do not, under any consideration, neglect this work. Do not trust the training of your little ones to any other hands. Take up your life duty bravely and cheerfully, facing your responsibilties candidly. To you has been given the work of bringing your children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Make the Word of God your standard. Do not allow the fashions of the world to prevent you from doing your duty. Take great pains to prepare the soil of the heart for the great Sower to scatter in it the seeds of truth.

Mothers, make the education of your children the highest aim of life. Their future happiness depends upon the education they receive in their early years. Do not send them away from you to school when they are young. If your habits and dress are as simple as they should be, you will find ample time to make your children happy, and to lead them to obey you. God will help you to teach them how to submit cheerfully and willingly. Take up your duties, inspired by the noble resolve to do your work faithfully and well. Do not become discouraged. In due time you will reap if you faint not. You will see your children growing up into Christian men and Christian women.

Humble Heroism

NEGROES frequently exhibit a wonderful heroism in times of danger. An incident of this I witnessed in the spring of 1886, when a great freshet in the Alabama River caused the country on each side to be overflowed by water for many miles around.

The negroes on the river plantations were the greatest sufferers. Their cabins would be under water almost before they knew that danger threatened them, and hundreds of them were sometimes found huddled together on some knoll sufficiently elevated to be above the water. There they often remained two or three days and nights without food, and exposed to the soaking rain. Fortunately the weather was not cold.

Many relief expeditions were sent out from the neighboring towns to rescue them. These consisted of one or more boats, manned by expert oarsmen and swimmers, and filled with cooked provisions, blankets, etc. One day the news came that the negroes on a certain plantation had sought refuge upon a corn barn, around which the water was rapidly rising, and so rendering their condition exceedingly precarious. Two boats started out at once to their assistance. In one of these I went, accompanied by a white man and a negro. Just before dark, we sighted the corn barn, upon which a mass of black humanity clustered like a swarm of bees. A heavy rain was now falling, and daylight was beginning to fade away. Their condition became most distressing, as they sat in perfect silence awaiting our approach.

But we did not appreciate their extreme peril until the boat struck against the frail log building, which was in the

The Gospel Message

LUCINA MOON

Tune: "One Hundred Years to Come."

Go tell the tidings far and near,
"The Saviour soon will come;"
Bid every saint his brother cheer,
"The Saviour soon will come."
Go sound the message o'er the land,
To islands far and ocean's strand;
Awake, ye saints, this gospel bear
To every nation far and near,
"The Saviour soon will come."

In dungeon dark the story tell,
The sinner's Friend will come,
Who died that we might with him dwell;
Our Saviour soon will come.
To heathen lands he bids us go,
The harvest reap; the sun is low.
Let this our song and message be,
He comes to set the captives free.
O Saviour, quickly come!

The mourners then shall dry their tears
When Christ their Lord shall come;
They'll praise his name through endless years
When Christ the Lord has come;
The sick and maimed, the halt and blind,
Shall in his presence blessing find,
And songs of joy shall fill our days
With endless happiness and praise
When Christ our Lord has come.

Go tell the news, he bids us go,
The Saviour soon will come,
Who died for sinners here below;
Our Lord will surely come.
Repent, believe, your sins confess,
Put on his robe of righteousness,
Reach out the helping hand to save
Your friends from an eternal grave,
For soon our Lord will come.

Our Duty as Parents

MRS. E. G. WHITE

PARENTS have not yet aroused to understand the amazing power of Christian culture. There are mines of truth to be worked that have been strangely neglected. This careless indifference does not meet the approval of God. Parents, God calls upon you to look at this matter with anointed eyes. You have as yet only skimmed the surface. Take up your long-neglected work, and God will co-operate with you. Do your work with whole-heartedness, and God will help you to make improvement. Begin by bringing the gospel into the home life.

The Lord looks with sadness upon the families in which the parents have not educated and disciplined themselves for the work of training their children. Too often parents have little sense of their accountability. They allow their children to grow up with characters tainted by vice. While they sleep in godless indifference, Satan is sowing in the hearts of their children seeds which will spring up to bear a harvest of death. Yet often such parents resent counsel as to their mistakes. They act as if they would like to ask those who offer advice, What right have you to meddle with my children? But are their children not God's children also? How does he regard their wicked neglect of duty? What excuse will they offer when he asks them why they brought children into the world, and then left them to be the sport of Satan's temptations.

Many seem to think that the declension in the church, the growing love of pleasure, is due to want of pastoral work. True, the church is to be provided with faithful guides and pastors. Ministers should labor earnestly for the youth who have not given themselves to Christ, and also for others, who, though their names are on the church-roll, are irreligious and Christless. But ministers may do their work faithfully and well, yet it will amount to very little if parents neglect their work. It is to a lack of Christianity in the home life that the lack of power in the church is due. Until parents take up their work as they should, it will be difficult to arouse the youth to a sense of their duty. If religion reigns in the home, it will be brought into the church. The parents who do their work for God are a power for good. As they restrain and encourage their children, bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, they bless the neighborhood in which they live. And the church is strengthened by their faithful work.

The work of forming the character of children, of properly preserving and developing their physical, mental, and moral powers, is no small task. It is chiefly upon the mother that this task devolves. To do this work as it should be done requires talent and skill and patient, thoughtful care. It calls for self-distrust and earnest prayer. Let every mother strive by persevering effort to fulfil her obligations. Let her bring her little ones to Jesus in the arms of faith, and tell him of her great need, asking for grace and wisdom.

The mother should surrender herself and her children to the care of the compassionate Redeemer. Earnestly, patiently, courageously, she should seek to improve her own abilities, that she may use aright the highest powers of the mind in the training of her children. She should make it her highest aim to give her children an education which will receive the approval of God. As she takes up her work understandingly, she will receive power to perform her part.

Mothers, leave not your children to gain impressions of evil, impressions which can never be wholly effaced. Day by day imprint upon their minds the lessons given by the Saviour. This is your work,— a work which no one but you can do. The home is your mission field. Here you are to work for God. Lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset, that you may engage as you should in the work of making your children what God would have them. Teach them self-control. Give them something to do. Make the home a school in which they will learn to help others.

There is untold value in industry. Let the children be taught to do something useful. If parents are so occupied with other things that they can not keep their children usefully employed, Satan will keep them busy. Many parents allow their children to associate with evil companions, to go to questionable places of amusement, to grow up mischievous and idle. Let such parents remember that the sin of Sodom was pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness.

It is the cry of many mothers, "I have no time to be with my children." Then for Christ's sake spend less time on your dress. Neglect if you will to adorn your apparel. Neglect to receive and make calls. Neglect to cook an endless variety of dishes. But never, never neglect your children. What is the chaff to the wheat? Let nothing interpose between you and the best interests of your children. Guard your physical and mental powers, that you may be able to do good work for your little ones. Show your children that you are determined to be a Bible Christian. Dress modestly. Speak wisely. Be gentle, yet as firm as a rock, to principle. Devote no time to needless cooking or stitching. Make your clothes and your food plain. Then you will have time for the culture of your children.

God will call upon you to give a strict account of the work you have done for your little ones. You make them what they are. They will either stand pure and undefiled before God, because you have worked faithfully for them, or, corrupt and defiled, they will be banished from his presence, because you have neglected your work.

Christ placed such a high estimate upon your children that he gave his life for them. Treat them as the purchase of his blood. Patiently and firmly train them for him. Discipline with love and forbearance. As you do this, they will become a crown of rejoicing to you, and will shine as lights in the world.

When to Work

NANCY D. UNDERHILL

LET us who have been called to work in our Lord's vineyard consider whether we are called to labor now, or at some indefinite time in the future. Did he not say, "Go work to-day in my vineyard"? When he called us to become adopted children in his family, did he say, To-morrow is the accepted time, or next week, or next year? Souls are dying every day. Are we trying now to save them, or waiting for a more convenient season?

Some have entered the field as canvassers. It is cold this winter, and the roads are sometimes a little rough or a little sticky. Can't very conveniently go when the days are so short? Some are listening to a smooth, soft voice which says, "Better stay in the house

Thoughts

EDITH PRATHER-THOMPSON

SILENTLY, calmly, the eve draws on —
The close of a sweet, glad day,
When life has been a victory won
O'er all earth's evil way.

What matter if we give up life;
That is, its hopes of fame,
Its glory, fortune, care and strife,
For a fairer, heavenly name?

This world is that which sweeps away
Our faith with mighty wave,
And urges on to toil in vain
For what we can not save.

So, Lord, when I give this for thee —
And all, it seems to me
I'm giving just a weight of sin,
Exchanged for life in thee. (1)

And now, dear heart, when shadows make
The clouds hang heavy o'er,
Remember, morning soon will break
For us on heaven's shore.

The Return of the Exiles—No. 1

The End of Seventy Years

MRS. E. G. WHITE

SOON after the fall of Babylon and the beginning of the universal empire of Medo-Persia, in the first year of the reign of Darius the Mede, Daniel the prophet "understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem."

Daniel and his companions had been taken to Babylon "in the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah." They were members of the first company of captives whom Nebuchadnezzar brought from Jerusalem into the land of Shinar. Daniel was well acquainted with the prophecies of Jeremiah at the time they were given, and he had passed through the periods immediately succeeding the first and the second sieges of Jerusalem, when many false prophets had arisen with the claim that the captivity was to be of short duration.

"In the fourth year of Jehoiakim," very soon after Daniel was taken to Babylon, Jeremiah predicted the captivity of many of the Jews, as their punishment for not heeding the word of (1) the Lord. The Chaldeans were to be used as the instrument by which God would chastise his disobedient people. Their punishment was to be in proportion to their intelligence and to the warnings they had despised. "This whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment," the prophet declared; "and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years. And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations."

In the light of these plain words foretelling the duration of the captivity, it seems strange that any one should hold that the Israelites would soon return from Babylon. And yet there were in Jerusalem and in Babylon those who persisted in encouraging the people to hope for a speedy deliverance. God dealt summarily with some of these false prophets, and thus vindicated the truthfulness of Jeremiah, his messenger.

To the end of time, men will arise to create confusion and rebellion among the people who profess to obey the law of God. But as surely as divine judgment was visited upon the false prophets in Jeremiah's day, so surely will the evil workers of to-day receive their full measure of retribution, for the Lord has not changed. Those who prophesy lies, encourage men to look upon sin as a light thing. When the terrible results of their evil deeds are made manifest, they seek, if possible, to make the one who has faithfully warned them responsible for their difficulties, even as the Jews charged Jeremiah with their evil fortunes.

Those who pursue a course of rebellion against the Lord can always find false prophets who will justify them in their acts, and flatter them to their destruction. Lying words often make many friends, as is illustrated in the case of these false teachers among the Israelites. These so-called prophets, in their pretended zeal for God, found many more believers and followers than the true prophet who delivered the simple message of the Lord.

In view of the work of these false prophets, Jeremiah was directed by the Lord to write letters to the captains, elders, priests, prophets, and all the people who had been taken captive to Babylon, bidding them not to be deluded into believing their deliverance nigh, but to submit quietly, pursue their vocations, and make for themselves peaceful homes among their conquerors. The Lord bade them not to allow so-called prophets or diviners to deceive them with false expectations. Through his servant Jeremiah he assured them that after seventy years' bondage they should be delivered, and should return to Jerusalem. God would listen to their prayers and show them his favor, when they would turn to him with all their hearts. "I will be found of you, saith the Lord: and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive."

With what tender compassion did God inform his captive people of his plans for Israel! He knew what suffering and disaster they would have to undergo, were they led to believe, according to the prediction of the false prophets, that they should be speedily delivered and brought back to Jerusalem. He knew that this belief would make their position a very difficult one. Any effort on their part to regain freedom would awaken the vigilance and severity of the king, and their liberty would be restricted in consequence. The Lord desired them to submit quietly to their fate, and make their servitude as pleasant as possible.

Sabbath Rest

LILLA WARREN

WONDROUS Saviour, blessed Healer,
Give my weary soul thy rest
In the holy Sabbath coming,
That I may be doubly blest.

O I long to know thy power
From all sin to set me free;
Only speak the word, dear Saviour,
And I'll find sweet rest in thee.

Let me know the same great power
That once formed the earth and sea,
And that made the holy Sabbath,
For a sign of power to me.

Let me know each coming Sabbath
More thy power to save from sin;
Thus shall I the more adore thee,
And thy peace shall reign within.

The Return of the Exiles—No. 1

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Concluded)

(1) A COPY of the letters sent by Jeremiah to the Hebrew captives in Babylon, and of the letters sent by the false prophets to these captives and to the authorities of Jerusalem, together with a story of the controversy between the true and the false, is found in the twenty-seventh to the twenty-ninth chapters of Jeremiah.

It was immediately after this interchange of letters between Jeremiah and the elders of the Israelites in captivity, that the prophet was instructed to write in a book all that had been revealed to him regarding the restoration of Israel. This is recorded in the thirtieth and the thirty-first chapters of Jeremiah.

These, with the prophecies of the twenty-fifth chapter, are the letters and the records that Daniel the prophet, during "the first year of the reign of Darius the Mede," prayerfully studied, threescore years and more after they were written. Daniel was familiar with the circumstances connected with Jeremiah's testimonies given very soon after the beginning of the Babylonian captivity. He well knew that the promise of the return was sure; and yet, a short time before, "in the third year of the reign of King Belshazzar," the angel of the Lord had instructed him in vision, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

Daniel "sought for the meaning" of the vision. He could not understand the relation sustained by the seventy years' captivity to the twenty-three hundred years that were to elapse before the cleansing of God's sanctuary. Gabriel gave a partial interpretation; and when he declared that the vision "shall be for many days," Daniel fainted. "I Daniel fainted," the prophet writes, "and was sick certain days; afterward I rose up, and did the king's business; and I was astonished at the vision; but none understood it."

In his perplexity, Daniel studied anew the prophecies of Jeremiah. They were very plain,—so plain that he "understood" by these testimonies recorded in books "the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem."

With faith founded on the sure word of prophecy, Daniel pleaded with the Lord for the speedy restoration of the captive exiles to the land of their fathers. "I set my face unto the Lord God," he declares, "to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes: and I prayed unto the Lord my God, and made my confession." "We have sinned," he acknowledged; "neither have we obeyed the voice of the Lord our God, to walk in his laws, which he set before us by his servants the prophets."

"O Lord, according to all thy righteousness," the prophet pleaded, "let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain: because for our sins, and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us. Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate, for the Lord's sake. O my God, incline thine ear, and hear; open thine eyes, and behold our desolations, and the city which is called by thy name: for we do not present our supplications before thee for our righteousnesses, but for thy great mercies. O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, harken and do; defer not, for thine own sake, O my God: for thy city and thy people are called by thy name."

The prayer of Daniel was not offered in vain. Even before he had finished pleading with God, Gabriel again appeared to him, and called his attention to the vision he had seen prior to the fall of Babylon at the death of Belshazzar. The angel then outlined in detail the period of the seventy weeks, beginning at the time of "the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem."

Daniel's prayer in behalf of his people, as recorded in the ninth chapter, was "in the first year of Darius" the Mede. Darius was favored of heaven; for in the first year of his reign the angel Gabriel "stood up to confirm and to strengthen him." It was this king who, early in the establishment of the Medo-Persian empire, "set over the kingdom an hundred and twenty princes, which should be over the whole kingdom; and over these three presidents; of whom Daniel was first. . . . This Daniel was preferred above the presidents and princes, because an excellent spirit was in him; and the king thought to set him over the whole realm."

Darius reigned over Medo-Persia two years after the fall of Babylon. During this time, Daniel was cast into the lions' den and came out unharmed. This deliverance led Darius to write "unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; Peace be multiplied unto you. I make a decree, That in every dominion in my kingdom men tremble and fear before the God of Daniel: for he is the living God, and steadfast forever, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed, and his dominion shall be even unto the end. He delivereth and rescueth, and he worketh signs and wonders in heaven and in earth, who hath delivered Daniel from the power of the lions. So this Daniel prospered in the reign of Darius, and in the reign of Cyrus the Persian."

Thus, while those who had remained loyal to God in the midst of Babylon were seeking the Lord and studying the prophecies foretelling their deliverance, God was preparing the hearts of kings to show favor to his repentant people. (2)

God's Glory

C. C. WEBSTER

GOD'S glory is his righteousness (Ex. 33:18, 19), and it makes no difference where or upon whom his goodness or righteousness is seen, it is God's glory. Jer. 33:16; 1 Cor. 1:30. The Lord gives us his righteousness for a purpose: and his purpose has been the same all through the ages "a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." Luke 2:32.

God allowed his glory to rest on Moses at Sinai in an extraordinary manner visible to all. 2 Cor. 3:7. This was a type of God's glory or righteousness to be revealed by and through his people in all ages, and especially his remnant people. 2 Cor. 3:7-18.

The glory on Moses face was also an object-lesson that they and we — ancient and modern Israel — might see the contrast between their character and that of even the man Moses. Their sins had separated them from God; so that they dare not talk with him or be in his presence lest they should die. The Lord said: "O that there were such an heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep all my commandments." Deut. 5:29. Had their hearts been right as was that of Moses, they might have taught the Gentile nations the true God; and the work they failed to do in their long journeyings for forty years might have been done in a few short weeks, and they would have been permitted to enter the promised land.

So with us. If the glory of Christ's righteousness had covered us as it was our privilege that it should; and if we had had that measure of his Holy Spirit which God desired we should, the world would have been warned long ago, and we would have been ushered into the kingdom of God.

God wants us to be one in purpose to serve him and proclaim his last warning message. He wants to give us his Holy Spirit and his righteousness which is his glory so that we may be fitted to do his work for this generation. And that

A Seaside Reverie

SEA murmurs lulled me to sleep one night
And I slept till morn, when a flood of light
Startled me. And lo! a picture grand
To challenge the skill of an artist's hand.
Old ocean's waves with diamonds crowned
Were dancing and tossing with joyous bound;
And each, rushing on in wild, restless chase,
Seemed trying more jewels to gain in the race.
This marvelous scene my mirror caught
And reflecting to me, awakened my thought;
And there fell on my ear the murmur low
Of the sea's matin song in its ebb and flow.

The lesson which came to my heart that hour
Was simple and plain, yet full of power.
Our lives, though billow-tossed they be,
May speak God's glory — as does the sea.
For the Christian heart should surge and beat
With a love, as wide as the boundless deep;
And a hidden power — to move and sway,
Like nature revealed in the sea that day;
A power that sparkles with God's own light,
Buoyant—inspiring—glorious—bright.

The Decree of Cyrus

MRS. E. G. WHITE

OVER a century before the birth of Cyrus the Great, the prophet Isaiah was inspired to mention this ruler even by name, and to write a prophecy outlining his work, as recorded in the forty-fifth of Isaiah: —

"Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut; I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight: I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron: and I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayest know that I, the Lord, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel. For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me.

"I am the Lord, and there is none else, there is no God beside me: I girded thee, though thou hast not known me: that they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none beside me. I am the Lord, and there is none else. I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things."

"Cyrus, he is my shepherd," the Lord declared, "and shall perform all my pleasure: even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." "I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will direct all his ways: he shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives, not for price nor reward, saith the Lord of hosts."

The year that Cyrus succeeded Darius the Mede to the throne of Medo-Persia marked the completion of seventy years since the first company of Hebrews had been carried captive to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar. Daniel, who was familiar with the prophecies of Jeremiah and Isaiah regarding the duration of the captivity, and with the prophecies of Isaiah regarding the restoration by decree of Cyrus, was still living, and was occupying a position of leading responsibility in the Medo-Persian court. His faith in these prophecies led him to plead with God in behalf of his people. And now, when the time came for the temple in Jerusalem to be rebuilt, God moved upon Cyrus as his agent to discern the prophecies concerning himself, and to grant the Jewish people their liberty. And furthermore, Cyrus furnished them the necessary facilities for rebuilding the temple of the Lord.

In the book of Ezra is found an account of this work of Cyrus, and a copy of his decree: —

"In the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah the prophet might be fulfilled, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying, Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel (he is the God), which is in Jerusalem. And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, besides the freewill offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem."

"Let the house be builded, the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid; the height thereof threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits; with three rows of great stones, and a row of new timber: and let the expenses be given out of the king's house: and also let the golden and silver vessels of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took forth out of the temple which is in Jerusalem, and brought unto Babylon, be restored, and brought again unto the temple which is at Jerusalem, every one to his place, and placed there in the house of God."

[The Lord God omnipotent reigneth. All kings, all nations, are his, under his rule and government. His resources are infinite. The wise man declares, "The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the rivers of water: he turneth it whithersoever he will." (1)

Those upon whose actions hang the destinies of nations, are watched over with a vigilance that knows no relaxation by him who "giveth salvation unto kings," to whom belong "the shields of the earth."]

There were faithful servants of the Most High who were prepared to respond to this decree. Over threescore years before, the Lord had declared that "after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return. . . . Then shall ye call upon me," the Lord declared, "and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will harken unto you. And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. And I will be found of you, saith the Lord: and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive." Those who were seeking the Lord were prepared to take advantage of the wonderful opportunity afforded them by Cyrus to return to their homes and to restore the temple of God.

"Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit God had raised, to go up to build the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem. And all they that were about them strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things, besides all that was willingly offered.

"Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the Lord, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem, and had put them in the house of his gods; even those did Cyrus king of Persia bring forth by the hand of Mithredath the treasurer, and numbered them unto Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah. And this is the number of them: thirty chargers of gold, a thousand chargers of silver, nine and twenty knives, thirty basons of gold, silver basons of a second sort four hundred and ten, and other vessels a thousand. All the vessels of gold and of silver were five thousand and four hundred. All these did Sheshbazzar bring up with them of the captivity that were brought up from Babylon unto Jerusalem."

The company that returned to Jerusalem was led by Zerubbabel (Sheshbazzar), a descendant of King David, and appointed by the king as governor of the restored Israelites. Associated with him were Joshua the high priest, and several of "the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites." "The whole congregation together" that returned to the land of their fathers, under Zerubbabel, "was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore, beside their servants and their maids, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven: and there were among them two hundred singing men and singing women. Their horses were seven hundred thirty and six; their mules, two hundred forty and five; their camels, four hundred thirty and five; their asses, six thousand seven hundred and twenty.

"And some of the chief of the fathers, when they came to the house of the Lord which is at Jerusalem, offered freely for the house of God to set it up in his place: they gave after their ability unto the treasure of the work threescore and one thousand drams of gold, and five thousand pounds of silver, and one hundred priests' garments. So the priests, and the Levites, and some of the people, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinims, dwelt in their cities, and all Israel in their cities."

Soon after their return, in "the seventh month," "the people gathered themselves together as one man to Jerusalem. Then stood up Joshua the son of Josedech, and his brethren, . . . and builded the altar of the God of Israel, to offer burnt offerings thereon, as it is written in the law of Moses the man of God. And they set the altar upon his bases; for fear was upon them because of the people of those countries: and they offered burnt offerings thereon unto the Lord, even burnt offerings morning and evening.

"They kept also the feast of tabernacles, as it is written, and offered the daily burnt offerings by number, according to the custom, as the duty of every day required; and afterward offered the continual burnt offering, both of the new moons, and of all the set feasts of the Lord that were reconsecrated, and of every one that willingly offered a freewill offering unto the Lord. From the first day of the seventh month began they to offer burnt offerings unto the Lord.

"But the foundation of the temple of the Lord was not yet laid.

"They gave money also unto the masons, and to the carpenters; and meat, and drink, and oil, unto them of Zidon, and to them of Tyre, to bring cedar trees from Lebanon to the sea of Joppa, according to the grant that they had of Cyrus king of Persia."

The faithful remnant who had returned were greatly cheered and encouraged by the re-establishment of the daily burnt offerings; and they now entered heartily into the preparation necessary for the rebuilding of the temple, in order that they might restore all the ancient services of the house of God.

The Unspeakable Gift

J. S. WASHBURN

"Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift." 2 Cor. 9:15. Giving is divine. It is the delight of our blessed Heavenly Father. It is the joy of our elder brother Jesus. It is the glory of the angels. God gave his Son. Christ gave his life. The one business of the angels is to minister, to give their service to the other creatures in God's great universe.

All that he has made in nature demonstrates that the principle of giving is the very essence of divinity. The sun gives its light. The earth brings forth and gives for the service of man her fruit. The flowers breathe out their perfume. The clouds send forth the rain. The birds give their free concerts joyously, cheerfully. All nature gives.

See that mountain stream, sparkling, living, clear, giving life to that which grows upon its banks, freshness, health, and joy to the dumb creatures which God has made, and to man, their king. The mountain stream comes from above. It flows downward to man. Every good gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights.

See that pool, full of death, decay, and poison. Why?—It receives; it does not flow forth. There is no outlet. It does not give. That which ceases to give dies.

Dear brother, dear sister, if you would live, if you would be a blessing, if you would be like God, and a part of his plan,—give freely; give your best; give that which costs a sacrifice. You are sowing costly, precious seed. What a harvest of joy will return to you. How much blessing we lose when we fail to give! "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

The Spirit of God—No. 11

WM. COVERT

Things Said of the Holy Spirit

1. What is the first testimony in the sacred writings relating to the Spirit of God?

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." Gen. 1:1, 2.

In creation God's Spirit brooded over his works and as a result things were made, and life was imparted.

2. When wickedness overspread the antediluvian world, what statement is made showing that God had by his Spirit been endeavoring to cause men to do right?

"And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years." Gen. 6:3.

The apostle shows that God in the days of Noah bore with the people before he destroyed them, and that his Spirit's striving was through the message given and the work done by Noah while the ark was being built. 1 Peter 3:19, 20.

3. What in the perverse human heart fights against the Spirit of God?

"For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye can not do the things that ye would." Gal. 5:17.

The lusts of men's flesh, or the evil imaginations of their hearts in antediluvian times fought against God's Spirit and the Spirit of God strove with these evil faculties in men.

4. What does the Lord say should be the attitude of man toward the Spirit of God?

"This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh." Gal. 5:16.

Here the Spirit of God is clearly shown to be that influence or personating presence of God that guides man in his life's course and restrains him from doing evil.

5. What pointed testimony is given showing that God accomplishes his work through his own Spirit and that it proceeds from himself?

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Gen. 2:7. "The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life." Job 33:4.

6. What indorsement of these ancient testimonies is made by Paul?

"God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshiped with men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us." Acts 17:24-27.

7. What wonderful things are perpetually done before the eyes of all men by the Lord through the Spirit?

"For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist." Col. 1:16, 17.

The word consist signifies to hold together.

8. What shows that the Spirit of God is all-pervading so that it is impossible to get away from its presence?

"Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee." Ps. 139:7-12.

Stoop Low

My soul, stoop low;
The lowly things of earth
Get most of heaven's dew.
Be humble; so
The dignity of birth
Falls on the few
Who do attain to know
Whence God's pure fountains flow.

From nesting low,
The lark will highest rise
Exultant, to the sun.
Soul, learn to know
The glory of the skies
Pride never won.
The sweetest things hide low,
Where dews of heaven glow.

Receiving to Impart

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"Jesus took the loaves; and when he had given thanks, he distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down; and likewise of the fishes as much as they would. When they were filled, he said unto his disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost. Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten."

By this miracle Christ has shown how missionary work is to be bound up with the ministry of the word. Not only did the Master give the people spiritual food; by a miracle he also provided temporal food to satisfy their physical hunger. This merciful provision helped to fasten in the minds of the people the gracious words of truth which he had spoken. Following his example, his disciples are to take the bread of life and the water of salvation and give to those who are longing for spiritual help. And as there is need, they are to feed the hungry and clothe the naked. The beauty and utility of the work we do for God consists in its symmetry and harmony, and in its all-round adaptability and efficiency.

This miracle is an object-lesson for us. It contains lessons of deep import, which, though they lie beneath the surface, will be discerned and appreciated by those who have cultivated their perceptive faculties. By this miracle Christ desires to teach us the truth of the words, "Without me ye can do nothing." He is the source of all power, the giver of all temporal and spiritual blessings. He employs human beings as co-workers, giving them a part to act with him as his helping hand. We are to receive from him, not to hoard for self-gratification, but to impart to others. And as we do this work, let us not suppose that we are to receive the glory. All the glory is to be given to the great Master-Worker. The disciples were not to receive the glory for feeding the five thousand. They were only the instruments used by the Lord.

Those who work for Christ are never to think that the credit for their success belongs to them. God's name is to receive all the glory. He it is who accomplishes the work. He, the great Master-Worker, slumbers not. Constantly he is working for the harmonious accomplishment of his purposes. He entrusts talents to human beings that they may co-operate with him. They are ever to remember that they are but instruments in his hands. "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." "The Lord reigneth; let the people tremble; he sitteth between the cherubim, let the earth be moved. The Lord is great in Zion; and he is high above all the people. Let them praise thy great and terrible name; for it is holy."

Christ gave the bread to the disciples, to be given by them to the multitude. By the part which the disciples acted in this miracle is illustrated the part which Christ's disciples in all ages are to act. From him they are to receive the precious truth to give to those who are fainting by the wayside. And as they empty their hands in imparting to the hungry, they receive more to impart.

Christ is the light of the world. Those who walk in this light are charmed by its beauty, and are filled with a desire to share it with others. Their hearts are illuminated by the grace of Christ, and they become light-bearers. Their light shines more and more unto the perfect day.

Thus it was with Philip. After he had been called by Christ, he could not keep to himself the knowledge he had found. Going to Nathanael, he said, "We have found him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Nathanael asked. But Philip did not stop to argue. "Come and see," was all he said. As he thus showed his faith in the Saviour, he received increased light.

He who has really accepted Christ will not be satisfied to enjoy the divine favor without giving to others the joy that cheers his soul. The purest and holiest devotion is that which leads to persevering, unselfish effort for the salvation of those outside the fold.

Christ calls upon his followers to work earnestly for those for whom he has made such a wonderful sacrifice. When the mind, instead of being centered on self, is occupied in seeking to enrich poverty-stricken souls, the treasure of God's love — the golden oil from the two olive-trees — is poured into the heart. Those who impart to others of the riches of the grace of heaven, will be themselves enriched. The ministering angels are waiting, longing, for channels through which they can communicate the treasures of heaven. Men and women can reach the highest stage of mental and moral development only by co-operating with Jesus in unselfish effort for the good of others. We are never so truly enriched as when we are trying to enrich others. We can not diminish our treasure by sharing it. The more we enlighten others, the brighter our light will shine.

His Coming Near

FRANCIS M. FAIRCHILD

There is no subject in the Bible that is of greater interest to the people of God than the second coming of Christ. As often as we hear it, our hearts burn within us.

How many times we have read the text, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." Eighteen hundred years have come and gone since the Saviour spoke these words, and not until this present generation could any one hope to be living to see his coming. But from the beginning of the giving of this message, those who have given it have had a right to believe that they might be living to witness the grand and glorious event.

Elders James White, J. N. Andrews, Joseph Bates, Uriah Smith, with the many others who were in this message in its infancy, and who are now sleeping, put their whole lives into this message, and their works are still following them. As we look into the faces of those who were connected with this message from its beginning, and who are still living, as we see their bent forms and watch their feeble steps, the thought comes to us, Shall they also sleep? Then we read with renewed courage and revived hope the words from the Man of Calvary, "This generation shall not pass." And we thank God for the blessed hope, and say, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

But the question will arise, What of the millions yet unwarned? How long, O how long, will it take to give this message to every nation, tribe, and people? And again we read, "This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." Could there be anything more encouraging than such a statement by the Master? If your hopes are growing dim, "look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." There are two things necessary to the finishing of this message — a full surrender of ourselves to God, and a consecration of all that we have.

God's people are soon to enter the heavenly Canaan. But it will take all to buy the field. All heaven is waiting for this last message to be given to these last people in this world to-day.

Through the spirit of prophecy the Lord has told us that "one dollar is now worth more in this message than ten dollars will be at some future time." O that we might see the situation as it is, might see and hear the millions who are in darkness, who with longing hearts and outstretched hands, are crying, "Come over and help us. Come, and come quickly, or we perish. Many are

When Love Came Down

When love came down —
To take a cross and leave a crown
And robes of light for pilgrim's gown,
He came a Stranger to his own,
When Love came down.

When Love hung on the tree —
His heart's blood flowed for you and me,
That we might live, that we might be
With him through all eternity,
When Love hung on the tree.

When Love lay dead —
"The face of God was veiled in dread,
Seraph and cherub weeping fell
As rose that awful chant from hell,
'The Son lies dead!'"

When Love awoke —
Ten thousand saints adoring spoke.
The golden harps of heaven rang,
And blood-marked throngs triumphant sang:
"He lives, he reigns forever more,"
The Lamb of God — to die no more —
When Love awoke.

An Occasion for Rejoicing

MRS. E. G. WHITE

As preparations for building the temple advanced from month to month, the faithful remnant of Israel began to gather courage. Long had they been deprived of every visible token of God's presence with them. And now, surrounded as they were by many sad reminders of the terrible apostasy of their fathers, which had finally resulted in lifelong captivity, they longed for some abiding token of divine forgiveness and favor. Above the restoration of personal property and many ancient privileges, they valued the approval of God. Wonderfully had he wrought in their behalf; and now they longed for an assurance of his pardoning love and protecting care. By working diligently to rebuild the temple, they hoped to hasten the restoration of special blessings connected with the sanctuary service. Within the walls of this second temple they expected to see revealed the glory of the Lord.

Wise plans for the prosecution of the work were laid by Zerubbabel the governor, Joshua the high priest, and their associates in authority. They "appointed the Levites, from twenty years old and upward, to set forward the work of the house of the Lord." "All they that were come out of the captivity unto Jerusalem" responded nobly, and with willing hands began to prepare the building material. Some of the immense stones brought to the temple site in the days of Solomon, had escaped destruction at the hands of the Babylonians. These stones were made ready for use, and much new material was provided.

The foundation-stone of the temple was laid amid scenes of great rejoicing. Accompanied by the trumpets of the priests and the cymbals of the sons of Asaph, the people "sang together by course in praising and giving thanks unto the Lord; because he is good, for his mercy endureth forever toward Israel."

The sentiment of this hymn of praise and thanksgiving is that expressed in the one hundred and thirty-sixth psalm — a most appropriate recognition of God's merciful providences in behalf of the children of the captivity: —

"O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever.

"O give thanks unto the God of gods: for his mercy endureth forever.

"O give thanks to the Lord of lords: for his mercy endureth forever.

"To him who alone doeth great wonders: for his mercy endureth forever.

"To him that by wisdom made the heavens;" "that stretched out the earth above the waters;" "that made great lights;" "the sun to rule by day," "the moon and stars to rule by night," — to him, the Creator of all these, the congregation of Israel gave thanks, acknowledging that "his mercy endureth forever."

"To him that smote Egypt in their first-born," "and brought out Israel from among them," "with a strong hand, and with a stretched out arm;" "to him which divided the Red Sea into parts," "and made Israel to pass through the midst of it," "but overthrew Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea;" "to him which led his people through the wilderness;" "to him which smote great kings," "and slew famous kings," "Sihon king of the Amorites," "and Og king of Bashan," "and gave their land for an heritage," "even an heritage unto Israel his servant," — to him, the Mighty Leader of the hosts of Israel, the returned exiles now rendered praise as the One whose mercy endureth forever.

And this same Mighty Leader is the One who hath "remembered us in our low estate," "and hath redeemed us from our enemies." O, let us ever "give thanks unto the God of heaven: for his mercy endureth forever!"

The laying of the corner-stone of the second temple should have called forth expressions of gratitude from every heart. The house that was about to be built was the subject of many prophecies. The Lord's servants, and especially those who had had long experience in the things of God, should have recounted the remarkable providences leading up to the work that was being done; and they should have entered heartily into the spirit of the occasion. Especially should all the aged have rejoiced because God in his mercy had not cut them off in their iniquities at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem by the armies of Nebuchadnezzar. Throughout the long period of captivity they had been spared, and now they were permitted to witness this scene of rejoicing.

But mingled with the music and the shouts of praise ascending on that glad day, was a discordant note of sorrow and dissatisfaction. "Many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men, that had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice." Among the aged men who had seen the glory of Solomon's temple, there were some who lamented and wept over the inferiority of the building that was now to be erected.

It was but natural and right that these aged men should have feelings of sadness because of the results of long-continued impenitence. Had they and their generation obeyed God and carried out his purpose for Israel, the temple built by Solomon would not have been destroyed, and the captivity would not have been necessary. It was because of their former ingratitude and disloyalty, that they had been scattered among the heathen. Through long years of exile they were brought to realize the sacredness of God's law and the sinfulness of disobedience.

But conditions were now changed. In tender mercy the Lord had once more visited his people, and had allowed them to return to their own land. Feelings of sadness because of the mistakes of the past should have given place to feelings of joy. In a remarkable way God had moved upon the heart of King Cyrus to aid them in rebuilding the temple at Jerusalem, and this should have called forth expressions of profound gratitude. But some failed of discerning God's opening providences. Instead of rejoicing, they entertained thoughts of discontent and discouragement.

This spirit of murmuring and complaining, and of making unfavorable comparisons, had a depressing influence on the minds of many. The expressions of doubt and discouragement weakened the hands of the builders. The workmen were led to question whether they should proceed with the erection of a building that at the beginning was so freely criticized and was the cause of so much lamentation.

There were many in the congregation, however, who did not look upon the lesser glory of this temple, as compared with the first temple, with such dissatisfaction. "Many shouted aloud for joy: so that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping of the people: for the people shouted with a loud shout, and the noise was heard afar off."

Our words and actions have a far-reaching influence for good or for evil. Could those who failed to rejoice at the laying of the foundation-stone of the temple, have foreseen the results of their mournful conduct on that day, they would have been appalled. Little did they realize the weight of their words of disapproval and disappointment. Little did they foresee how much they delayed the final completion of the Lord's house.

"O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!" "Praise ye the Lord. O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever." "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting: and let all the people say, Amen. Praise ye the Lord."

Use of the Tithe

T. E. BOWEN

In a recent issue of the Review, Elder Daniells presented the amount of tithe voted to the General Conference Mission Board from union and State conferences during 1906. This tithe was a surplus in these treasuries, after the laborers in these home fields had been paid. The grand total amounted to over fifty-two thousand dollars. This is a splendid tribute to missions, every dollar of which goes to sustain laborers in foreign fields, the same as ministers at home are supported from the tithe. And this is as it should be.

That this plan is in harmony with the mind of the Lord, and that the home fields are encouraged thus to share their tithe in the support of fields in distant lands where no churches exist, the following from a special Testimony published not long ago, will show: —

"In some of the larger conferences the tithe may be more than sufficient to sustain the laborers now in the field. . . . These conferences should feel a burden for the regions beyond their own borders. There are missions to be sustained in fields where there are no churches and no tithes, and also where the believers are few, and the tithe limited. If you have means that is not needed after settling with your ministers in a liberal manner, send the Lord's money to these destitute places. Special light on this point has been given. I was listening to the voice of the heavenly messenger, and the directions given were that the churches that had buildings and facilities should in this way [note the wording — sharing of their surplus tithe as conferences to support ministers in mission fields] assist the missions in foreign countries."

That responsibility rests upon all our churches in faithfully supporting the cause of God with tithes and offerings, and that if all are faithful at home, there will be no lack, is shown by the following: —

"If the members of the church exercise economy [the same economy manifested by the laborers themselves: 'Our ministers should be dealt with in a fair, liberal, Christian manner, yet there should be no extravagance; economy must be practised; for the wants of the cause of God are many, and it must advance'] and self-denial in dress and in all their expenses, as God requires, there will be no lack of funds. The tithe will be increased, and there will be donations [apart from the tithe] sufficient for all church expenses."

By these quotations it will be plainly seen that the plan of sharing our surplus tithe with the mission fields is a heaven-born one, and that God's rich blessing will rest upon all those who manifest in this manner a practical interest in the work of God in the darker portions of his vineyard. But in doing it, it should ever be kept in mind that there is a right and a wrong way of rendering this assistance. It is not left with individuals to withhold their tithe from their own church treasury, sending it directly to some mission field, or even to the General Conference itself. This is disorganization. But the tithe having been paid over to the home treasury, when the conference officers, or delegates representing these home conference churches, vote a surplus to the general treasury, this is in harmony with every principle of thorough organization, and with such use of the tithe God is pleased, and will command his blessing to rest upon all who do it.

The Eastern Question — No. 1

F. I. RICHARDSON

For many years the attention of the statesmen of the civilized nations of the world has been drawn to Turkey. Each nation of Europe covets that portion of Turkey lying in Europe, and that highway for vessels between the Black Sea and the Mediterranean. Especially is this true of Russia; and for many years the Russians have been working to that end, carrying out the instructions of Peter the Great. But the nations, recognizing the advantage any nation would possess that held the Dardanelles, have united in holding one another in check. But the Russian bear has grown to such colossal proportions that some begin to feel that these powers will not be able to hold him in check much longer. The following words from a representative of England, the nation that has done most, perhaps, to keep the Turk where he is, reveals the situation. A writer in the Fortnightly Review, London, says: "Let us abandon the disgraceful protectorate of Constantinople, and say to France, Take Syria. It is true Russia would then go to Constantinople, but she must go sooner or later, and it is better she should go there as our friend than as our foe."

The editor of the Keystone, the organ of the jewelers, London, speaks in the same strain: "The time is coming when Russia will secure her longed-for open port on the south. Turkey can not forever bar her way, though backed by the protection of all the powers; for Russia has the logic of the situation on her side, and the march of empire makes this destiny inevitable."

To these might be added a multitude of testimonies showing the changed attitude of the nations toward Turkey and the undoubted intentions of Russia; but the almost daily reports from the far East, in which Russia is the central figure, are abundant proof that although the seat of operations is at present some distance away, the objective point for Russia is the driving of the Turks out of Europe. The statesman sees in this only a transfer of territory from one political power to another, and the benefits that accrue to the victor therefrom; but to the student of prophecy it has a much deeper significance. Nearly twenty-five hundred years ago the Lord, through his prophets, foretold that these very conditions would be the forerunners of startling events soon to follow, affecting the eternal welfare of every individual living upon the earth at this time.

The eleventh chapter of the book of Daniel is a prophecy, and beginning B. C. 538, gives in plain, literal language many of the important events of the world's history, from Daniel's time to the end of the world, dealing especially with this question we have under consideration.

"Also I in the first year of Darius the Mede, even I, stood to confirm and strengthen him. And now will I show thee the truth. Behold, there shall stand up yet three kings in Persia; and the fourth shall be far richer than they all: and by his strength through his riches he shall stir up all against the realm of Grecia." Dan. 11:1, 2.

"The angel, after stating that he stood to confirm and strengthen Darius, turns his attention to the future. Three kings shall yet stand up in Persia. To stand up means to reign; three kings were to reign in Persia, referring doubtless to the immediate successors of Cyrus. These were (1) Cambyses, son of Cyrus; (2) Smerdis, an impostor; (3) Darius Hystaspes.

"The fourth shall be far richer than they all. The fourth king from Cyrus was Xerxes, who was truly famous for his great wealth. He was to stir up all against the realm of Grecia. Never before had there been such a levy of men for warlike purposes; never has there been since. His army, according to Herodotus, who lived in that age, reached the fabulous number of five million and a half; but he utterly failed in that enterprise."

"And a mighty king shall stand up, that shall rule with great dominion, and do according to his will. And when he shall stand up, his kingdom shall be broken, and shall be divided toward the four winds of heaven; and not to his posterity, nor according to his dominion which he ruled: for his kingdom shall be plucked up, even for others beside those." Verses 3, 4.

Xerxes was the last Persian king to invade Grecia; from that time the power of the Persians began to wane, and the power of the Greeks to rise, until they in turn became the aggressors, and with Alexander the Great at their head, overran the Persian empire, and Alexander became monarch of the world. His kingdom was to be divided, but not for his posterity; it was to be plucked up for others besides those. At the early age of thirty-two years Alexander died in a drunken debauch, and within fifteen years every one of his posterity was murdered, and the kingdom was divided between his four leading generals. Reckoning from the standpoint of Palestine, the native land of the prophet, the kingdom was divided toward the four winds of heaven. Cassander had Greece and the adjacent countries, which lay to

The Peace of God

"He giveth quietness." O Elder Brother,
Whose homeless feet have pressed our path of pain,
Whose hands have borne the burden of our sorrow,
That in our losses we might find our gain,

Of all thy gifts and infinite consolings
I ask but this: in every troubled hour
To hear thy voice through all the tumults stealing,
And rest serene beneath its tranquil power.

Cares can not fret me if my soul be dwelling
In the still air of faith's untroubled day;
Grief can not shake me if I walk beside thee,
My hand in thine along the darkening way.

Content to know there comes a radiant morning
When from all shadows I shall find release;
Serene to wait the rapture of its dawning —
Who can make trouble when thou sendest peace?

"Rejoice in the Lord"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Christ declares, "The bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. . . . I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst. But I said unto you, That ye also have seen me, and believe not."

Are not these words applicable to many to-day? We think that we believe in Christ; but have we his light and life? We do not believe as we should; therefore we do not receive the blessings that God has in store for us. We have seen God working on hearts. We have seen him strengthening men and women to come out from the world and receive Christ as their personal Saviour. Have we thanked God as we should for the wonderful work that he has wrought? Let us recount the blessings of God, and praise him for them. We grieve our Heavenly Father when we are unmindful of his mercies — like the heath in the desert "that knoweth not when good cometh."

When trials come into our lives, when clouds darken the horizon, how ready we are to forget that Jesus is our Saviour, that behind the clouds the Sun of Righteousness is shining; that angels are close beside us, preserving us from harm. I would say to the despairing, Look and live. Hope thou in God; for on Calvary's cross a complete sacrifice was offered for you. Jesus is the sinner's Friend, the sinner's Redeemer. Eternal joy — a life of undimmed happiness — awaits the one who surrenders all to Christ. Look away from yourself to Jesus, who is pleading before the throne of God in your behalf. Listen to his words, "Come unto me, . . . and I will give you rest." "Him that cometh to me I will in nowise cast out." With the hand of faith grasp the promises of God. Appropriate these blessings to yourself, not at some future time, but to-day.

The strongest temptation can not excuse sin. However great the pressure brought to bear upon the soul, transgression is our own act. It is not in the power of earth or hell to compel any one to do evil. Satan attacks us at our weakest points, but we need not be overcome. However severe or unexpected the attack, God has provided help for us, and in his strength we may conquer. In the hour of greatest need when discouragement overwhelms the soul, then it is that Jesus comes very near. The hour of man's necessity is God's opportunity. He sees our danger and provides help for us. Unseen by us, he saves us from the foe. Let us praise him at all times. He is always near us, and he never fails to send us help in every time of need.

Your heart may be so oppressed that all seems dark and dreary, but look to Jesus constantly. Take all your troubles to him. He will never misunderstand you. He is the refuge of his people. Under the shadow of his protection they can pass unharmed. Believe in him and trust in him. He will not give you up to the spoiler. Flee to the stronghold, and learn that the power of Christ to strengthen and help passes all comprehension. Open the door of the heart and let Jesus enter to fill your life with his peace, his grace, his joy. Then you can say: "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olives shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

Dear Christian friends, drop the burdens that God does not ask you to carry. The more you think and talk of these self-imposed burdens, the larger they grow, until at last they will utterly destroy your faith and courage. Do not think that when you walk with Jesus, you must walk in the shadow. The happiest people in the world are those who trust in Jesus and gladly do his bidding. He is the light of life. From the lives of those who follow him, unrest and discontent are banished. With a full heart they echo the words of the wise man, Wisdom's "ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." Though they meet with trials and difficulties, their lives are full of joy; for Christ walks beside them, and his presence makes the pathway bright.

Short Sermons on the Commandments

The Second Commandment

W. A. MC CUTCHEN

"Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; and showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments." Ex. 20:4-6.

In this commandment we have a prohibition of that which is a culmination of the thing forbidden in the first commandment; and this culmination is reached by easy and natural steps if the first command is disregarded. In other words, when one has other gods than the true God, it is perfectly natural to begin to make images and likenesses to represent those gods. It represents that low order of worship which must see the object worshiped, and has no element of faith in it. Its devotees can not, as did Moses, see "Him who is invisible." And these images, being the product of human hands, can not be endowed by the worshiper, in his own mind, with any greater attributes than his own. Hence it is not only an affront to God thus to worship another than he, but it has no uplifting power to the worshiper.

Some have thought that this command forbids the making of any kind of likeness or picture for any purpose, but this hardly seems tenable in the light of other facts and scriptures. If so, how are we to account for the pictures described in the Bible — the great image of Daniel 2, the beasts and images of Daniel, Ezekiel, and Revelation, used in the symbolic prophecies, the views and heavenly scenes presented, all of which were given by God himself as object-lessons? The Lord also gave specific instruction to "write the vision and make it plain upon tables" (Hab. 2:2), which, by our pictorial charts and illustrations we are enabled to do. Moreover the Lord caused figures of angels to be wrought in the hangings and coverings of the sanctuary, and golden statues of cherubim on the mercy-seat anciently. It is evident that the command is simply against the making of images and likenesses for the purpose of worshiping — "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image," etc.— and not that thou mayest not make them for general purposes other than to worship.

No surer sign of rank idolatry of the lowest order could be offered than the worship of images; for "they be no gods, which are made with hands." Acts 19:26. The making and worshiping of graven images seems to be a further step in the downward road of idolatry, a worse offense in God's sight than the having of other gods in the mind and affections; for in connection with his prohibition of it in this command the Lord points out

Reverence for Holy Things

ELIZA H. MORTON

THE angels bow in holy awe
  Before Jehovah's throne.
The Lord of hosts requires and asks
  A reverence from his own.
In days of old the burning bush
  Made sacred all around,
And Moses felt that where he stood
  Was blest and hallowed ground.

And shall not we in this our day
  Regard the things of God
With due respect, and in his house
  Walk softly with the Lord?
Not form alone is what we need
  In this, earth's closing hour;
But order based on heaven's law
  Tends to increase our power.

In reverence bow when prayer is said,
  And angels linger near;
For heaven's blessing rests upon
  The humble and sincere;
But carelessness and thoughtlessness,
  Disorder here and there,
Will grieve the Spirit, check its work,
  And close the listening ear.

Then careful, reverent, humble, pure,
  Let all our worship be,
And in the love and fear of God
  We shall be glad and free;
Then our example will go forth
  From a united band
In winning souls from chaos dark
  To heaven's own order-land.

Return of the Exiles — No. 4

"The Adversaries of Judah and Benjamin"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

FROM the time the foundation-stone of the second temple was laid, Satan brought to bear upon the builders many influences that greatly hindered the rapid prosecution of the work. The enemy did not have far to go in order to find men through whom to carry out his evil designs. Close by the Israelites, a few miles northward, dwelt the Samaritans.

More than a century before the beginning of the Babylonish captivity, the Assyrian kings had devastated Samaria and Galilee, and had taken into captivity many thousands of Israelites belonging to the ten tribes. The conquering kings repopulated Samaria with colonies of heathen peoples from widely separated parts of the Assyrian realm. These heathen intermarried with the Israelites who had been allowed to remain in the land; and thus originated a mixed race known as the Samaritans.

In later years, the Samaritans claimed to worship the true God; but in heart and practise they were idolaters. It is true, they held that their idols were only to remind them of the living God, the ruler of the universe; nevertheless the people were led to reverence their graven images.

These idolatrous Samaritans were "the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin." About the time of the laying of the corner-stone, they "heard that the children of the captivity builded the temple unto the Lord God of Israel." Coming "to Zerubbabel, and to the chief of the fathers," they expressed their desire to join them in its erection. "Let us build with you," they proposed, "for we seek your God, as ye do; and we do sacrifice unto him since the days of Esar-haddon king of Assur, which brought us up hither." This privilege was refused them. "Ye have nothing to do with us to build an house unto our God," the leaders of the Israelites declared; "but we ourselves together will build unto the Lord God of Israel, as King Cyrus of Persia hath commanded us."

In the light of the circumstances surrounding the remnant people of God in the days of Zerubbabel, this decision reveals the character of the leaders of Israel at that time. Only a feeble remnant had chosen to return from Babylon; and now, as they undertake a work seemingly beyond their strength, their nearest neighbors come with an offer to help. The Samaritans refer to their worship of the true God, and express a desire to share in the privileges and blessings connected with the temple service. "We seek your God, as ye do," they declared. "Let us build with you."

Had the Jewish leaders accepted this offer of assistance, they would have opened a door for the entrance of idolatry. They discerned the insincerity of the Samaritans. They realized that all the help that could be gained through an alliance with men, would be as nothing in comparison with the prosperity that would accompany strict obedience to the plain commands of Jehovah.

Regarding their relations with surrounding peoples, the Lord had declared to ancient Israel through Moses: "Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them: neither shalt thou make marriages with them; . . . for they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods: so will the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and destroy thee suddenly."

"Thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth. The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people: but because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt. Know therefore that the Lord thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him and keep his commandments to a thousand generations. . . . Thou shalt therefore keep the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which I command thee this day, to do them."

The result that would follow a breaking of their covenant with God, and an entrance into covenant relation with surrounding nations, was plainly foretold through Moses: "The Lord shall scatter you among the nations," he declared, "and ye shall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the Lord shall lead you. And there ye shall serve gods, the work of men's hands, wood and stone, which neither see, nor hear, nor eat, nor smell. But if from thence thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart and with all thy soul." Precious assurance! Then follows the promise to the penitent, that God would not forsake them, nor forget the covenant that he had made with their fathers.

Zerubbabel and his associates were familiar with these scriptures. Their fathers had lost sight of the sacred relationship that should ever exist between God and his chosen people. Forgetting their solemn covenant with the Lord of hosts, they had entered into covenant relation with heathen nations. The prophecies of Moses were literally fulfilled. The chosen nation was scattered among heathen nations. And only a remnant, "few in number," had repented and turned to God. Only a few had renewed their covenant with him, and had returned to restore that which had been destroyed because of the disobedience of their fathers. And now, having solemnly rededicated themselves to the Lord at the ancient altar set up before the ruins of his temple, should they, at the very beginning of their work, enter into a covenant with a people who worshiped idols?

"Thou shalt make no covenant with them." God's servants in responsibility realized that the line of demarcation between his people and the people of the world is ever to be kept unmistakably distinct. They refused to be guided by the counsel of those who for years had known the requirements of God's law, but who had refused to yield to its claims.

The principles set forth in Deuteronomy for the instruction of Israel, are to be followed by God's people to the end of time. Our prosperity is dependent on the continuance of our covenant relationship with God. In no instance can we afford to compromise principle by entering into covenant with those who fear not God.

There is constant danger that professed Christians will come to think that in order to have influence with worldlings, they must conform to the world to a certain extent. But although the propositions of Satan may appear to afford great advantages, as did the offer of the Samaritans to assist in the construction of the temple, they always end in spiritual ruin. God's people must guard against every subtle influence that is seeking entrance by means of flattering inducements from the enemies of his truth.

We are pilgrims and strangers in this world, traveling a path beset with dangers from those who have rejected the only One who can save them. Ingenious subterfuges and scientific problems will be held out before us, to tempt us to swerve from our allegiance, but we are not to heed them. Every one must seek God for himself.

It is not always open and avowed enemies that are most to be feared. We shall have enemies who come, like "the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin," with smooth words and fair speeches, and who would deceive if possible the very elect. It is thus that Satan often works; and again, when it suits his purpose, he goes about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour.

Let every soul be on the alert. The adversary is on your track. Vigilantly watch lest some carefully concealed and masterly snare take you unawares. Let the careless and indifferent beware lest the day of the Lord come upon them as a thief in the night. Many will wander from the path of humility, and, casting aside the yoke of Christ, will walk in strange paths. Blinded and bewildered, they will leave the narrow path that leads to the city of God.

A man can not be a happy Christian unless he is a watchful Christian. He who overcomes must watch; for with worldly entanglements, error, and superstition, Satan strives to win Christ's followers from him. It is not enough that we avoid glaring errors and perilous, inconsistent moves. We are to keep close to the side of Christ, walking in the path of self-denial and sacrifice. We are in an enemy's country. He who was cast out of heaven has come down with great power. With every conceivable artifice and device he is seeking to take souls captive. Unless we are constantly on guard, we shall fall an easy prey to his deceptions.

In the closing scenes of this earth's history, when intensity is taking possession of every earthly element, the Lord requires of us a vigilance that knows no relaxation. But we are not left to struggle alone. Amid the dangers increasing on every hand, those who walk humbly before God, distrustful of their own wisdom, will have angels as their helpers and protectors. In times of special peril they will know the power of God's keeping care. Those who do not realize their danger because they do not watch, will pay, with the loss of their souls, the penalty of their presumption and their wilful ignorance of Satan's devices.

Let us trust fully, humbly, unselfishly, in God. We are his children, and he deals with us as such. When we draw near to him, and renew our covenant with him, he mercifully preserves us from the assaults of the enemy. Never will he betray one who trusts in him as a child trusts in its parents. He sees the humble, trusting souls drawing near to him, and in pity and love he draws near to them, and lifts up for them a standard against the enemy. Touch them not, he says; for they are mine. I have graven them upon the palms of my hands. He teaches them to exercise unquestioning faith in his power to work in their behalf. With assurance they say, "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

Loyalty

J. S. WASHBURN

A great battle was being fought. The nation so recently delivered from slavery was fighting, under the leadership of the God of battles, against cruel Amalek, led by the enemy of God and his people, — crafty, cruel Amalek, who had distressed the children of Israel, who had been a terror to them, who had cut off the weak and the weary ones straggling in the rear of the long line of march in the dusty, burning wilderness. Now, with determined malice, they had planned by one decisive blow to cut off and blot out the people of Israel from under heaven.

The mighty soldier, Joshua, was leading Israel against Amalek. Back and forth upon the plain the battle lines wavered, Israel sometimes advancing triumphant, then again retreating. A wonderful secret was revealed in the alternate partial defeats and victories of Israel during that long, fierce fight. Moses, Aaron, and Hur were upon a high hill, watching the conflict. Moses, with the rod of God in his hand, was regulating the battle. "When Moses held up his hands, . . . Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed. But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun. And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword." Ex. 17:11-13.

What a lesson to all God's people in every time of conflict to support those whom God has placed in positions of responsibility! What a lesson in sympathetic loyalty! Moses' hands were weary, but his associates held up his hands, and the very question of victory or defeat hung on the loyal support of the co-workers of Moses.

We know that "whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning." My brother, if any man among us has been placed in a position of responsibility, are we not bound loyally to support him? It is true our loyally is to the cause of God, and not to any man, as such; but when the people of God, guided by his Spirit, have laid burdens upon any individual, is not every one in duty bound to support with heart as true as steel the worker who is bearing heavy burdens?

It would seem that the very question of the defeat or victory of our work hangs upon the loyal support of those placed in responsible positions. There are some of our brethren at the head of the work who have been almost crushed by the heavy load, by the intense strain of the recent conflicts. There are those who are aging fast, who have grown old within four or five years in the conflict. Will not every true believer in this mighty cause rally to the support of every man placed by the people under the guidance of the Spirit of God in a position of responsibility?

If you do not agree in every particular with these brethren, will you not, nevertheless, give them your sympathetic and loyal co-operation, refusing to speak against them, or to pull down their hands? Oftentimes a word or a letter of good cheer and courage, a reference to some comforting promise of God, will bring cheer and help, and lighten the load, and bring victory.

A greater conflict than that between literal Israel and literal Amalek is raging to-day. The very death-conflict of the ages is upon us. Let us be loyal to God and his Word, the Holy Spirit, the gift of prophecy, and to our organization, and the brethren placed in responsible positions.

Many of the victors over Amalek afterward fell in the wilderness, and never saw the promised land. The victors in the conflict to-day will be crowned by the King of kings, and sit upon his throne. Shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, true to God and to one another, let us fight the good fight, and win the crown.

Lessons From Past Experiences — No. 15

GEO. O. STATES

Over thirty-five years ago, in one of our Eastern conferences, a man very zealously accepted the truth, and soon began preaching. He preached about five years, but was of a very independent nature, desiring to be first in importance, and unwilling to bear counsel or reproof.

When he first came among us, he had much to say about the great sacrifices he had made for the truth's sake. He dwelt much upon the fact that he had given up a very lucrative position in order to preach the truth.

After a time he engaged in some great speculative scheme, borrowed money from poor invalid widows and others to carry it through, and then left the truth and the country.

It must have been over twenty years ago that a business man in Delta, Colo., said to me, "I want you to come to the hall to-night and hear a smart man lecture. He used to be one of your ministers." I went, and was surprised to learn that he was the one who some fifteen years before had given up the truth. His whole talk consisted in ridiculing the Bible, and showing up its supposed inconsistencies.

A few years before this man came among us, we were told by the servant of the Lord that "in rebuking the wrongs of one, he designed to correct many. . . . He makes plain the wrongs of some that others may thus be warned, and fear, and shun those errors. By self-examination they may find that they are doing the same things which God condemns in

Trust

CLIFFORD A. RUSSELL

Sometimes the day may seem dreary,
Sometimes the pathway be steep,
And our poor aching limbs may be weary,
And the way may be rough to our feet;
'Tis then that we feel the soul yearning
For comfort and solace and rest,
Little thinking and little discerning
God knows what for us is the best.

Though the day may bring suff'ring and sorrow,
Though the night may be crowded with pain,
Blessed hope comes to cheer with the morrow,
And the sunlight is streaming again.
Every cloud has a silvery lining,
Every trial a glad victory,
When we think that beyond us is shining
The sunlight of eternity.

Then why be discouraged and fearful;
God's way is always the best.
We'll trust him with hearts that are cheerful,
And lean on his strong arm for rest.
Our Saviour has marked out the pathway;
He has conquered sin, death, and the grave;
We'll follow his leadings till some day
He'll come all his loved ones to save.

How God Trains His Workers

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) God has given to every man his work, and we are to acknowledge the wisdom of his plan for us by a hearty co-operation with him. (2) It is in a life of service only that true happiness is found. He who lives a useless, selfish life is miserable. He is dissatisfied with himself and with every one else.

The Lord disciplines his workers, that they may be prepared to fill the places appointed them. Thus he desires to fit them to do more acceptable service.

A life of monotony is not the most conducive to spiritual growth. Some can reach the highest standard of spirituality only through a change in the regular order of things. When in his providence God sees that changes are essential for the success of the character-building, he disturbs the smooth current of the life.

There are those who desire to be a ruling power, and who need the sanctification of submission. God brings about a change in their lives. Perhaps he places before them duties that they would not choose. If they are willing to be guided by him, he will give them grace and strength to perform these duties in a spirit of submission and helpfulness. Thus they are being qualified to fill places where their disciplined abilities will make them of great service.

Some God trains by bringing to them disappointment and apparent failure. It is his purpose that they shall learn to master difficulty. He inspires them with a determination to make every apparent failure prove a success.

(1) Often men pray and weep because of the perplexities and obstacles that confront them. But if they will hold the beginning of their confidence steadfast unto the end, he will make their way clear. Success will come to them as they struggle against apparently insurmountable difficulties; and with success will come the greatest joy.

(3) Again, God sees that a worker needs to be more closely associated with him; and to bring this about, he separates him from friends and acquaintances. When he was preparing Elijah for translation, he moved him from place to place that he might not settle down at ease, and thus fail of obtaining spiritual power. And it was God's design that Elijah's influence should be a power to help many souls to gain a wider, more helpful experience.

Let those who are not permitted to rest in quietude, who must be continually on the move, pitching their tent to-night in one place, and to-morrow night in another place, remember that the Lord is leading them, and that this is his way of helping them to form perfect characters. In all the changes that we are required to make, God is to be recognized as our companion, our guide, our dependence.

There are many who are not satisfied to serve God cheerfully in the place that he has marked out for them, or to do uncomplainingly the work that he has placed in their hands. It is right for us to be dissatisfied with the way in which we perform duty, but we are not to be dissatisfied with the duty itself, because we would rather do something else. In his providence God places before human beings service that will be as medicine to their diseased minds. Thus he seeks to lead them to put aside the selfish preference, which, if cherished, would disqualify them for the work he has for them. If they accept and perform this service, their minds will be cured. If they refuse it, they will be left at strife with themselves and with others.

Many are ignorant of how to work for God, not because they need to be ignorant, but because they are unwilling to submit to his training. Moab is spoken of as a failure because, the prophet declares, "Moab hath been at ease from his youth, . . . and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity; therefore his taste remained in him, and his scent is not changed."

Thus it is with those whose hereditary and cultivated tendencies to wrong are not purged from them. Their hearts are not cleansed from defilement. They were given an opportunity to do a work for God, but this work they did not choose to do, because they wished to carry out their own plans.

The Christian is to be prepared for the doing of a work that reveals kindness, forbearance, long-suffering, gentleness, patience. The cultivation of these precious gifts is to come into the life (1) of the Christian, that, when called into service by the Master, he may be ready to use his highest powers in helping and blessing those around him.

The Great Peace Congress

K. C. RUSSELL

One of the greatest events of the century has been the occasion of the First National Arbitration and Peace Congress, which was held in the celebrated Carnegie Hall, New York City, April 14-17. The great and magnificent auditorium was filled to overflowing to the topmost galleries, at nearly all of the services.

The interior of the hall presented a most striking and imposing spectacle, especially to one who can read in this movement a significant sign of the times. The platform was so elaborately decorated as to give the appearance of a typical epoch of eternal peace; silver stars sprinkled on a broad hanging of white, and the eagles and arrows of the American shield were carefully screened by a symbol of brotherhood. A golden angel, bearing in one hand a palm leaf, supplanted the usual war eagle or pike-head on the staffs; broad bands of white, inscribed with the golden word "Peace," depended from the feet of the gilt angel. Above the main galleries was a groundwork of white, surmounted by the flags of every nation under the sun.

To one who is familiar with the prophetic outline concerning what the people and nations will be saying and doing in the last days, this Peace Congress presented a most solemn and impressive fulfilment.

The prophet Isaiah said, under the inspiration of the Spirit, "Many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, . . . and he shall judge among the nations, . . . and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." And the prophet Micah predicted that the nations would be saying the same thing at this very time. What a signal fulfilment of these prophecies before our very eyes! Let it be noted that they were saying these things.

There were thousands of people present saying these things by their enthusiastic applause of those who were saying these things by word of mouth; and there were also the delegates, representing the different nations of earth, who, as the prophet declared, were saying there shall be war no more.

The prophecy which stands in marked contrast to these texts already quoted teaches that the Lord says, "Prepare war, . . . beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears." Joel 3: 9, 10.

As evidence of the fulfilment of these words, one needs only to behold the great nations of earth, with their mighty

Traveling Toward Home

ARCHER WRIGHT

ALONG the beaten road he toiled
With sun-browned face and garments soiled,
A traveler forlorn.
A kind voice called, "Turn in, my friend;
The afternoon is near its end.
Somewhere you soon the night must spend,—
Abide with me till morn."

The stranger paused, but shook his head.
"I might be numbered with the dead
Before the morrow come.
Each step I journey brings me near
To loved ones whom my heart holds dear;"
He added, with a voice of cheer,
"I'm traveling toward home."

One day God called me forth to roam
Afar from friends and earthly home,
A pilgrim on the earth;
Forsaking all, to bear the cross,
For Jesus' sake to suffer loss,
Counting all worldly riches dross
To win eternal worth.

Then came this cheering thought to me:
Where'er I go, on land or sea,
Beneath heaven's starlit dome,
Though from my loved ones severed wide,
If I am by my Saviour's side,
Living for him, the Crucified,
I'm traveling toward home.

And now, when friendly faces smile
And bid me take my ease a while,
Saluting by the way,
I see that traveler forlorn
Who would not tarry till the morn,
And hear his voice in gentle scorn
Refuse an hour's delay.

I see the home where Jesus reigns,
I hear the angels' choral strains;
And though my feet may roam
In paths untried, I will not wait
At ease outside the pearly gate.
I hasten on, lest I, too late,
Lose all in losing home.

"Learn of Me"

MRS. E. G. WHITE.

OUR perplexities will be removed and our anxieties lightened when we heed the invitation, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

At the entrance gate of the path that leads to everlasting life, God places faith, and he lines the whole way with the light and peace and joy of willing obedience. The traveler in this way keeps ever before him the mark of his high calling in Christ. The prize is ever in sight. To him God's commands are righteousness and joy and peace in the Holy Spirit. The things that first appeared to be crosses are found by experience to be crowns.

"Learn of me," is the Saviour's command. Yes, learn of him how to live the Christ-life,— a life pure and holy, free from any taint of sin. There is power for those who receive Christ; for we read, "As many as received him, to them he gave power to become the sons of God." His promise is that if we accept his invitation to learn of him, we shall be anointed with the oil of gladness. Shall we not place ourselves where we can receive this anointing?

Progression the Law of Heaven

Progression, not stagnation, is the law of heaven. Progression is the law of every faculty of mind and body. The things of nature obey this law. In the field there is seen first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. In the spiritual life, as in the physical life, there is to be growth. Step by step we are to advance, ever receiving and imparting, ever gaining a more complete knowledge of Christ, daily approaching more closely the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

The Christian is first a babe in Christ. Then he becomes a child. Constantly he is to make advancement proportionate to the opportunities and privileges granted him. Ever he is to remember that he is not his own, that he has been bought with a price, and that he must make the best possible use of the talents entrusted to him. Even in the infancy of his spiritual understanding, the Christian is to do his best, making steady advancement toward the higher, holier life. He is to realize that he is a laborer together with God. He is to notice the way in which God works, and then strive to attain to the possibilities held out to him, saying, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." He is never to become self-sufficient, but is to count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord. He is to walk and work in the Saviour's companionship. As he does this, his faith will increase. Constantly beholding Christ, he will be changed into the same image from character to character.

A Safe Guide

E. K. SLADE

IN no part of the journey is a pilot needed so much as when the boat is about to enter the harbor. We have almost reached the haven of rest, and on every hand there is imminent danger, seen and unseen, which will result in shipwreck and eternal ruin to many, simply because they fail to realize the importance of heeding most carefully every means that the Lord has provided for leading his people safely.

The promise, "I will guide thee continually," should be cherished by the people of God as never before, just at this time. "To the law and to the testimony" is a test not to be applied merely to those through whom the Lord would speak by his Spirit, but this test applies to all his professed people. A life that is not in harmony with the law and testimony will lead away from God and the truth.

Character and true moral worth are to be prized most highly. Men may speak with eloquence and possess powerful personalities, they may even speak with "the tongue of men and of angels," but if there is no genuineness of character and loyalty to the principles of heaven, all this eloquence becomes of no avail. Yet there are many who yield readily to those who seem to possess magnetic powers, and are easily led by brilliance of speech and fine appearance, who need ever to remember, "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

A burst of eloquence may stir the feelings and arouse high and holy emotions, but we need ever to be on guard lest we be led in ways that are not in harmony with the great principles that are to be the means of safely landing the chosen people of God in the harbor of safety. The enemy will resort to that which is attractive and pleasant to hear and desirable to see; he will make an appearance at times which will seem to be really angelic, as he knows so well how to appeal to the human nature and the emotions of the flesh; but God has set a standard, and that guide must be ours in whomsoever we follow as we are passing the perils on nearing the eternal haven.

Short Sermons on the Ten Commandments

The Fourth Commandment

W. A. MC CUTCHEN

"REMEMBER the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." Ex. 20: 8-11.

In this commandment there are two things — the Sabbath day and the Sabbath command. The Sabbath day is the seventh day; the Sabbath command is to "remember" the day "to keep it holy." We keep the Sabbath command all the week (if at all), and the Sabbath day at the end of the week. In other words, we are to "remember the Sabbath day" all through the week, lay our plans and make all our arrangements and appointments with reference to it, so that we shall be ready for, and prepared to enter upon, its sacred rest when it comes.

He Is Coming

MRS. M. SOLLARS

THERE'S a message, solemn message,
To be given everywhere;
God is speaking to his servants,
"To the world my truth declare."

See! the harvest-time is nearing;
Gather in the golden grain.
He is coming, coming quickly,
As a king, in power to reign.

Will you listen to his message,
In his loving, pleading tone,
Or in thunder notes receive it
From his awful judgment throne?

He is coming, coming quickly;
Soon we'll see him on his way.
Hear the message he is sending,
There will be no more delay.

Unreserved Surrender

MRS. E. G. WHITE

GOD will accept nothing less than unreserved surrender. Half-hearted, sinful Christians can never enter heaven. There they would find no happiness; for they know nothing of the high, holy principles that govern the members of the royal family.

The true Christian keeps the windows of the soul open heavenward. He lives in fellowship with Christ. His will is conformed to the will of Christ. His highest desire is to become more and more Christlike, that he may say with Paul: "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me."

Earnestly and untiringly we are to strive to reach God's ideal for us. Not as a penance are we to do this, but as the only means of gaining true happiness. The only way to gain peace and joy is to have a living connection with him who gave his life for us, who died that we might live, and who lives to unite his power with the efforts of those who are striving to overcome.

Holiness is constant agreement with God. Shall we not strive to be that which Christ so greatly desires us to be, — Christians in deed and in truth,— that the world may see in our lives a revelation of the saving power of truth? This world is our preparatory school. While here we shall meet with trials and difficulties. Continually the enemy of God will seek to draw us away from our allegiance. But while we cleave to him who gave himself for us, we are safe. The whole world was gathered into the embrace of Christ. He died on the cross to destroy him who had the power of death, and to take away the sin of every believing soul. He calls upon us to offer ourselves on the altar of service, a living, consuming sacrifice. We are to make an unreserved consecration to God of all that we have and are.

In this lower school of earth we are to learn the lessons that will prepare us to enter the higher school, where our education will continue under the personal instruction of Christ. Then he will open to us the meaning of his word. Shall we not, in the few days of probation remaining to us, act like men and women who are seeking for life in the kingdom of God, even an eternity of bliss? We can not afford to miss the privilege of seeing Christ face to face, and of hearing from his lips the story of redemption. Shall we put our whole souls into the work of preparing for admission into the higher school, or shall we trifle away the gracious opportunity, wasting the months and years so rapidly passing into eternity?

Our Responsibility and Our Great Need

M. W. DE L'HORBE

IN Matt. 24: 14 we read these words: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

We often read these words, and we read of the rapid progress of the message in all lands, how wonderfully all nations have been opened up for the entrance of the third angel's message, and of the great work done by the various Bible societies in translating the Scriptures into nearly all languages and dialects, and scattering them "like autumn leaves" in every inhabited part of the globe.

But some, while contemplating the work that has been done, are liable to lose sight of the work that is yet to be done before we shall be privileged to see our Saviour coming in the clouds of heaven. We are too apt to rest satisfied with the work that others are doing, while we forget that each one of us has part of this closing work assigned to him, and that the Lord will require us to give an account of our stewardship.

It is true that we are living in the very last of the last days, and that "there shall be delay no longer;" true that we have accomplished as much in the last few years as in all the previous years, but it is also true that we have done but very little compared to the great work yet to be done. Nine tenths of the women of India never heard of a Saviour, and fewer still have had the opportunity of hearing the third angel's message. Then there are the millions of China, Japan, Korea, Russia, Africa, South America, and the islands of the sea who are without hope and without God in the world. And all this work must be done, and must crowd the hour of setting sun.

When we as a people are fully united and become of one heart and one soul, as were the believers in the time of the former rain, then the Lord can use us to do a quick work in the earth. What was the result of the former rain? — Thousands were converted in one day, the sick were healed, the blind received their sight, the lame walked, the deaf ears were opened, and the dumb were able to speak. In the short space of a few years, the gospel was carried to the uttermost parts of the inhabited world.

Brethren and sisters, the time is at hand for the outpouring of the latter rain. And under its influence the work will be cut short in righteousness, and in a very short time the third angel's message will be carried to every creature. We have the promise that the results of the latter rain will be greater than of the former. When thousands are converted in a day, and the Lord confirms the preaching with signs following, and we are scattered everywhere to preach the gospel, as were the believers in the days of the former rain, then converts will be seen flocking to the church from all parts of the earth.

Then, dear brethren and sisters, let us begin now if we are not already doing so, to plead with the Lord to visit his people and quickly prepare us for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit in the power of the latter rain. In "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VIII, pages 20, 21, we read these words: —

"To us to-day, as verily as to the first disciples, the promise of the Spirit belongs. God will to-day endow men and women with power from above, as he endowed those who on the day of Pentecost heard the word of salvation. At this very hour his Spirit and his grace are for all who need them and will take him at his word. . . . Let Christians put away all dissension, and give themselves to God for the saving of the lost. Let them ask in faith for the promised blessing, and it will come."

What precious promises these are for us to-day! May the dear Lord help us to put away all dissension, and fully surrender ourselves and all that we have and are to him for service, living up to the light he has given us on health reform, that our bodies may be fit temples for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

Now let us read Rom. 1: 14-16, making a personal application of this scripture: "I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also. For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."

To whom am I a debtor? What is the debt that I owe? How can I best pay this debt? To whom shall I pay it?

The Touch of Jesus

Touch Thou my tongue, so strangely still
When all thy works show forth thy praise;
May I some grateful song upraise,
Sweet echoes from thy holy hill.

Touch thou my feet, that they may keep
Thy forward step; teach me to run
With sacred haste till tasks are done,
And, wearied, I sink down to sleep.

Touch thou my hands, that they no more
May tighten in their selfish greed;
But, open to the sorer need,
May some of thy great gifts outpour.

Touch thou my heart, and all on fire
Its every beat shall be for thee;
Thy love shall make it glad and free,
Thyself its one supreme desire.

"Your Reasonable Service"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

What shall we render to God for all his benefits to us? We are to acknowledge our dependence upon him by returning to him a portion of the bounty he has bestowed upon us. At a stated time each week we are to lay by in store, as God has prospered us, something for the advancement of his work.

All that we have is lent us by God, to be used in his service. Were this more faithfully remembered, the selfishness which exists in so many hearts would be uprooted. But men refuse to give themselves to God. They forget that they have been bought with the blood of his only begotten Son; forget that they are indebted to him for every breath they breathe, for every dollar they possess. They use his money in building houses and adding acre to acre, solely for self-gratification. A just God will call them to account for misapplying his means, robbing his needy children of the necessaries of life in order to gratify their expensive tastes.

Those who refuse to place themselves on the Lord's side are robbing him of the service he claims. What rent are they paying him for living in his house, this world? They act as if they had created the world, as if they had a right to use their possessions as they please. God marks their misuse of his talents. He graciously permits the unrepentant sinner to live out his probation; but his time is appointed. He is wasting his physical, mental, and moral strength. He is squandering his God-given opportunities. Instead of using brain, bone, and muscle in accomplishing all he can for the advancement of the kingdom of God, he is studying how he can please and glorify self. He is closing the door to the improvement of his capabilities. The adoption of false theories has placed him in opposition to the law of God.

[The Scriptures speak of the large class of professors who are not doers. Many who claim to believe in God deny him by their works. Their worship of money, houses, and lands marks them as idolaters and apostates. All selfishness is covetousness, and is, therefore, idolatry. Many who have placed their names on the church roll, as believers in God and the Bible, are worshiping the goods the Lord has entrusted to them that they may be his almoners. They may not literally bow down before their earthly treasure, but nevertheless it is their god. They are worshipers of mammon. To the things of this world they offer the homage which belongs to the Creator. He who sees and knows all things records the falsity of their profession.

From the soul-temple of a worldly Christian, God is excluded, in order that worldly policy may have abundant room. Money is his god. It belongs to Jehovah, but he to whom it is entrusted refuses to let it flow forth in deeds of benevolence. Did he appropriate it in accordance with God's design, the incense of his good works would ascend to heaven, and from thousands of converted souls would be heard songs of praise and thanksgiving.

To advance God's kingdom, to arouse those dead in trespasses and sins, to speak to sinners of the healing balm of the Saviour's love,— it is for this that our money should be used. But too often it is used for self-glorification. Instead of being the means of bringing souls to a knowledge of God and Christ, thus calling forth praise and gratitude to the Giver of all good, earthly possessions have been the means of eclipsing the glory of God and obscuring the view of heaven. By the wrong use of money the world has been filled with evil practises. The door of the mind has been closed against the Redeemer.

God declares, "The gold and the silver is mine." He keeps a strict account with every son and daughter of Adam, that he may know how they are appropriating his means. Worldly men and worldly women may say, "But I am not a Christian. I do not profess to serve God." But does this make them any less guilty for burying his means, his resources, in worldly enterprises, to advance their selfish interests?

I speak to you who know not God, who may read these lines; for in his providence they may be brought to your notice. What are you doing with your Lord's goods? What are you doing with the physical and mental powers he has given you? Are you able of yourself to keep the human machinery in motion? Did God speak but one word to say that you must die, you would at once be still in death. Day by day, hour by hour, minute by minute, God works by his infinite power to keep you alive. It is he who supplies the breath which keeps life in your body. Did God neglect man as man neglects God, what would become of the race?

The great Medical Missionary has an interest in the work of his hands. He presents before men the peril of closing the door of the heart against the Saviour, saying, "Turn ye, turn ye; for why will ye die?"] (1)

Stewardship, p. 223-224

Church Order

H. W. COTTRELL

According to the Bible, Christians should form themselves into local church organizations. "Paul, called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ, . . . unto the church of God which is at Corinth." 1 Cor. 1:1, 2. "Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians." 2 Thess. 1:1. The apostle addressed an epistle to the church in the house of Philemon: "To the church in thy house." Philemon 2.

These quotations show the local nature of these churches. There was, however, in some of them a lack of complete order and organization; so Paul set Titus and himself to the task of completing the work of local church organization, and thus introducing order, as may be observed from the following quotations of Scripture. To Titus Paul said: "For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting ["left undone," margin], and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee." Titus 1:5; 1 Cor. 11:34.

Their undertaking to bring about order in the churches was in harmony with the will of the Lord. And, seeing the great Head of the church changeth never ("I am the Lord, I change not"), such work is still in harmony with his will. "For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints." "Let all things be done decently and in order." 1 Cor. 14:33, 40.

The people of God were also organized, originally, in a larger, broader, and more complete manner than simply the church local. For we read, "And he [Christ] is the head of the body, the church." In this we find a blending of all local churches, isolated individuals, and the organization of the general body, or church, and Christ proclaimed its head.

Notwithstanding, every local church should have its special servants,— elder and deacons,— and each of the larger formations of the church, as the State, union, and General Conferences, should have its chief servant, or president; yet that church, be it ever so local, or more general, that does not "reckon" Christ as its head and itself a part of the larger church, has not for its head the head of the body, hence is only weakness and darkness, and will crumble in the end.

The admonition, "Feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood," and the assurances, "Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, . . . that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish," have evident reference to the church general.

The Loud Cry

MRS. EDITH B. GOODRICH

The loud cry is swelling
O'er mountain and dwelling;
Awake, now, O sleeper, and flee for thy life!
The black storm-clouds hover —
O, fly to the Cover
Prepared for this season of terrible strife!

The loud cry is swelling;
Lo, Jesus is telling
In tones loud as thunder, "The end is at hand!"
The signs all around us
Distress and astound us;
The nations, perplexed, in uncertainty stand.

The heathen are waking,
Their idols forsaking,
And doors that were closing are open again!
O Lord, wake the sleepers!
O Lord, send the reapers!
The loud cry is here. May we heed it! Amen.

In Union with Christ

MRS. E. G. WHITE

We bear the name of Christian. Let us be true to this name. To be a Christian means to be Christlike. It means to follow Christ in self-denial, bearing aloft his banner of love, honoring him by unselfish words and deeds. In the life of the true Christian there is nothing of self — self is dead. There was no selfishness in the life that Christ lived while on this earth. Bearing our nature, he lived a life wholly devoted to the good of others.

Christ "gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." He made an offering so complete that through his grace every one may reach the standard of perfection. Of those who receive his grace and follow his example it will be written in the book of life, "Complete in him — without spot or stain."

In word and deed Christ's followers are to be pure and true. In this world — a world of iniquity and corruption — Christians are to reveal the attributes of Christ. All they do and say is to be free from selfishness. Christ desires to present them to the Father "without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing," purified through his grace, bearing his likeness.

In his great love, Christ surrendered himself for us. He gave himself for us to meet the necessities of the striving, struggling soul. We are to surrender ourselves to him. When this surrender is entire, Christ can finish the work he began for us by the surrender of himself. Then he can bring to us complete restoration.

Christ gave himself for the redemption of the race, that all who believe in him may have everlasting life. Those who appreciate this great sacrifice receive from the Saviour that most precious of all gifts — a clean heart. They gain an experience that is more valuable than gold or silver or precious stones. They sit together in heavenly places in Christ, enjoying in communion with him the joy and peace that he alone can give. They love him with heart and mind and soul and strength, realizing that they are his blood-bought heritage. Their spiritual eyesight is not dimmed by worldly policy or worldly aims. They are one with Christ as he is one with the Father.

Think you not that Christ values those who live wholly for him? Think you not that he visits those who, like the beloved John, are for his sake in hard and trying places? He finds his faithful ones, and holds communion with them, encouraging and strengthening them.

Said the great apostle to the Gentiles, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." By faith Paul appropriated the grace of Christ, and this grace supplied the necessities of his soul. By faith he received the heavenly gift, and imparted it to souls longing for light. This is the experience we need, that, in a time when iniquity prevails, we may say, "I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." Pray for this faith. Strive for it. Believe that God will give it to you.

There is a great work to be done in our world. This is no dreamland. Before us are living realities. On every hand are to be seen the manifestations of Satan's power. Let us co-operate with him who works to restore and uplift. And let us not forget that he who works for Christ must recruit his strength at the source of all strength, that he may press forward in the power of God, filled with the faith that will not let go. Christians need power of thought, firmness of will, and knowledge that comes from the study of God's Word. They can not afford to fill their minds with trifles. Every day they must be renewed in spiritual power.

Learn of him who has said, "I am meek and lowly in heart." Learning of him, you will find rest. Day by day you will gain an experience in the things of God, day by day realize the greatness of his salvation and the glory of a union with him. Constantly you will learn better how to live Christlike, and constantly you will grow more like the Saviour.

If we will die to self, if we will enlarge our idea of what Christ can be to us and what we can be to him, if we will unite with one another in the bonds of Christian fellowship, God will work through us with mighty power. Then we shall be sanctified through the truth. We shall indeed be chosen by God and controlled by his Spirit. Every day of life will be precious to us, because we shall see in it an opportunity to use our entrusted gifts for the blessing of others.

Short Sermons on the Ten Commandments

The Seventh Commandment

W. A. MC CUTCHEN

"Thou shalt not commit adultery." Ex. 20: 14. The Saviour's comment on this commandment corroborates what was said of the preceding one. How broad and far-reaching these commandments are in their meaning! He says, "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: but I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." Matt. 5: 27, 28.

From this we see again that by a thought God's law may be violated, and it does not have to go to the length of the actual deed or overt act for man's course to constitute a violation, and he be guilty of the sin — so pure and broad are God's commandments. John says, "Sin is the transgression of the law;" so whenever one conceives and harbors in the mind, with a desire to carry into effect the overt act of transgression, he commits sin, for "sin is the transgression of the law," either in thought, word, or act, and we can not get away from this fact.

Thus we see with reference to this command, that it enjoins chastity and purity in thought as well as in deed. In fact, whenever there is a transgression in deed, it is because it was first in the thoughts, the mind, the heart. "For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness." Mark 7: 21, 22. In this connection it is well to consider the language of James: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God can not be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed." James 1: 13, 14. Even to be tempted is not a sin; the sin is in cherishing the desire and yielding to the temptation. Temptations to do wrong may come into the mind, but so long as they are not entertained, but resisted, it is not sin to the individual. Paul tells us that Christ himself "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Heb. 4: 15. The sin is in yielding to the temptation. James puts it thus: "But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin." This accords with what has already been stated, that as soon as the evil thought is conceived in the mind with a cherished desire to carry it out, which is the lusting here spoken of, it is sin, or "it bringeth forth sin." It has been said that we can not prevent the birds from flying over our heads, but we can prevent them from building their

God's Law Set to Music

Ps. 119: 54

ELIZA H. MORTON

SET to music is God's law,
  Music sweet and clear.
When I keep its precepts all,
  What have I to fear?
Glad with notes of tuneful love
  Pilgrimage below,
Statutes of the Lord my song
  From the long ago.

How I love that precious law!
  Joyful is my heart,
For the will of God is there
  Of my life a part;
O the glory of that love,
  Spring of life and peace,
House of pilgrimage made glad,
  Freedom,— full release!

Strike the key-note loud and long,—
  Hear, obey, and live.
Angels with their harmony
  Tones of rapture give.
Jesus kept that holy law,
  Doing nothing wrong.
Reconcilement is for me,
  Law of God my song.

"No Other Gods Before Me"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

EVERY true child of God will be sifted as wheat, and in the sifting process every cherished pleasure which diverts the mind from God must be sacrificed. In many families the mantel-shelves, stands, and tables are filled with ornaments and pictures. Albums filled with photographs of the family and their friends are placed where they will attract the attention of visitors. Thus the thoughts, which should be upon God and heavenly interests, are brought down to common things. Is not this a species of idolatry? Should not the money thus spent have been used to bless humanity, to relieve the suffering, to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry? Should it not be placed in the Lord's treasury to advance his cause and build up his kingdom in the earth?

This matter is of great importance, and it is urged upon you to save you from the sin of idolatry. Blessing would come to your souls if you would obey the word spoken by the Holy One of Israel: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Many are creating unnecessary cares and anxieties for themselves by devoting time and thought to the unnecessary ornaments with which their houses are filled. The power of God is needed to arouse them from this devotion; for to all intents and purposes it is idolatry.

He who searches the heart desires to win his people from every species of idolatry. Let the Word of God, the blessed book of life, occupy the tables now filled with useless ornaments. Spend your money in buying books that will be the means of enlightening the mind in regard to present truth. The time you waste in moving and dusting the multitudinous ornaments in your house, spend in writing a few lines to your friends, in sending papers or leaflets or little books to some one who knows not the truth. Grasp the word of the Lord as the treasure of infinite wisdom and love; this is the guide-book that points out the path to heaven. It points us to the sin-pardoning Saviour, saying, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." O that you would search the Scriptures with prayerful hearts, and a spirit of surrender to God! O that you would search your hearts as with a lighted candle, and discover and break the finest thread that binds you to worldly habits, which divert the mind from God! Plead with God to show you every practise that draws your thoughts and affections from him. God has given his holy law to man as his measure of character. By this law you may see and overcome every defect in your character. You may sever yourself from every idol, and link yourself to the throne of God by the golden chain of grace and truth.

The apostle writes: "Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer; distributing to the necessity of saints; given to hospitality." "The night is far spent; the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light. Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying. But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof."

There is none too much self-denial, none too much self-sacrifice, none too much overcoming evil with good. If all the inclinations to gratify the taste for frivolous things were firmly resisted, there would be more money to use for God. Shall we not make decided changes in this respect? Shall we not set money flowing in channels where it will glorify God?

When I see families poorly clad, and houses destitute of those things that are necessary for comfort, and then visit the homes where every niche and corner is filled with useless ornaments, I am tired of the sight of my eyes. Let us search the Word and see if there is not some instruction there that will teach us how to relieve the maladies that have become chronic in the spiritual life of many. "Is not this the fast that I have chosen?" God asks, "to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh? Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily: and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy rereward. . . . If thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness shall be as the noonday: and the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not."

"Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity," Paul declares, "I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing. Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil."

The Son of the infinite God came to this earth, and honored it with his presence. He emptied himself of his glory, and clothed his divinity with humanity, that humanity might touch humanity, and reveal to fallen man the perfect love of God. Christ did not come to earth to live a life of pleasure, of self-indulgence. He lived not to please himself. "The Son of man," he said, "is come to seek and to save that which was lost."

We have great changes to make before we reach perfection. God calls for complete self-surrender. We must guard diligently our lips, lest they speak guile. We must be strict with ourselves, that we bring not false principles into our dealings with others, and lead souls from the safe path. We must work the works of God. Adhere to correct principles, whatever the cost to yourself. In appeals and warnings let your light shine forth to others. Economize your pence that you may have pounds with which to help the cause of truth. Keep your tables free from many pictures and ornaments, which are as nothing in comparison with the Word of God. Let your holy example lead the sympathies of your friends heavenward: "for he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God, and approved of men. Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification. For even Christ pleased not himself; but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me. For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be likeminded one toward another according to Jesus Christ: that ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Faith and Works, or Faith That Works

W. H. GRANGER

Although the Scriptures say, plainly as words can, that we are justified by faith without works; yet the opinion generally prevails that it must be by faith and works, because there is another text that says just as plainly, that "faith without works is dead." Then again, the Bible teaches that eternal life is a free gift from God to those who believe in Jesus. Over against this is the text that says, just as plainly, that he will reward every man according to his works. Are these texts harmonious, and if so, how are they to be understood? They are perfectly harmonious when rightly divided.

In the first place, it must be understood that these texts are not speaking of the same thing, but are teaching on two widely separated phases of the one great subject — salvation. I will state the difference by saying that eternal life is indeed a free gift to those who believe in Jesus, and that it is obtained by faith alone without works. The reward for works is not eternal life, but degrees of honor in the kingdom. Hence it is true that eternal life comes to the believer without works, and it is also true that all will be rewarded according to their works.

Had man never sinned, then eternal life would have been his as a reward for obedience. But when man sinned, he forfeited his right to life, and excluded the remotest possibility of his ever enjoying it thereafter, except as a free gift from the Author of life. The life which we now enjoy is not ours by right of merit, but is a free gift to all, both good and bad alike, through Christ.

In the first place, since we have already sinned, and thus forfeited our right to life, if the Lord were now to reward us with life in proportion to our works, is it not clear that life would simply be a wage paid in return for works, and hence not a free gift? Furthermore, inasmuch as we have all sinned, and since eternal life can come only as a reward to those who yield absolute, perfect, and eternal obedience, it is evident that no human being would have a sufficient store of good works with which to secure eternal life. To illustrate: say, for instance, here is a man who by his works has earned one thousand years of life in the kingdom; another has earned ten times as much; another one hundred times as much; it can plainly be seen that when the time paid them in wages for their works would expire, God must either come to their rescue with a gift of life, not in exchange for works, but absolutely free forever, or they would perish when their wages in life would expire. Hence man's only hope of securing eternal life is as a free gift from God. It is wholly by grace through faith; otherwise it would not be of grace, but of debt. Works have their place, not as a means of justification, but as the fruit of it. It is not by faith and works, but rather, by faith that works that we are to be justified unto eternal life.

The Author of Order

J. S. WASHBURN

"God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints." A pamphlet recently written conveys the idea that every church is independent, and that there should be no conference organization. All general organization is branded as Babylon and the papacy. But if this principle were to prevail, there would indeed be a very Babylon of confusion and disorder among us. Each church sending out its workers here and there without coöperation, with no central executive committees to carry out the wishes of all the churches, everything would certainly be running at cross-purposes.

But the whole plan is contrary to the plan of God and the order of heaven, and the order among his own people, as indicated by many scriptures. "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." "We are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." We are members one of another.

Heaven is not conducted on the principle of independent congregations. There was a high and mighty angel, who started the idea in heaven of congregational independence. He gathered together his followers. But the Lord had no room for an independent congregation in heaven, and that mighty angel was cast out, and all the members of his church with him, out of the unity of the one family in heaven, separated from the family, cut off by the divine surgeon from the great body. This surgical operation has caused him pain, and has caused us all much tribulation. We have had enough of this experiment of congregational independence.

It is true that in the New Testament, the church in Jerusalem, the church in Antioch, the church in Rome, are mentioned; but it is also true that the whole body of God's people is many times called "the church of Christ," "the church of the living God," etc. Matt. 16:18: "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." What church was this? I ask. Was it the church in Jerusalem, the church in Antioch, the church in Corinth? — No. It was the church, the whole church, the body of believers.

Again: "God hath set some in the church, first apostles," etc. In what church? — In the church. Of Jesus, Paul writes that God "hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all." What local church is this? This is not a local church. This is the church of the living God.

"To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God." "Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." Eph. 5:25. "That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." Verse 27. "But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." 1 Tim. 3:15. The Scripture speaks clearly of the "general assembly and church of the First-born, which are written in heaven."

Thus it is plain that the divine plan does not contemplate independent, unrelated organizations scattered here and there, but the church as one united whole. There is one Lord, one Spirit, one faith, and logically the church of God is one church. The Lord is bringing out such a people from the Babylon and confusion of the world, and forming them into one, welding them together.

The most wonderfully organized people the world has ever known was Israel. The excellent advice of Jethro to Moses that there should be companies and order by divisions, and yet all recognizing a common church government (for Israel was "the church in the wilderness"), is still good counsel, written for our learning. And when Israel was divided and scattered among the hills and valleys of Palestine, they were still one church, one body in government and organization.

The council at Jerusalem is an evidence that the disciples believed in and practised an organized unity. Note that at this council certain orders were given. These were the result of their counsel. Note the expression, "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us." Read further Acts 16:4, 5: "And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem. And so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily."

These decrees that were ordained of the apostles and elders were not popery. Here was a central council, a conference, that had ordained certain things; and they went through all the different churches, delivering these decrees for them to keep; and so, that is, by this means, was the church established in the faith, and increased in number daily. In this connection read also Acts 15:41: "And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches."

This certainly is as clear as the resolutions that are passed by the General Conference and are sent out to all our people; though our General Conference has never taken upon itself as yet to call

The Beauty of Holiness

ELIZA H. MORTON

WHAT makes the beauty of the cloud,
The beauty of the rose?
What makes the heavens awe the mind
With their deep, calm repose?
It is the unity that's there
The order of our God.
All nature is a system grand,—
The beauty of the Lord.

The beauty of his holiness
He would behold in us,
In word, in deed, in kindly tone,
In all that's generous,—
A well-developed character
As white as snowy dove,
And shedding forth a steady light
Made wonderful by love.

The beauty of his holiness
Upon his church should rest,
And orderly his worship be
In Christ made manifest.
Most beautiful that union is
In God's own house of prayer,
For then the angels from the heights
Delight to linger there.

The beauty of his holiness
Through flesh at length shall shine.
Immortal in its loveliness
May be this flesh of mine.
The Spirit of the living God
In every pulsing vein
May lift my body from this earth
To heaven's own lofty plain.

The beauty of his holiness
Will make the desert bloom;
'Twill rest on every barren place,
And drive away earth's gloom;
'Twill draw deific glory down
Till heaven and earth are one,
And in them both forevermore
God's will be fully done.

"No Other Gods Before Me"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

DURING the night I was sorely distressed. A great burden rested upon me. I had been pleading with God to work in behalf of his people. My attention was called to the money which they have invested in photographs. I was taken from house to house, through the homes of our people, and as I went from room to room, my Instructor said, "Behold the idols which they have accumulated!" (1)

(1) [As I visit the homes of our people and our schools, I see that all the available space on tables, what-nots, and mantelpieces is filled up with photographs. On the right hand and on the left are seen the pictures of human faces. God desires this order of things to be changed. Were Christ on earth, he would say, "Take these things hence." I have been instructed that these pictures are as so many idols, taking up the time and thought which should be sacredly devoted to God.

These photographs cost money. Is it consistent for us, knowing the work that is to be done at this time, to spend God's money in producing pictures of our own faces and the faces of our friends? Should not every dollar that we can spare be used in the upbuilding of the cause of God? These pictures take money that should be sacredly devoted to God's service; and they divert the mind from the truths of God's Word.

This making and exchanging photographs is a species of idolatry. Satan is doing all he can to eclipse heaven from our view. Let us not help him by making picture-idols. We need to reach a higher standard than these human faces suggest. The Lord says, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Those who claim to believe in Christ need to realize that they are to reflect his image. It is his likeness that is to be kept before the mind. The words that are spoken are to be freighted with heavenly inspiration.]

Christ looks upon a world filled with the din of merchandise and trade, with the dishonesty and scheming of buyers and sellers. In their desire to get gain, men have lost sight of the laws of justice and equity. "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth." Satan has devised a multitude of ways in which to keep men from serving God. He has invented sports and games, into which men enter with such intensity that one would suppose a crown of life was to reward the winner. At the horse races and football matches, which are attended by thousands and thousands of people, lives for which Christ shed his blood are thrown away. What will become of the souls of the men and boys whose lives are thus extinguished? Will they be counted worthy of the redemption which Christ died to secure for them?

Looking upon these God-dishonoring scenes, Christ asks, "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" He calls the attention of men to the nobler world which they have lost from view. He points them to the threshold of heaven, flushed with the glory of the infinite God.

(1) [Those who have taken part in the solemn rite of baptism have pledged themselves to seek for those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God; pledged themselves to labor earnestly for the salvation of sinners. God asks those who take his name, How are you using the powers that have been redeemed by the death of my Son? Are you doing all in your power to rise to a greater height in spiritual understanding? Are you adjusting your interests and actions in harmony with the momentous claims of eternity?

Let there be a reformation among the people of God. "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Those upon whom the Lord has placed the burden of his work are struggling to proclaim the message, that souls perishing in ignorance may be warned. Can you not, by self-denial, do something to help them in their work? Arouse, and show by your unselfish zeal and earnestness that you are converted.

Every dollar is required in the work of saving souls. The money invested by the professed people of God in getting pictures made of human faces would support several missionaries in the field. Many small streams, when put together, swell into a large river. We embezzle our Lord's goods when we use for selfish pleasure the means which should be used to proclaim the last message of warning. If you spend the Lord's money for self-gratification, how can you expect him to continue to bestow his goods on you? How does the Master regard those who selfishly invest his money in photographs? That very money could have been used to purchase reading-matter to send to those in the darkness of ignorance.

The truth that God has given us must be heralded to the world. We have been given the privilege of doing this work. We are to sow the seed of truth beside all waters. The Lord calls upon us to practise self-denial and self-sacrifice. The gospel demands entire consecration. The necessities of the cause demand all that we can give. Our indulgence in photographs has been a selfish gratification on our part, which bears silent witness against us. By this indulgence a large amount of wood, hay, and stubble has been brought to the foundation, to be consumed by the fires of the last day.

After going from home to home, and seeing the many photographs, I was instructed to warn our people against this evil. This much we can do for God. We can put these picture-idols out of sight. They have no power for good, but interpose between God and the soul. They can do nothing to help in sowing the seeds of truth. Christ calls upon those who claim to be following him to put on the whole armor of God. Our educational institutions need to feel the reforming power of the Spirit of God. "If the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men." Those who are engaged as teachers in our schools and sanitariums should reach a high standard of consecration. And the students in these institutions, who are fitting themselves to go forth as missionaries, should learn to practise self-denial.

We are God's stewards, and "it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful." The money that God has entrusted to us is to be carefully husbanded. We are to increase in efficiency by putting to the best use the talents given us, that at God's coming we may return to him his own with usury.] (1)

IN an hour of danger a Christian minister prayed this prayer: "O Lord, we are imperiled, but thou art imperiled with us, and our deliverance is thy deliverance too." O to be so linked with God and his cause that we can not either suffer or triumph apart from him!

Message

CHEER to the heart that is broken;
Love to the loveless man;
Peace to the life that's held no peace
Since ever the world began.

Care to be borne for those who bear;
Pain to be borne for pain;
And ever the life in sadness sings
The words of a sad refrain.

But the world is wrapt in suffering,
As the world is wrapt in sin —
And he lives most who loves the most
His toiling kith and kin.

Ah, then, let us give of the pearls of man
To easier make the strife;
Give of the gifts that God has given,
Yea, give the gift of life.

For to give of life to a lifeless life
Is a life that yieldeth pain;
But to give of life to a lifeless life
Will bring back life again.

"The Trial of Your Faith"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

GOD says of his people, "I . . . will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say, It is my people: and they shall say, The Lord is my God."

By trial the Lord proves the strength of his children. Is the heart strong to bear? Is the conscience void of offense? Does the Spirit bear witness with our spirit that we are the children of God? This the Lord ascertains by trying us. In the furnace of affliction he purifies us from all dross. He sends us trials, not to cause us needless pain, but to lead us to look to him, to strengthen our endurance, to teach us that if we do not rebel, but put our trust in him, we shall see of his salvation.

Christ has given us no assurance that to attain perfection of character is an easy matter. It is a conflict, a battle, a march day after day. It is through much tribulation that we enter the kingdom of heaven. If we sit with Christ on his throne, we must first be partakers with him in his suffering. Individually we must experience that which was spoken of Christ. It became him, "in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through suffering." "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered." Shall we then be timid and cowardly because of the trials we must meet as we advance? Shall we not meet them without repining or complaint? In this world we shall have tribulation; but the Lord Jesus will give us all the help that we ask, and believe that he will bestow.

By God's mighty cleaver of truth we have been taken from the quarry of the world and brought into the workshop of the Lord to be prepared for a place in his temple. In this work the hammer and chisel must act their part, and then comes the polishing. Rebel not under this process of grace. You may be a rough stone, on which much work must be done before you are prepared for the place God designs you to fill. You need not be surprised if with the hammer and the chisel of trial God cuts away your defects of character. He alone can accomplish this work. And be assured that he will not strike one useless blow. His every blow is struck in love, for your eternal good and happiness. He knows your defects, and works to restore, not to destroy. He sends trials to you to make you strong to do and to suffer for him.

During the march of the children of Israel through the wilderness, God tried their faith, to lead them to trust in him. Before they left Egypt, he began to give them these lessons, to lead them to look to him as their deliverer and protector. The tribulations through which they passed were a part of his great plan. It was not by chance that they came to Marah, where they could not drink of the water, "for it was bitter." Thus God desired to teach them a lesson of trust. But they murmured and complained, crying out in distrust, "What shall we drink?" Do we not too often, like the Israelites, forget God, and by murmuring and complaining lose the blessing of the trial?

Remember that in every time of trouble Jesus is near you, seeking to impress his image upon you. He is trying to help you to carry the cross. He is close beside you, seeking to lead you to see how sorry he is that you make mistakes. He is always ready to clasp the hand stretched out for aid.

Christ's love for his children is as strong as it is tender. It is a love stronger than death; for he died for us. It is a love more true than that of a mother for her children. The mother's love may change; but Christ's love is changeless. "I am persuaded," Paul says, "that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

In every trial we have strong consolation. Is not our Saviour touched with the feeling of our infirmities? Has he not been tempted in all points like as we are? And has he not invited us to take every trial and perplexity to him? Then let us not make ourselves miserable over to-morrow's burdens. Bravely and cheerfully carry the burdens of to-day. To-day's trust and faith we must have. But we are not asked to live more than a day at a time. He who gives strength for to-day will give strength for to-morrow. Let us take our sorrows to the Lord in prayer, saying, "My burdens are too heavy for me. Wilt thou bear them?" Christ will say, "I will take them. With everlasting kindness will I have mercy upon thee." Nothing wounds the soul like the sharp doubts of unbelief. When trial comes, as it will, do not worry or complain. Silence in the soul makes more distinct the voice of God. "Then are they glad because they be quiet." Remember that underneath you are the everlasting arms. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him." He is guiding you into a harbor of gracious experience, and he bids you, "Be still, and know that I am God."

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." If you are patient, "the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth," will be found "unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ."

A Camp-Meeting Suggestion

M. E. KERN

PROBABLY all our conferences arrange for special young people's services at the camp-meetings, and this is right. Many boys and girls have accepted their Saviour, and then received an inspiration to work for him in connection with these meetings especially planned for the young. But it is generally expected that the young people will attend all the other meetings as well as their own, and not doing what is expected of them, they are often made to feel out of harmony with the camp-meeting plans. Would it not be well for conference officers to show by their arrangements that they appreciate the nature of children and youth?

The message of Elijah is to turn "the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers." Note the order. Is it not as important that parents' meetings be held at camp-meeting as that special meetings be held for the young? How fitting that an hour should be set aside each day when special meetings should be held for parents, for youth, and for children. There may be many things of importance pressing for a hearing, but there is nothing more important to God-fearing parents than the training of their children. Our people may learn much about the special truths of the message, about religious legislation and foreign missions, but unless they go home from camp-meeting with a better practical knowledge of how to train their precious boys and girls for God and this message, the meeting has been largely a failure for them. It has occurred to me that frequently at camp-meeting, like Martha, we busy ourselves about "many things," but leave undone the "one thing needful." May the time come when our people assembled together will be seen earnestly studying and praying for wisdom to train their children for God and the third angel's message. Some day the question will be asked, "Where is the flock that was given thee, thy beautiful flock?"

Babel

In years of old vain builders wrought
An impious tower to heaven;
And godless effort came to naught,
And was in ruin riven;
God set confusion on their daring scheme,
And Babel was a vanity, a dream.

And thus through all ensuing time,
When hearts of hatred plan
To rear against God's will sublime
Some weak device of man,
He writeth Babel on their ladder's rungs,
And dies their scheming mid a strife of tongues.

Faithfulness in Service

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The parable of the talents should receive prayerful, critical attention. By it we are shown the importance of trading diligently and conscientiously on our Lord's goods. Not one thread of selfishness is to be woven into his work. Worldly ambition is not to be cherished. We are to keep self out of sight, holding Christ before the world. We are to bring glory to God by doing our best to be perfect men and perfect women.

Christ gave the parable of the talents to show us that all the blessings we have come from God. Our gifts belong to him. They are not to be used according to human judgment, but according to the directions given in God's Word. We are to study how we may use these gifts for the up-building of the cause of truth.

In the parable our Saviour says, "And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability." Here we are shown that different gifts are entrusted to different individuals. With the talents given him, be they many or few, each one is to do his utmost to glorify God. Talents improve and multiply as they are used in the service of the Master.

In the parable, the one who received five talents and the one who received two are represented as trading wisely on their talents, so that when their Lord returned, they were able to present to him that which he had entrusted to them, together with what they had gained by trading. And to each were spoken the words of commendation, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord."

"But he that had received one went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money." When the time came for him to render an account, he said, "Lord, I knew thee that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed: and I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine. His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strawed: thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

To-day thousands are doing as the unfaithful servant did. They live for self, when God desires them to improve their abilities for him, that they may act their part in his work. They excuse themselves by saying that they have but one talent. But if used for God, that one talent would accomplish much. By careful use the slothful servant might have doubled the talent, which instead of using he hid in the ground.

This parable shows the need of using every gift aright. To all comes the opportunity of blessing others by speaking helpful, uplifting words. This is a talent, and the failure to improve it brings great loss.

In our work this thought of glorifying God is to be made prominent. The business man is to bring the principles of heaven into every line of his work. In all he does the Christlikeness is to be clearly revealed. He who tills the soil is to make his work an object-lesson of the careful, thorough work which must be done in the culture of the soil of the heart. The mechanic is to do his very best, bringing his work as near perfection as possible.

"He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much." The Lord can not unite with those who are careless and slothful in their work. He leaves them to themselves, choosing for his service those who do well every piece of work they handle, those who manage economically, gathering up the fragments, so that nothing will be lost.

Those who work for the Lord must remember that they are members of the royal family, and that they are to do all that their hands find to do as in the sight of the heavenly universe. Never must they slight their work, doing it in such a way that he who has redeemed them will be ashamed of it. They are to guard against doing anything that will lead to carelessness or irreverence. They are ever to remember the words, "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." By following principles of strict integrity, they are to build up a symmetrical character.

Christ will increase the talents of every faithful worker. This is the principle he always follows in dealing with his servants in this world. But the full honor in store for the one who in this life works with an eye single to the glory of God, will not be bestowed until the day of judgment. Then Christ will say to him, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Character Tested by Our Gifts

R. C. PORTER

The history of the past shows that there is a test of character in the way the people of God relate themselves to giving for the advancement of his work, as truly as in their relation to any other of his precepts.

If when man was placed on trial in the garden of Eden, he had stood the tests brought to him, he would have been given the inheritance of the earth as an eternal possession, free from the effects of sin and the curse. His failure to pass successfully that period of trial has involved all his posterity in the results of his failure. Were it not for the fact that where sin abounds, grace does much more abound, there would be no hope that we would live unselfishly during our period of probation, since our situation is far worse than that of our first parents at the time of their failure. Satan is also more skilled by long experience in luring us into sin. We can never be sufficiently grateful that the Lord gave some one a heart so free from selfishness that home ties and self-interest did not prevent him from bringing the truth to us.

The early history of this work abounds with examples of unselfish devotion to the cause of God. The laborers were called upon to work under poverty and many other privations. Many sacrificed all to establish institutions through which to carry the work forward more rapidly. They never have had occasion to regret the sacrifices they made. The results have abundantly proved that God was leading in all these ways to hasten forward the work of the message.

We are now living where we are reaping the harvest of their sowing. God has watered the seed thus sown in tears, by unselfish hands, and though many of the laborers have fallen from excessive toil, while they rest in hope, the seed sown is springing up in all parts of the world. The work now rests upon those of us who have received the truth from these faithful pioneers. This is our day of opportunity. How shall we treat the work of God that has come into our hands at the cost of the life and sacrifice of the Son of God, and the self-sacrificing labors of martyrs and the pioneers in this work?

Ancient Israel had many in their midst who, during their day of opportunity and trial, "murmured in their tents," and spoke against those who were leading in the work when the Lord called upon them to advance. This spirit so weakened them that they were blinded to all the opening providences of God, and when they were on the borders of the land of promise and might have gone in at once, it delayed them until their carcasses fell in the wilderness. Caleb and Joshua gave their hearts faithfully to

Exclusions

If I would talk with God, my hasty tongue
Must hold itself for that high converse pure,
As one who has appointment with a king
Scorns gossip with a minion at the gate.
If I would listen to the voice of God,
I dare not hear the prattlement of men,
The bargaining, the vaunting, the untruth,
The words that crawl and sting; for ears have room
For somewhat, and no more. If I would walk
Beside my God, his comrade and his friend,
I must go his way; he will not go mine.
If I would own the wealth of God, the gold,
The gems of affluent heaven, like the dross
Of basest refuse I must hurl away
The spoil of greed and all the miser's glut.
If I would know the wondrous lore of God,
What sciences I shall not dare to know!
If I would wield the awful power of God,
How I must sink myself in helplessness!
If I would revel in the love of God,
What lesser loves must I disdain to serve!
O Infinite, O Lover, O Supreme,
Father and Leader and unfailing Friend,
What littles must I gladly lose for thee,
What nothings must I tread beneath my feet
To reach thy hand, thy bosom, and thy face!

Not by Might Nor by Power

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THOSE who search for worldly distinction and glory make a sad mistake. It is the one who denies self, giving to others the preference, who will sit nearest to Christ on his throne. He who reads the heart sees the true merit possessed by his lowly, self-sacrificing disciples, and because they are worthy he places them in positions of distinction, though they do not realize their worthiness and do not seek for honor.

To them Christ's words of encouragement are spoken, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." What a promise is this! Christ's faithful ones are to be sharers with him in the kingdom he has received from his Father. This is a spiritual kingdom, in which those who are most active in serving their brethren are the greatest. Christ's servants, under his direction, are to administer the affairs of his kingdom. They are to eat and drink at his table, that is, be admitted to near communion with him.

The Saviour said again, "And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life. But many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be first."

God places no value on outward display or boasting. Many who in this life are looked upon as superior to others, will one day see that God values men according to their compassion and self-denial. When the scenes of the judgment are enacted before them, they will see the mistake they have made. Those who follow the example of him who went about doing good, who help and bless their fellow men, trying always to lift them up, are in God's sight infinitely higher than the selfish ones who exalt themselves.

God does not accept men because of their capabilities, but because they seek his face, desiring his help. God sees not as man sees. He judges not from appearances. He searches the heart, and judges righteously. "To this man will I look," he declares, "even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word."

He accepts and communes with his lowly, unpretentious followers; for in them he sees the most precious material, which will stand the test of storm and tempest, heat and pressure.

Our object in working for the Master should be that his name may be glorified in the conversion of sinners. Those who labor to gain applause are not approved of God.

The Lord uses many gifts in the work of saving sinners. In the future, common men will be impressed by the Spirit of God to leave their ordinary employment to go forth and proclaim the last message of mercy. They are to be strengthened and encouraged, and as fast as possible prepared for labor, that success may crown their efforts. They co-operate with unseen, heavenly agencies, for they are willing to spend and be spent in the service of the Master. They are laborers together with God, and their brethren should bid them Godspeed, praying for them as they go forth to fulfil the great commission. No one is authorized to hinder such workers. They are to be treated with the greatest respect. No taunting word is to be spoken of them as in the rough places of the earth they sow the gospel seed.

How dare any one bar the way of God's servants by unjust, unfeeling speeches? But this has been done, and thereby laborers have been discouraged, and many souls lost who might have been saved. Those who do this work are not prompted by the Spirit of God, but by another spirit. Scornful criticisms and discourteous remarks are wholly of Satan. If ministers, teachers, and people would practise Bible courtesy, they would find hearts open to receive the truth, and God would be glorified.

Those who search for something with which to find fault have taken Satan's side of the question. Christ can not say of them, "Well done, good and faithful servant." They are not giving the trumpet a certain sound.

All who can should do personal work. As they go from house to house, explaining the Scriptures in a clear, simple way, the Lord will make the truth powerful to save. But in order to do this work successfully, all worldly ambition must be left behind. Every weight, every besetting sin, must be laid aside. The church can not measure herself by the world, nor by the opinions of men, nor yet by what she once was. Her position in the world is to be compared with what it would have been had she continually pressed onward and upward from victory to victory. God's watchmen are to lift up the voice, saying, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, . . . and touch not the unclean thing." "Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord."

Some look with contempt upon those whom the Lord honors. They regard them with indifference because they have not had the educational advantages they themselves have enjoyed. But though not highly educated, these children of God are consecrated to his service, and they work for him with self-denial. In his sight they are much farther advanced than many who have had greater opportunities and have been entrusted with a greater number of talents. Let us rejoice that the Lord does not measure the workers in his vineyard by their learning or by the educational advantages they have had. The tree is judged by its fruit. The Lord will co-operate with those who co-operate with him, even though, judged by the world's standard, they may not be educated.

Life's best things — simplicity, honesty, truthfulness, purity, unsullied integrity — can not be bought or sold; they are as free to the ignorant as to the educated, to the black man as to the white man, to the humble peasant as to the king upon his throne. Humble workers, who do not trust in their great gifts, but who work in simplicity, trusting always in God, will share in the joy of the Saviour. Their persevering prayers will bring souls to the cross. Heavenly angels will respond to their self-sacrificing efforts. By the power of the Holy Spirit, Jesus will move upon the hearts, working miracles in the conversion of sinners. Men and women will be gathered into church fellowship, meeting-houses will be built, and schools established. The hearts of the workers will be filled with joy as they see the salvation of God.

These workers are trees of the Lord's planting. In a peculiar sense they bear fruit equal to the fruit borne by the apostles. A rich reward awaits them in the future life.

THE best thing to give to your enemy is forgiveness; to an opponent, tolerance; to a friend, your heart; to your child, a good example; to a father, deference; to a mother, conduct that will make her proud of you; to yourself, respect; to all men, charity.— Selected.

How the Great Guest Came

WHILE the cobbler mused, there passed his pane
A beggar drenched by the driving rain;
He called him from the stony street,
And gave him shoes for his bruised feet.

The beggar went, and there came a crone,
Her face with wrinkles of sorrow sown;
A bundle of faggots bowed her back,
And she was spent with the wrench and rack;
He gave her his loaf, and steadied her load
As she took her way on the weary road.

Then came to his door a little child,
Lost and afraid in the world so wild,
In the big, dark world. Catching it up,
He gave it the milk in the waiting cup,
And led it home to its mother's arms,
Out of reach of the world's alarms.

The day went down in the crimson west,
And with it the hope of the blessed Guest;
And Conrad sighed, as the world turned gray:
"Why is it, Lord, that your feet delay?
Did you forget that this was the day?"
Then soft in the silence a voice was heard:
"Lift up your heart, for I kept my word;
Three times I came to your friendly door;
Three times my shadow was on your floor.
I was the beggar with bruised feet;
I was the woman you gave to eat;
I was the child on the homeless street."

The True Standard of Manhood

MRS. E. G. WHITE

GOD designs that improvement shall be the life-work of his followers, and that this improvement shall be guided and controlled by correct experience. The true man is the one who is willing to sacrifice his own interests for the good of others, who forgets himself in binding up the wounds of the broken-hearted. But many fail of understanding the true object of life. Under the influence of cherished errors, they sacrifice all in life that is really valuable.

Nero and Cæsar were acknowledged by the world as great men; but did God so regard them? — No! They were not connected with unselfish love with the great Heart of humanity. They were satanic in their cruelty. Wherever they went, bloodshed and destruction marked their path. They were lauded while living; but when they died, the world rejoiced. How wide the contrast between the lives of these men and the life of Martin Luther. He was not born a prince; he wore no royal crown. It was from a cloistered cell that his voice was heard and his influence felt. But he had a noble, generous heart, and a vigorous intellect, and all his powers were exercised for the good of humanity. He stood bravely for the right, and breasted the world's opposition, in order to benefit his fellow men.

Intellect is mightier than wealth or physical power. If sanctified and controlled by the Spirit of God, it exerts a strong influence for good. But intellect alone does not give true manhood. Lord Byron had rare intellectual gifts, but he was not a true man, according to God's standard. His passions were fierce and uncontrollable. Throughout his life he sowed seeds that ripened into a harvest of corruption. This man was one of the world's distinguished men, but the Lord regarded him as one who had abused his talents and wasted his life. When great intellect is made to minister to vice, it is a curse to its possessor and to all who come within the sphere of its influence.

One's claim to manhood is determined by the use he makes of the powers that God has given him. The members of the human family are entitled to the name of men and women only as they employ their talents for the good of others. It is when ministering to others that man is most closely allied to God. He who is true to his God-given manhood will not only promote the happiness of his fellow beings in this life, but will aid them to secure the reward of the life to come.

Before human beings, God has set a high standard. Christ's word to us is, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." It should be our life-work to press forward continually toward perfection of character, ever striving for conformity to the will of God.

Man is required to love God supremely, with his might, mind, and strength; and his neighbor as himself. This he can not possibly do unless he denies himself. To deny self means to rule the spirit when passion is striving for the mastery; to resist the temptation to censure and to speak words of faultfinding; to have patience with the child that is dull, and whose conduct is grievous and trying; to stand at the post of duty even though others may fail; to lift responsibilities wherever and whenever duty requires, not to gain applause, not for policy, but for the sake of the Master, who has given each of his followers a work that is to be done with unwavering fidelity. To deny self means to do good when inclination would lead us to serve and please ourselves. It means to work patiently and cheerfully for the good of others, even though our efforts may not seem to be appreciated.

Those who are partakers of Christ's love have no right to think that there is a limit to their influence and work in trying to benefit humanity. Christ is our example. He did not become weary in his efforts to save fallen man. And angels are engaged day and night for the uplifting of humanity, in accordance with the plan of salvation. Our work is to be continuous and persevering. Until the Master bids us lay our armor at his feet, we are to fight manfully for him. We are to work and wait, submissive to God's will, ready and willing to spring to duty at every call.

Fellow Christians, search carefully and see whether the Word of God is indeed the rule of your life. Do you take Christ with you when you leave the place of prayer? Does your religion stand guard at the door of your lips? Is your heart drawn out in interest and sympathy for those in need of help? Are you seeking earnestly for a clearer understanding of God's will, that you may let the light shine forth to others? Is your speech seasoned with grace? Does your demeanor show Christian nobility? "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." Remember that you need to be braced by constant watchfulness and prayer. So long as you look to Christ, you are safe; but the moment you trust in yourself, you are in great peril. He who is in harmony with God will continually depend upon him for help.

It is difficult for human beings to give attention to the lesser matters of life while the mind is engaged in business of seemingly greater importance. But should this be? Do not become so engrossed with business cares that you neglect to give your children the instruction they need. Do not look upon your home work as a lesser duty. This work lies at the foundation of the well-being of society. The happiness of families and of churches depends upon home influence. The world is not so much in need of great minds as of good men, men who are a blessing in their homes.

"Here Are They that Keep the Commandments"

T. E. BOWEN

THE three messages of Revelation 14 develop a commandment-keeping company. The record given of them is not testimony borne by themselves, but by Jesus himself. Of them he says: "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."

The prophet John's attention is directed to them, after viewing the great mass of humanity represented to him as worshipers of the beast or his image, and designated by a mark as belonging to those who "dwell upon the earth." By another passage of Scripture we are shown that this company far exceeds the little company pointed out as keepers of the commandments: "And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him [the beast], whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Rev. 13: 18.

What an encouragement and victory for the grace and power of God's living word it is, that in the midst of all the corruption and sin down at the end of the world, even amid the last generation of men, a few actually "keep the commandments.” We are told so often that it is impossible to keep God’s holy law, even by those who stand forth as representatives of Christ. But it can be kept. Jesus kept it. And the same faith that was in Jesus when he trod the rugged pathway on earth, if in us now, will enable us to keep it, also.

The Word of God hidden in the heart works these wonderful changes in the life. It is through the power of the word that life is given. Paul recognized this in the charge he gave the elders of Ephesus: “And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified.”

God’s people have power through the simplicity of the Word. Through that, the Spirit will operate with power. “The flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life.”

It was the word of Jesus that bore Peter up as he left the boat to walk upon the water. It was through the faith Peter and John had in Christ’s word that the impotent man arose, and with joy accompanied them into the temple. It was through believing the word that thousands were joined unto the Lord in a day at Pentecost and afterward. It was by faith in that Word made flesh that all the mighty miracles were performed which followed the believers everywhere.

God’s word is the same to-day. Life and healing are in it for the believing child of God, as when Peter and John, Paul and Silas, labored for their fellow men.

The power of God’s word is now found in the three angels’ messages. Men may fail, and even fall out by the way, and turn and oppose the truth with all their power, but the message never will change nor fail. It is infallible. “Man is fallible; but the message is infallible. With it all should be in harmony; it is the center of interest, in which all hearts should be united. We may get up points that are of no consequence, and seek to maintain them; but we shall gain no strength by so doing. The message is to prepare a people to stand in the last great day, and to be united in heaven above. None should feel that it is of no special importance whether they are in union with their brethren or not; for those who do not learn to live in harmony here will never be united in heaven.”— Mrs. E. G. White, in “Historical Sketches,” page 124.

This message develops a commandment-keeping people. Some will be truly united upon this holy platform of truth, and filled with the love and unity of heaven, thus becoming prepared to enter that holy place as citizens of the better country. God is no respecter of persons. By complying with the conditions given us in the Word, and through its sanctifying, subduing influence by the operation of the Holy Spirit upon our hearts and lives, we may be a part of that commandment-keeping company that shall one day erelong stand upon Mount Zion and “sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb.”

An Earthquake Escape

K. C. RUSSELL

The frequency of earthquakes and other calamities is filling the hearts of many people with fear and consternation, and they are asking the pertinent questions, What is the cause of earthquakes? What is their meaning? Is there any escape from them?

In answer to the first question, we will look in vain for a satisfactory reply from scientists. This was forcibly illustrated by an incident connected with the San Francisco earthquake. Professor Burckhalter, one of the great astronomers of the West, wrote on a bulletin-board outside of the observatory a brief statement of the cause of earthquakes according to the best scientific theories; but when the people blocked the streets, and wanted to know when the next one would come, he erased the preceding bulletin, and wrote: “The man in the street knows just as much as I do of the cause of earthquakes, and when the next one will come.”

An editorial in the Washington Post of April 25, 1906, makes the following significant and interesting reference to the scientific aspect of this earthquake: “Scientists in all parts of the world are rising up with proclamations, specious, alluring, and more or less satisfactory to the educated mind. The trouble is that they do not harmonize; and, therefore, the individual has no refuge more substantial than a guessing match.” Thus it will be seen that science can not be relied upon for a solution of the earthquake problem. We must look elsewhere for an answer to this question.

The following from the pen of Mrs. E. G. White is the clearest and most comprehensive statement concerning —

that has ever been written, and it is in harmony with the Bible, which has withstood both lower and higher criticism throughout the ages: —

“Before the flood there were immense forests. The trees were many times larger than any trees which we now see. They were of great durability. They would know nothing of decay for hundreds of years. At the time of the flood, these forests were torn up or broken down and buried in the earth. In some places large quantities of these immense trees were thrown together and covered with stones and earth by the commotions of the flood. They have since petrified, and become coal, which accounts for the large coal-beds which are now found. This coal has produced oil. God causes large quantities of coal and oil to ignite and burn. Rocks are intensely heated, limestone is burned, and iron ore melted. Water and fire under the surface of the earth meet. The action of water upon the limestone adds fury to the intense heat, and causes earthquakes, volcanoes, and fiery issues. The action of fire and water upon the ledges of rocks and ore causes loud explosions which sound like muffled thunder. These wonderful exhibitions will be more numerous and terrible just before the second coming of Christ and the end of the world, as signs of its speedy destruction.

“Coal and oil are generally to be found where there are no burning mountains or fiery issues. When fire and water under the surface of the earth meet, the fiery issues can not give sufficient vent to the heated elements beneath. The earth is convulsed, the ground heaves, and rises into swells or waves, and there are heavy sounds like thunder under ground. . . .

“God controls all these elements; they are his instruments to do his will; he calls them into action to serve his purpose. These fiery issues have been, and will be, his agents to blot out from the earth very wicked cities. Like Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, they go down alive into the pit. These are evidences of God’s power. Those who have beheld these burning mountains pouring forth fire, and flame, and a vast amount of melted ore, drying up rivers and causing them to disappear, have been struck with terror at the grandeur of the scene. They have been filled with awe as if they were beholding the infinite power of God.”

The Purpose of These Manifestations

“These manifestations bear the special marks of God’s power, and are designed to cause the people of the earth to tremble before him, and to silence those who, like Pharaoh, would proudly say, ‘Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice?’ Isaiah refers to these exhibitions of God’s power where he exclaims, ‘O that thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence, as when the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil, to make thy name known to thine adversaries, that the nations may tremble at thy presence! When thou didst terrible things which we looked not for, thou camest down, the mountains flowed down at thy presence.’ Isa. 64: 1-3.

“‘The Lord is slow to anger, and great in power, and will not at all acquit the wicked: the Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and the clouds are the dust of his feet. He rebuketh the sea, and maketh it dry, . . . and Carmel, and the flower of Lebanon languisheth. The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burned at his presence, yea, the world, and all that dwell therein. Who can stand before his indignation? and who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? his fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him.’ Nahum 1: 3-6.

“‘Bow thy heavens, O Lord, and come down: touch the mountains, and they shall smoke. Cast forth lightning, and scatter them: shoot out thine arrows, and destroy them.’ Ps. 144: 5, 6.

“Greater wonders than have yet been seen will be witnessed by those upon the earth a short period previous to the coming of Christ. ‘And I will show

Watch and Pray

T. S. WILLIAMS

Ye poor, despised, rejected band
  Who watch, and sing, and pray,
Sojourners in a foreign land,
  Who wait the blessed day,
Watch on, pray on, and wait;
Ye soon shall enter heaven's gate.

Watch, wait, and see the blessed day
  When tears shall all be dried,
When sin and sorrow pass away
  Through Christ once crucified;
Watch on, pray on, and wait;
Ye soon shall enter heaven's gate.

Though fiery trials oft beset
  Along the narrow way,
Though troubles rise thy soul to fret,
  O watch, and sing, and pray;
Watch on, pray on, and wait;
Ye soon shall enter heaven's gate.

The resurrection trump shall sound,
  The dead in Christ shall rise,
And all who shall be worthy found
  Shall meet him in the skies.
O then we shall no longer wait,
We then shall enter heaven's gate!

A Message to the Churches

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I HAVE a message to speak to the churches. If we are to make known the story of the cross in all parts of the world, our missionary efforts must not be allowed to weaken. They must be kept vigorous and strong. The efforts we put forth to dispel the darkness of error will always be proportionate to our faith in God, manifested in our obedience to his commandments. With faith and courage and hope we are to extend the knowledge of present truth. We have not always met as we should the obligations in missionary effort that our knowledge of present truth places upon us.

The manifold wisdom of God has been displayed in the organization of his church in the earth for the representation of the truth in the world. In their zeal for the cause of righteousness, his servants are to reveal a faith that works by love and purifies the soul from every slothful habit, a zeal that reveals itself in watchfulness unto prayer, humble heart-searching, a readiness to examine self, that they may detect their own defects of character, and avoid the evils of self-exaltation. This faith and zeal are essential, or our labors for the perishing will weaken, and Christ will be disappointed in his church.

The three powers of the Godhead have pledged their might to carry out the purpose that God had in mind when he gave to the world the unspeakable gift of his Son. Every act of self-denial, every earnest surrender to God, is an element in God's design for the increase of the piety and zeal and earnest faith of his people. The Holy Spirit unites with the powers of grace that God has provided to turn souls to Christ. We are to labor as Christ labored for the salvation of dying souls. And as we work, our hearts are to be encouraged by the thought that every soul converted through our efforts will become another instrumentality in the work of recovering the lost. Guided by the same Spirit that led some one to work for him, he will take up the work and labor in the spirit of the Master.

God has given me this message to bear to those who are out of line: "Associate yourselves, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear, all ye of far countries: gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces; gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces. Take counsel together, and it shall come to naught; speak the word, and it shall not stand: for God is with us. For the Lord spake thus to me with a strong hand, and instructed me that I should not walk in the way of this people, saying, Say ye not, A confederacy, to all them to whom this people shall say, A confederacy; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid."

In these last days, there are arising strange fallacies and man-made theories which God declares shall be broken in pieces. The spirit of covetousness has led men to seek worldly advantage, and by extravagance and display they have tried to hide their wicked deeds which they have done in order to reach their object. Men occupying high positions of trust have revealed this unlawful desire for gain; they have practised extortion and robbery, and have gratified the evil passions of their hearts, until our cities are corrupted through their wickedness. God has declared that he will uncover these works of deceit and robbery by their own working. In some cases the judgments of God have already fallen heavily on these cities.

"The Lord spake thus to me with a strong hand, and instructed me that I should not walk in the way of this people, saying, Say ye not, A confederacy, to all them to whom this people shall say, A confederacy; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid. Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offense to both the houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. And many among them shall stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken. Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples."

In this representation of the prophet, we see that Satan is at work not only with worldlings, who have not the fear and love of God before them, but also with those who profess faith in Christ.(1) Here are plainly represented two distinct parties, formed from a company that was once united. The members of one of these parties are in resistance to the will of God. They have taken themselves from the side of the loyal and true, and are now resisting the warnings of the Spirit of God. To the obedient the Lord will be "for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offense to both the houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem."

Every professed believer in Christ will be tempted by Satan. "And many among them shall stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared [mark that word], and be taken." Notwithstanding all their knowledge of the Word of God, all their light, and their position as expositors of Bible truth, many shall "stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken." The ruin of this class is certain. Then the charge is given, "Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples.

"And I will wait upon the Lord, that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I will look for him. Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me are for signs and for wonders in Israel from the Lord of hosts, which dwelleth in Mount Zion.

"And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter: shall not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

This warning is given for the days in which we are now living. Read carefully the third chapter of Second Timothy. This chapter refers to the "many" spoken of by Isaiah who have departed from the faith. "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse," the apostle says to Timothy, "deceiving, and being deceived. But continue thou in the things which thou hast heard and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

"I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry."

A wealth of moral influence has been brought to us in the last half century. Through his Holy Spirit the voice of God has come to us continually in warning and instruction, to confirm the faith of the believers in the spirit of prophecy.

Repeatedly the word has come, Write the things that I have given you to confirm the faith of my people in the position they have taken. Time and trial have not made void the instruction given, but through years of suffering and self-sacrifice have established the truth of the testimony given. [The instruction (2) (1) that was given in the early days of the message is to be held as safe instruction to follow in these its closing days.] Those who are indifferent to this light and instruction must not expect to escape the snares which we have been plainly told will cause the rejecters of light to stumble, and fall, and be snared, and be taken. If we study carefully the second chapter of Hebrews, we shall learn how important it is that we hold steadfastly to every principle of truth that has been given.]

"I am now ready to be offered," the apostle Paul declared as his warfare drew to a close; "the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

"Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me: for Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia; Titus unto Dalmatia. Only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee."

"Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: the Lord reward him according to his works: of whom be thou ware also; for he hath greatly withstood our words. At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge. Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen."

This letter was written to Timotheus, the first bishop of the church at Ephesus, after Paul had been brought before Nero the second time to witness with his life to the faith he held. In placing on record this account of his trials through men who turned from the faith, Paul speaks words which should encourage our hearts as we pass over the same ground. We are having trials to encounter similar to those that Paul met. There are some who once were with us as teachers, but who are now denying the faith, and are working against the truth they once advocated. In this experience we need not lose our faith and confidence in God. It is the privilege of each to be able to say, "The Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom; to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen."

Believing with the Will

J. S. WASHBURN

The will is the center of the man. We are not to believe, to obey, simply with the feelings. God requires the will. "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching." John 7: 17, R. V. When a man's will is given up to God, that man belongs to God. When the will is converted, the man is converted. We do not fully believe until we believe with the will.

If Satan tells us that we do not believe, we may answer, I will, I do believe. When tempted to yield in the fight, we may still say, I will not surrender; I will not give up. If we have made a mistake, if we have fallen into sin, and are then tempted to utter discouragement, we may say, No, I never will give up the conflict; I will win the prize.

Jesus said, "Therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed." A Christian without a will is worthless. He who is moved simply by the emotions of the moment is worthless in the strong, strenuous conflict which we are fighting. Many times the light is shut away entirely. Many times the enemy seems to have won a victory, and we can only say with Christ, "Therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed." I will persevere; I will not surrender. I will believe; I will do God's will.

O brother, give your will to God, and let him strengthen it, and make it unconquerable. Hope against hope. Believe against every earthly evidence, because God has spoken, because he has promised, and he can not fail. He that willeth shall be led of God, shall know the teaching, shall not be deceived, shall surely prevail.

The Rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram

J. W. WESTPHAL

Upon the "horror of great darkness" the morning was breaking. The long years of Egyptian slavery were closing. The Lord had sent his chosen servant to bring to Israel the message of their deliverance. "By temptations, by signs, and by wonders, and by war, and by a mighty hand, and by a stretched out arm, and by great terrors" it was demonstrated to them "that the Lord he is God; there is none else beside him." Happy in the thought of their Canaan possession, and with confidence established in Moses as their visible leader, chosen of and directed by God, they were ready on that eventful passover midnight to bid Egypt a final good-by.

As yet they realized but little the meaning of their exodus. Before the Lord could entrust them with the promised inheritance, they must be tested. They must learn to know God, to trust him, to obey him, and to be led by him. This was the purpose of their wilderness experience. "Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keep his commandments, or no. And he humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna, which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know; that he might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live." Deut. 8: 2, 3.

At the Red Sea the people feared and murmured against Moses. In their inexperience the Lord did not chide them. Their murmurs were met with, "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." Their complaints at Marah only called forth a prayer from Moses, "and the Lord showed him a tree, which when he had cast into the waters, the waters were made sweet."

In response to their bitter accusations in the wilderness of Sin, where they had no food, the Lord said, "I will rain bread from heaven for you." When some went out to gather manna on the Sabbath day, the Lord for the first time reproved their unbelief and disobedience, saying, "How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?" At Rephidim, where they questioned the leadership of Moses, and said, "Is the Lord among us, or not?" the Lord patiently directed Moses to smite the rock and give the people water to drink. Thus did the Lord deal with them like a tender father, demonstrating his love for them, his presence among them, and recognizing before all the people Moses as his chosen instrument and leader of Israel.

Then followed the greatest of all wonders. "Did ever people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live?" The Lord would give every possible evidence of his presence with the people of his choice and remove every occasion for unbelief. From the midst of a cloud on a burning mountain and a quaking earth, surrounded with "thunderings, and lightnings, and the voice of the trumpet, and the mountain smoking," a grandeur more than earthly, the Lord spoke his holy law in the hearing of all the people. There could be no doubting the meaning of this. The Spirit of God wrought upon their hearts, they felt his presence, and conviction seized upon them. They were obliged to confess that it was God; that Moses was his mouthpiece to Israel, and promised thus to receive him. "Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but let not God speak with us, lest we die." They were prepared to enter into a solemn covenant with God, repeatedly promising to obey him. "All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient."

In this way the Lord proposed to prepare the people to receive whatever further instruction he might see fit to give them through the medium of Moses, and through the same means to lead them through the perils of the wilderness into the promised land. There

The Light of Life

IVA A. CLUTE

"I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." John 8: 12.

WE may know that He is coming;
We may analyze earth's strife;
They who follow have not darkness,
But shall have the light of life.

Others may grope on in blindness,
Knowing not the Day-star bright
Long since started its ascension,
Shedding o'er the world its light.

Ignorance and superstition
Mark this age of unbelief;
And the Saviour, at his coming,
To the world will be a thief;

Coming when they least expect him,
While they "Peace and safety" cry,
Piling up their earthly treasures
For the crisis now so nigh.

To the faithful few who know Him,
Paul says, "It need not be true
That as to the world surrounding
That bright day should be to you.

"Ye walk not in worldly darkness."
O'er the earth the heralds sing.
We may list to hear the message,
"Christ, no longer Priest, but King."

Notes of Travel—No. 1

Journey to Southern California

MRS. E. G. WHITE

DURING the first few months of the year, I received from our brethren connected with important enterprises in southern California urgent invitations to visit the institutions in that part of the State. And indeed I felt desirous of visiting once more that portion of the field, concerning which the Lord has given me much instruction regarding the establishment of medical missionary and educational institutions.

About the middle of April, the Drs. Kress and their family arrived from Australia, and stayed with us for a few days before going on to Washington, D. C., to which place they have been called to connect with the Sanitarium at Takoma Park. As we were anxious for them to visit the sanitariums on the Pacific Coast, we thought this a favorable time to take our southern trip in company with them.

We left St. Helena on the afternoon of Thursday, April 18. Our party was made up of Dr. Kress, and his wife, who is also a physician; their daughter Ora, and two smaller children; Miss Stevens, who accompanied them from Australia; Dr. H. F. Rand, physician at the St. Helena Sanitarium; my son, W. C. White; Dores Robinson, one of my copyists; Sara McEnterfer, my attendant; and myself.

On our arrival at the Ferry Building in San Francisco, we were taken in a carriage to the station at Third and Townsend Streets. During the past year the sins that called forth the judgments of God on San Francisco have been continued. Violence and crime have greatly increased. A startling record of dishonesty and conniving has been brought to light in the investigation of the actions of men in official positions.

We passed through San Francisco on the anniversary of the great earthquake of last year. The day had been declared a holiday, and many were celebrating the occasion with revelry and in pleasure seeking.

Plans are being laid to rebuild the city on a grand scale. Several earthquake shocks have been felt, but these warnings are being disregarded by many. "We will have," they say, "larger and more magnificent buildings than we have ever had before." Christ says, "When they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, . . . and they shall not escape."

At 8 P. M. we left San Francisco by the Coast Line to Los Angeles. At Burbank, a few miles from Los Angeles, W. C. White, Sara McEnterfer, and I left the train, and after waiting for a few minutes took the cars to San Fernando. Here we were met at the station, and taken to the school.

The Fernando School

We are thankful that the Lord in his providence opened the way for us to establish an educational work at Fernando. Our brethren purchased this property about five years ago for about one third of the amount originally invested in it. Besides buildings that were in every way adapted to school work, there were about twelve and a half acres of land, suitable for orchard and garden. The large school building is a modern, two-story structure with an attic. On the first floor there are fine recitation rooms, and a chapel that will seat about two hundred. On the second floor there are seven good schoolrooms. The attic has been partitioned off, and provides a number of sleeping-rooms for the boys. Besides this large building there is a two-and-a-half story structure used as a ladies' dormitory.

We were glad to learn that success has attended the Fernando school during the year that has just closed. The attendance has been good, and we rejoice to know that many of the students have offered themselves for service during the summer.

A spirit of missionary zeal will surely result from a proper study of the Word of God. In May, 1903, I wrote the following words to those in charge of the Fernando school:—

"The light given me is that the educational branch of our work will be of great importance. What is it that will make our schools a power? It is not the size of the buildings. It is not the number of advanced studies taught. It is the faithful work done by teachers and students, as they begin at the lower rounds of the ladder of progress, and climb diligently round by round.

"Intermediate schools are highly essential. There are many parents who do not know how to train their children to be workers together with God. They have not in all things outgrown their childishness, and therefore they know not how to care properly for the church in their homes. Fathers and mothers have become indifferent to their obligations to God, and unmindful of their duty to their children. Therefore we must establish schools that will be as the schools of the prophets.

"The Word of God is to lie at the foundation of all the work done in these schools. And the students are to be taught the true dignity of labor. They are to be shown that God is a constant worker. Let every teacher take hold heartily with a group of students, working with them, and teaching them how to work. As the teachers do this, they will gain a valuable experience. Their hearts will be bound up with the hearts of the students, and this will open the way for successful teaching.

"Thorough work must be done in these schools; for many students will go forth from them directly into the great harvest-field. They will go forth to use what they have learned, as canvassers, and as helpers in various lines of evangelistic work. Many workers, after studying for a time in the field, will feel the need of further study, and with the experience gained in the field will be prepared to value school privileges, and to make rapid advancement. Some will desire an education in the higher branches of study. For these our colleges have been established.

"It would be a sad mistake for us to fail to consider thoroughly the purpose for which each of our schools is established. This is a matter that should be faithfully studied by our responsible men in each union conference. All the different educational interests should be given careful consideration."

We have before us a great work, and there is need of many educated laborers who have fitted themselves for positions of trust. In the training for service in the cause of God, the Bible must lie at the foundation. The principles of truth taught in the Word of God will act as a safeguard against the evil influences that are in the world. In the home and in the school the Bible is to be made the great text-book.

Efforts to educate children in the fear of the Lord, without making the study of the Word prominent, are sadly misdirected. Unless there is such a training as will lead to a recognition and an abhorrence of sin, moral deformity will result. Our children should be removed from the evil influences of the public schools, and placed where thoroughly converted teachers may educate them in the Holy Scriptures. The students in our schools should take the Word of God as the grand rule of their lives.

While at Fernando I spoke twice in the school chapel, and on Sabbath afternoon my son talked to the students. At the Sabbath morning service, the room was well filled, and I was thankful for the privilege of addressing so many who during the past few months had been receiving instruction in the Word of God. I based my remarks upon the first chapter of First Peter. I dwelt at some length upon the subject of the earthly mission of Christ, who "according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time."

In view of the great sacrifice of Christ in our behalf, we are to purify our souls in obeying the truth "through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren," and to "love one another with a pure heart fervently: being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."

Talking Peace — Preparing War

JOHN S. WIGHTMAN

To-day the gaze of the world is fixed upon that momentous gathering, the Peace Conference at The Hague. June 15 its deliberations began. The czar's rescript calling together the first Hague Conference was given only to those twenty-six nations that had diplomatic representatives at St. Petersburg. At the present conference representatives of every one of the forty-five nations of the world are present, and for the first time in history all the people of the earth will be represented to discuss affairs common to all. This congress, beyond doubt, is the greatest political event that has ever taken place. Emanuel Kant says, in his essay on "Eternal Peace," that war will not cease until the world is organized; and the world can not be safely organized until the nations have representative government. Therefore the greatest international problem before the world is, How can this present Hague Peace Conference take the next great step toward world organization? Already we have The Hague or Supreme Court of the World. The next logical step in this international problem would be an international legislature; and if an international legislature, then an international executive, or world-head, whose work would be to see that the wishes of the international legislature were carried out.

The object of this vast confederation force in the Holland capital is, primarily and ostensibly, to ultimately secure the banishment of war from the established program of the nations, and to provide for international peace. Thus far the question is purely within the moral, and relatively, perhaps, within the religious sphere; but the student of political economy is rapidly beginning to perceive the larger question — the political — the merging of the world, the individual nations of the world, into one vast legislative brotherhood, under one universal and supreme world-ruler. And herein lies the danger, the danger of empire instead of republic, kingly rule in place of individual sovereignty. The long, dark history of the past is simply the history of universal dominion — world government.

A question anent the subject is: Will an international brotherhood of nations eliminate war and all its possibilities? Disarmament, it becomes apparent, can not possibly precede either one or the other of two events — the conversion of the world, or the political organization of the world. Laying the question of the conversion of the world aside, Mr. Hamilton Holt, of the Independent, says: "Clearly, then, the predominant issue is the proposition that the conference hereafter assemble periodically and automatically, and not at the call of some sovereign or monarch. For even if at first such a periodical and automatic congress can do no more than express pious resolutions, as time goes on, it will be given more and more power, just as in the future The Hague Court will be given more and more jurisdiction. Finally an international executive will be added, and then all questions of an international nature will be discussed, decided, and enforced according to law, and we shall have in very truth the Americanization of the world."

Thus has the dream of empire actually taken possession of the world-peace promoters, and the question becomes infinitely greater; nor is it, nor can it be, quite divorced from the religious question, which will eventually, if world-organization is accomplished, become the paramount question of all others. M. Novikoff, in La Rue, clearly perceives the trend of this universal design. "The peace movement," he said, "ought to change its name and be called federalist. It aims, in fact, at creating a federation which will in turn embrace all the nations of the world. Because the giant movement is said to be for 'peace,' and not for federation, it encounters all kinds of objections on the score of impracticability which it would not encounter if it changed, not its essence, but merely its name. It must plainly be shown that the kingdom of heaven is near at hand; when the peace party succeeds in imbuing the masses with this idea, there will be an immense and immediate reaction. Federation will then become the first popular cry. Very soon it will reach the passionate stage, and then nothing can stop it. Then exit international anarchy, and enter the United States of Europe." This was July 1, 1901, and now M. Novikoff's words are all the more significant, for the recent Peace Conference at New York City gave the clearest emphasis to the federation part of the peace movement; in fact, "peace" could alone result from "federation of the world — a parliament of man!" Novikoff was a prophet of his time: to-day all may see. Nor does it mean alone the United States of Europe; it is the United States of the World. It was Mr. Stead who connected "the-kingdom-of-heaven-is-at hand" theme with that of the subject of the peace movement, and it may not be quite so far to that "passionate stage" as may appear: the history of the "passionate stage" of the Crusades of the early centuries may suffice to cause anxiety and apprehensive dread to the average mind that must enquire, "What do these things mean?" In the plainest language possible, the apostle declares that when "they"— evidently meaning the nations of the earth in congress assembled — "shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh . . . and they shall not escape."

That this sudden destruction, much of it at least, is the destruction resulting from national war and carnage, there can be little doubt. Long ago the prophet Jeremiah cried out: "Destruction upon destruction . . . for the whole land is spoiled: suddenly are my tents spoiled, and my curtains in a moment." "I can not hold my peace, because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war." War, cruel, devastating war, is the agency for the multiplied destruction — "destruction upon destruction." Nor could the faithful prophet see any sign of real national or international peace, for of such he must have written, "Saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace."

Ezekiel writes: "Destruction cometh; and they shall seek peace, and there shall be none." The writer holds that the peace movement is only a "cry," and no more; according to the Word that is divinely inspired, it is a "cry" of peace where there is no peace. At the very time, the world is burdened with war preparations, as in no other age. The very chiefest question for which the first Hague Conference was called to discuss — the limitation of armanent, or its reduction, by mutual consent of the European powers — proved to be a fruitless topic. And at the opening session of the present conference the key-note was sounded by M. Nelidoff, president of the conference, in behalf of Russia, when he said that "ultimate disarmament and the inauguration of universal peace is but an idle dream," and advocated the widening of the door of arbitration that "conciliation and justice" might obtain. Mr. Stead writes to the London Times "that there will be practical unanimity among the governments as to the impossibility of forbidding the discussion of armaments at the conference, and an absolute unanimity as to the impossibility of arriving at any practical decision as to what should be done."

(To be concluded)

Avoid diligently those false and deceptive thoughts which say, Wait a little, I will pray an hour hence: I must first perform this or that. For, with such thoughts, a man quits prayer for business, which lays hold of and entangles him, so that he comes not to pray the whole day long.— Martin Luther.

The Glory of the Lord

ELIZA H. MORTON

THE glory of the Lord is like
A flame of living light.
It burned within the wayside bush,
It led a host by night.
And shall we turn it into shame
And bring reproach to God's dear name?

The glory of the Lord will fill
The house of praise and prayer,
And angels glide adown the aisles
When faith and love are there.
Thy glory, Lord, will crown the meek;
Help us that glory now to seek.

The face of Moses shone with light
When he had talked with God,—
A light with splendor not of earth,
The glory of the Lord;
And we may show upon our face
The miracle of love and grace.

And when our King in glory comes,
He'll open wide the door
To mansions for his own prepared
Forever, evermore.
O glorious Saviour, we are thine;
Through us now let thy glory shine.

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Loma Linda, Cal.

ON Monday morning, April 22, we left Fernando for Loma Linda, where we were to join the rest of our party, who had made short visits to Glendale and Paradise Valley.

At Loma Linda we found the work moving forward encouragingly. Since my last visit to this place about one year ago, some improvements have been made in the property. Two cottages have been added, and a three-story addition, forty by eighty feet in size, has been made to the main building. This addition was necessary to provide satisfactory bath-rooms, and offices for the physicians. The new bath-rooms are roomy and convenient, and they add greatly to the popularity of the place.

The patronage at the sanitarium during the winter months has been better than at any previous period. Favorable impressions have been made upon the patients who have visited the institution. Some of these have been converted, and others are deeply interested in our message. For this we are thankful. This is the object for which our sanitariums have been established, the conversion of souls.

This beautiful sanitarium property, that in the wonderful providence of God has come into our possession, is in the midst of the orange district, and is noted for the excellency of its fruit. It is within easy access of Redlands, Riverside, Colton, San Bernardino, and other cities. As a result of the labors of Elder Simpson, Elder Haskell, and others, strong companies of believers have been raised up in Riverside and Redlands, and there is also a small company at San Bernardino. Elder Hare and Elder Whitehead have just concluded a series of meetings at Redlands, as a result of which five new converts have been added to the church there.

The Work of Dr. Starr

[In San Bernardino Dr. Lillis Wood-Starr has found many openings for educational work. About three months ago she began to conduct studies in cooking, healthful dress, and general hygiene, with some of the families of our own church. She was assisted in her work by some of the helpers from the sanitarium who were able to give practical demonstrations in healthful cooking and in simple nursing.

Neighbors were invited to attend these demonstrations, and some who were present by invitation requested that similar studies be given in their homes, to which they might invite some of their friends. Thus the work grew rapidly, until Dr. Starr was unable to respond to all the requests she received. Her work was brought to the attention of the superintendent of public schools, and at his invitation she gave health talks before as many as fifteen hundred children in the schools of the city. Her co-operation with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has enabled her to become acquainted with many excellent ladies. Such efforts as these are powerful factors in removing from the minds of many the prejudice that exists against our people.]

Death of Elder Simpson

While we were at Loma Linda, we were made sad to hear of the death of Elder W. W. Simpson. Brother Simpson was a man who thoroughly believed the message for this time, and he preached it with power. His winning way of presenting Bible doctrines, and his ability to devise and to use suitable illustrations, enabled him to hold the close attention of large congregations. He had confidence in the power of the word of God to bring conviction, and the Lord greatly blessed his efforts in the salvation of many souls. We may say of our brother, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Sabbath Sermon

On Sabbath, April 27, many of our brethren and sisters from neighboring churches gathered in the parlors with the sanitarium family, and I spoke to them there. I read the first chapter of Hebrews as the basis of my discourse. This chapter clearly indicates the individual personalities of the Father and the Son. Speaking of the Son, the apostle says, "God . . . hath appointed [him] heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high."

If men and women could be once inspired by a view of the great and grand work that has been accomplished through God's gift of his Son, their days would no longer be given up to pleasure-seeking and frivolity. Our ears would no longer be pained by the drunkard's song and the story of crime and wickedness. Men would endeavor to place themselves where they could realize the meaning of the great salvation offered through Jesus Christ. It means life, eternal life to the receiver.

Christ was the greatest medical missionary that ever trod the earth. Did he come with grandeur, making a wonderful display, as some seem to think is necessary in order to make a favorable impression? Souls are not converted by such impressions. Had it been best for the success of his mission, Christ would have come in great glory, accompanied by myriads of angels. But no; he laid aside his glory and his high authority as commander of the hosts of heaven, and came to our world as a humble child. He was born in poverty. His early years were spent in an obscure village, toiling at the carpenter's bench. Even here, thoroughness characterized his work. Nothing left his hands that was not perfect in workmanship.

"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." To all who believe in him he promises power to become sons of God. But there must be a continuance in that belief. So long as we maintain a living connection with God, his Holy Spirit will enable us to preserve our faith in him and in his word. But unless we continue to lay hold of the hope set before us in the gospel, we shall drift,— drift away from the truth on the tide of skepticism and infidelity.

Few have any idea of the battles that are before us. The stronger the conflict, however, the more strength will the Holy Spirit impart to us. We are not left to struggle alone against the mighty opposing forces of evil. Were our eyes opened, we should see heavenly angels about us, to protect us from the influence of the hosts of evil. Jesus watches over every one. He will not suffer us to be tempted above that which, with his help, we are able to bear. He desires us to have faith and confidence in him, that he may fill us with peace and happiness.

As laborers together with God, we are not left in our poverty-stricken condition to do the great work that lies before us. Christ does not send forth his disciples upon their world-wide mission without promising to sustain them. "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," he declares. "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

How wonderfully the Lord has wrought for us in the securing of the

Medical Ministry, p. 265, 266

Loma Linda Sanitarium! He knew that we could not unaided have purchased these buildings and their furnishings. But he opened the way before us, that we might secure the property, and make it a blessing to others. And so he will open the way in other places where sanitariums should be established. These institutions should be out of the cities, yet near enough to make it possible for the workers to give the message of warning in the great centers of population. Let all connected with our sanitariums work under the guidance of our Heavenly Father, seeking to improve every opportunity to reach the hearts of those with whom they are associated. As they do this, they will increase in capability, in judgment, and in the fear of the Lord.

Let the workers realize that this is God's property. Each one should know for himself that he is faithfully performing the duties that are laid upon him. Let us all be kind and patient, tenderhearted and forgiving. Never let us give expression to a rough or an impatient word. Let us pray that the Lord's name may be glorified in us.

God will surely work through us, and cause the power of his truth to reach human hearts, if we will, as workers, give ourselves unreservedly to him, and diligently study his Word. O how inexpressibly precious is his Word! Shall we not study it more faithfully? It has been wonderfully preserved for us through the ages. As we present its principles to others, it will have a holy influence upon mind and character; for there is life in obedience to its commandments: there is strength and encouragement in its promises.

My soul is drawn out in intense earnestness for the salvation of souls. At times the burden rests upon me so heavily that I can not sleep, and I arise in the early morning hours, and write, urging our brethren to labor earnestly for the salvation of their fellow men. I am now nearly eighty years of age, and although my enthusiasm is still strong, I desire to see many who are younger than I stepping into the ranks. We do not want the judgments of God to fall upon our world, while so little has been done to warn its inhabitants. We must put forth intense efforts to cause the light of truth to shine forth in every city and town. Much more would be accomplished if all were laboring for souls with the intensity that Christ put into his ministry. Night after night he spent in the open air, with strong crying and with agonizing prayer to his Father.

Let us resist the enemy, that he may flee from us. Let us lay hold upon eternal life. God has prepared for us a city, whose glories it is impossible to describe. In this beautiful city, in the earth made new, we may spend eternity. There we shall be free from the sufferings and the heartaches of this earth. Christ is calling us to hide our lives in him by living faith. He opens before us the privilege of being "partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."

Camp-Meeting Board

WM. COVERT

It is scarcely possible to please everybody with the camp-meeting board. Even if the food is very good and prepared in the best of style, some one whose judgment regarding such matters is imperfect, and whose appetite is out of line with normal conditions, may complain. However, since there are a great many minds and tastes to be dealt with, it is best to provide the table with a good variety of good hygienic dishes, so that as many as possible may be satisfied.

The writer desires it to be distinctly understood that he has no disposition to complain about this matter, for he personally knows that cooks, stewards, and waiters sincerely desire to satisfy all with an excellent menu served in good order. He can therefore with kindness to all consider this subject. The desire is that in harmony with the Lord's advice, all our eating and all our drinking be done to the glory of God.

Perhaps the first item for consideration at any American table is bread. This is wanted in abundance. Our people, if they can get it, will use more brown bread than white. Soft bread is better one day old than fresh. Sour bread is a serious offender when it appears at the camp-meeting, or at any other table. Some of its worst qualities can be removed by toasting in an oven. The various toasted foods should have a place on the camp table, as they are easy of digestion, and many want them.

Beans, peas, lentils, fresh cooked potatoes, beets, squash, apples, peaches, pears, plums, oranges, prunes, cherries, apricots, grapes, blackberries, strawberries, raspberries, blueberries, melons, sweet corn, cooked grains, salads, dairy products, eggs, nuts, and other healthful articles of diet may all very properly be placed before our people to be eaten at the camp-meetings.

These things in their seasons, suitably prepared and well served, leave no reasonable room for any dissatisfaction regarding the camp-meeting board.

If places were assigned and held for all who eat at the camp table, some unpleasant features would be avoided. Such an arrangement would go a long way toward preventing the unkind and improper rush for the table which is often seen. Surely something should be done to institute a proper course in this respect. None of us conduct ourselves after this unpleasant manner in our homes, and why should it prevail in the sacred camp of the Lord? It is not done anywhere else by us, and it is high time that this method cease at our camp-meetings. This manner of rushing to the table to get possession of any seat that can first be reached, crowds out those who are busy, and those who are infirm,— a thing that never should be done anywhere. Every properly regulated boarding-house has a place assigned to each individual, and his right to that place is respected by all. This is done in many of our camp-meetings. It should be done in them all.

As a rule, there should be a table provided for the ministers attending the meeting, because they are often detained from getting to the table at the ringing of the bell. This is not because they desire it to be so, but because the call to some duty has made it so. By arranging a separate table for them, they can be saved from embarrassment and inconvenience when these irregularities occur. It is only intended by these few suggestive remarks that we all as Christians endeavor to follow the golden rule, and thereby do more acceptable service for the Lord.

Talking Peace—Preparing War

(Concluded)

JOHN S. WIGHTMAN

The reason of the hesitancy of Europe in taking up the question of disarmament seems to be merely that "the time is not ripe," is the report of Professor De Maartens, who has been sounding the powers in behalf of the Russian government. From the plea for more time, the Boston Transcript draws the conclusion that "each opposing power doubtless hopes to increase its relative strength before the time for a final adjustment of the equation arrives." What a foolish and ruinous rivalry it is! England builds a "Dreadnaught," and we provide for two, whereupon our kin beyond the sea — with whom war is unthinkable — respond by ordering three more great battle-ships; while Japan, Germany, and even Brazil, are not a whit behind in the mighty preparations for war. Collier's Weekly, in its issue of March 30, said: "The fact that eight great powers of the world are squandering fourteen million dollars a year — enough to build thirty thousand miles of railroad every twelve months — on preparations for war finds great difficulty in impressing itself upon the minds of practical statesmen as a thing to be reformed. There is no other way in which five hundred million dollars a year could be so easily saved as by an agreement to limit armaments all around; yet this simple process, which could be practically worked out in a day, is treated by most members of the ruling classes of Europe as a feat beyond the capacity of the human mind." Alas, there can be no hope for the abolition of war! Rather, as the Paris Temps says: "This continual talk of peace will eventually lead to the complete embroilment of Europe." The Scientific American notes: "Among the maritime nations of Europe there is a feverish anxiety to equip the respective navies with a large force of submarine vessels." And when we consider what a hundred of these little demons of the sea, costing ten million dollars in all, would have accomplished for the Russian government at Port Arthur and Vladivostok, how they could have annihilated the Japanese fleet, we can perhaps better understand M. De Bloch, and his "War of the Future," a work, in fact, that awakened the czar's keenest apprehension as to the dread possibilities of a future international world strife on sea

'Tis but a Step

SAY not that we from heaven are far,
When holy thoughts thereto may run,
And every breath of faithful prayer
Brings answer ere our words are done.

Say not that life is dark or lone —
That here unseen, unheard, we lie,
When stooping from his glorious throne,
The Eternal hears our meanest cry.

Say rather, God and heaven are near,
And we, by golden links of prayer,
Are bound, with every human fear,
To him, the highest, holiest there.

Visit to Paradise Valley

MRS. E. G. WHITE

WEDNESDAY, May 1, we left Loma Linda for National City, to visit the Paradise Valley Sanitarium. Brother and Sister P. T. Magan accompanied us as far as Santa Ana, where they stopped to visit relatives. At Orange we met Elders H. W. Cottrell and G. W. Reaser, and Prof. E. S. Ballenger, who were on their way from Los Angeles to attend a meeting of the Paradise Valley Sanitarium Board. Brother L. O. Johnson, another member of the Board, joined us at Oceanside.

At the sanitarium we received a hearty welcome from Brother J. J. Wessels, who has recently accepted the management, and from the other members of the sanitarium family.

Sanitarium Board Meeting

Wednesday afternoon and Thursday were spent by the members of the Board in laying plans for the future work of the institution. At their request I met with them on Thursday afternoon, and made a few remarks relative to the mission of our sanitariums. I said in part: —

In the building of our sanitariums, we must guard carefully against any unnecessary extravagance in our outlay of means. It is our duty to study simplicity. Yet there are a few places of special importance and influence where better accommodations and more room are needed than for sanitarium work in other places. The impression that we desire to be left upon the minds of the patients is that of (1) the truths we teach rather than of the grandeur of the buildings.

We have none too many sanitariums. There is in our world a great field for true medical missionary work. Our sanitariums are to be as lights shining amid the moral darkness. In them the sick and suffering are to behold the miracle-working power of Christ as revealed in the lives of the workers. "Let your light so shine before men," says Christ, "that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Let the lamp of light from the Word of God shine forth unmistakably.

Let everything connected with the sanitarium and its surroundings be kept orderly and neat, that the work may stand high in the esteem of the people, and may exert constantly an uplifting influence. The Paradise Valley Sanitarium may exert a decided influence for good in National City, in San Diego, and in Coronado. The truth must be proclaimed in these places; for there are some who have not yet heard the last message of warning.

An educational work should be carried on in connection with all our sanitariums. There is a close relation between the work of our schools and our sanitariums, and wherever it is practicable, there are decided advantages in having a school in close connection with a sanitarium. There would be in such an arrangement decided advantages to (2) both lines of work. (3)

Let us not discourage one another. Let us take hold unitedly to make every line of the Lord's work a success. If some one comes to you and talks discouragingly about the work in one or another of our institutions, telling you that they are extravagant beyond measure, say to them, "I am sorry if that is so, but let us help them out, if they are in difficulty." If you will speak thus, you may avoid much of the evil that might result were you to withdraw your sympathy, and should refuse to help those who, possibly, may have been misrepresented. Let us never discourage even those who have done wrong, by treating them as if they had committed against us an unpardonable sin. Let us rather encourage them in every way possible, and if we see that they are lifting hard in a worthy enterprise, let us lift with them.

I feel of good courage regarding the future of the Paradise Valley Sanitarium. If all who are connected with the institution will place themselves upon the platform of eternal truth, and will work unitedly and sympathetically, they may exert an influence that will increase in its uplifting power.

Talks to Patients and Helpers

During the week which we spent at the Paradise Valley Sanitarium, I spoke twice in the parlor to the patients and helpers. I recounted before them the mercies of God in securing the property for sanitarium purposes, and his providences by which we had been led step by step in the opening up of the institution. I also spoke to them of the great privileges that are ours through Christ, and of the blessings that will follow harmonious action.

(3) We need to be instant in prayer. It is our great privilege to hang our helpless souls upon Jesus Christ, and to rest for our salvation upon his merits. Let us speak words that will elevate and ennoble, and that will make pleasant impressions on the minds of those with whom we converse. The Lord wants us to be sanctified, and to walk in humility of mind before him. If we are obedient to his commandments, not a reproach can fall on us justly. Others may talk about us, they may spread evil reports concerning us, but these reports need not be true.

In our institutions, where many persons of varied temperaments are brought together, it is necessary that each should cultivate a spirit of unselfishness. Let no one feel that it is his place to mold others to his individual mind or opinions. While each will manifest an individuality, yet it should be an individuality that is under the control of the Holy Spirit. If we are kind and Christlike, there will be a blending of hearts and of interests that will be beneficial to all alike.

Our sanitariums are to be agencies for imparting to the sick a health that is maintained in happiness and peace of soul. Every worker is to co-operate with the physician; for by the manifestation of kindness and tenderness, he may bring to the suffering ones a healing balm.

Every one is responsible to God for the use he makes of his abilities. He is responsible for making a daily growth in grace. Let no one feel, even though he may theoretically be established in the present truth, that he makes no mistakes. But if mistakes are made, let there be a readiness to correct them. And let us avoid everything that is likely to create dissension and strife; for there is a heaven before us, and among its inhabitants there will be no strife.

We are to live, not to elevate ourselves, but that we may, as God's little children, do to the very best of our ability the work that he has committed to us. It is our business to give a right impression to others. We are preparing for eternity, for the sanitarium above, where the Great Physician shall wipe away the tears from every eye, and where the leaves of the tree of life are for the healing of the nation. (4)

Let us all take hold of Christ Jesus by a living faith, and walk in humility of mind. Then the grace of God will be revealed in us, and we shall see of his salvation. We shall greet the holy family of the redeemed, and hear the words of Christ, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." We shall touch our golden harps, and heaven will ring with rich music. We shall cast our glittering crowns at his feet, and give glory to him who has overcome in our behalf.

There may be some things here that we do not understand. Some things in the Bible may appear to us mysterious, because they are beyond our finite comprehension. But as our Saviour leads us by the living waters, he will make clear to our minds that which was not before clearly understood.

As I think of the future glory of heaven, I feel an intense desire that every living soul may know about it. I often wish that I might have the vigor and strength of younger years, and that I might go from place to place, speaking the truth as it is in Jesus. I long to hold him up as the mighty Healer, and to present his eternal life insurance policy.

It means much to us whether we are in pursuit of the heavenly things, or of

(1) (2) (3)
Counsels on Health, p. 242; 242, 243; 243, 244

the earthly. The earthly will soon pass away. In these days, there is great destruction of earthly treasures. There are "earthquakes in divers places," and trouble and difficulties are seen on every hand. But it is our privilege to be preparing to become members of the heavenly family, children of the heavenly King.

Let us strive to overcome. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my father in his throne." Let us overcome the hasty words which mar the happiness and peace of mind of those about us. Let us overcome our impetuous tempers. Let us be kind and patient, accommodating, pleasant, thinking evil of no one. If we resist the devil, he will flee from us. Around every tempted soul there are angels of God, ready to lift up the standard of righteousness, if the tempted one will only show a spirit of resistance to evil.

Each may be an overcomer. Christ has, in our behalf, withstood the fiercest temptations of the enemy. He "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." He is our Pattern. Through his virtues and his grace, we may be sure of an entrance into "the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Social Services at Camp-Meeting

WILLIAM COVERT

The prayer and social services at our camp-meetings rank high as matters of importance. The spiritual condition of the campers is always indicated by the testimonies they bear in these meetings. But even the testimonies are more largely under the control of the leader than many suppose.

In the preaching service one person talks, but in the social service one directs many people in their talk. The leader suggests the topic for the meeting, and the spirit that influences him has a manifest effect upon the entire service of the hour. The man who is appointed to take charge of a social meeting, should feel that the life of the camp is to be given into his keeping for the time of that service, and that camp should, in his secret pavilion, be presented to the Father in heaven, before he dares to present himself before the people as their leader.

Social-meeting topics properly embrace faith, gratitude to God, the joy of obedience, answers to prayer, the work of the Holy Spirit, the worth of a soul, the progress of the message, the soon coming of Jesus, the love of God, and many other themes of Christian experience and gospel work.

The time allotted to each speaker, where the congregation is large, must, of necessity, be very short. Those well-timed testimonies, made rich and mellow by the Spirit of God, which occupy a minute or less, are greatly appreciated by most of the listeners. Long talks, a repetition of set phrases, sharp thrusts, cold arguments, tedious recitals, reference to gossip, criticism, murmurings, reference to troubles, expressions of doubt, words of darkness, efforts at sermonizing, and things belonging to these classes should be studiously avoided in our social meetings. The enemy will endeavor to work these topics into a social meeting, but a wise pilot will avoid these dangerous icebergs which unfriendly currents carry into the way.

Our social meetings are designed to give all the people an opportunity to announce publicly their faith in God and the truth. In them, testimonies of success regarding lessons learned and victories won, are always in place. The apostle gives a summary of the social-meeting work at our assemblies, when he says we are to exhort one another to love and good works, and to do this so much the more as we see the end approaching. Heb. 10: 24, 25.

It sometimes happens that the one given charge at the hour for social worship takes advantage of the situation that he may preach to the people. His talk may be good, or it may not be good; but as the time was intended for the people to use in offering prayer and in giving testimonies of praise and exhortation, the appointed leader was unkind when he took the time which had been allotted to the people. On such occasions the people are tempted to think that better balance is needed.

Perhaps one hundred and fifty persons have presented themselves at the early morning service which has been announced as the special service of the day for the people to tell what blessings the Lord has given to them. At this hour, the minister in charge, after fifteen minutes have been consumed in opening exercises, occupies twenty-five or thirty minutes of the remaining time in talking or sermonizing, leaving fifteen minutes for the people to express themselves. This leaves a period of six seconds for each person in the congregation to use in bearing testimony. As the leader comes to that point where he announces that "the order of the meeting will now be changed," he looks at his watch, and says to the waiting people, "There are fifteen minutes of the hour left; remember the golden rule,— be short so as to give your neighbor an equal share of the time with yourself."

But when there has been a tedious opening of this kind, the testimonies often partake of the same tedious spirit. In this way it sometimes comes to pass that the camp-meeting receives a serious wound. The leader who has made this mistake will sometimes trespass upon the breakfast hour, by protracting the service beyond the appointed time for closing, and thus a second injury is inflicted upon the rights of the people.

It is plain that careful organization of the camp and its work is essential to success, and that the details of the plan be conscientiously observed by all who speak and all who lead in the different departments. It requires the conscientious, intelligent co-operation of all concerned in the camp-meeting work, to make these gatherings what the Lord would have them to be.

The Power of the Message

T. E. BOWEN

The first angel's message was based upon time. That dreadful "hour" of God's judgment, traced by true servants of God from the prophetic charts so unerringly, showing that time would end in 1844, moved men with mighty power. The whole world was stirred. Men and women in all walks of life, in all quarters of the globe, were discussing this question. Many truly believed, and turned to God with all their hearts, through repentance of sin, and were accepted of him. Those who did not thus make peace with heaven stood in awe, fearing that the things preached might be so, and no one felt sure that the end of the world would not come, until after the time set for it had passed. It all depended upon time. The message concerning the hour of God's judgment was true, and still is true; but the real test for men in 1844 was based upon literal time.

Another message followed — a most solemn warning to men not to disregard God's holy law. Connected with this message there is no test of time. But while this is true, there are, nevertheless, still greater tests of character accompanying the third and last message now going to the world than that of time in the first message of 1844.

Men and women are brought face to face with God's law. The inconsistency and futility of worshiping a power usurping the place of God, with its man-made traditions and laws, instead of worshiping the God who made heaven and earth in six days, resting the seventh, and keeping his words and commands, is also pressed home to the consciences of men in this message which follows the time message of 1844. It is, therefore, charged with a power stronger than any preceding it. It is to go everywhere, and end in triumph and power. Not having originated upon earth, but in heaven, no earthly power can stop it.

Of the time test of the first angel's message, and the inherent power of the third angel's message to do its work prior to Christ's coming, we read in "Early Writings," page 64: "Time has not been a test since 1844, and it will never again be a test. The Lord has shown me that the message of the third angel must go, and be proclaimed to the scattered children of the Lord, but it must not be hung on time. I saw that some were getting a false excitement, arising from preaching time; but the third angel's message is stronger than time can be. I saw that this message can stand on its own foundation, and needs not time to strengthen it; and that it will go in mighty power, and do its work, and will be cut short in righteousness."

But this is not all. Those who accept this message need look for no help outside the power coming from heaven, as it is doing its finishing work in the earth. All human help will be cut off. "In the last great conflict of the controversy with Satan, those who are loyal to God will see every earthly support cut off.

Tell Me About the Master

TELL me about the Master,
  I am weary and worn to-night;
The day lies behind me in shadow,
  And only the evening is light —
Light with a radiant glory,
  That lingers about the west;
But my heart is aweary, aweary,
  And I long like a child for rest.

Tell me about the Master —
  Of the hills he in loneliness trod,
When the tears and the blood of his anguish
  Dropped down on Judea's sod;
For to me life's weary mile-stones
  But a sorrowful journey mark —
Rough lies the hill country behind me,
  The mountains before me are dark.

Tell me about the Master —
  Of the wrongs he freely forgave,
Of his mercy and tender compassion,
  Of his love that was mighty to save;
For my heart is aweary, aweary,
  Of the woes and temptations of life,
Of the error that stalks in the noonday,
  Of falsehood and malice and strife.

Yet I know that whatever of sorrow
  Or pain or temptations befall,
The infinite Master has suffered,
  And knoweth and pitieth all;
So tell me the sweet old story,
  That falls on each wound like a balm,
And the heart that was bruised and broken
  Grows patient and strong and calm.

Labors in San Diego

MRS. E. G. WHITE

DURING our visit at the Paradise Valley Sanitarium, the Lord strengthened me to speak twice to the members of the church in San Diego. During the past year, as a result of efforts put forth by Elder W. W. Simpson and other laborers, there had been a good increase in the membership of this church. I felt a heavy burden for the work in this important center for tourist resort. There should be an earnest, united effort on the part of our brethren and sisters in San Diego, and the workers connected with the sanitarium, to make known the truth for this time.

Sabbath Sermon at San Diego

On Sabbath, May 4, the Lord gave me a message to our brethren and sisters in San Diego. I based my remarks on the first chapter of Hebrews: —

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high."

Here the position of Jesus Christ in reference to his Father is brought to view. While they are one in purpose, and one in mind, yet in personality they are two. May we not learn from this that there is to be unity between believers? There is no reason why one should feel that it is necessary for him to bring others to the exact line of his own individuality. So long as we are subject to the temptations of Satan, we shall each have all we can possibly attend to, in order to maintain a right relation to God, that Christ may do for us his atoning work. And though we may differ in the form of words, and in the expression of our individuality, yet our words may be sanctified, and our characters purified through the sacrifice of Christ.

We should now make diligent inquiry of ourselves, Can I, with my present attainments, stand before the face of the holy God? If in the great day of judgment, we come short, we shall have no excuse; for we have access to the Word of God. Take the Bible for your lesson book; for it is by obedience to its truths that we shall be sanctified. To ensure the work of our salvation, God gave to our world the gift of his only begotten Son. Shall we accept the blessing that Christ has bought for us at such infinite sacrifice? He has made it possible for us to be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Let us not give the impression that our religion consists principally in coming to the church on Sabbath, and numbering one among a number who listen to a sermon, and then go back to their homes to continue in sinful practises. Christ said to his disciples, "Ye are the light of the world. . . . Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Christ has given us the pattern to which we are to work, but unless we make diligent effort with the help of God, we shall miss the mark. We must be sanctified to God, soul, body, and spirit.

Do we learn from Christ every day? If we do not, we shall certainly come short of the knowledge that is essential. We can not afford to be weaklings in our Christian experience; for we can not tell when our account may be settled for eternity. We must constantly increase in faith, and in likeness to Jesus Christ. If we will humble ourselves, the Lord will lift us up. We may try to lift ourselves up, but this will not be reckoned in our favor, in the day when Christ estimates character.

O, we are, many of us, so filled with self! We are fastened so firmly to our peculiar temperaments and dispositions. Shall we now follow the Word closely, that this great "I" may die, and that Christ may dwell in our hearts by faith?

"Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?"

The Essential Knowledge

O, that we all might more fully realize our accountability to God for the wonderful privileges he has bestowed upon us! In the Word of God are grand truths that are worthy of intense study. Shall we neglect these great fundamental truths, in order that we may enter into speculation over what has not been clearly revealed? I am frequently asked, regarding some theoretical doctrine, questions that I feel no liberty to answer. I sometimes reply to those who ask me such questions, "You have the Word. If the Lord desired you to know in regard to this matter, you would find (1) your knowledge in the Word of God, and would not need to ask me. If we reach heaven, we may then understand the matters that are not clear to us now." Let us study the great truths of the Scriptures: they are sufficient to tax our minds to their utmost capacity.

"This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." O, do we know God as we should? What comfort, what joy, we should have if we were to learn daily the lessons he desires us to learn! We must know him by an experimental knowledge. It will be profitable for us to spend more time in secret prayer, in becoming personally acquainted with our Heavenly Father. In our weakness, we may come to him, and ask him to impart to us an understanding of what he will do for us, in separating from us everything that is unlike his own character.

Labor for Others

When our own hearts are right with God, we shall feel an intense desire to do all we can in bringing the light of truth before those who have not heard it. In the great work of warning the world, God has committed to his people a sacred trust. "We are laborers together with God." "As thou hast sent me into the world," said Christ, speaking of his disciples, "even so have I also sent them into the world." In the formation of character, we are to represent the One who gave his life for the world, and if we are alert, we shall see, on the right hand and on the left, opportunities to speak words for the Master.

If we neglect these opportunities, the time will come when there will be spoken to us by those we have not warned, words of reproach and bitterness: "You knew of these terrible judgments that were coming. We were associated together, but you did not tell us. Why did you not warn us, that we might have escaped?" May God help us that we may not have upon our garments, because of our neglect, the blood of souls!

We have a work to do in our world, a work similar to that which Christ performed. This spiritual work must precede every other interest of our lives. That which is temporal must ever be made secondary to the requirements of God. It will not profit us to put ourselves forward in this world, at the expense of our Christianity.

United Action

In the carrying forward of God's work, we shall not be as separate, independent agents. The unity of God's people is to be to the world a convincing argument that God sent his Son to save the world. Christ prayed for his disciples, "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

Such is the unity for which we are to seek,— such unity as exists between the Father and the Son. If we find ourselves inclined to separate from our brethren if they do not do exactly as we think best, this is an evidence that we are not genuine Bible Christians. We need to study the relation of Christ to his Father, and we need to understand his love for the world.

Opposition

The great enemy of our souls is vigilant and alert. He is especially active when he sees us putting forth efforts to do the work of the Lord. Do you think that the work of God will go forward smoothly, without any opposition from the enemy of the faith? Do you think there will be no opposition against those who seek to perfect their characters in harmony with the Word of God? This we can not expect. We must arm for conflict. But God will be with us. He has provided a complete gospel armor, and if we will put on every piece of this armor, we may be safe from defeat.

Those who think that everything must meet their own mind, and that they need make no sacrifice, will not be numbered with the overcomers, nor will they receive the overcomer's reward. We must brace ourselves against the opposing elements. "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

God is in earnest with every one of us. Our greatest consideration now is to form characters for eternity. May he who has given for our salvation his only begotten Son strengthen and bless his people.

The Christian's Hope

I. H. EVANS

God never intended that the Christian's hope should center in material things. The kingdom of God is not of this world, neither is his service in meats and drinks. His kingdom is spiritual, and most of his promises pertain to the life to come.

The reward of the Christian is not measured to him in this world, but is promised at the "resurrection of the just." Said the Master, "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Again he said, "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."

In the days of Christ the Pharisees taught that a man's temporal blessings were an index of God's love toward him. Christ shattered this idea by the parable of the "rich man and Lazarus." From the lesson taught in this parable, we learn that material things are not looked upon by God as they are regarded by man. Neither riches nor poverty, sickness nor health, success nor failure in the affairs of this life, are evidences of God's care, nor the measure of God's disapprobation of the course of his children.

The Christian's heart is not set on things below. Said Christ, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," but the Christian's hope is in the resurrection "from the dead." To him all else is of little worth. His gains and losses, his joys and sorrows, are of little value, save as they help him on to the realization of his hope. Not in the present, but the future, is the Christian's hope. So Paul wrote to his brethren at Corinth, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."

But to attain unto a resurrection from the dead is the crowning act in the life of faith. What matter the ills and misfortunes of the present, of what account are its pains and heartaches and disappointments, if only we can attain unto this desired end? It was this hope that buoyed the heart of Job when suffering the loss of all his earthly possessions, and afflicted with the keenest physical pain. In the floodtide of his sorrow he cried, "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me."

It was this hope that inspired Paul in his arduous evangelistic labors for souls. He wrote the church at Philippi: "But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith: that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

The assurance of the resurrection is confirmed by Christ's own words when he says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. . . . Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

Life has much of bitterness for us all. If we have not already drunk from its cup of sorrow, we need not think to escape the bitter draught some other day. Every heart has its own secret chamber of grief, and each life its own bitterness. The gospel is given to enable us patiently to bear with the present, that the future with all its glorious inheritance may be ours. Nothing in this life is to despoil the Christian of this triumph. Sickness, poverty, misfortune, even death itself, can not prevent the realization of this hope.

The voice of inspiration lifts the despair from our hearts, and we hear the comforting words, "Thus saith the Lord; a voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her children refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not. Thus saith the Lord; Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy. And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border."

What restfulness this hope brings to the aching heart! What joy amid sorrow! What confidence when in trial! So the Lord says, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

The Unspeakable Gift

M. W. DE L'HORBE

(Concluded)

Christ surrendered fully to his Father the body that had been given him to dwell in; he completely emptied himself of self. So when we fully surrender ourselves to the Lord and have the faith of Jesus in the power of God to deliver us from sin, then the victory will be gained.

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable,

French war-ships were soon at the scene, and have bombarded the city, landing 2,000 men. The Jewish quarter of the city has been sacked. There are seven similar cases against the company yet to be tried, and in case of conviction the maximum penalty would be a fine of $88,000,000. The judge also ordered the calling of a special grand jury to consider the criminal aspect of the case, the conduct of the railroad in this matter, and the evidence of a conspiracy with reference to these unlawful rates. It is thought the Chicago and Alton Railway will be convicted on the evidence already in hand; but the end of the matter is some distance ahead, as the Standard Oil Company will appeal the case to a higher court.

The Work in Washington, D. C.

SANITARIUM, CAL., May 30, 1907.

I HAVE a message to bear to our people throughout the field. There is a decided and thorough work to be done in Washington, D. C. The time is long past that should have seen this field faithfully worked. The last message of warning must be carried to those who need the truth. Men of God who have this message in their hearts should be chosen to carry it to the people of Washington and neighboring towns. One of authority was represented to me as standing before our people, and pleading that workers be sent to Washington; and I was instructed to urge this subject upon the minds of our laborers.

Brethren and sisters, God has given to every man his work. He calls upon church-members in every place to dedicate themselves to the Lord and to his service. Let us go forth, and present the truth from house to house, to souls who are starving for the bread of life. We must come into line.

"Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." These words teach us how the field is to be supplied with workers who will labor for the salvation of souls. When church-members bring the precepts of Christ into the life practise; when they confess their sins to one another, and offer up prayers to God, he will graciously manifest his power through them.

In every possible way, humble efforts should be made to win souls to the truth. The third angel's message is to be proclaimed all through the suburbs of Washington. The people living in these suburbs are precious to God. Those who believe the truth for this time must now arouse, and earnestly take hold of the work that needs to be done. We must be wide awake to the needs of the situation, and perform the work with wisdom.

There should be no cramping of the sanitarium work at Takoma Park. I have been shown that the national capital should have every advantage. The workers there are to bring the truth before the ruling powers, and means must flow into that field in order that the work there shall make a presentation that will commend it to those who are accustomed to refinement and plenty. No mean impression must be given to these statesmen, whose only knowledge, perhaps, of this people and the third angel's message, may be received through the sanitarium work. It will be very essential that the means expended for the work in Washington shall be economically handled.

We need to realize that we are living in critical times. There is no time to be lost if we would make the right impression regarding the work. Satan is making every effort possible to undermine the confidence of men in the law of God, causing them to regard it as of little importance. But men should remember that the God of heaven proclaimed his law from Mount Sinai with his own voice, that men might realize its importance. The Lord does not want the people who stand for his law in the earth, and who are to accomplish his closing work in the world, to represent that law and that work in a cheap manner. God's purposes in guiding us to Washington, the capital of our nation, was that we might represent his work there in a sensible way. In connection with his work he would not have anything of a cheap and faulty character.

It would also be a great mistake to close up the work of the branch sanitarium we have operated in Washington. Some have thought that when our institution at Takoma Park should be in running order, we might do this. But instruction regarding this matter has been given me by higher authority than that of man; and I have been shown that to close up the work of the first institution would be a grievous mistake. There are men holding positions of responsibility in the world who are patronizing our treatment rooms there, and we must not cut off from them this opportunity of gaining a knowledge of the truth for this time.

A branch sanitarium in the city will lead to an acquaintance with the larger institution at Takoma Park. Through these institutions the light of truth is to shine forth to counselors and statesmen.

From the light the Lord has given me, I know there is a great work to be accomplished in Washington, and every laggard power must be aroused to act its part. A special work should also be done in this city in the establishing of schools, that the people may be educated along Christian lines. In our schools established in this city, the Word of God is to be exalted as the study book, and the law of God is to be honored and obeyed. The discipline of our schools is to be of the highest type.

God calls for us to advance step by step in the building up of his work. We are now doing what should have been done twenty years ago. Some have thought that we as a people were unable to stem the current of inquiry and criticism. But I have been shown that if we had advanced in the way of reform as the light came to us, we would have a very different showing than now appears. In following the instruction of our Great Leader, difficulties would have been overcome; the consciousness of the approval of God would have made our ministers and physicians and the teachers in our schools valiant men of God. In the fullest sense of the word, they would have been laborers together with God.

We must individually learn the lesson that the treasures of knowledge are with the Most High. The discourses of the men who profess to honor and reverence the law of God must be earnest, sincere, and solemn, as befits the time in which they live. Their appeals for temperance must speak powerfully to the senses of men. The love of God is to be expressed in word and action.

Those who are engaged in the work for these last days must identify themselves with Christ. They must become partakers of the divine nature, and thus escape the corruption that is in the world through lust.

I appeal to my brethren and sisters throughout the American field. See that the work in Washington is not delayed for want of means. It is very important that the Sanitarium be fully equipped for its work. Let the cause of truth in Washington triumph gloriously.

These words were spoken regarding the work in Washington: "The work at the heart of the nation is not to be handicapped. The Sanitarium must do its part in convincing the influential men of America of the importance of the third angel's message. And our books must be handled in a way that will secure their largest circulation."

In the completion of the Washington Sanitarium, let simplicity and good taste prevail. This institution is to do an important work for the people of Washington. Through its influence inquiries will be made concerning our faith, and information will be given that will find a lodgment in some minds. One is standing back of the cause of present truth in Washington who will be a present help in every emergency. Hold firmly to the principles of truth. Guard the soul vigilantly, that you may not be found warring against the Spirit of God. Gird on the armor of Christ's righteousness. Be strong; yea, be strong.

Maine, Attention!

The ninth annual meeting of the Benevolent Association of Seventh-day Adventists of Maine will be held at Milo, Maine, Aug. 27, 1907, at 5 P. M., for the purpose of electing officers and transacting such other business as may properly come before the meeting.

E. C. Taylor, Clerk.

To Our Brethren in Maine

Your attention has been called to the fact that our camp-meeting is to be held this month, in Milo, Maine. Those going over the Maine Central Railroad will purchase tickets at the following-named stations: Portland, Lewiston (upper station), Skowhegan, Shawmut, Fairfield, Waterville, Brunswick, Richmond, Augusta, Pittsfield, and Corinna. Those coming from Bangor will purchase tickets over the Bangor and Aroostook Railroad. Portland and Richmond are the only stations where tickets can be purchased through to Milo and return. At all the other stations the tickets will be sold to the Northern Maine Junction at the rate of 1¾ cents a mile each way. Do not fail to mention the fact that you want a camp-meeting ticket when you ask for your ticket. There will be no grocery tent on the ground. A grocery team, a baker's cart, and a milk cart will come on the grounds. Come prepared to care for yourselves. Do not fail to bring your winter clothing, and bedding enough to keep you warm nights. Remember you are going to camp-meeting, and not going to a church. We shall try to have plenty of straw on the grounds with which to fill the beds. If you have a tent, bring it with you. Come prepared to care for yourselves as far as possible. There will be a boarding tent for the visiting ministers. The camp is about ten minutes' walk from Milo station. There will be teams for transferring the baggage from the station to the ground. All delegates should be on the ground Monday, August 19. Take the train that leaves Portland at 11:05 A. M., via Lewiston. At Richmond, take the 11:42 A. M. train, and change at Waterville for the Northern Maine Junction. S. J. Hersum,

President.

Address J. W. Moore, R. F. D. 2, Albion, Ind.

Publications Wanted

[Special Notice.— We learn that objectionable literature is being sent in response to these requests, and urge all to examine with special care any periodicals or pamphlets received outside of our well-known denominational publications. Be sure that the literature which you distribute teaches the truth. — Ed.]

The following persons desire late, clean copies of our publications, post-paid: —

Rosa Robinson, Vinta, I. T., periodicals.

Jacob Skadsheim, Local, Minn., tracts and papers in different languages.

Mrs. S. G. Jackson, 1308 Dak. Ave., Grand Forks, N. D., temperance tracts and papers.

C. W. M. Reed, Signs, Liberty, Life and Health, and tracts; could use about fifty copies a week.

D. C. Bartshe, 707 Central Ave., Lexington, Ky., Review, Signs, Watchman, Life and Health, Liberty, Instructor, Little Friend, and tracts.

Miss Tillie Stiller, 1700a North Pendleton Ave., St. Louis, Mo., Signs, Liberty, Watchman, Life and Health, Life Boat, tracts, also papers and tracts in foreign languages.

Obituaries

Holmes.— Died at the home of her niece, Mrs. N. W. Baker, in Springfield, N. Y., Mrs. L. L. Holmes, aged 81 years and 14 days. She had been a firm believer in the third angel's message for over thirty-five years. She survived her husband, Elder Benj. Holmes, a little less than six months. Words of comfort were spoken by Elder Wemet (Methodist). * * *

True.— Died at his home near Knightstown, Ind., June 16, 1907, Albert F. True, aged 34 years, 3 months, and 29 days. He was converted under the labors of the writer, baptized, and united with the Kennard church at its organization in 1892, being a charter member. He lived an upright, faithful life. A mother, four brothers, and three sisters mourn their loss, but not without hope. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from 2 Sam. 14:14 to a large gathering.

J. M. Rees.

Livingston.— Died at Old Bank, Panama, July 6, 1907, of tuberculosis, Sarah Livingston, aged 21 years, 4 months, and 3 days. Sister Livingston accepted present truth at a tent effort last year at the above place. Very shortly after, she was taken ill, but her piety and unwavering faith shone so brightly that those in attendance at her bedside were impressed and cheered, especially as she has stood alone in the family. We are confident that she sleeps in Jesus. Words of hope and comfort were spoken by the writer.

THE King of love my Shepherd is,
Whose goodness faileth never;
I nothing lack if I am his,
And he is mine forever.

Where streams of living water flow,
My ransomed soul he leadeth,
And where the verdant pastures grow,
With food celestial feedeth.

Perverse and foolish, oft I strayed,
But yet in love he sought me,

The Word of God

MRS. E. G. WHITE

CLAD in the vestments of humanity, the Son of God came down to the level of those he wished to save. In him was no guile or sinfulness; he was ever pure and undefiled; yet he took upon him our sinful nature. Clothing his divinity with humanity, that he might associate with fallen humanity, he sought to redeem for man that which by disobedience Adam had lost, for himself and for the world. In his own character Jesus manifested to the world the character of God; he pleased not himself, but went about doing good. His whole history, for more than thirty years, was of pure, disinterested benevolence.

Can we wonder that men were astonished at his teaching? "He taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." The teaching of the scribes and the Pharisees was a continuous repetition of fables and childish traditions. Their opinions and ceremonies rested on the authority of ancient maxims and rabbinical sayings, which were frivolous and worthless. Christ did not dwell on weak, insipid sayings and theories of men. As one possessing higher authority, he addressed his hearers, presenting before them momentous subjects; and his appeals carried conviction to their hearts. The opinion of all, expressed by many who were not able to keep silent, was, "Never spake man like this man."

The Bible teaches the whole will of God concerning us. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." The teaching of this Word is exactly that needed in all circumstances in which we may be placed. It is a sufficient rule of faith and practise; for it is the voice of God speaking to the soul, giving the members of his family directions for keeping the heart with all diligence. If this Word is studied, not merely read, but studied, it furnishes us with a storehouse of knowledge which enables us to improve every God-given endowment. It teaches us our obligation to use the faculties given us. Guided by its precepts, we may render obedience to God's requirements.

All who will come to the Word of God for guidance, with humble, inquiring minds, determined to know the terms of salvation, will understand what saith the Scripture. But those who bring to the investigation of the Word a spirit which it does not approve, will take away from the search a spirit which it has not imparted. The Lord will not speak to a mind that is unconcerned. He wastes not his instruction on one who is willingly irreverent or polluted. But the tempter educates every mind that yields itself to his suggestions and is willing to make of none effect God's holy law.

We need to humble our hearts, and with sincerity and reverence search the Word of life; for that mind alone that is humble and contrite can see light. The heart, the mind, the soul must be prepared to receive light. There must be silence in the soul. The thoughts must be brought into captivity to Jesus Christ. The boastful self-confidence and self-sufficiency must stand rebuked in the presence of the Word of God. The Lord speaks to the heart that humbles itself before him.

Stirring times are before us, and it is fatal to be careless and indifferent. "Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." We can not afford to be disobedient to God's requirements. The wrath which the impenitent are now treasuring up against that day when the judgment shall sit, and every case shall be judged, according to the things written in the books of heaven, will soon burst upon them. Then the voice of mercy will not longer plead in behalf of sinners.

If the invitations given now are refused, if we persist in disobedience, we shall have no second probation. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve,"— God or mammon. Now, while it is called today, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your heart, lest it be the last invitation of mercy.

The Shaking Time and Its Cause

A. L. MANOUS

What view was given Nov. 20, 1857, of the shaking time?

"Nov. 20, 1857, I was shown the people of God, and saw them mightily shaken. Some, with strong faith and agonizing cries, were pleading with God."—"Testimonies," Vol. I, page 179.

Were all pleading with God?

"Some, I saw, did not participate in this work of agonizing and pleading. They seemed indifferent and careless. They were not resisting the darkness around them, and it shut them in like a thick cloud."— Ibid., page 180.

What was said, Nov. 5, 1862, of this time?

"I saw that we are now in the shaking time. Satan is working with all his power to wrest souls from the hand of Christ, and cause them to trample under foot the Son of God."— Ibid., page 429.

What is this shaking time?

"We are in the shaking time, the time when everything that can be shaken will be shaken. The Lord will not excuse those who know the truth if they do not in word and deed obey his commands." — Ibid., Vol. VI, page 332.

Who will be shaken out?

"The mighty shaking has commenced and will go on, and all will be shaken out who are not willing to take a bold stand for the truth, and to sacrifice for God and his cause. The angel said, 'Think ye that any will be compelled to sacrifice? — No, no. It must be a free-will offering. It will take all to buy the field.' "—"Early Writings," pages 50, 51, tenth edition.

What causes this shaking?

"I asked the meaning of the shaking I had seen, and was shown that it would be caused by the straight testimony called forth by the counsel of the True Witness to the Laodiceans. This will have its effect upon the heart of the receiver, and will lead him to exalt the standard and pour forth the straight truth. Some will not bear this straight testimony. They will rise up against it, and this will cause a shaking among God's people."—"Testimonies," Vol. I, page 181.

Latter-day Revivals

C. E. HOLMES

To any one who is watching the signs of the times there appears an almost innumerable array of events which prove that we are nearing the end. Statements made years ago by the spirit of prophecy are being fulfilled daily. An exceptionally striking example of this may be seen in the revival which occurred in Wales a few years ago. It was said to have been one of the greatest Christian movements of modern times. The periodicals of the day gave a large amount of space describing it, and it was known to the people all over the world. But the real transformation of the life failed to appear permanently, and the desired effect was not secured. When such results follow a revival effort, the enemy of souls is the gainer.

The following from "Great Controversy," page 464, gives the real character of many latter-day revivals: —

"Before the final visitation of God's judgments upon the earth there will be, among the people of the Lord, such a revival of primitive godliness as has not been witnessed since apostolic times. . . . The enemy of souls desires to hinder this work; and before the time for such a movement shall come, he will endeavor to prevent it, by introducing a counterfeit. In those churches which he can bring under his deceptive power, he will make it appear that God's special bless-

Visit to San Pasqual and Escondido

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Thursday afternoon, May 9, we left San Diego for Escondido. Here we were met by Dr. Sophie Judson and Brother L. O. Johnson, who took us in their carriages to San Pasqual, ten miles further.

San Pasqual is a beautiful valley, where are located several families of our people. At this place was raised up one of the earliest churches in southern California. They have for their worship a neat little church, capable of seating over one hundred. Our brethren in the neighborhood also maintain a church-school, and on Friday afternoon I spoke to the children in this school.

The Sabbath Sermon

Sabbath morning quite a number of our brethren and sisters from Escondido drove over to San Pasqual, and when I entered the church, I found the room crowded. In my discourse, I dwelt largely upon the importance of a close union of the members of Christ's church one with another, and with him, as illustrated in the parable of the vine, in the fifteenth chapter of John.

"I am the true vine," says Christ, "and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit."

Sometimes this pruning process consists in permitting some trial to come upon us that will drive us to an earnest seeking of the Lord. Shall we then think it strange, or shall we feel rebellious, when these trials come to us? Let us rather rejoice in the knowledge that "every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit."

To maintain a constant union with Christ is essential to Christian growth, and is the great hope of those who are seeking a preparation for his coming. "Abide in me," he continues, "and I in you. As the branch can not bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. . . . If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned."

From the study of the vine we may learn also of the close union that is to exist among believers, all of whom must draw their strength and their life from the same stock. There are differences in the characteristics of the various branches and leaves of the vine, and so there will be in our various experiences. In our thoughts, our words, and our actions, we shall not be exact duplicates one of another. Yet as in the life of the vine every branch and every leaf acts its part, so the members of the church — the body of Christ — are to be as one harmonious whole.

God is hungry for fruit. The form may be perfect, the appearance beautiful, but unless there is a manifestation of fruit, the great Vine-dresser will take away the unprofitable branches. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love."

The Responsibilities of Parents

I also dwelt at some length on the solemn obligations that rest upon parents. Children are a heritage from the Lord. They are to be brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. In the work of their training, the father and the mother are to work in harmony. The position of the father, as priest of the household, and of the mother, as queen in the home, are most solemn. The mother is not to occupy the position of a slave or of a drudge. Upon her rests largely the burden of educating the little ones in the fear of the Lord.

Into this important work of child training, we must bring all the sweetness of a subdued, tender disposition. We can not afford to wound the tender hearts of the little ones by undue harshness. They have a keen sense of justice, and their feelings naturally rise in rebellion if they are unnecessarily scolded or blamed. Draw them to Christ by the tender cords of love. It will be necessary to correct wrongs, and at times even to administer punishment, but this may be done in such a manner as will attract them, and not repel them.

In their position as parents, fathers and mothers should study the dealings of God with his "little children." His government is founded on love. Yet "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." So in the correction of children, punishment is sometimes necessary, but this punishment should not be such as is prompted by feelings of anger or revenge.

It is of great importance that the work of training to obedience should be begun during the infancy of the child. From their very babyhood, children should be taught to overcome passion, but this can not be done by a manifestation of passion on the part of the parent. There must be an exercise of patient gentleness.

When we consider that the future destiny of the child is largely dependent upon the faithfulness with which he is educated and trained by the parents, we can but urge with all our power that there be more earnest diligence on the part of fathers and mothers. Let not the father so burden himself with business cares that he must neglect his duties as the priest of the household. O that there may be such faithfulness in this matter that when parents come up to the gates of the city of God, they may say, Here am I, and the children whom thou hast given me!

Visit to Escondido

Sunday forenoon we were taken in a carriage to Escondido, and entertained at the home of Brother H. E. Olmstead. The brethren and sisters in this place had urged us to hold services with them before we left, so an appointment was given out that I would speak in the afternoon in our church. This building is a substantial brick structure that was purchased at a very low cost from the Baptist denomination. Besides the main chapel, there is a room in which a church-school is conducted.

Afternoon Meeting

The service for the afternoon had been advertised in the local paper, and through the courtesy of the ministers of other churches had been announced in their morning services. As a result there was a good attendance from the public of Escondido, besides several of our brethren from San Pasqual.

I felt richly blessed of God as I stood before this congregation and presented the Christian duties as set forth in the first chapter of Second Peter. The working of God on our behalf according to the plan of multiplication, and our duty to work on the plan of addition, are here set forth. "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord. . . . And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity."

In the attainment of these virtues, there must be a reasoning from cause to effect. Following the knowledge,—"the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord,"—we are to add the grace of temperance.

The Temperance Reform

(1) There needs to be a great reformation on the subject of temperance. The world is filled with self-indulgence of every kind. Because of the benumbing influence of stimulants and narcotics the minds of many are unable to discern between the sacred and the common. Their mental powers are weakened, and they can not discern the deep spiritual things of the Word of God.

The Christian will be temperate in all things,—in eating, in drinking, in dress, and in every phase of life. "Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible." We have no right to indulge in anything that will result in a condition of mind that hinders the Spirit of God from impressing us with the sense of our duty. It is a masterpiece of satanic skill to place men where they can with difficulty be reached with the gospel.

Shall there not be among us as a people a revival of the temperance work? Why are we not putting forth much more decided efforts to oppose the liquor traffic, which is ruining the souls of men, and is causing violence and crime of every description? With the great light that God has entrusted to us, we should be in the forefront of every true reform. The use of drugged liquors is making men mad, and leading them to commit the most horrible crimes. Because of the wickedness that follows largely as the result of the use of liquor, the judgments of God are falling upon our earth to-day. Have we not a solemn responsibility to put forth earnest efforts in opposition to this great evil?

"And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"But he that lacketh these things"—whoever is not putting forth diligent efforts to work out this sum in addition—"he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins."

Upon the condition of our "giving all diligence" in adding grace to grace, is based our great eternal life insurance policy, as expressed in the following words:—

"Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Advertising

L. D. SANTEE

LUKE declares, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." Luke 16:8. It must be in regard to business methods, for it can not be concerning spiritual interests.

Here in the city, some of our leading business men use fully half their income in telling the public about the excellence of their wares, and that they are on sale. Thousands of dollars are paid for the rent of bulletin boards, and other thousands fill the papers with "business ads."

(2) On every hand the lesson "Advertise, advertise," is taught, and a man's success is gauged by the amount of advertising he does. We have been fearful of copying the world too far. In this particular we have acted unwisely. We have been niggardly in advertising, and it has resulted in small audiences. Every show or troupe has learned the need of advertising; and while their seats were filled, we have wondered why people had so little interest to hear the truth.

Let us consider the advertising that Jesus did. "After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come." Luke 10:1.

If a man to-day should employ seventy men to prepare the way in thirty-five different places, we would say that he takes great pains to have his work known; and that in following up so many openings, he was a most diligent worker. He wished to meet the people in every place he visited, and deliver to them personally the message he had brought from heaven.

We can easily imagine what the work of the seventy would be. As they told of his words, of his miracles and his claim, the subject was wonderfully interesting. As they told of his healing the sick, perhaps there was some one in the audience who was afflicted similarly. How the interest would increase as they speculated and wondered if he would heal their sick. Before he came, the interest was at a white heat; and when at last he did come, the brief statement tells the story—"the multitudes thronged him." By the words of the seventy, interest was awakened, their prejudice was disarmed, and the multitudes were eager to hear him.

Jesus kept these advance agents constantly employed. What a worker he was! and what a judicious worker! No time was lost in arousing an interest after he came to a place. That had been done by those sent before him.

Shall we not study his methods and follow his example? Can we not employ more of these helps of which the Bible speaks? The world is larger now than it was then. We need many times seventy. Let us search out those who are ready to be thus employed. We need men and women who will go forth for Jesus to-day, who will carry publications and hold Bible readings, and by a personal experience seek to hold up Christ as the sinner's friend, and the One who is soon coming again. Paul said, speaking of the work of Christ, "This thing was not done in a corner." Acts 26:26. Our ministers who have had the best success are those who have advertised the most.

The "gospel of the kingdom" has a world-wide field. It is many times larger than Palestine or Judea. In these last days, God has given us facilities that Christ did not have. The press is a factor that in his time was unknown. But he made use of all the facilities that he had; and in the work that he has commissioned us to do, he wants us to do the same. Tracts may be put in every home that will receive them. Posters may be placed so as to tell everybody where and when our meetings are to be held. We often sing, "To be living is sublime." The reason is because of our opportunities. Shall we press everything into the service, make a short, glorious fight, gain the victory, and go home?

Creation Versus Evolution

H. J. WILLIAMS

IT is really remarkable how rapidly and completely the God-dishonoring doctrine of evolution is fastening itself upon the minds of the educated classes. One seldom meets a student of medicine or science who is not sadly contaminated with this falsehood of the arch-deceiver. However, this is hardly to be wondered at, since the professors of our leading universities in lectures to their students make such statements as the following: "Gentlemen, it is impossible for us as thinking men, in the light of scientific investigation of to-day, to believe the simple story we were taught at our mothers' knees."

Our purpose here is simply to contrast a few of the salient principles of these two most incompatible teachings. In order to do this we shall first state each one briefly:—

The account of the origin of man given us by the Spirit of God reads thus: "And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind: and God saw that it was good. And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Gen. 1:25-27; 2:7.

This record of the Bible is not that of the lowest form of life evolving through long periods of time through the infinite variations of life until it at last reaches the highest form, man, but it is that of a completed work, an act of creation.

The City of God

L. D. SANTEE

"I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself." John 14: 2, 3.

I AM waiting for that city
  Where the pavements are of gold;
O the joys within its portals!
  O the treasures they enfold!
And the feet whose weary journey
  Climbed the rugged mountains steep,
Shall beside life's flowing waters
  Find their resting long and sweet.

I am waiting for those mansions,
  And the mysteries they hold,
Waiting, while my heart is yearning
  With a hungering untold;
And the Saviour's gracious promise
  Fills my being more and more,
Till I long to know the secrets
  Waiting on the farther shore.

Some day will the veil be lifted,
  Hiding mansions bright and fair;
Some day will the skies be rifted.
  We shall see them "over there."
There will come a day of resting,
  When the pain and toil are done,
When the heartaches are forgotten
  In the peace and joy of home.

Notes of Travel — No. 6

Loma Linda and Los Angeles

MRS. E. G. WHITE

MONDAY morning, May 13, we left Escondido, and in the afternoon were once more at Loma Linda. I found myself somewhat wearied with the efforts put forth in traveling and speaking, and was glad to be able to rest here for a few days. However, I was able to speak twice during the week to the students of the Loma Linda College of Evangelists.

The students of this school are accommodated in the cottages that were erected on the property when it was purchased by our people. A building that was formerly used for recreation, now serves for the class work of both the college and the church-school. The work of the sanitarium and the school are closely united. Those who are training for medical missionary work are able to receive in the sanitarium practical experience in the giving of simple treatments, and in the college they may be educated in the Bible and the sciences. Thus in the union of the school with the sanitarium, there are facilities for the training of true medical missionaries.

Sabbath Services at Loma Linda

On Sabbath, May 18, the members of the neighboring churches gathered at Loma Linda, and we held meetings under the pepper-trees on the lawn at the back of the sanitarium. In the forenoon I spoke for one hour, and the Lord blessed me in speaking from the fifty-eighth chapter of Isaiah. Before closing my remarks, I made a strong appeal to those who had means to help in the Lord's work, and I presented the needs of the Loma Linda Sanitarium. I urged them not to spend all their efforts merely in commercial lines, but to lay up treasure beside the throne of God.

Among those present was a man who had been brought to the sanitarium in such a diseased condition that his case was thought to be hopeless. But he was carefully treated, and the crisis was safely passed. In response to my appeal for means he showed his appreciation of what has been done for him, by lending one thousand dollars for a year without interest. No collection was taken up, but some money was placed in Brother Burden's hands after the meeting.

After the morning service, a lunch was provided by the sanitarium for the visitors, and was served on the lawn. In the afternoon, Elder Luther Warren gave an excellent discourse. Brother Warren is an able worker, and we hope that he may labor for a time in this needy field. He was then resting somewhat, on account of his own and his wife's health.

After this service, the visitors left for their homes, and all were agreed that they had spent a pleasant day, and had been blessed by the discourses.

Meeting at Los Angeles

I had promised to speak at Los Angeles on Sunday afternoon, so it was necessary for us to hasten away by the early train from Loma Linda. We had about sixty miles to travel. On our arrival at Los Angeles we went to our restaurant and treatment rooms on Hill Street, and while waiting there before the service, I prayed to the Lord for strength for the work before me.

At the Carr Street church, we found a large number had gathered. Every foot of room inside the building was occupied, even the aisles being filled, and I was told that some were unable to find entrance to the building. Among those present were a number not of our faith.

I presented the importance of obedience to the commandments of God, dwelling upon the instruction given in Exodus and Deuteronomy in connection with the proclamation of the law from Mount Sinai. Never before had these scriptures appealed to me so forcibly. I spoke for a full hour, and the interest was marked throughout. At the last I became somewhat hoarse, but I felt very thankful that the Lord had permitted me to speak so long and so distinctly.

To us as verily as to ancient Israel the words of Jehovah are spoken. In awful grandeur the Lord manifested himself in the giving of his law. The impressions of that scene were never forgotten by those who beheld it. In his rehearsal of the experiences of Israel, Moses said concerning this law: —

"Now therefore harken, O Israel, unto the statutes and unto the judgments, which I teach you, for to do them, that ye may live, and go in and possess the land which the Lord God of your fathers giveth you. Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you. Your eyes have seen what the Lord did because of Baal-peor: for all the men that followed Baal-peor, the Lord thy God hath destroyed them from among you. But ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God are alive every one of you this day.

"Behold I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it. Keep therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people. For what nation is there so great, who hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day?"

Then follows the solemn warning: "Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, and lest they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life: but teach them thy sons, and thy sons' sons; specially the day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb, . . . and he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone."

We can not afford to allow the spirit of commercialism to take such possession of us that we shall neglect the study of the requirements of God's Word. O, if we as a people would study the Scriptures as we should, there would be seen among us such a reformation as we have never yet seen! Our children would be taught the ways of the Lord, and the enemy of souls would be unable to gain control of them. And we should be filled with energy and zeal to make known to others the great truths that God has revealed to us.

Obedience to God's law is the condition of salvation. Many declare that in giving his life to redeem the race, Christ abolished the law of God. It was because the law of God could not be abolished, that Christ died as the victim of the world's transgressions. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The death of Christ on the cross of Calvary is the strongest evidence that could be given to the world that the law of God is an immutable law.

Satan has tried through the working of his deceptive powers, to cause the great humiliation of Christ to exalt sin, and to invite rebellion in the world. He would have the cross of Calvary testify to a falsehood. The enemy has not gained his purpose. The truth stands fast forever. The law which God spoke in awful grandeur from the mount will endure throughout eternity, despite the efforts of Satan to counterwork the work of God by instituting the observance of the first day in the place of the Sabbath of the Lord.

The law is God's standard, from which there must be no swerving. The will and way of God must be made paramount. That no detail may be forgotten, we must constantly peruse the Word of God. It makes a great difference to men whether they receive or reject the precepts of Jehovah. It is because many are not real students of the prophecies and the requirements found in the Bible, that they are so easily diverted to the consideration of matters of but little importance.

God has set us in the world to be light bearers. Our lives should be an acknowledgment of his holy precepts. We should bear to the world a living testimony of the possibility of spiritual growth. It is the good and faithful servant who is promised eternal life and an entrance into the joy of his Lord. The good and faithful servant is he who performs unselfish acts to those with whom he comes in contact, in his life representing the beautiful character of Christ.

The Lord is coming soon. Let us repeat it over and over. What are we doing as those who profess to believe that the Lord is at the door, and that his judgments are already in the world? There are many who are so overwhelmed with temporal business cares that they can give but little heed to the solemn truths that are all-important. We must work for eternity; for we know not how long we shall have the opportunity to preach the gospel freely. We can not tell when in Los Angeles and in other cities, the heavy judgments of God may fall as they have in San Francisco. Wickedness, idolatry, drunkenness, self-indulgence, and corruption abound more and more, and God's Spirit will not always strive with men.

We must cultivate the spirit of self-sacrifice. It would seem sometimes as if we forgot that there are souls to be saved, and that God is calling for men and for means. Do you have money lying idle in the banks? It is God's money, every dollar of it. You have only been made the steward of his means, and you are being tested. Shall we not follow the example of our Lord, and make large sacrifices for the salvation of souls?

It is not commercialism that will ripen a people for the kingdom of God. The interests of the Christian will not be absorbed in the temporal things of earth. He will lay up for himself "treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

From every land come calls for the gospel. Doors are opening that have long been closed. We must as a people move rapidly to keep pace with the opening providences of God. May God help his people to arouse, and to buckle on the armor for the mighty struggle that is before them.

The Seven Last Plagues

COMPILED BY A. L. MANOUS

When Poured Out

"IT was impossible for the plagues to be poured out while Jesus officiated in the sanctuary."—"Early Writings," page 280, tenth edition.

"I was shown that the seven last plagues will be poured out after Jesus leaves the sanctuary."—Ibid., page 52.

"When our High Priest has finished his work in the sanctuary, he will stand up, put on the garments of vengeance, and then the seven last plagues will be poured out. I saw that the four angels would hold the four winds until Jesus' work was done in the sanctuary, and then will come the seven last plagues."—Ibid., page 36.

No Mediator for Sin while the Plagues Are Falling

Some will be "left without a shelter from the burning wrath of God, in the seven last plagues."—Ibid., page 44.

"Those who refuse to be hewed by the prophets, and fail to purify their souls in obeying the whole truth, and who are willing to believe that their condition is far better than it really is, will come up to the time of the falling of the plagues, and then see that they needed to be hewed and squared for the building. But there will be no time then to do it, and no Mediator to plead their cause before the Father."—Ibid., p. 71.

"I saw that Jesus would not leave the most holy place until every case was decided either for salvation or destruction, and that the wrath of God could not come until Jesus had finished his work in the most holy place, laid off his priestly attire, and clothed himself with the garments of vengeance. Then Jesus will step out from between the Father and man, and God will keep silence no longer, but pour out his wrath on those who have rejected his truth."—Ibid., page 36.

The Blind — Where Are They?

L. N. MUCK*

MUCH is being written to-day about the blind in the United States. Educators are at their wits' end to know what to do for this unfortunate class, and yet those who are deeply interested in the welfare of those who can not see realize that although many of the blind are capable, they are not given a chance to make a livelihood.

Societies are organized to care for this class, much is being done in an industrial way to make the blind self-supporting, and we are encouraged to say that not a little has been accomplished. But listen! while the public in a measure is providing for those in double darkness, no provision is made to get the gospel to them. If the public is doing all it can to provide bread and butter or to make this class self-supporting, what is our duty? What are we doing to place before their minds the threefold message found in Revelation 14, which plainly states that the gospel is to be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people?

Again: the great commission is, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Are we heeding this direct command from God to rescue the perishing? When these words were uttered nearly two thousand years ago, the Saviour understood the great need of carrying the gospel to a dying race. To-day the command to go is more important, the need is greater, than ever before since the gospel was given.

In our eagerness to carry the gospel to far-away lands, we have overlooked the blind, and yet the souls of this neglected people are as precious in the sight of our Heavenly Father as are the souls of those who can see. Then why hesitate to give our substance to carry the message to this much-neglected people?

Consider the sad condition of nearly one hundred thousand men and women who are in utter darkness regarding the truths of the third angel's message. We are to sound the notes of the last-day message clear and certain; we are to lift our voices as one body, and warn the world of a soon-coming Saviour. The message is sure, and we can not be mistaken.

Three classes appeal to us for literature: First, the young boys and girls whose minds are not filled with the things of this world. They know nothing of care, they are not acquainted with Jesus, and few of them know anything about the Bible. The majority of these boys and girls enter school while very young, say, six years of age. And as few of the schools for the blind tolerate religious services, these young minds have little opportunity for Bible study. Where religious services are conducted in these schools, the Darwin and Spencer theory is taught. Hence many go out into the world believing that there is no God. They have no hope of eternal life, they can not look into the future with joy, the future outlook is dark and cheerless; but thanks be to God, there is an anchor and a salvation sufficient. We rejoice that the message can go to this class, and it must be given in their own language, through the columns of the Christian Record, and by sending out tracts in the New York and American braille systems.

The second class are young men and women who have finished their education and gone out in the world to meet the problems of life. Not all are successful, because of the lack of confidence in their ability on the part of the public. Consequently they are forced to sit down and fold their hands in despair. O that the blind everywhere were given a chance! But while we can not better their physical condition, we can hold out the gospel to them, and tell them that Jesus died that they might live. Shall we do as the Saviour bids us — bring in hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind? Brethren and sisters, while you read, lift up your voice and heart that he may help you to see

The Advent

L. D. SANTEE

EARNEST his ministers will work and pray,
For love of Jesus counting all things loss,
While hosts of darkness slowly fall away
Before the lifted cross.

And still the "Holy One," with power divine,
Pleads with the guilty to accept his grace;
In marts of home or in far-distant climes
His footsteps we may trace.

And in his own good time he'll come again,
And earth shall blossom like a garden fair;
To bring reward, to banish death and pain,
The Saviour comes in air.

Hail, coming King, descending through the sky,
At thy dread word, the trembling earth shall burn;
Unnumbered hosts believe thy advent nigh,
And long for thy return.

The Merced Camp-Meeting

MRS. E. G. WHITE

AFTER the service in the Los Angeles church, we went out to Glendale Sanitarium, six miles from Los Angeles. There I rested until Wednesday night, May 22, when we took the cars for Merced, where the camp-meeting for the California-Nevada Conference was to be held. Our train left Los Angeles at 11:30 P. M. I was very weary, but unable to sleep much during the night.

We arrived at Merced a little after noon the following day, and found our brethren very busy preparing the camp for the meetings, which were to begin that evening. This camp-meeting was the first effort put forth by our people in that city. Before the camp-meeting there were only two families in Merced who were keeping the Sabbath, and one of these lived some miles out of the city.

Camp-Meetings as Missionary Efforts

The church of Christ is organized for missionary purposes. Our camp-meetings are among the most important agencies in our work for fulfilling these purposes. Through them we may reach many with the gospel message. Our camp-meetings ought to be planned with a view to warning the world, and converting souls to the truth.

The holding of camp-meetings in such places as Merced is in harmony with the following instruction in "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VI, page 33:—

"If our camp-meetings are conducted as they should be, they will indeed be a light in the world. They should be held in the large cities and towns where the message of truth has not been proclaimed. And they should continue for two or three weeks.

"It may sometimes be advisable to hold a camp-meeting for several successive seasons in the same place; but as a rule the place of meeting should be changed from year to year. Instead of having mammoth camp-meetings in a few localities, more good would be done by having smaller meetings in many places. Thus the work will be constantly extending into new fields.

"Just as soon as the standard of truth is lifted in one locality, and it is safe to leave the new converts, we must plan to enter other new fields. Our camp-meetings are a power, and when held in a place where the community can be stirred, they will have far greater power than when, for the convenience of our own people they are located where, because of previous meetings and the rejection of truth, the public interest is deadened."

The importance of our camp-meetings as a strong missionary effort is by many not fully realized. Some who profess to believe the truth look upon it as a loss of time and money to assemble once a year to worship God. They place their worldly interests before God's requirements. Many remain away from camp-meeting because to attend would require a small sacrifice of time and means. So small an offering they begrudge to Him who has blessed them in basket and store!

We should make more of our camp-meetings. For these gatherings we should secure all the ministerial talent that can be spared from other lines of labor. Let the laborers do personal work with the people. Let them meet the brethren and sisters in little companies for seasons of prayer. Even if the outward circumstances seemingly make it difficult to hold the attention of the people, their interest must not be allowed to flag. To maintain an interest we may find it necessary to work very hard; but we should remember that God has entrusted us with a message that we must bear to the people.

An Impressive Dream

Shortly before attending the Merced camp-meeting, in the night season I seemed to be in a meeting where the truth was being presented in clear lines. Many souls were convinced, and they were pleading for the grace of Christ to be revealed in them. Those who had accepted the message were praying for sanctification through the truth, that they might be enabled to reveal it in all its beauty to others.

There were others present who were persuaded that the message being presented was the truth of God, but they were not prepared to yield to its claims. I saw that the Holy Spirit was moving upon their hearts. Then a voice was heard, "Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep." I heard voices saying, "I want the endowment of the grace of God. Christ has given his life for me, and I will give my life for him. I want to have his efficiency, that I may reveal his grace to others."

Other scenes passed before me. I saw converts being baptized, and as they went forward in this solemn ordinance, their faces shone with the assurance of the love and approval of God.

I have hoped that this representation given me might be fulfilled as the result of the meetings at Merced, and that many souls would take their position as loyal subjects of God, obeying his commandments, and grasping the promise of complete forgiveness. I felt a heavy burden that the laborers at the meeting might do all in their power to clear the King's highway, and to become purified channels of God's grace.

Sabbath Services

I spoke in the large tent Sabbath forenoon, and my soul was drawn out with an intense longing for the power of God to be bestowed upon the congregation. I spoke of the self-denial and self-sacrifice of our Saviour, that we might have an opportunity to win a life that measures with the life of God. I felt impressed to call for a humbling of soul and an earnest effort to remove everything from the life that would hinder the free working of the Spirit of God, that our brethren and sisters might go back to their homes with an experience far in advance of what they had had heretofore.

We need to search well our own hearts, that we may not be found among the commandment-breakers. We need more prayer, more of earnest seeking of the Lord. The camp-ground is a favorable place to carry forward this work. We may come to God, knowing that he hears and answers the sincere petitions of his people. If we will come to God with the simplicity of children, asking him for what we need, and at the same time manifest a willingness to make any sacrifice for him, he will answer the prayer of humble faith.

Many of us need yet to learn what it really means to sacrifice for the truth. Self has grown to such proportions that we are unable to realize our duty, in view of the world that must be warned of God's impending judgments. God will not accept the web until every thread of selfishness is withdrawn.

It is because of the manifestation of selfishness that the labor of some results in few if any conversions, and the salvation of our God is not revealed as it should be. We are all, ministers and people, in danger of coming short. Many are far from where they should be. Self is striving for the mastery, and the heart naturally craves self-indulgence. We must lay aside our own natural temperaments, and our perverted ideas. We are to stand before the world as representatives of Christ in his self-denial.

Let the church become united in Christ Jesus in working for purity and perfection of character. There needs to be a practical daily sanctification of the spirit.

Before one is prepared for Christ's coming there must be seen in the life the fruits of the Spirit. There must be a self-discipline, a wrestling with God for victory till the victory is gained. Then will ascend a shout of praise to God.

Unless those who are supposed to have in their possession large gifts maintain unwearied diligence, they will, because of self-confidence and self-righteousness, become careless and move unguardedly. Forgetting their need of continuing instant in prayer, they will lightly regard their moral responsibilities. Those who do not continually sanctify their souls through the grace that Christ is ever ready to supply, will be on losing ground.

The time has come when we must seek for the power of the Holy Spirit, a power that shall give force to the warnings that are to be given to the world. Souls are thirsting for the living waters of life, and to us the Lord has entrusted the sacred work of opening to them the Scriptures in clear, distinct, positive testimony. The words we speak are to be an evidence that the Holy Spirit is speaking through us as his messengers. God will speak to our souls as we labor for him. Angels of God will ever surround his humble, consecrated workman.

When the laborers for God consecrate their services unreservedly to their Master, and by drawing very near to him, learn how to draw near to the people, he will manifest his grace through them, and hearts will be softened and subdued under its influence. It is the privilege of the laborers so to represent the truth in their words and deportment, that their lives will be a power to convince unbelievers of the truths they are teaching. When the workers come into the place where God can work through them, they will understand the words of Christ, "I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth."

Christ has given ample evidence of his love for the human race. He gave his precious life that men and women might be redeemed from the power of Satan. I beseech my brethren, as the ambassadors of Christ, to labor earnestly for the salvation of souls. Leave no means untried that will bring the truth before the people, that they may become cleansed in heart and refined in character. Teach the repenting ones to come in faith to the One who has given his life for all mankind. Labor for them until they come to the place where they will say, "I will no longer dishonor God by transgression of his law. I will be obedient to all his commandments. I give my life to him who gave his life for me. By obedience to the will of God I will reveal that I am transformed by his grace."

At the close of my discourse on Sabbath in the tent at Merced, I asked those who desired to seek the Lord with full determination of purpose to come forward. To this appeal there was an earnest response on the part of many. Some gave themselves to the Lord for the first time, and some who had backslidden renewed their consecration to God. Prayer was offered for these, and another meeting appointed especially for them, that they might unite in seeking the Lord.

Return to St. Helena

Sunday afternoon I spoke again in the large tent. There was a good attendance from the outside public. The next day at noon, we took the cars for St. Helena, and reached our home in the evening.

After the strain of my six weeks' traveling and speaking, I was glad for an opportunity to rest for a time before I should attend the camp-meeting in St. Helena. I do not regret having made this journey; for the Lord has given strength to bear testimony to his people in every place I visited. I am grateful to God for his blessing which attended me. I have sometimes been weak, and have suffered physically, but I was not compelled to leave any appointment unfilled, and whenever I stood before the people, I felt the power of the Spirit imparted to me. I praise the Lord that even in my old age, I am still able to do something in the work of the Lord.

The Call of the Hour

I. H. EVANS

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS are engaged in a stupendous work. No other people even claim that the call of God has come to them to give the threefold message of Revelation 14. No other denomination thinks it has a specific message for all the world which must be given "to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." This great work to be done so speedily makes every true Seventh-day Adventist an active missionary. He feels that the "call of God" has come to him to give this message to the world.

Other people may have their prejudices against different nationalities. Not so those believers who have heard the world-wide, Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us." That cry for help rings in the ears of Seventh-day Adventists like the voice of God. It is their call to service. To those who hear this voice speaking to them there is no choice in fields of labor, nor is there prejudice against any people. The Chinese, the Japanese, the East Indian, and the African, are all "one in Christ Jesus." All mankind is to be the recipient of the grace of God.

That there is a great work to be done for the African race all admit. Nor is all this missionary endeavor to be bestowed on those who live in far-away Africa. In our own country we have not less than eight million colored people who are in need of the third angel's message.

The work already bestowed upon this people gives evidence of the fruitfulness of the soul-harvest to be reaped by those who labor. In some of the Southern States the believers in the third angel's message who are colored, outnumber the white believers. These people pay their tithes and offerings, and are as faithful in their spiritual duties as are any people.

The work among this people has been made difficult by social conditions over which the believers in the message have no control. But the Lord has given us hundreds of sincere, honest souls from among this people, who are loyal and true to the work of God.

Last year we took a donation for the work among that people. We were disappointed that the amount was so small. The October offering aggregated in 1905 over twelve thousand dollars, while in 1906 it dropped to about five thousand dollars. This year we certainly need to make it ten thousand dollars. The work has been hindered by a lack of funds, and now we have an opportunity to make a liberal donation to this good work.

The donation will be apportioned on the following basis: —

Atlantic Union Conference	10%
Southwestern Union Conference	20%
Southern Union Conference	70%

The Southern Union Conference then divides its portion as follows: —

Huntsville school	40%
Southern Missionary Society	30%
North Carolina	5%
South Carolina	5%
Georgia	5%
Alabama	5%
Mississippi	5%
Louisiana	5%

The date for this offering is Sabbath, October 5. All ought to plan definitely for their offering. We believe the great need in this part of the Lord's work in our own home land is "the call of the hour." Surely the need is great, the call imperative, and God's people must respond. We truly hope for a liberal donation on this occasion.

Mothering the Homeless

BERTHA M. MITCHELL

"Is it such a fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul? is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? Wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord? Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens; and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? When thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" Isa. 58: 5-8.

My heart is stirred within me as I think of the vast number of people who are not being loosed from "the bands of wickedness," who are hungry, naked, and homeless. I am thinking especially of the little children. In many cases grown people could help themselves if they would, but the little children are helpless; and what are we as a people doing for them?

This question has been ringing in my ears almost constantly for the past few weeks, and over and over again I am

Count the Mercies

Count the mercies! count the mercies!
Number all the gifts of love;
Keep a faithful daily record
Of the comforts from above.
Look at all the lovely green spots
In life's weary desert way;
Think how many cooling fountains
Cheer our fainting hearts each day.
Count the mercies! count the mercies!
See them strewn along our way.

Count the mercies, though the trials
Seem to number more each day;
Count the trials, too, as mercies,
Add them to the grand array.
Trials are God's richest blessings,
Sent to prompt our upward flight,
As the eagles' nest, all broken,
Makes them fly to loftier height.
Count them mercies, count them mercies,
That bring heaven within our sight.

Let us number all our jewels,
Let us estimate their worth;
Let us thank the gracious Giver,
Strewing blessings o'er the earth;
Let our hearts o'erflow with gladness,
Let us tell the wonders o'er,
Till our multiplying treasures
Seem a countless, boundless store.
Then let praises, grateful praises,
Be our language evermore.

Doing God's Will

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Those who submit to the solemn rite of baptism pledge themselves, before the heavenly universe, to come out from the world. They have taken their position under the blood-stained banner of Prince Emmanuel, to be laborers together with God, and as such to make known his will to those who are perishing in sin. They are to search the Scriptures diligently, feeling that it is of the highest importance for them to understand what saith the Lord. Having learned his will, they are to do it heartily, remembering that the truth is the seed they must sow in order to reap a harvest for God. But many of those who claim to believe the truth are not striving as they should for perfection of character.

Christ says, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

In these words our work is plainly outlined. Those who represent Christ must obey God's commandments; for Christ obeyed them.

In order to keep God's commandments, we must have an intelligent knowledge of the Scriptures. We can not obey God until we know what his commandments are. It was that we might understand his will that God gave us the Bible. By a study of its teachings, we learn to deny self and to conform our lives to its requirements.

Dear friends, you are without excuse if you fail of obtaining a clear understanding of God's will. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." God has kept back nothing that is necessary for the enlightenment of his children. No one can plead in excuse for transgression that he was left in ignorance, that the way to heaven was not clearly marked out. We have not been left to serve God in a vague, uncertain way.

How can you educate your children in the things of God unless you first know for yourselves what is right and what is wrong; unless you realize that obedience means eternal life, and disobedience eternal death? Make it your life-work to gain an understanding of the will of God. Thus only can you train your children aright. Bring your every word and action into harmony with the Word of God, irrespective of the opinions and practises of those who refuse to obey him.

Had the inhabitants of the old world kept God's law, they would have continued to enjoy his favor. But they disobeyed, and their wickedness became unbearable to him. The words of Jude vividly portray the condition of the world at that time: "These are spots in your feasts of charity, . . . clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever."

(1) God determined to purify the world by a flood; but in mercy and love he gave the antediluvians a probation of one hundred and twenty years. During this time, while the ark was building, the voices of Noah, Methusaleh, and many others were heard in warning and entreaty, and every blow struck on the ark was a warning message.

To-day the past is repeated. God is sending men plain warnings. The recent earthquakes show how quickly the ungodly will perish when the judgments of God fall upon the earth. Already, in flood and flame, his judgments are falling upon evil-doers. All who refuse to repent will perish.

Those parents who know the truth, but who do not fulfil the obligations resting upon them, must soon meet the result of their neglect. Those who do not perform the duties that God gives them because it is not convenient to be so particular, so different from the world, are training their children to become more and more like the world, and to perish in disobedience.

Parents, be loyal to God. Represent him in the home life. Look upon the training of your children as a sacred work, entrusted to you by the Most High.

Character Names

GEO. C. CARY

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold."

Many of this world are striving for a great name and worldly honor; but God's people are striving for an "everlasting name, that shall not be cut off." In order to get this name we must, by the help of God, perfect characters that meet the approval of heaven.

By learning the given name of a person, one does not become acquainted with him. One must see the daily life, the character of the person.

In olden times the children received character names, either of their own natures or of some experience in the life of the parents. For instance, the name "Sarai" means contentious, and "Jacob" means the supplanter. Sarai's name was changed by God to Sarah, princess; and Jacob's name to Israel, prince of God. Jacob received this name after wrestling with God all night for the victory over sin and deception.

I fear if God should name us now, there would be many Sarais and Jacobs. Let us wrestle with God, and gain the victory over every besetting sin, through faith in Christ. By beholding we become changed. Let us behold the meek and lowly Jesus, who went about doing good, and follow his example, his character. His name is recorded in Isa. 9: 6 and in Ex. 33: 19; 34: 5, 6. Moses wished to become acquainted with the Lord, wished to see his glory. "And he said, I will make all my goodness pass before thee." "And the Lord descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the Lord. And the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth."

What a good character name! Yet we may have that name. "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name."

The experiences we pass through and the difficulties we meet will help us form characters and determine our new name.

How many thoughtlessly use in vain these character names of God; as, "goodness" and "gracious." By using these words as by-words do we not break the third commandment? Let us learn to reverence his holy name, and drop the use of by-words and idle words. "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." "Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne: nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be, Yea, yea;

Coming on a Cloud

MRS. EDITH B. GOODRICH

He is coming on a cloud,
With the sound of trumpet loud,
With a golden crown of glory on his head;
As our King shall thus descend,
Holy angels will attend,
And his mighty voice will wake the righteous dead.

Do you feel the thrilling power
Of that great and solemn hour?
Do you know that it is very, very near?
God is finishing his work,
Sifting out the ones who shirk;
Let us hasten and his high commands revere.

Now for means your Lord doth plead,
Now of workers hath he need,
For the harvest-fields are fully ripe to-day;
Soon he will not ask you more,
For the harvest will be o'er,
And he'll turn you with your gold and greed away.

He is coming on the cloud.
Blow the trumpet long and loud
With a certain sound, that all may hear and heed.
Do to-day what you should do,
That it may be well with you
When the Judge awards mankind for every deed.

An Appeal

Sanitarium, Cal., Sept. 10, 1907.

To My Brethren and Sisters in America: —

I have a deep interest in the work of the Southern field. I am especially interested in those branches of our work that are established at Huntsville and other places where efforts are being put forth for the training of laborers to work for the spiritual uplifting of the colored race.

The work at Huntsville has been in special need of help since the fire. In Huntsville promising colored youth are to be trained to labor as missionaries for their own race. Many teachers must be educated and sent forth to enlighten those in the darkness of error. Our donations are needed that this work may go forward.

Our buildings in Huntsville are being put up with as little expenditure of means as possible; and our workers have gone forward almost as far as they can with this work until means come in so that they can advance. The work there now demands that we have a modest but roomy sanitarium, where the sick can be taken in and treated. The colored race should have the benefits of such an institution as verily as should the white people. In this sanitarium colored nurses are to be trained for service in the field as gospel medical missionaries.

Our ideas of what should be done for this people are too narrow and limited. Years ago they should have had the benefits of an all-round education. As I consider how much is needed in order to do for this people all that God expects us to do, I am urged to call upon our church-members to give of their abundant fulness that the work may be accomplished.

In a few places in the South, noble efforts have been put forth for the salvation of the colored people; but God asks that they be labored for more diligently. We can all pray for them; some of our missionaries can work among them; and many of us who have not done so in the past, can help with our means. We may not be able to do all that we desire; but if we will remember that the colored race is the purchased possession of Christ, bought by the shedding of his precious blood, this thought will teach us to deny self in order that they may have the privileges that Christ died to give them.

When I see those who claim to believe present truth spending their means for useless trimmings and personal adornment; when I see their tables loaded down with story-magazines which have cost money; when I see the many photographs which have called for the outlay of means that might have been used in blessing the needy, my heart is made sad, and I pray, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." I wish such souls could understand the spirit in which Christ, the Prince of heaven, came to this world. He laid off his kingly crown and royal robe, and for our salvation assumed human nature. He would give to every church that should be established in his name an example of what every true missionary worker should be. He was in the world as "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." Though he was one with God, and had made the world, he became a member of a humble family, and experienced the privations of the poor. Throughout his life he ever manifested a burden for the souls of men.

The example of the humble life of Christ should lead us to ask ourselves the question, Do I practise his humility? Fathers and mothers, are you educating your children to follow the example of him who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor that he might give to us eternal riches? Are you teaching them to deny self, and take up the cross of Christ, and follow him?

I do not speak these words to wealthy men and women only, but to those also who by works of self-denial and self-sacrifice can have a part in giving the message to the colored race. This work should not be confined to the few places where a good beginning has been made. It should extend to every place where the colored people live; for every soul needs the knowledge of this last message of mercy to the world.

There is a great and grand work to be done in the South. Shall we not, my brethren and sisters, redeem our past neglect? Shall we not appreciate the gift of God to us, and work for the salvation of the colored people with a zeal that is proportionate to the light we have had? To as many as receive him God will give power to become the sons of God.

The collection for the work among the colored people has been left until near the close of the year. Many other calls for means have been made. But I would say to my brethren and sisters who have been liberal in their offerings to other missionary enterprises, Let your gifts for the support of this branch of the work in the Southern field be generous. Keep in mind the great need of this mission field within the shadow of our doors. Let every member of the family have a part in the work of giving, and let each feel that it is a work for God.

Through the efforts that have been put forth by faithful workers, churches have been raised up among the colored people in the South. When the company in Vicksburg, who had received the truth under the labors of Elder J. E. White and his associates, met for the dedication of their church, I was present with them, and the Lord gave me freedom in speaking to those assembled. Quite a large number of persons from other churches were present, and many of them were surprised to see the neatly dressed women, and to hear the excellent singing. These colored people had learned to know that Christ had died for them, and their hearts were glad in the truth. They bore sincere testimonies to the goodness of the Lord. My heart rejoiced as I saw these converts to the faith. And this is an illustration of what can be accomplished in other places for this people.

We must never forget that Christ died for all,— the negroes as well as the white people. All may alike be the recipients of his grace. The apostle Paul declares, "The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God. For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save em that believe. For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom: but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God. Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men.

"For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence. But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: that, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."

My brethren and sisters, your talent of means is needed. The Lord grant that you may use it at this time to his name's glory. Just as long as we drift with the current of the world, we need neither canvas nor oar; our labors begin when we turn to stem the tide. Now, just now, let your works of self-denial testify that you are stemming the current of selfishness. It is the duty of every soul who names the name of Christ to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. My brethren, yoke up with Christ. He left the royal courts and clothed his divinity with humanity, that he might make all humanity partakers of the divine nature, and enable them to escape the corruption that is in the world through lust. He practised self-denial that he might save perishing souls; his followers are to work his works. Shall we not let the Spirit of Christ take possession of our hearts, that we may be cleansed from every taint of selfishness? When we allow our lives to be controlled by the Holy Spirit of God, we shall with willing hearts bring our gifts and offerings to him, that he may use them where they are most needed.

God's Business Our Business

S. H. CARNAHAN

How diligent the successful man is in his business! The stockman is out in all kinds of weather to see that his animals do not perish; the laborer and mechanic put in every hour possible that their income may be increased; the marketman looks closely after each little detail, that he may not only supply the wants of his customers, but also prevent loss on his own part; the frugal housewife counts carefully every pound of butter and dozen of eggs to be sure they shall figure to her benefit.

As Christians we should be diligent in our work, but should see to it that our motives are not simply for worldly gain; for, "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

Jesus, the Saviour of the world, at the early age of twelve years said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" Thus he worked for the salvation of men while he labored at the carpenter's trade.

The great missionary, Carey, was a good cobbler as well as preacher. A friend of his told him that if he would lay aside his missionary work and pay strict attention to his business (shoemaking), he would make a success. Mr. Carey replied, "Missionary work is my business, and I do cobbling to meet expenses." He made a success in his Father's business.

The great apostle Paul made the teaching of the gospel of Christ his life-work, while he wrought as a tent-maker for his support.

The early Waldensian Christians traveling in the guise of peddlers, were really colporteurs distributing portions of the Holy Scriptures and tracts.

Ought not we, brethren and sisters, to be as faithful in dispensing the truths of God — circulating our precious literature to all with whom we come in contact? Should not this really be our business, while our worldly work is simply a means for the support of our families and the cause?

We are admonished to be diligent in business and fervent in spirit. Are we not all ambassadors for Christ? Then let us all by our talk and our actions interest others in his kingdom.

A Plea for Bible Study — No. 2

EVA M. SHIVELY, M. D.

I believe that the Lord would have us be systematic in preparation for his service, and thoroughly conversant with "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." If we wish to gain a thorough knowledge of any author's work, we read carefully the book as a whole, and then we may be able to select that part which may please us to use when occasion demands. Should we not in like manner become thoroughly acquainted with the Bible as a whole, getting a good outline of each book, and learning it as thoroughly as possible? Then when we wish to present different subjects, we have this great source from which to draw, and the Lord may lead our minds whithersoever he will, and we, through the wisdom he gives us, will be able rightly to divide the word of truth.

So much burdened was I to know how to store away "every word of God" in my mind that I might live thereby, that I began Oct. 26, 1906, to read the Bible carefully through. Every moment aside from my work I read, and on Dec. 19, 1906, I had finished. This of course is a closer application than would seem necessary or possible to continue; but between Dec. 19 and Jan. 1, 1907, the Lord helped me to make out my plan for yearly Bible study, so far as my efforts were to be directed toward the Bible as a whole, which I will submit as a suggestion, hoping it may be a help and blessing to many. I am now following this outline, and find it not burdensome.

This plan is made out on a basis of reading an average of three and one-half chapters daily, or three on week-days and six and one-half on Sabbath. Dan. 6:5-10 says that Daniel prayed three times a day, and we know how God approved and blessed him. We feel it necessary to take regularly our physical food that we may be physically strong. Is it not as necessary to be spiritually strong? We know the results of neglecting to take physical food. Daniel seemed to realize that his spiritual food was necessary to make him strong to do the will of God, even when the lions' den awaited him. And Ezra prepared his heart to seek, to do, and to teach the law of God, and the Lord prospered his work.

In this outline, the numbers following each month's portion with a plus or minus sign preceding, show how many chapters more or less than this general average (three and one-half chapters daily) is apportioned to each month.

Notice that in August we have — 31. This allows about ten days to study Daniel, and leaves all of December for Revelation, and Daniel may be taken up again with it, so by the week of prayer we may have finished.

In April, if Haggai and Zechariah are read in connection with Ezra, we would have instead of — 5 + 11 for April, and — 47 for August, giving more time still to study Daniel.

January.— Genesis to Numbers, + 9.
February.— Numbers to Judges, — 4.
March.— Judges to 2 Kings, — 6.
April.— 2 Kings to Nehemiah, — 5.
May.— Nehemiah to Psalm 76, + 21.
June.— Psalm 76 to Isaiah, + 21.
July.— Isaiah to Jeremiah 42.
August.— Jeremiah 42 to Hosea, — 31.
September.— Hosea to Luke, + 6.
October.— Luke to 2 Corinthians, — 3.
November.— 2 Corinthians to Revelation 16.
December.— Study Revelation and Daniel.

When each book is finished, I have tried to group the chapters, making a little outline. For example: Genesis may be divided into groups of ten chapters each, the first ten chapters reaching to the death of Noah and chronology of his family, taking in all of the antediluvian world. The second group begins with the birth of Abraham, and reaches to Lot's death. The third group continues Abraham's journeys, and reaches the birth of Jacob's family (the twelve tribes). The fourth group begins with Jacob's return, and reaches to where Joseph begins his work in the Egyptian prison. The fifth group gives an account of the journey to and sojourn in Egypt.

By grouping the chapters in this way, as we go about our work or awake in the night, we may take each group separately and meditate upon the contents of each chapter; and when we have mastered this so that we can call to mind the principal things in each chapter, then we may take the next group, keeping in mind the general outline of each group, thus gaining for ourselves this knowledge according to the instruction given in Deut. 6:6, 7, and Ps. 1:2.

Alone With God

ALONE with God! O trusting heart,
Seek thou the place for secret prayer:
The inner room, the busy mart,
The mountain top — where'er thou art,
Thy God will meet thee there.

Alone with God! There thou shalt find
The blessings only he can give:
A will subdued, a lowly mind,
A loving heart by grace refined,
And strength for him to live.

Alone with God! Communion sweet
With him shall cheer thee all the way.
Though weak, thou art in him complete.
His power alone can make thee meet
For heaven's unending day.

Alone with God! O Father mine,
Let me thy love and mercy share,
Guide thou my steps and keep me thine;
Let love in every action shine,
O Father, hear my prayer.

Beneficence

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"HONOR the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."

"There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat: and he that watereth shall be watered also himself."

"The liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand."

Divine wisdom has appointed, in the plan of salvation, the law of action and reaction, making the work of beneficence, in all its branches, twice blessed. He that gives to the needy blesses others, and is blessed himself in a still greater degree. God could have reached his object in saving sinners without the aid of man; but he knew that man could not be happy without acting a part in the great work in which he would be cultivating self-denial and benevolence.

That man might not lose the blessed results of benevolence, our Redeemer formed the plan of enlisting him as his coworker. By a chain of circumstances which would call forth his charities, he bestows upon man the best means of cultivating benevolence, and keeps him habitually giving to help the poor and to advance his cause. By their necessities, a ruined world are drawing forth from us talents of means and of influence, to present to them the truth, of which they are in perishing need. And as we heed these calls by labor and by acts of benevolence, we are assimilated to the image of him who for our sakes became poor. In bestowing, we bless others, and thus accumulate true riches.

The Glory of the Gospel

It is the glory of the gospel that it is founded upon the principle of restoring in the fallen race the divine image by a constant manifestation of benevolence. This work began in the heavenly courts. There God decided to give human beings an unmistakable evidence of the love with which he regarded them. He "so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

The spirit of liberality is the spirit of heaven. Christ's self-sacrificing love is revealed upon the cross. He gave all he had, and then gave himself, that man might be saved. The cross of Christ appeals to the benevolence of every follower of the blessed Saviour. The principle there illustrated is to give, give. This, carried out in actual benevolence and good works, is the true fruit of the Christian life. The principle of worldlings is to get, get, and thus they expect to secure happiness; but, carried out in all its bearings, the fruit is misery and death.

The light of the gospel shining from the cross of Christ rebukes selfishness, and encourages liberality and benevolence. It is not to be a lamented fact that there are increasing calls to give. God in his providence is calling his people out from their limited sphere of action, to enter upon greater enterprises. Unlimited effort is demanded at this time when moral darkness is covering the world. Many of God's people are in danger of being ensnared by worldliness and covetousness. They should understand that it is his mercy that multiplies the demands for their means. Objects that shall call benevolence into action, must be placed before them, or they can not imitate the character of the Great Exemplar.

The Blessings of Stewardship

In commissioning his disciples to go "into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," Christ assigned to men the work of spreading the gospel. But while some go forth to preach, he calls upon others to answer his claims upon them for offerings, with which to support his cause in the earth. This is one of God's ways of exalting man. It is just the work that man needs; for it will stir the deepest sympathies of his heart, and call into exercise the highest capabilities of the mind.

Every good thing of earth was placed here by the bountiful hand of God, as an expression of his love to man. The poor are his, and the cause of religion is his. He has placed means in the hands of men, that his divine gifts may flow through human channels in doing the work appointed us in saving our fellow men. Every one has his appointed work in the great field.

The all-wise God knew that man must have something to do in order that life might be a blessing to him. The gold and silver are the Lord's, and he could rain them from heaven if he chose; but instead of this, he has made man his steward, entrusting him with means, not to be hoarded, but to be used in benefiting others. He thus makes man the medium through which to distribute his blessings on earth. God planned the system of beneficence, in order that man might become, like his Creator, benevolent and unselfish in character, and finally be a partaker with him of the eternal, glorious reward.

Meeting Around the Cross

The love expressed on Calvary should be revived, strengthened, and diffused among our churches. Shall we not do all we can to give power to the principles which Christ brought to this world? Shall we not strive to establish and give efficiency to the benevolent enterprises which are now called for without delay? Christ's believing people are to perpetuate his love. This love is to draw them together around the cross. It is to divest them of all selfishness, and bind them to God and to one another.

Meet around the cross of Calvary in self-sacrifice and self-denial. As you stand before the cross, and see the Royal Prince of heaven dying for you, can you seal your heart, saying, "No; I have nothing to give"? God will bless you as you do your best. As you approach the throne of grace, as you find yourself bound to this throne by the golden chain let down from heaven to earth to draw men from the pit of sin, your heart will go out in love for your brethren and sisters who are without God and without hope in the world.

Who Are Missionaries?

MRS. LUELLA L. HARMON

NOAH WEBSTER says a missionary is one sent to propagate religion. He evidently had in mind the sending of a person by a church or conference. A real missionary is sent by the One who said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." The conference or church is his helper, his coworker.

Christ was the greatest missionary ever sent into this world, and as every true Christian must be a close follower of him, he must be a missionary. As the true follower of Christ is always a Christian, so is he always a missionary.

We habitually speak of those who teach of Christ in heathen lands, or in the wicked cities, or from the pulpit, or from door to door, as the missionaries, forgetting that all who have a mission from Christ are missionaries.

The Redeemer of Israel, but a helpless babe in the manger in Bethlehem, began his missionary work by drawing unto himself three philosophers from the East, and the shepherds from the plains of Bethlehem, and bringing joy to Joseph and Mary, and Simeon and Anna in the temple.

Without doubt the pure, beautiful child-life he lived in the wicked little valley called Nazareth caused some sin-

Jesus, I'll Go Through with Thee

CLAUDE WILTSIE

I AM passing o'er the pathway
  That the saints before me trod,
Leading up from sin's dark valley
  To the glorious heights of God.
Though my way's beset with demons,
  And my crosses heavy be,
Through the grace of God abundant,
  Jesus, I'll go through with thee.

Take my trembling hand and lead me
  O'er life's waters dark and wild;
Though earth's sin and strife surround me,
  I would be thy trusting child.
Lead me as thou led'st Moses,
  And thy hosts across the sea;
And though all the world forsake me,
  Jesus, I'll go through with thee.

When I reach the time of trouble,
  And man's heart with terror faints,
When all faces gather blackness,
  Thou wilt not forsake thy saints.
In thy blessed, sure pavilion
  All thy waiting ones shall be.
In the time of indignation,
  Jesus, I'll go through with thee.

When the earth is rent beneath us,
  And thou send'st the storm of hail,
Lord, thy angels then shall keep us;
  Not a word of thine shall fail.
When the sun shall scorch all nature,
  Thou wilt food and shelter be.
My Redeemer and Creator,
  Jesus, I'll go through with thee.

When I'm taken up to heaven,
  And the shining gates behold;
When I view the walls of jasper,
  And the streets of glitt'ring gold;
When I see life's crystal river,
  Flowing there so calm and free;
When the ransomed ones shall enter,
  Jesus, I'll go through with thee.

(Concluded)

The Needs of a Mission Field

FOR many years, the Lord has been keeping before his people the needs of the work among the colored people in the Southern States of America. The moral darkness of this field is, in itself, a powerful plea for the exercise of liberality. In the past, some have done what they could to support this branch of our work; and their beneficence has borne fruit in the conversion of many souls.

Although much remains to be done for the colored people, we have cause for rejoicing over the good beginning that has been made. In a recent number of The Gospel Herald it is reported that "fifteen years ago there were not over twenty colored Seventh-day Adventists south of Mason and Dixon's line; but to-day there are seven hundred. Twelve years ago there was only one colored Seventh-day Adventist church; to-day there are fifty, not counting those in Africa and the West Indies. . . . The tithes of the colored people last year in the United States amounted to five thousand dollars; fifteen years ago it was not over fifty dollars."

Let us thank God, dear brethren and sisters, and take courage! God is laying bare his arm to do a mighty work in this mission field within the borders of our own land. He is now giving his people an opportunity to extend the message rapidly in the South, by revealing a spirit of beneficence at the time the yearly offering for the support of the colored work is taken up, the first Sabbath in October. God has reposed confidence in us by making us stewards of means and of his rich grace; and he now points us to the poor and suffering and oppressed, to souls bound in chains of superstition and error, and assures us that if we do good to these, he will accept the deed as though done to himself. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren," he declares, "ye have done it unto me."

The poor are not excluded from the privilege of giving. They, as well as the wealthy, may act a part in this work. The lesson that Christ gave in regard to the widow's two mites, shows us that the smallest willing offerings of the poor, if given from a heart of love, are as acceptable as the largest donations of the rich. In the balances of the sanctuary, the gifts of the poor, made from love to Christ, are not estimated according to the amount given, but according to the love which prompts the sacrifice.

Thousands of colored people in the South may now be uplifted, and become human agents to help their own race, if they can receive the help God is calling upon us to give them. Multitudes of men and women in this field feel their deep poverty and necessity of elevation. And when faithful teachers shall come in to open to them the Scriptures just as they read, presenting truth in its native purity, the darkness will disappear. Bright beams of light will shine upon the soul searching for truth. And with those who have had advantages, a close and intelligent investigation will take place upon the subjects of truth revealed in the Scriptures. Many will be taught of God. They will learn aright from the Great Teacher, and will accept with joy the truths that will sanctify and uplift. The moral image of God will be restored in the soul, and many will be eternally saved.

My dear brethren and sisters, Christ is now saying to you, Lift up your eyes and look on this Southern field; for it needs workers — sowers of the seed, and reapers. It needs your means for the maintenance of these workers. The grace of Christ is unlimited, it is God's free gift. Then why should not this neglected people have some hope and courage and faith brought into their lives? There is sunshine in the heart for all who will accept Christ.

Sharing in the Joys of the Redeemed

There is reward for the whole-hearted, unselfish workers who enter this field, and also for those who contribute willingly for their support. Those engaged in active service in the field, and those who give of their means to sustain these workers, will share the reward of the faithful.

Every wise steward of the means entrusted to him, will enter into the joy of his Lord. What is this joy? —"Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." There will be a blessed commendation, a holy benediction, on the faithful winners of souls. They will join the rejoicing ones in heaven, who shout the harvest home. How great will be the joy when the redeemed of the Lord shall all meet,— gathered into the mansions prepared for them! O, what rejoicing for all who have been impartial, unselfish laborers together with God in carrying forward his work in the earth! What satisfaction will every reaper have, when the clear, musical voice of Jesus shall be heard, saying, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The Redeemer is glorified because he has not died in vain. With glad, rejoicing hearts, those who have been colaborers with God see of the travail of their soul for perishing, dying sinners, and are satisfied. The anxious hours they have spent, the perplexing circumstances they have had to meet, the sorrow of heart because some refused to see and receive the things which make for their peace, are forgotten. The self-denial they have practised in order to support the work, is remembered no more. As they look upon the souls they sought to win to Jesus, and see them saved, eternally saved — monuments of God's mercy and of a Redeemer's love — there ring through the arches of heaven shouts of praise and thanksgiving.

"And they sang a new song, saying, Thou art worthy; . . . for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth. And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders: and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."

"They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

Missions

THERE are many desert places,
Far away beyond the sea,
Where the unenlightened races
Hunger for the gospel plea.
To those far-off wildernesses,
Long with vices overgrown,
God the Father sends, and blesses,
Ministers to save his own.

It we can not go there, preaching
Jesus who was crucified,
We can send a message, teaching
That for them a Saviour died.
We can help to lift the sorrow
From some brother in despair;
We can help to make the morrow
Of some sister bright and fair.

There are souls, in many regions
Round about us, famishing
For the Bread of Life, and legions
Know not Jesus as their King.
If we can not go and feed them,
We can lend a helping hand,
Send a messenger to lead them,
And fulfil the Lord's command.

Let us give in fullest measure
As the Lord has prospered each;
Let us open heart and treasure
As the Holy Scriptures teach.
Let us send the proclamation
That the Word of Life is free
To the sons of God's creation,
Both at home and o'er the sea.

The Two Covenants

MRS. E. G. WHITE

As the Bible presents two laws, one changeless and eternal, the other provisional and temporary, so there are two covenants. The covenant of grace was first made with man in Eden, when, after the fall, there was given a divine promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. To all men this covenant offered pardon, and the assisting grace of God for future obedience through faith in Christ. It also promised them eternal life on condition of fidelity to God's law. Thus the patriarchs received the hope of salvation.

This same covenant was renewed to Abraham in the promise, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. 22: 18. This promise pointed to Christ. So Abraham understood it (see Gal. 3: 8, 16), and he trusted in Christ for the forgiveness of sins. It was this faith that was accounted unto him for righteousness. The covenant with Abraham also maintained the authority of God's law. The Lord appeared unto Abraham, and said, "I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect." Gen. 17: 1. The testimony of God concerning his faithful servant was, "Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws." Gen. 26: 5. And the Lord declared to him, "I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee." Gen. 17: 7.

Though this covenant was made with Adam and renewed to Abraham, it could not be ratified until the death of Christ. It had existed by the promise of God since the first intimation of redemption had been given; it had been accepted by faith; yet when ratified by Christ, it is called a new covenant. The law of God was the basis of this covenant, which was simply an arrangement for bringing men again into harmony with the divine will, placing them where they could obey God's law.

Another compact — called in Scripture the "old" covenant — was formed between God and Israel at Sinai, and was then ratified by the blood of a sacrifice. The Abrahamic covenant was ratified by the blood of Christ, and it is called the "second," or "new" covenant, because the blood by which it was sealed was shed after the blood of the first covenant. That the new covenant was valid in the days of Abraham, is evident from the fact that it was then confirmed both by the promise and by the oath of God,— the "two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie." Heb. 6: 18.

But if the Abrahamic covenant contained the promise of redemption, why was another covenant formed at Sinai? — In their bondage the people had to a great extent lost the knowledge of God and of the principles of the Abrahamic covenant. In delivering them from Egypt, God sought to reveal to them his power and his mercy, that they might be led to love and trust him. He brought them down to the Red Sea — where, pursued by the Egyptians, escape seemed impossible — that they might realize their utter helplessness, their need of divine aid; and then he wrought deliverance for them. Thus they were filled with love and gratitude to God, and with confidence in his power to help them. He had bound them to himself as their deliverer from temporal bondage.

But there was a still greater truth to be impressed upon their minds. Living in the midst of idolatry and corruption, they had no true conception of the holiness of God, of the exceeding sinfulness of their own hearts, their utter inability, in themselves, to render obedience to God's law, and their need of a Saviour. All this they must be taught.

God brought them to Sinai; he manifested his glory; he gave them his law, with the promise of great blessings on condition of obedience: "If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then . . . ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." Ex. 19: 5, 6. The people did not realize the sinfulness of their own hearts, and that without Christ it was impossible for them to keep God's law; and they readily entered into covenant with God. Feeling that they were able to establish their own righteousness, they declared, "All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient." Ex. 24: 7. They had witnessed the proclamation of the law in awful majesty, and had trembled with terror before the mount; and yet only a few weeks passed before they broke their covenant with God, and bowed down to worship a graven image. They could not hope for the favor of God through a covenant which they had broken; and now, seeing their sinfulness and their need of pardon, they were brought to feel their need of the Saviour revealed in the Abrahamic covenant, and shadowed forth in the sacrificial offerings. Now by faith and love they were bound to God as their deliverer from the bondage of sin. Now they were prepared to appreciate the blessings of the new covenant.

The terms of the "old covenant" were, Obey and live: "If a man do, he shall even live in them" (Eze. 20: 11; Lev. 18: 5); but "cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them." Deut. 27: 26. The "new covenant" was established upon "better promises,"— the promise of forgiveness of sins, and of the grace of God to renew the heart, and bring it into harmony with the principles of God's law. "This shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. . . . I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." Jer. 31: 33, 34.

The same law that was engraved upon the tables of stone, is written by the Holy Spirit upon the tables of the heart. Instead of going about to establish our own righteousness, we accept the righteousness of Christ. His blood atones for our sins. His obedience is accepted for us. Then the heart renewed by the Holy Spirit will bring forth "the fruits of the Spirit." Through the grace of Christ we shall live in obedience to the law of God written upon our hearts. Having the Spirit of Christ, we shall walk even as he walked. Through the prophet he declared of himself, "I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart." Ps. 40: 8. And when among men he said, "The Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him." John 8: 29.

The apostle Paul clearly presents the relation between faith and the law under the new covenant. He says, "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea, we establish the law." "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh," — it could not justify man, because in his sinful nature he could not keep the law,—"God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Rom. 5:1; 3:31; 8:3, 4.

God's work is the same in all time, although there are different degrees of development, and different manifestations of his power, to meet the wants of men in the different ages. Beginning with the first gospel promise, and coming down through the patriarchal and Jewish ages, and even to the present time, there has been a gradual unfolding of the purposes of God in the plan of redemption. The Saviour typified in the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish law is the very same that is revealed in the gospel. The clouds that enveloped his divine form have rolled back; the mists and shades have disappeared; and Jesus, the world's Redeemer, stands revealed. He who proclaimed the law from Sinai, and delivered to Moses the precepts of the ritual law, is the same that spoke the sermon on the mount. The great principles of love to God, which he set forth as the foundation of the law and the prophets, are only a reiteration of what he had spoken through Moses to the Hebrew people: "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Deut. 6:4, 5; Lev. 19:18. The teacher is the same in both dispensations. God's claims are the same. The principles of his government are the same. For all proceed from him "with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." James 1:17.—"Patriarchs and Prophets."

"Whose Shall These Things Be?"

WASHINGTON MORSE

"So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God. . . . Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Sell that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not. . . . Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding." Luke 12:20, 21, 32-36.

Now we understand that at the end of the twenty-three hundred years of Dan. 8:13, 14, our Saviour went in to the wedding (meant to be illustrated in the parable of Matthew 25) and into the investigative judgment. It is also certain that he will soon return from the wedding, and we are admonished not only to be ready, but to be waiting. The people of these days are the people who are passing through the time of the investigative judgment.

In Luke 12:43, 45, 46, there is a blessing pronounced upon those servants who are giving meat in due season to the household. The servant who is doing that is preaching the Lord's coming at the same time that the evil servant is saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming."

How are we to provide for ourselves "bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not"? It is by selling, and giving alms, and by employing our time and talents in the Lord's work. If we have this world's goods, we can not transfer our treasure to heaven and hold it still in our possession. Shall we give that which the Lord has committed to our trust, or shall we still cling to our property to be consumed with it by the fires of the last day? There can be no doubt that we are nearing the brink of eternity. "Then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?"

"Thy Kingdom Come"

JOHN M. HOPKINS

In a little while all earthly kingdoms will have passed away. The world's mightiest empires, Assyria, Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome, are all matters of history, object-lessons along the great highway of time, showing that that which is apparently the most enduring in this world must eventually be humbled in the dust.

All these kingdoms have successively risen and fallen. Each has acted its respective part in making up this world's history, along with the many more petty states and nations that have flourished for a time and then ceased to exist.

All these empires and states were built up of people more or less ambitious for earthly wealth, fame, and position. But how true the words —

"Beneath our feet and o'er our head
Is equal warning given;
Beneath us lie the countless dead,
Above us is the heaven.
Death rides on every passing breeze,
And lurks in every flower;
Each season has its own disease,
Its peril every hour."

What has been true of the great nations of the past will, erelong, be true of the nations of the present; for soon the Lord of heaven will vindicate his authority and manifest his power by the overthrow, simultaneously, of all kingdoms, and the destruction of all who do not then accept the great atoning Sacrifice, and yield loyal obedience to his holy law, the ten commandments.

There will be no refuge then for those outside of Christ (2 Thess. 1:7-10), for probation will have ended, and every case will have been decided. Then the decree, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still," will be the truth of the hour. There will be mercy no longer for the persistently rebellious; for God will pour out the wine of his wrath (the seven last plagues) "without mixture." Rev. 14:10, and chapter 16.

The next great and everlasting kingdom will be the kingdom of Christ, the kingdom of glory. "And thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion [the dominion first given to Adam. Gen. 1:28]; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." Micah 4:8. "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days [the eternal Father], and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. 7:13, 14, 27. "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11:15.

This is that for which Jesus taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Matt. 6:10. It is for the upbuilding of that kingdom in the hearts of men, that every follower of Christ should now most earnestly pray and work. To him who has been turned "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God" (Acts 26:18), there can be nothing so precious as the advancement of gospel truth. No interest will lie so near the heart as the interests of Christ's kingdom. Everything that will be a hindrance to this will be cheerfully laid aside. However dear the idol of the heart, however cherished the hope, the joy, the ambition, the earthly friend, it will be all cheerfully put away. Jesus said, If thine "eye" offend thee, or the "right hand," meaning the dearest and most serviceable of all earthly possessions, "pluck it out," "cut it off," and "cast it from thee."

Often this will require a struggle, a mighty effort; but if the soul is true to Christ, it will be done. By his grace it can be done. There is not one desire, one appetite, one practise, however strongly entrenched in the flesh, that the grace and power of Christ can not overcome. "There is help in God." The Word of God declares it. As I write, my mind recalls an experience with which I was acquainted forty-nine years ago. My father, a Baptist minister, was conducting a revival meeting in the village where he was pastor. There lived outside the village a very profane man, who appropriated to his own use various articles not belonging to him. One evening he was converted. The next morning he took his team and sleighs, loaded up the stolen property, and drove from place to place, delivering to its rightful owner each stolen article, begging forgiveness, and desiring to make any restitution required. Some twenty-five years later I met this man, and he was still trying to lead a consistent Christian life. My heart blessed God for such a salvation as this.

The Torch

The God of the Great Endeavor gave me
a torch to bear.
I lifted it high above me in the dark and
murky air,
And straightway, with loud hosannas,
the crowd acclaimed its light,
And followed me as I carried my torch
through the starless night;
And, mad with people's praises and drunken with vanity,
I forgot 'twas the torch that drew them,
and fancied they followed me.
But slowly my arm grew weary upholding the shining load,
And my tired feet went stumbling over
the hilly road,
And I fell with the torch beneath me.
In a moment the flame was out!
Then, lo! from the throng a stripling
sprang forth with a mighty shout,
Caught up the torch as it smoldered, and lifted it high again,
Till, fanned by the winds of heaven, it fired the souls of men!
And, as I lay in darkness, the feet of the trampling crowd
Passed over and far beyond me, its pæans proclaimed aloud,
While I learned, in the deepening shadows, this glorious verity:
'Tis the torch that the people follow,
whoever the bearer be.

The Essential in Education

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) The most essential education for our youth to-day to gain, and that which will fit them for the higher grades of the school above, is an education that will teach them how to reveal the will of God to the world. To neglect this phase of their training, and to bring in to our schools a worldly method, is to bring loss to both teachers and students.

(2) Just before Elijah was taken to heaven, he visited the schools of the prophets, and instructed the students on the most important points of their education. The lessons he had given them on former visits, he now repeated, impressing upon the minds of the youth the importance of letting simplicity mark every feature of their education. Only in this way could they receive the mold of heaven, and go forth to work in the ways of the Lord. If conducted as God designs they should be, our schools in these closing days of the message will do a work similar to that done by the schools of the prophets.

Those who go forth from our schools to engage in mission work will have need of an experience in the cultivation of the soil and in other lines of manual labor. They should receive a training that will fit them to take hold of any line of work in the fields to which they shall be called. No work will be more effectual than that done by those who, having obtained an education in practical life, go forth prepared to instruct as they have been instructed.

In his teachings the Saviour represented the world as a vineyard. We would do well to study the parables in which this figure is used. If in our schools the land were more faithfully cultivated, the buildings more disinterestedly cared for by the students, the love of sports and amusements, which causes so much perplexity in our school work, would pass away.

When the Lord placed our first parents in the garden of Eden, it was with the injunction that they "dress it" and "keep it." God had finished his work of creation, and had pronounced all things very good. Everything was adapted to the end for which it was made. While Adam and Eve obeyed God, their labors in the garden were a pleasure; the earth yielded of its abundance for their wants. But when man departed from his obedience to God, he was doomed to wrestle with the seeds of Satan's sowing, and to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. Henceforth he must battle in toil and hardship against the power to which he had yielded his will.

It was God's purpose to remove by toil the evil which man brought into the world by disobedience. By toil the temptations of Satan might be made ineffectual, and the tide of evil be stayed. The Son of God was given to the world, by his death to make atonement for the sins of the world, by his life to teach men how the plans of the enemy were to be thwarted. Taking upon himself the nature of man, Christ entered into the sympathies and interests of his brethren, and by a life of untiring labor taught how men might become laborers together with God in the building up of his kingdom in the world.

If those who have received instruction concerning God's plan for the education of the youth in these last days, will surrender their wills to God, he will teach them his will and his way. Christ is to be the teacher in all our schools. If teachers and students will give him his rightful place, he will work through them to carry out the plan of redemption.

Students are to be taught to seek the counsel of God in prayer. They are to be taught to look to their Creator as their unerring guide. They are to be taught the lessons of forbearance and trust, of true goodness and kindness of heart. They are to learn the lesson of perseverance. Their characters are to answer to the words of David, "That our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace." In all this they are qualifying for service in the missionary field.

The converted student has broken the chain which bound him to the service of sin, and has placed himself in right relation to God. His name is enrolled in the Lamb's book of life. He is under solemn obligation to renounce evil, and come under the jurisdiction of God. Through earnest prayer he is to cleave to Christ. To neglect this, to refuse his service, is to forfeit the favor of the Great Teacher, and to become the sport of Satan's wiles. It was the design of heaven by the infinite sacrifice of Christ, to bring men and women into favor again with God. That education that brings the student into close relation with the Teacher sent from God, is true education.

God's people are his chosen instrumentalities for the enlargement of his church in the earth. They are to seek the counsel of God. Worldly amusements and entertainments are to have no place in the life of the Christian. In following the way of the Lord is to be the strength of his people. Their faith in the gift of God's only begotten Son is to be manifest. This will make its impression on the mind of the worldling. He who takes his position as separate from the world, and strives to become one with Christ, will be successful in drawing souls to God. The grace of Christ will be so apparent in his life that the world will take knowledge of him that he has been with Jesus, and has learned of him.

"Go work to-day in my vineyard," the Saviour commands. "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Let every one who claims to be a child of the Heavenly King seek constantly to represent the principles of the kingdom of God. Let each remember that in spirit, in words, and in works he is to be loyal and true to all the precepts and commandments of the Lord. We are to be faithful, trustworthy subjects of the kingdom of Christ, that those who are worldly wise may have a true representation of the riches, the goodness, the mercy, the tenderness, and the courtesy of the citizens of the kingdom of God.

Prayer—No. 2

G. B. THOMPSON

The habit of prayer is perhaps one of the most satisfactory evidences there is of real piety. A man may make fine speeches, and engage in many kinds of philanthropic work, he may seem diligent in good works, and yet be a hypocrite. But when a man goes into the closet, and there habitually pours out his soul to God, he is apt to be in earnest. When the Lord wished to give Ananias evidence that Saul had experienced a change of heart, he said, "Behold, he prayeth."

A man might be saved, and never hear a sermon. He might be deaf, or placed under circumstances making it impossible to hear one of God's ministers preach. He might be saved, and never read a chapter in the Bible, for he might be blind, or never have learned to read. But in order to be an overcomer, and be saved in the kingdom of God, it is absolutely necessary that we pray. The deaf, the blind, the lonely ones, and those who are unlearned, need to pray as much as do others.

Higher Aspirations

MRS. R. C. BAKER

ONCE I thought it would be sweet
To wear the laurel wreath of fame;
To hear the world's glad plaudits greet
The faintest echo of my name.

But O, how vain and transient all
Earth's glittering treasures I have found!
Its pleasures on the senses pall,
Its fame is but an empty sound.

But though it may not be my lot
Upon earth's gilded page to shine,—
The goal by mortals madly sought,—
A high ambition still is mine.

This is my aspiration high,
When past these scenes of toil and strife,
To find my name indelibly
Recorded in the book of life;

To stand amid the ransomed throng
Who through much tribulation come,
To join the glad triumphal song,
And find at last in heaven a home;

To hear my Saviour's glad "Well done,"
Crowned by his hand salvation's heir.
What triumph mortals e'er have won
Can with that hour of bliss compare?

Then let earth's glittering bubbles break,
Her rainbow-tinted glories die,
With longings deep my heart shall ache
For deathless joys beyond the sky.

Ruling the Spirit

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"HE that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." He has conquered self,— the strongest foe man has to meet.

The highest evidence of nobility in a Christian is self-control. He who can stand unmoved amid a storm of abuse is one of God's heroes.

To rule the spirit is to keep self under discipline; to resist evil; to regulate every word and deed by God's great standard of righteousness. He who has learned to rule his spirit will rise above the slights, the rebuffs, the annoyances, to which we are daily exposed, and these will cease to cast a gloom over his spirit.

It is God's purpose that the kingly power of sanctified reason, controlled by divine grace, shall bear sway in the lives of human beings. He who rules his spirit is in possession of this power.

In childhood and youth the character is most impressible. The power of self-control should then be acquired. By the fireside and at the family board influences are exerted the results of which are as enduring as eternity. More than any natural endowment, the habits established in early years will decide whether a man shall be victorious or vanquished in the battle of life.

In the use of language, there is, perhaps, no error that old and young are more ready to pass over lightly in themselves than hasty, impatient speech. They think it is a sufficient excuse to plead, "I was off my guard, and did not really mean what I said." But God's Word does not treat it lightly. The Scripture says: "Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words? there is more hope of a fool than of him." "He that hath no rule over his own spirit is like a city that is broken down, and without walls."

The largest share of life's annoyances, its heartaches, its irritations, is due to uncontrolled temper. In one moment, by hasty, passionate, careless words, may be wrought evil that a whole lifetime's repentance can not undo. O, the hearts that are broken, the friends estranged, the lives wrecked, by the harsh, hasty words of those who might have brought help and healing!

Overwork sometimes causes a loss of self-control. But the Lord never compels hurried, complicated movements. Many gather to themselves burdens that the merciful Heavenly Father did not place on them. Duties he never designed them to perform chase one another wildly. God desires us to realize that we do not glorify his name when we take so many burdens that we are overtaxed and, becoming heart-weary and brain-weary, chafe and fret and scold. We are to bear only the responsibilties that the Lord gives us, trusting in him, and thus keeping our hearts pure and sweet and sympathetic.

There is a wonderful power in silence. When impatient words are spoken to you, do not retaliate. Words spoken in reply to one who is angry, usually act as a whip, lashing the temper into greater fury. But anger met by silence quickly dies away. Let the Christian bridle his tongue, firmly resolving not to speak harsh, impatient words. With the tongue bridled, he may be victorious in every trial of patience through which he is called to pass.

In his own strength man can not rule his spirit. But through Christ he may gain self-control. In his strength he may bring his thoughts and words into subjection to the will of God. The religion of Christ brings the emotions under the control of reason, and disciplines the tongue. Under its influence the hasty temper is subdued, and the heart is filled with patience and gentleness.

Hold firmly to the One who has all power in heaven and in earth. Though you so often fail to reveal patience and calmness, do not give up the struggle. Resolve again, this time more firmly, to be patient under every provocation. And never take your eyes off your divine Example.

God's ideal for his children is higher than the highest human thought can reach. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." This command is a promise. The plan of redemption contemplates our complete recovery from the power of Satan. Christ always separates the contrite soul from sin. He came to destroy the works of the devil. And he has made provision that the Holy Spirit shall be imparted to every repentant soul to keep him from sinning.

The tempter's agency is not to be accounted an excuse for one wrong act. Satan is jubilant when he hears the professed followers of Christ making excuses for their deformity of character. It is these excuses that lead to sin. A holy temper, a Christlike life, is attainable by every repenting, believing child of God.

Joint Heirs with Christ

W. S. HYATT

"BEHOLD, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." 1 John 3:1. The Lord calls upon all to behold his love. Love can be seen by its results, and the Lord calls upon all to behold the love that would make a race of prodigals "the sons of God." The world lies in wickedness, but now and then a prodigal comes to himself, and says, "I will arise and go to my Father." The Father saw him while he was yet a great way off, and ran to meet him. Love for the erring covered the sins of ingratitude, and the wanderer is made to realize that he is truly a son, and not a servant, although unworthy of the least of this parental affection.

We may behold this manner of love, but not understand it; we may enjoy its blessings, but not comprehend its greatness. How it is possible for a race of rebels to be transformed into sons of God will be the mystery of this life, and only eternity can reveal it to us. Nevertheless, it is a truth to the believer, for "to them gave he power to become the sons of God," and they are adopted into the royal family (Gal. 4:5), and loved the same as the only begotten Son. John 17:23. Thank God for an "adoption" that makes the prodigal to realize that he is not a servant, but a son; and, also, for the spirit of true sonship whereby he can look up with a filial confidence and say, "Father, Father."

The conditions by which we may become sons of God are clearly stated. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6:17, 18. And again he says, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." Rev. 21:7. Now listen to the promise whereby this may be accomplished: "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." John 1:12. Truly this is a wonderful privilege to the believer.

"And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." Rom. 8:17. Language fails us when we attempt to express the greatness of these

My Saviour at Last

B. E. BEDDOE

O, to me the earth is drear
When my Saviour is not near!
Earth to me can but impart
Trouble, sin, and aching heart;
Joy doth fade, and I'm alone;
Blasted hopes do make me moan.

Life is sweet if Thou art near,
Struggles I no longer fear,
Storms may sweep and tempests roar,
Battles come as ne'er before;
Yet, my Lord, if thou art near,
Tempests I no more shall fear.

Lord, for thee our spirits yearn,
Hoping for thy soon return.
Soon we'll see thee, bright and fair,
Come from heaven to take us there.
Where thou art we then shall be,
Saved and blest, at home with thee.

A Message to Teachers

MRS. E. G. WHITE

A message has been given me for the teachers in all our schools. Those who accept the sacred responsibility resting upon teachers need to be constantly advancing in their experience. They should not be content to remain upon the lowlands, but should ever be climbing heavenward. With the Word of God in their hands, and the love of souls pointing them to diligence, they should advance step by step in efficiency.

A deep Christian experience will be combined with the work of true education. Our schools are to advance steadily in Christian development; and in order to do this, the words and example of the teacher should be a constant help. "Ye also, as lively stones," the apostle declares, "are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." It would be well for every teacher and student to study carefully these words, asking himself the question, Am I, through the abundant grace given, obtaining the very experience that as a child of God I must have in order to advance constantly step by step to the higher grade?

In every line of instruction, teachers are to seek to impart light from the Word of God, and to show the importance of obedience to a "Thus saith the Lord." The education should be such that the students will make right principles the guide of every action: this is the education that will abide through the eternal ages.

I am given words of caution to the teachers in all our established schools. The work of our schools must bear a different stamp than that borne by some of our most popular schools. The mere study of the ordinary text-book is not sufficient; and many of the books that are used are unnecessary for those schools that are established to prepare students for the school above. As a result, the students in these schools are not receiving the most perfect Christian education. The very points of study are neglected that are most needed to prepare the students to stand the last great examination, and to fit them for missionary work in home and foreign fields. The education that is needed now is one that will qualify the students for practical missionary work, by teaching them to bring every faculty under the control of the Spirit of God. The study book which is of the highest value is that which contains the instruction of Christ, the Teacher of teachers.

The Lord expects our teachers to expel from our schools those books that teach sentiments which are not in accordance with his Word, and to give place to those books that are of the highest value. The Lord designs that the teachers in our schools shall excel in wisdom the wisdom of the world, because they study his wisdom. God will be honored when the teachers in our schools, from the highest grades to the lowest, show to the world that a more than human wisdom is theirs, because the Master Teacher is standing at their head.

Our teachers need to be constant learners. All reformers need to place themselves under discipline to God. Their own lives need to be reformed, their own hearts subdued by the grace of Christ. Every worldly habit and idea that is not in harmony with the mind of God should be renounced.

When Nicodemus, a learned teacher in Israel, came to Jesus to inquire of him, Christ laid before him the first principles. Nicodemus, though holding an honorable position in Israel, had not a true conception of what a teacher in Israel should be. He needed instruction in the very first principles of the divine life, for he had not learned the alphabet of true Christian experience.

In response to Christ's instruction Nicodemus said, "How can these things be?" Christ answered, "Art thou a master in Israel, and knowest not these things?" The same question might be asked of many who are holding responsible positions as teachers, physicians, and ministers of the gospel, but who have neglected the most essential part of their education, that which would fit them to deal in a Christlike manner with human minds.

In the instruction that Christ gave to his disciples, and to the people of all classes who came to hear his words, there was that which lifted them to a high plane of thought and action. If the words of Christ, instead of the words of men, were given to the learner to-day, we would see evidences of higher intelligence, a clearer comprehension of heavenly things, a deeper knowledge of God, a purer and more vigorous Christian life.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you," Christ said, "he that believeth on me hath everlasting life. I am that bread of life. Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead. This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever."

"When Jesus knew in himself that his disciples murmured at it, he said unto them, Doth this offend you? What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before? It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."

We are slow to understand how much we need to study the words of Christ and his methods of labor. If his teachings were better understood, much of the instruction that is now given in our schools would be valued at its true worth. It would be seen that much that is now taught does not develop the simplicity of godliness in the life of the student. Then finite wisdom would receive less honor, and the Word of God would have a more honored place.

When our teachers are truly converted, they will experience a soul hunger for the knowledge of God, and as humble learners in the school of Christ, they will study to know his righteousness. Righteous principles will rule the life, and will be taught as the principles that rule in the education of heaven. When teachers seek with all their heart to bring true principles into the work of education, angels of God will be present to make impressions upon the heart and mind.

Prayer — No. 4

G. B. THOMPSON

Concerning prayer the Lord has given us this promise: "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." Matt. 21:22. This is indeed a wonderful promise. The Bible apparently contains no greater, for it seems there could be no greater. Think of it! "All things . . . ye shall ask . . . ye shall receive." He who made and owns the universe, and has all power in heaven and on the earth, says, All things are freely yours; ask and receive. There is no reason why we should lack anything, or be spiritually lean.

But observe there is a condition. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." Ah, this means much. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord." James 1:5-7.

Prayer without faith is an empty form; it is even worse than this, it is mockery. Believing is receiving. Every request from an honest and true heart, uttered in faith, the Lord answers. It

"Faint Not"

HUBERT FLETCHER

Faint not;
Thy Father knows thy burdens and thy woes.
His eyes are watching thee;
His love, his sympathy, his pitying care
Are overshadowing thee.

Faint not;
Though rough and tempest-tossed thy life may be,
He knows it all.
His hand on thee, at times though heavy laid,
Is for thy good.

Faint not;
Though sundered far from home, from those ye love,
He's ever near,
Near thee to hear thy groans, thy sighs, thy calls —
Yea, he will hear.

"Judge Not"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE work of judging his brother has not been placed upon any man. "Judge not," the Saviour says, "that ye be not judged; for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." He who takes upon himself the work of judging and criticizing others, lays himself open to the same degree of judgment and criticism. Those who are ready to condemn their brethren, would do well to examine their own works and character. Such an examination, honestly made, will reveal the fact that they, too, have defects of character, and have made grave blunders in their work. If the great Judge should deal with men as they deal with their fellow workers, they would regard him as unkind and unmerciful.

"Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye," the Saviour asked, "but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

The scribes and Pharisees were very rigid in their rules, very severe in their judgment of others, and unmerciful in condemning. They exalted themselves as judges among the people; and while they justified the course of forbidden action that they themselves indulged in, they were quick to condemn with scornful words the course of others, even of those whom God was using to do his work. Their criticism of Christ and his disciples was severe and denouncing, and placed them in a false light before the people. To the view of the Pharisee his individual sins were as the mote, but that which he saw to condemn in others he represented as a beam. Christ declared to such, "Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

Christ did not make himself a judge among men; but he was heaven-appointed to lay down correct principles for the rule of the human family. He appoints agencies to carry out these principles; and by him "princes decree justice." In the advancement of his cause in the earth, he would have men appointed to deal with the erring who will be kind and considerate, and whose characters reveal the similitude of the divine,— men who will show the wisdom of Christ in dealing with matters that should be kept private, and who, when a work of correction and reproof must be done, will know how to keep silence before those whom it does not concern. Unbelievers should not be given opportunity to make God's people, be they ministers or laymen, the objects of their suspicion and unrighteous judgment.

When it becomes necessary for a minister to do a work of correction, he should be very careful to act righteously and wisely. He is not to denounce the erring harshly before those who know not the truth. The unconverted judge the servants of God by such actions, and conclude that this can not be the work of God. Those who are not of our faith, but who are convicted of the truth, when they see a lack of unity among the ministers who claim to be obeying the truth, close the door of their hearts, saying, We want none of these things. Thus by the exercise of unsanctified speech, souls are turned from the truth, and an example given that opens the way for the things of truth and righteousness to be lowered in the dust. Our workers, when tempted to speak hasty words of criticism and judgment, should remember that silence is golden.

I am instructed to bear this message to ministers: Judge not after the desire of your own mind. Do not, in order to carry out your own plans, bring forward that which will condemn another. Such a work is not a work of righteousness, and is one which God forbids. If you are under the sweet influence of Christ's Spirit, it is your privilege to give counsel to your brother; but if you are not under the direction of the Spirit of God, keep silence. It is God's prerogative to judge, not man's. Man is debarred from the seat of judgment by the words of Christ, "Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

My brethren, the time has come for every man to examine critically his own case. The time has come for men to keep their words of fault-finding for their individual selves. Let those who have been free to express their ideas regarding the error of their brother's course, examine their own lives by the light of the Word of God. There is a great work of reconversion to be done before the way for the Lord's coming shall be prepared. Men and women who have long professed to serve the Lord need to experience the quickening power of the Holy Spirit.

Great care should be exercised in choosing men to occupy positions of responsibility as guardians of the churches. My brethren, do not make this choice blindly, lest the flock of God be given an example that will teach them to tear and devour. The men who bear responsibilities in the cause of Christ should be men of prayer and humility. They are to act like men who in all their dealings with their brethren are guided by the Spirit of God. They are to give an example of righteousness. They are sacredly to guard the reputation of those who are doing the work of God.

I have been shown that some of the leaders in the work have acted the part of an inconsiderate father who loses control of his words and spirit, and who acts severely with his children because he supposes it necessary to show his authority. Often such a father, in exercising his ruling power, gives an example of passion and injustice, which strengthens the evil. The parent who deals thus with his child does it a great wrong, and needs to turn his indignation and censure against himself. I have been instructed to say that those workers who have carried this spirit into their labors and plans in the conference are as surely stumbling-blocks to souls as is the inconsistent parent to his child.

God never intended that in his work the mind of one man should control the mind of another. Those who are trying to carry out their personal plans should carefully consider whether they are following the example of him who said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Those who follow in the footsteps of Christ will not act the part of an accuser, passing judgment on those who they suppose make mistakes.

We have a most solemn message to bear to the world. Let those who suppose that they are to have authority, remember that they are men under authority. A higher power than that of any earthly potentate is to rule them.

Religion's Chief Test

K. C. RUSSELL

RECENTLY the following paragraph came under my observation, and it is so expressive of the true elements that are embraced in the Christian religion that I have been constrained to pass it on to the readers of the REVIEW: —

"The supreme test of religion is that it be experienced in our lives. A man may have deep religious feeling, but if it does not prove itself in action, it is but vapid emotionalism. Sentiment and prayers do but make a mockery of God

A Call to Consecration

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Reading for Sabbath, December 14)

THE world's greatest need is consecrated effort for the salvation of souls. Christ desires by the fulness of his power so to strengthen his people that through them the whole world shall be encircled with an atmosphere of grace. When his people shall make a wholehearted surrender of themselves to God, walking before him in humility and faith, he will carry out through them his eternal purpose, enabling them to work harmoniously in giving to the world the truth as it is in Jesus. He will use all, men, women, and children, in making the light shine forth to the world, and calling out a people who will be true to his commandments.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The salvation of souls was the great object for which Christ sacrificed his royal robe and kingly crown, the glory of heaven, and the homage of angels, and laying aside his divinity, came to earth to labor and suffer with humanity upon him. He who has been transformed into the likeness of Christ, he who cherishes the spirit of the great Missionary Worker (1) is filled with a desire to bear the tidings of salvation to the regions beyond, to those who know not the Saviour. To the work of soul-saving he consecrates time and strength, means and influence. He uses every jot of his ability in an effort to win souls to Christ. The sacrifice made on the cross of Calvary is the motive that inspires him to put forth untiring efforts and to show unflagging zeal. His determination is, "I will not fail nor be discouraged." By his consistent life he draws those around him to the Saviour.

Those who give their lives to Christian ministry know the meaning of true happiness. Their interests and their prayers reach far beyond self. They themselves are growing up as they try (1) to reach others. They become familiar with the largest plans, the most stirring enterprises; and how can they but grow when they place themselves in the channel of light and blessing? They become more and more identified with Christ in all his plans. There is no opportunity for spiritual stagnation. Selfish ambition and self-seeking are rebuked by constant contact with the absorbing interests which belong to high and holy aspirations.

All who surrender themselves to God in unselfish service for humanity are in co-operation with the Lord of glory. This thought sweetens all toil, it braces the will, it nerves the spirit for whatever may befall. Working with unselfish heart, ennobled by being partakers of Christ's sufferings, sharing his sympathies, they help to swell the tide of his joy, and bring honor and praise to his exalted name.

Very much more might be done for Christ if all who have the light of truth would practise the truth. There are whole families who might be missionaries, engaged in personal labor, toiling for the Master with busy hands and active brains, devising new methods for the success of his work. There are earnest, prudent, warm-hearted men and women who could do much for Christ if they would give themselves to God, drawing near to him, and seeking him with the whole heart.

The Lord is calling his people to take up different lines of work. Those in the highways and byways of life are to hear the gospel message. Church-members are to do evangelistic work in the homes of their neighbors who have not yet received full evidence of the truth for this time. The presentation of the truth in love and sympathy, from house to house, is in harmony with the instruction that Christ gave to his disciples when he sent them out on their first missionary tour. By songs of praise to God, by humble, heartfelt prayers, by a simple presentation of Bible truth in the family circle, many will be reached. The divine workers will be present to send conviction to hearts. "I am with you alway," is his promise. With the assurance of the abiding presence of such a Helper, we may labor with hope and faith and courage.

Those who have long known the truth need to seek the Lord most earnestly, that their hearts may be filled with a determination to work for their neighbors. My brethren and sisters, give (3) yourselves to the Lord for service. Allow no opportunity to pass unimproved. Visit those who live near you, and by sympathy and kindness try to reach their hearts. Visit the sick and suffering, and show a kindly interest in them. If possible, do something to make them more comfortable. Through this means you can reach their hearts, and speak a word for Christ. Eternity alone will reveal how far-reaching such a line of labor can be.

Other lines of usefulness will open before those who are willing to do the duty nearest them. It is not learned, eloquent workers that are most needed now, but humble, Christlike men and women, who have learned from Jesus of Nazareth to be meek and lowly, and who, trusting in his strength, will go forth into the highways and hedges to give the invitation, "Come, for all things are now ready." This work will give life and vigor to the mental and spiritual powers. Light from Christ will shine into the mind. The Saviour will abide in your hearts, and in his light you will see light.

Consecrate yourselves wholly to the work of God. He is your strength, and he will be at your right hand, helping you to carry out his merciful designs. By personal labor reach those around you. Preaching alone will not do the work that needs to be done. A perfect work can not be done by proxy. Money lent or given will not accomplish all that is to be done. By visiting the people, talking, praying, sympathizing with them, you will win hearts. This is the highest missionary work that you can do. To do it, you will need resolute, persevering faith, unwearying patience, and a deep love for souls.

My sisters, do not spend your money lavishly for dress. Fathers and mothers, teach your children to dress inexpensively; teach them to save their pennies for missionary work. Let every member of the family practise self-denial. Christ is our example. He was the Prince of glory, but he had such an interest in our world that he left his riches and came to this earth to live a life that should be an example to rich and poor alike. He taught that all should come together in love and unity, to work as he worked, to sacrifice as he sacrificed, and to love as children of God.

(2) Parents, gather your children around you each morning and evening, and in humble supplication lift the heart to God for help. Your dear ones are exposed to temptations. Daily annoyances beset the pathway of old and young. Those who would live patient, loving, cheerful lives, must pray. Only by receiving constant help from God can we gain the victory over self.

Each morning consecrate yourselves and your children to God for that day. Make no calculation for months or years; these are not yours. One brief day is given you. As if it were your last on earth, work during its hours for the Master. Lay all your plans before God, to be carried out or given up, as his providence shall indicate. Accept his plans instead of your own, even though their acceptance requires the abandonment of cherished projects. Thus the life will be molded more and more after the divine example; and "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

Brethren and sisters, arouse, and show a living interest in the unworked portions of the Lord's vineyard. Consecrate yourselves unreservedly to the work of giving the rich treasures of truth to those in darkness. Catch the spirit of the great Master Worker.

Welfare Ministry p. 70 (1); My Life Today, p. 238 (2); 233 (3)

Learn from the Friend of sinners how to minister to sin-sick souls. His heart was ever touched with human woe. Why are we so cold and indifferent? Why are our hearts so unimpressible? Christ placed himself upon the altar of sacrifice, a living sacrifice. Why are we so unwilling to give ourselves to the work to which he consecrated his life? Something must be done to cure the terrible indifference that has taken hold upon us. Let us bow our heads in humiliation as we see how much less we have done than we might have done to sow the seeds of truth.

When we are converted, our desire for ease and elegance will be changed. Christ brought his desires and wishes into strict abeyance to his mission — a mission that bore the insignia of heaven. He made everything subordinate to the great work that he came into the world to accomplish for the fallen race. When in his youth his mother found him in the school of the rabbis, and said to him, " Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing," he answered — and his answer is the key-note of his life-work —" How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? "

My brethren and sisters, I speak to you in words of love and tenderness. Every earthly interest must be made subordinate to the great work of redemption. Remember that in the lives of the followers of Christ must be seen the same devotion, the same subjection to God's work of every social claim and every earthly affection, that was seen in his life. God's claims must ever be made paramount. " He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me."

Eternity stretches before us. The curtain is about to be lifted. What are we doing, what are we thinking of, that we cling to our selfish love of ease, while all around us souls are perishing? Have our hearts become callous? Can we not see and understand that we have a work to do in behalf of others? My brethren and sisters, are you among those who, having eyes, see not, and having ears, hear not? Is it in vain that God has sent you a knowledge of his will? Is it in vain that he has sent you warning after warning of the nearness of the end? Do you believe in the declarations of his Word concerning what is coming upon the world? Do you believe that God's judgments are hanging over the inhabitants of the earth? How, then, can you sit at ease, careless and indifferent?

Every day that passes brings us nearer the end. Does it bring us also nearer God? Are we watching unto prayer? Those with whom we associate day by day need our help, our guidance. They may be in such a condition of mind that a word in season will be sent home by the Holy Spirit as a nail in a sure place. To-morrow some of these souls may be where we may never reach them again? What is our influence over these fellow travelers? What effort do we make to win them to Christ?

Time is short, and our working forces must be organized to do a larger work. Workers are needed who comprehend the greatness of the work, and who will engage in it, not for the wages they receive, but from a realization of the nearness of the end. The time demands great efficiency and deeper consecration. O, I am so full of this subject that I cry to God, " Raise up and send forth messengers filled with the sense of their responsibility, messengers in whose hearts self-idolatry, which lies at the foundation of all sin, has been crucified."

Messages from the Mission Fields

(Reading for Sunday, December 15)

WE have messages from some of the great mission fields, sent by our workers for this week-of-prayer season.

Japan and Korea

The first comes from Japan and Korea, the lands of the rising sun. Elder F. W. Field writes: —

" The week-of-prayer season, with its accompanying gifts to our missions, is an occasion of deep interest to us missionaries; for at this time we are assured that the work in foreign fields will be especially remembered by our people everywhere. And this brief word is sent concerning the latest development of the work in Japan and Korea, that all may the more understandingly pray to the God of missions, and aid by their gifts.

" We are glad to report continued progress. Word has just come from Brother Okohira, who is making a visit to Kiushu in the south, that several have accepted the truth in Nagasaki. They desire baptism and a training in the work. There are others who are looking forward hopefully to the time when we shall have a school for the training of workers. Pray that they may not have long to wait.

" Our medical work in Kobe has never seemed more promising than of late, nor the opportunities for reaching the people better. At the same time we have had to meet difficulties and perplexities.

Be Still

FRANCIS M. WILCOX

Be still, my fainting heart,
God ruleth yet above;
Do faithfully thy part,
Trust his protecting love.

He knows how weak and frail,
How far from wisdom thou;
Through him the weak prevail,
If they to him shall bow.

His is exceeding might —
'Tis ours by faith to claim;
We conquer in the fight
Through power of his great name.

Though tempest may run wild,
And black the storm-cloud grow,
He careth for his child,
This trusting faith doth know.

Be still, then, soul of mine,
In all the battle din;
Rest in the One divine,
And resting, thou shalt win.

A Lesson from the Ministry of John the Baptist

MRS. E. G. WHITE

On one occasion the Jewish rulers sent messengers to John the Baptist to make the inquiry, "Who art thou?" John "confessed, and denied not; but confessed, I am not the Christ. And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that prophet? And he answered, No. Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself? He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias."

Had the minds of his hearers been keen to recognize spiritual truth, they would have discerned the significance of John's words. Allusion was made to a custom prevailing in those Eastern countries. When a monarch was about to make a journey, men were sent before him to clear obstructions from the way, that the king might travel in safety and without hindrance. "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness," John declared, "Make straight the way of the Lord."

"Why baptizest thou then," the messengers asked, "if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet?" To the listening people John the Baptist looked as if he might be the prophet Elijah. His authoritative proclamation, his manner as he spoke of himself as the messenger of the coming One, aroused a great expectation in the hearts of the people. The Jews had studied only one side of this question. To them the Messiah was to be a mighty prince who would work powerfully in their behalf. "John answered them, saying, I baptize with water: but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not; he it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose."

None who listened to the words of John and marked the earnestness of his manner, could doubt that he referred to the Christ who had been so long promised to the world. The messengers from Jerusalem had their answer. The message they were to carry back to the rulers at Jerusalem was decided and unequivocal. The Messiah was among them.

There was much in the places about them to remind the Jews of God's wonderful works for them in the past. Just below where John was baptizing, God's power had divided the waters, making a path for the Israelites to cross the Jordan and to pass on to the promised land. Not many miles away stood Jericho, whose walls had fallen before the command of the Prince of heaven. What might they not expect if the Messiah had actually come to earth! The whole nation was stirred.

"Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins. But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance: and think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. And now also the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire: whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."

The doctrine that John preached was, first, repentance for past sins; then, "the kingdom of heaven is at hand." They must show repentance toward God; then they would be prepared to show faith in the One who was about to declare himself unto them. Truth must be allowed to exercise its cleansing power upon the lives of these rulers.

To those who were untaught in the oracles of God, it was enough for John to say, "Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." But when the Baptist saw the Pharisees and Sadducees coming to his baptism, he was stirred to give them a decided message. These men held themselves as a power among the people. Though they held different theories regarding some Bible subjects, they were united in their desire to hear the words of the wilderness prophet. Some who came from curiosity, arrested by his words, became interested in the message he was giving, and were moved to be baptized. To them John said, "Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance." Christ was about to appear as the revealer of the character of God. His very presence would make known to men their sin. Only as they were willing to be purged from sin, could they enter into fellowship with him. Those who were corrupt in heart could not abide in his presence.

Multitudes accepted the preaching of John, and followed him from place to place. Many cherished in their hearts the hope that he was the Messiah. But as John saw the people turning to him, he sought to direct their minds to the coming One. Later, Christ, speaking of John and his mission, declared, "What went ye out into the wilderness for to see? A reed shaken with the wind? But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they which are gorgeously appareled, and live delicately are in kings' courts. But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and much more than a prophet. This is he of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. For I say unto you, Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist: but he that is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he."

In this age, just prior to the second coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven, such a work as that of John the Baptist is to be done. God calls for men who will prepare a people to stand in the great day of the Lord. The message preceding the public ministry of Christ was, "Repent, publicans and sinners; repent, Pharisees and Sadducees; 'repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.'" As a people who believe in Christ's soon appearing, we have a message to bear: "Prepare to meet thy God." Our message is to be as direct as was the message of John. He rebuked kings for their iniquity. Notwithstanding that his life was imperiled, he did not hesitate to declare God's word. And our work in this age must be done as faithfully.

In order to give such a message as John gave, we must have a spiritual experience like his. The same work must be wrought in us. We must behold God, and in beholding him lose sight of self.

John had by nature the faults and weaknesses common to humanity; but the touch of divine love had transformed him. When, after Christ's ministry began, the disciples of John came to him with the complaint that all men were following the new teacher, John showed how clearly he understood his relation to the Messiah, and how gladly he welcomed the One for whom he had prepared the way.

"A man can receive nothing," he said, "except it be given him from heaven. Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him. He that hath the bride is the bridegroom: but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice: this my joy therefore is fulfilled. He must increase, but I must decrease."

Looking in faith to the Redeemer, John had risen to the height of self-abnegation. He sought not to attract men to himself, but to lift their thoughts higher and still higher, until they should rest upon the Lamb of God. He himself had been only a voice, a cry in the wilderness. Now with joy he accepted silence and obscurity, that the eyes of all might be turned to the light of life.

Those who are true to their calling as messengers for God, will not seek honor for themselves. Love for self will be swallowed up in love for Christ. They will recognize that it is their work to proclaim, as did John the Baptist, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." They will lift up Jesus, and with him humanity will be lifted up. "Thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones."

Prayer — No. 6

G. B. THOMPSON

To Daniel a messenger from heaven said, "Thou art greatly beloved." We do not read just this concerning any other man. This was a wonderfully comforting message to be brought from heaven by the high and holy Gabriel to a poor, sinful man. It told how he was regarded in heaven. A sinner greatly loved in heaven! How cheering!

But why was Daniel, an erring man, so loved in heaven? The secret of this we feel sure is that he was a man of prayer. We find him at the "time of the evening oblation" "speaking in prayer." We read of his "supplications," and how he set his face to "seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting and sackcloth, and ashes," to understand the will of the Lord.

Daniel was much in secret prayer. "Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime."

This was secret prayer. It was his custom. He had been doing it "aforetime." Here is explained the secret of the life of this remarkable man, and it tells why he was "greatly beloved." He was a man of prayer. Nothing, not even death itself, could hinder him from communing with God. When he "knew that the writing was signed" which consigned him to a den of hungry lions, he went to his accustomed place, and with his windows open toward Jerusalem, he bowed before Jehovah and prayed for help, just as he had before. What an example of secret prayer!

And he did not allow business to rob him of his secret devotion. He was a busy man. The affairs of many provinces were in his hands. He was "first" of the three presidents who were over the "whole kingdom." But he took time to pray. He made duty first and secular things second; and he did not take time to pray once a day, but "three times a day" he "prayed, and gave thanks before his God." "At evening, and morning, and at noon" he repaired to his closet to pray. This tells why "an excellent spirit was in him," and why he was "preferred above the presidents and princes."

We are admonished to pray in secret. "And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hyprocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." When "every man went into his own house," the Saviour "went unto the Mount of Olives," and there alone, in the cold mountains, with the dew of night falling upon him, he "continued all night in prayer to God." O that professed Christians would follow the example of secret prayer left us by our divine Master! The absence of prayer tells why many are weak and ready to die.

"We should pray also in the family circle; and above all, we must not neglect secret prayer, for this is the life of the soul. It is impossible for the soul to flourish while prayer is neglected. Family or public prayer alone is not sufficient. In solitude let the soul be open to the inspecting eye of God. Secret prayer is to be heard only by the prayer-hearing God. No curious ear is to receive the burden of such petitions. In secret prayer the soul is free from surrounding influences, free from excitement. Calmly, yet fervently, will it reach out after God. Sweet and abiding will be the influence emanating from him who seeth in secret, whose ear is open to hear the prayer arising from the heart. By calm, simple faith, the soul holds communion with God, and gathers to itself rays of divine light to strengthen and sustain it in the conflict with Satan. God is our tower of strength.

"Pray in your closet; and as you go about your daily labor, let your heart be often lifted to God. It was thus that Enoch walked with God. These silent prayers rise like precious incense before the throne of grace. Satan can not overcome him whose heart is thus stayed upon God.

"There is no time or place in which it is inappropriate to offer up a petition to God. There is nothing that can prevent us from lifting up our hearts in the spirit of earnest prayer. In the crowds of the street, in the midst of a business engagement, we may send up a petition to God, and plead for divine guidance, as did Nehemiah when he made his request before the King Artaxerxes. A closet of communion may be found wherever we are. We should have the door of the heart open continually, and our invitation going up that Jesus may come and abide as a heavenly guest in the soul."—"Steps to Christ," pages 120, 121.

Character of the Papacy — No. 1

Its Essential Dogma

J. O. CORLISS

The word "papa" lengthened to "papacy" to express the system of Roman church government, is a simple Latin word, meaning the same as the English word "father." But even this explanation does not give a knowledge of what the Roman papacy is, except in part. We may know that if it is true to its name, it will attempt to exercise a fatherly government over the church, instead of one of a brotherly nature. The father of a family is its head, to whom each member is responsible for every act of his career, at least so long as he is a dependent of the family. The system of discipline inaugurated by the father must be adhered to, under all circumstances. The religious teachings of the head of the house (if there be any such) are to be listened to with respect, and their application to the life is supposed to be made intensely practical.

All this, and much more unnecessary to mention in this connection, represents the relation of a father and his family. But if, in the administration of his family affairs, the father becomes so arbitrary that he must enforce unreasonable decrees by severe punishment, then he has exceeded his privilege, even though he has dealt with his own flesh and blood. But in assuming fatherhood in the government of the church, the pope, or papa, oversteps the right of humanity in the assumption itself, because no authority has ever been conferred by which he may exercise such prerogative.

Continuing this phase of the subject, we feel justified in saying, first of all, that Christ himself is the rightful Head of the church, and so of each individual member of the church. The reason for this conclusion may be stated as follows: To become a true member of the church, one must become "dead" to the world (Col. 3:3; Gal. 2:20), and be made "alive unto God through Jesus Christ." Rom. 6:11. This condition must be effected through the "new birth" from above as taught by Christ to Nicodemus in John 3:3. Thus one is "born of God," and so passes from death unto life (1 John 3:9, 14), being born of "incorruptible" seed, by "the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." 1

Hope, Faith, and Love

WORTHIE HARRIS HOLDEN

HOPE spans the chasm of Grief, where 'mid the gloom
Of earthly losses runs the stream Despair;
High heaven in love hath built this bridge aloft
For weary feet that tread the Path of Prayer.

Ah, what would life possess were faith unborn?
And what could solace had not Hope built nigh?
Each heart were pierced by sorrow were there yet
No calm, glad morning in God's by-and-by.

And even now is life baptized anew
With impulses to conquer and succeed,
Blessed by the vision bright that Faith portrays,
Calmed by the peace Love granteth for its need.

Hope, faith, and love,— the triune thought of God
For man's most noble, most exalted life:
Our ardent longings and ambitions pale
By his ideal for us 'mid earthly strife.

Why longer trifle with the gilded worth
The world flings out to dazzle and allure?
God beckons thee to heights yet unexplored,
Vast and eternal and forever sure.

The Return of the Exiles — No. 5

Loss Through Delay

MRS. E. G. WHITE

DURING the earlier years of the restoration of the Jews from Babylon, the Samaritans were untiring in their opposition. They "weakened the hands of the people in Judah, and troubled them in building, and hired counselors against them, to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus king of Persia, even until the reign of Darius." By their false reports they aroused suspicions in minds easily led to suspect. At times, the rulers in authority seemed to be influenced to work against the purposes of God. But for many years the influences for evil were held in check, and the people of God had liberty to continue their work.

Throughout these years, Satan was striving to influence the highest powers of the kingdom of Medo-Persia to show disfavor to God's people. It was Satan who prompted the Samaritans to persevere in their opposition. But angels of God were working in behalf of the returned exiles, and all heaven was intensely interested in the controversy. In the tenth chapter of Daniel is given a glimpse of this mighty struggle waged for many years between the forces for good and the forces for evil.

In this vision of the prophet, the angel Gabriel declared: "The prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days: but, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me; and I remained there with the kings of Persia." For three weeks Gabriel had been wrestling with the powers of darkness, and seeking to counteract the influences at work on the mind of King Cyrus. Before the contest closed, Christ himself came to Gabriel's help. All that heaven could do in behalf of the people of God, was done. The victory was finally gained, and the forces of the enemy were held in check all the days of Cyrus, who reigned for seven years, and all the days of his son Cambyses, who reigned about seven years and a half.

This was a period of wonderful opportunity for the Jews. While the highest agencies of heaven were working on the hearts of kings, the people of God might have been most active in carrying out the decree of Cyrus to restore the temple and its services, and in re-establishing themselves in their Judean homes. But many failed of co-operating with God. In the day of his power, they proved unwilling.

The opposition of the enemies of God's truth was strong and determined. Gradually the builders lost heart. Some could not forget the scene at the laying of the corner-stone, when "many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men," and who had seen the temple that Solomon built, gave expression to their lack of faith in the enterprise by lamenting because of the seeming inferiority of the plans for this second temple. And as the Samaritans grew more and more bold, many of the Jews began to question whether, after all, the time had come for rebuilding. This feeling soon became widespread. Many of the workmen, disheartened and discouraged, returned to their homes, and engaged in the ordinary pursuits of life,— in sowing and reaping, and in building and beautifying houses for themselves.

During the reign of Cambyses, the work on the temple progressed very slowly. Finally, in the brief reign of the false Smerdis (named Artaxerxes in Ezra 4:7), the Samaritans induced the unscrupulous impostor to issue a decree forbidding the Jews to rebuild their temple and city.

For over a year the temple was neglected,— well-nigh forsaken,— while the people dwelt in their homes, and labored to attain temporal prosperity; but their situation was deplorable. Work as they might, they could not prosper. The very elements of nature seemed to conspire against them. A drought prevailed, and the harvests were meager.

These were the conditions existing during the early part of the reign of Darius Hystaspes, king of Medo-Persia. Spiritually as well as temporally, the Israelites were in a pitiable state. So long had they murmured and doubted; so long had they chosen to make their personal interests first, while they viewed with apathy the Lord's temple in ruins, that many had lost sight of God's purpose in restoring them to Judea.

For a time, the forces of evil seemed to triumph. But even this dark hour in the history of God's people was not without hope for those whose trust was in the Lord God of Israel.

In tender compassion, the Lord wrought in a marked manner to save his chosen people from utter spiritual ruin. The prophets Haggai and Zechariah were raised up to meet the crisis. In stirring testimonies these appointed messengers of God revealed to the people the cause of their troubles. Their lack of temporal prosperity was the result of their neglect to consider God's interests first. By honoring God and by showing him due respect and courtesy, through the building of his house, they would have invited his presence and blessing.

"In the second year of Darius the king, in the sixth month, in the first day of the month, came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet unto Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, saying, Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built."

The expression, "This people say," is significant. In the hour of their opportunity, the Israelites had not shown themselves willing. Prompt obedience is expected of those whom the Lord chooses and leads. Pleas for delay are a dishonor to God. And yet those who choose to follow their own way, often frame ingenious excuses in self-justification. Thus the Israelites declared that they had begun to rebuild, but that they were broken off in their work because of the hindrances devised by their enemies. (1) These hindrances, they reasoned, were an indication that it was not the proper time to rebuild. They declared that the Lord had interposed difficulties to reprove their hot haste. This is why, in a communication through his prophet, he referred to them not as "my people," but as "this people."

The Israelites had no real excuse for leaving their work on the temple. The time when the most serious objections were raised, was the time for them to persevere in building. But they were actuated by a selfish dislike to encounter danger by arousing the opposition of their enemies. They did not possess the faith that is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. They hesitated to move forward by faith in the opening providences of God, because they could not see the end from the beginning. When difficulties arose, they were easily turned from the work.

This history will be repeated. There will be religious failures because men do not have faith. When they look at the things that are seen, impossibilities appear; but God can lead them step by step in the course he desires them to take. His work will advance only as his

1) servants move forward by faith. While they may be called upon to pass through trying times, yet they should ever remember that they are contending with a a weakened, beaten foe. God's people will finally triumph over every power of darkness.]

"Then came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying, Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste? Now therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts; Consider your ways." Why have you been so passive? Why have you done so little? Why do you feel concern for your own buildings, and unconcern for the Lord's building? Why have you lost the burning zeal you once manifested in behalf of the restoration of the Lord's house? What have you gained by serving self at the sacrifice of the best interests of God's cause? The desire to escape poverty has led you to neglect the temple; but this very neglect has brought upon you that which you feared. Nothing has prospered. "Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes."

The Lord calls upon them to consider the situation carefully. "Consider your ways," he repeats. "Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the Lord." He gives the reason for their having been brought to actual want: "Ye looked for much, and, lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it. Why? saith the Lord of hosts. Because of mine house that is waste, and ye run every man unto his own house. Therefore the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit. And I called for a drought upon the land, and upon the mountains, and upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil, and upon that which the ground bringeth forth, and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labor of the hands."

How striking is the contrast between the prompt obedience of the things of nature, and the slothful disobedience of men, those for whom Christ has died! The Lord calls upon the dew and the rain and the varied agencies of nature, and they obey his call, to be used either in blessings or in judgments. Inanimate nature is represented as being shocked at man's disregard for God's word. God calls for famine and plague and pestilence, for calamities by sea and by land, to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity. In response to the call of God, the things of nature spring to do his bidding, either in wasting and destruction or in mercies and blessings.

Because the Israelites let God's house lie waste, the Lord sent upon all their substance a wasting drought. This judgment affected not only all the fruits of the ground, but the living creatures as well. The cattle must suffer because of the sins of men. God had bestowed on his remnant people the fruits of field and garden, the corn and the wine and the oil, as a token of his favor. It was because of the sins of Israel, the Lord declared through Haggai his messenger,— because the people had used all these bountiful gifts so selfishly,— that the blessings were removed.

The messages of counsel and reproof given through Haggai were taken to heart by the leaders of Israel and "all the remnant of the people." Roused by these warnings, "Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the Lord their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the Lord their God had sent him, and the people did fear before the Lord."

Character of the Papacy—No. 2

The Rise of Its Power

J. O. CORLISS

The celebrated English historian, Thomas Hobbes, left on record his judgment that the papacy was but "the ghost of the deceased Roman empire, crowned and seated upon the grave thereof." By touching here and there the history of early missionary work in behalf of Roman Christianity, the measure of accuracy contained in this statement may be easily determined.

When the Goths crossed the Danube to make for themselves homes in the south of Europe, they encountered believers in Christ, who probably were captives taken during that journey. From these slaves they received the primary doctrines of the Christian faith, which was in turn given by them to the various tribes of the Gothic nation.

By the time Western Rome had been dismembered in A. D. 476, the Suevi of Spain, the Burgundians of southeastern France, and the Vandals of north Africa had become converts also to the new religion. A little later the Franks, the Scandinavians, the chief tribes of Germany, and a century or more after, the Anglo-Saxons followed in the same path.

In the midst of this work, however, a great controversy arose. Some of those nations newly come to the Christian faith, had indorsed the Aryan creed, which already had been condemned by the Council of Nice. The bishop of Rome accepted the Athanasian doctrine as the orthodox one, and human-like, felt determined to bring those of the Aryan faith to his standard of orthodoxy. It mattered not so much to him if, in receiving Christianity, these nations had retained, as had all the others, many of their former heathen notions and ceremonies. In any effort to correct their false ideas, no notice was to be taken of the corruptions their paganism had engrafted upon the pure Christian faith.

In further efforts to win these simple-minded barbarians, who were utterly unable to comprehend the subtle differences of dogma between the two great leaders of factions, the church lowered her standard of piety to meet their condition. In order to dazzle their senses, and win their attention, Guizot says that the church "increased wonderfully the number, pomp, and variety of her religious ceremonies." Through this medium, those who did follow the Athanasian creed, became altogether different from the Christians of an earlier age.

When the wars of subjugation had about annihilated the so-called heretical nations, the others were ready to acknowledge the church of Rome as the exponent of orthodoxy, and the bishop of that organization as its vicegerent. This was but one step toward the realization of a higher ambition. Western Europe at that time was nominally under the government of the emperor of the East, whose seat of empire was at Constantinople. The bishops of Rome were thus the most important persons in the West. They were far removed from the imperial court, and being called to adjust disputes between cities, and between the chieftains of the numerous governments of the West, they gradually assumed imperial powers. Each case so arranged tended to strengthen the authority and increase the influence of Roman bishops.

Up to a certain point, four bishops, or patriarchs, of the early church, each with co-ordinate powers, were distinctly and generally recognized. These were located at Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, and Antioch. But at an early period, the bishop of Rome began to lay claim to supremacy over all the others on the ground that the church at Rome had been founded by the apostle Peter, to whom the Lord had entrusted the keys of the kingdom of heaven, thereby constituting him the first bishop of that church, and that the special authority to feed the Lord's sheep, conferred on him, was to be transmitted to his successors in that office. This claim was recognized, and title of supreme head of the church was first applied by the Roman emperor to Innocent I early in the fifth century.

But with this claim thus substantiated, no bishop of Rome had then thought of calling himself pope, the title of archbishop seeming to satisfy the high tide of ambition for that time. The title of pope was supposed to be first conferred on Boniface III by the Emperor Phocas in 606, by declaring him Universal Bishop.

So far as the statement of Christ to Peter in Matt. 16:18 goes, not one of the anti-Nicene fathers applies it to Roman bishops as successors of the apostle Peter. While many of them have commented on the text, not one has explained the "rock" there spoken of as referring to any office bestowed upon Peter to be transmitted to others. Some thought the "rock" to refer either to Christ himself or to Peter's confession

The River of Life

FRANK L. BENNETT

COME, anxious learner, from the mart and field,
And see the treasures that the heavens yield.
Earth has her treasures in the darkened mine;
Gold and rare jewels midst the gravel shine.
By eye of faith see yonder gliding stream,—
The prophet's vision and the poet's dream.
See! from the throne its sparkling water flows,
And all is life and gladness where it goes.
God's creatures daily gathering at its brink,
Bathe in its floods, and of its waters drink:
There youth and beauty are of each a part;
For life and healing from its waters start.
No darksome glades along its marge are found,
Nor saline marshes poisoning all the ground;
But gentle breezes o'er its bosom blow;
And life's triumphant wheresoe'er they go.
The peace of God — a ray of heaven's beam —
Is always present in this living stream;
And all the blessings of our Lord are sent
To those of faith whose sorrowing hearts repent.

The Return of the Exiles—No. 6

"I Am with You, Saith the Lord"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE messages of Haggai led the people to feel that the Lord was in earnest with them. They dared not disregard repeated instruction that their prosperity, both temporal and spiritual, was dependent on faithful obedience to the commands of the God of heaven. As soon as they decided to obey "the voice of the Lord their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the Lord their God had sent him," the messages of reproof that had been given were followed by words of encouragement.

"Then spake Haggai the Lord's messenger in the Lord's message unto the people, saying, I am with you, saith the Lord."

(1) How comforting are these words! The Lord God omnipotent, who reigneth in the heavens, declares, "I am with you." He assures his people that those who are obedient are in a position where he can bless them, to the glory of his name. And if God's people to-day choose to rely on him, and believe in him, he will bless them. He will be a present help to all who serve him in preference to serving self. When the Lord sees that his people have a heart to do his will, he will cause them to know of the doctrine. He will be with them.

The presence of God includes every other blessing. He who abides under the shadow of the Almighty can well say of the Lord, "He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in him will I trust;" for of every such an one the Lord declares: "Because he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him: I will set him on high, because he hath known my name. He shall call upon me, and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him, and honor him. With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation."

Having assured the Israelites of his presence, "the Lord stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and the spirit of all the remnant of the people; and they came and did work in the house of the Lord of hosts, their God, in the four and twentieth day of the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the king."

In less than a month after the work on the temple was resumed, the Lord in mercy sent to the builders another comforting message regarding his presence with them. He inspired Haggai to explain to them wherein the glory of the house they were now building was to exceed the glory and magnificence of the former house. It was because of the promised presence of him who is the Desire of nations.

"In the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the Lord by the prophet Haggai, saying, Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, and to the residue of the people, saying, Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do ye see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing? Yet now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the Lord; and be strong, O Joshua, son of Josedech, the high priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work: for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts: according to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so my Spirit remaineth among you: fear ye not."

In this comforting message, the prophet refers to the promise of God given through Moses while the Israelites were encamped before Mount Sinai, when he declared: "I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God. And they shall know that I am the Lord their God, that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them: I am the Lord their God." Throughout the wilderness-wandering the Lord had revealed "great goodness toward the house of Israel," which he "bestowed on them according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his loving-kindnesses. For he said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Saviour. In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the Angel of his presence saved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old."

And now, notwithstanding the fact that repeatedly they have "rebelled, and vexed his Holy Spirit," God again in his infinite mercy stretches out his hand to save and to restore. As a recognition of their co-operation with his purposes, he renews his covenant with them that his Spirit shall remain among them; and he bids them, "Fear not." To his children to-day, as in days of old, he says: "Be strong, . . . and work: for I am with you." What an assurance! What an incentive to faithful service!

Haggai now prophesies regarding the first advent of Christ, to which event the Israelites were looking forward with longing expectancy: "Thus saith the Lord of hosts; yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; and I will shake all nations, and the Desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts. The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts. The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of hosts: and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts."

The outward glory of the temple was not the glory of the Lord. Instruction was given as to what constituted the blessing that was to rest upon the temple. Its restoration in a plainer style than that of the first temple, was to place before the people in a proper light their past error in depending upon the pomp and splendor of outward form and ceremony. The temple was to be erected at this time, also, to remove the reproach of their disloyalty to God. Haggai instructed the people that by heartfelt repentance and by a speedy completion of the temple, they were to seek to be cleansed from the sin of disobedience that had led away from God and had delayed the carrying out of the command to arise and build. (2)

During the time of delay, the people had not been spiritually sharp-sighted. They had seen many things that they desired to do for themselves, to advance personal interests. Many had spent much time and had put forth laborious effort in beautifying their own homes, while taking but little thought for the house of God. Haggai strengthened himself in the Lord of hosts, and presented his message plainly both to the religious and to the civil authorities, as well as to the people. He felt that the Lord's work must no longer be hindered, but that all must obey implicitly, and carry out fully the purposes of God in restoring them from Babylon to the promised land.

In neglecting the temple, which was

(1) The Faith I Live By, p.62

(2) Commentary, Vol. 4 p. 1176

(1) the mirror of God's presence, the people had greatly dishonored God. They were now instructed to hold his house in sacred honor, not because of its magnificence, as did the Jews in the days of Christ, but because God had promised to be there. And this second temple was to be superior to the first because in a special sense the Messiah would honor it with his personal presence. "The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be."

The Importance of Prayer

M. W. DE L'HORBE

In "Great Controversy" we are told of that little company of peculiar people who keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, and are ready to meet Christ when he comes. At that time probation has closed, God's Spirit has left the earth, Christ's mediatorial work in heaven is finished, and his people are left without a mediator, to stand wholly upon their faith in God. The wicked inhabitants of earth, and Satan with his hosts of evil angels, are bent upon their destruction.

"As Satan accuses the people of God on account of their sins, the Lord permits him to try them to the uttermost. Their confidence in God, their faith and firmness, will be severely tested. As they review the past, their hopes sink; for in their whole lives they can see little good. They are fully conscious of their weakness and unworthiness. Satan endeavors to terrify them with the thought that their cases are hopeless, that the stain of their defilement will never be washed away. He hopes to so destroy their faith that they will yield to his temptations, and turn from their allegiance to God."—"Great Controversy," page 618.

They fear lest they have committed sins which they have not confessed, and that these sins will separate them from God. And in that hour of extreme anguish and peril, they agonize in prayer to God, that he will deliver them and give them strength to stand.

These are very perilous times which the people of God are passing through to-day. The end is very near. Satan is going about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. Many are departing from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. Some of the brightest lights in the church have gone out in darkness, and these deceived men are using all their strength and energy in deceiving others, and causing them to lose faith in this message. The testing and sifting work goes on, and men and women are deciding either for or against the present truth.

Therefore in this time of extreme peril to our souls, how much we need to agonize in prayer to God, that we may receive strength to stand. "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21:36.

If the Son of God, who "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin," needed to pray often and earnestly to God, with strong crying and tears (Heb. 5:7), that he might receive strength to overcome all his temptations, O, how much we need to pray! There must be a revival of the spirit of prayer among us as a people. There must be an individual wrestling with God in prayer, that we may receive strength to overcome all our sins, and power to witness for the truth, else our lights, too, will become darkness.

The church in the days of the apostles gained the victory, because they were of one accord in prayer, and had put away all their sins, all their murmurings and complainings, and all strife and discord. So it will be now. When we put away all sin and strife, the Holy Spirit will be poured out in its fulness, the work will quickly be finished, and Jesus will come. For this, let every believer earnestly pray.

What is the purpose of prayer? Is it not to cause the sinner to realize his needs, and to feel that he must perish unless they are supplied? It is the petitioner that is to be benefited by his prayer. God is ever ready and willing to bestow on his children the blessings they need. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." James 1:17.

Now, when the sinner feels his need of help to the extent that he is willing to acknowledge his sins, and his lost condition without God, then it is that God bestows his rich blessings upon him in answer to earnest prayer. Jesus says, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." Matt. 7:7, 8.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you. . . . Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." John 16:23, 24. "And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." John 14:13, 14.

How should we pray? "I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also." 1 Cor. 14:15. This supposes meditation, and examination of one's life. And why is it necessary to examine one's life? — Because, as David says, "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me." Ps. 66:18. "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." Prov. 28:9.

"The Lord is at hand. Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." Phil. 4:5, 6.

We should pray often in secret. Matt. 6:6. Christ set us the example in this regard. Read Matt. 14:23; Mark 1:35; Luke 6:12.

Daniel set us the example of praying in secret at least three times a day. Dan. 6:10. The reason why he was "greatly beloved" was because he served God continually. Dan. 6:16, 20.

Read how wonderfully God delivered his servants who served him continually as recorded in Dan. 6:22 and Dan. 3:20-27. God is no respecter of persons. You, too, my brother and sister, will be as greatly loved of God as was Daniel, if you serve him as faithfully. O, may God help all who know the third angel's message to serve him continually! "Pray without ceasing."

"Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21:36.

The Infallibility Dogma

J. O. CORLISS

In an early age differences of opinion arose which could not be definitely settled by a general council to the satisfaction of all concerned. That is to say, the adjustment of disputed dogmas was not in such cases always agreeable to the bishops of Rome. Besides, an appeal to a general council concerning articles of faith, tended to the exaltation of these councils above the personality of the Roman bishop, and consequently lessened his power over other bishops and their clergy adherents.

To the close of the fourth century, councils alone decided all complex points of faith. But at the opening of the fifth century Innocent I claimed the right to interpose in the most difficult questions, on the ground that "the Fathers" had decreed this. Following him, Zosimus also declared that the Fathers had given the See of Rome the privilege of final decision in appeals. This claim was soon supplemented by another, at the Council of Ephesus, when the Roman legates declared that Peter, to whom Christ gave the power of binding and loosing, still lived and judged through his successors.

The persistency thus manifested was rewarded by the Emperor Valentinian III, who issued an edict making all the bishops of the western portion of his empire (that is, of Italy and Gaul) subject to the Roman bishop. Eastern suffragans were, however, to be subject entirely to the patriarchates of the East, as in Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, etc. But the concession already gained was quite enough on which to build a gigantic system, destined to control the greater part of the religious world.

One claim after another ripened into realization, and yet the bishops of Rome were hardly sure of their ground of

Coming on the Cloud

MRS. EDITH B. GOODRICH

He is coming on the cloud
When the trumpet soundeth loud,
With a golden crown of glory on his head;
As our King shall thus descend,
Holy angels shall attend,
And his mighty voice shall wake the righteous dead!

Do you feel the thrilling power
Of that great and solemn hour?
Do you know that it is very, very near?
God is shortening the work —
Sifting out the ones who shirk;
Let us hasten, then, his high commands to hear.

Does it sometimes come to you
There are things that you should do?
Are his calls for means and service all obeyed?
O my brother, heed his voice,
In his blessing then rejoice,
And await the coming King, nor be afraid!

Now for means your Lord doth plead,
Now of reapers hath he need,
For the harvest-fields are fully white to-day.
Soon he will not ask you more,
For the harvest will be o'er,
And he'll turn you with your gold and greed away.

He is coming on the cloud;
Blow the trumpet long and loud
With a certain sound that all may hear and heed;
Do to-day what you should do,
That it may be well with you
When the Judge awards according to the deed.

Words of Encouragement

MRS E. G. WHITE

“Zechariah, the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo the prophet,” began to prophesy “in the eighth month, in the second year of Darius” — only a few days after the Lord had assured the Israelites through Haggai that the glory of the house they were building would be greater than the glory of the former temple built by Solomon. Zechariah's first message was an assurance that God's word never fails, and a promise of blessing to those who harken unto the sure word of prophecy.

“The Lord hath been sore displeased with your fathers,” the God of Israel declared unto Zechariah; “therefore say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts: Turn ye unto me, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will turn unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets have cried, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts: Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings: but they did not hear, nor harken unto me, saith the Lord. Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live forever? But my words and my statutes, which I commanded my servants the prophets, did they not take hold of your fathers? and they returned and said, Like as the Lord of hosts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, so hath he dealt with us.”

The Israelites had resumed the work of the Lord in faith. The difficulties under which they began to labor were of a most discouraging nature. Adversity had attended their efforts to attain temporal prosperity. Their fields were lying waste; their scant store of provisions was rapidly failing. Yet in the face of famine, and surrounded by unfriendly peoples, they moved forward in response to the call of God's messengers, and began anew to restore the ruined temple. Such a work required great faith, and the Lord gave them special assurances through Haggai and Zechariah that their faith would be richly rewarded, and that his word would not fail. The builders were not left to struggle on alone; “with them were the prophets of God helping them;” and the Lord of hosts himself had declared, “Be strong, . . . and work: for I am with you.”

The Lord, in mercy, warned his people against the danger of falling back into their old ways of negligence and selfish indifference. He revealed to them the necessity of worshiping him in the beauty of holiness. In former years some whose hearts were polluted with sin had sought to please him with the splendor of many rites and ceremonies in the beautiful temple built by Solomon; but their worship was not pleasing to the God of whom it is written: “Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity.”

In the dark days of apostasy before the captivity, God had declared to his impenitent people: “I hate, I despise your feast days. . . . Though ye offer me burnt-offerings and your meat-offerings, I will not accept them: neither will I regard the peace-offerings of your fat beasts.” “For I desired mercy, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings.”

The Israelites who were so diligently engaged in rebuilding the Lord's house, needed to realize constantly that “the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet, Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool: what house will ye build me? saith the Lord: or what is the place of my rest?” “Thus saith the high and holy One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones.”

[In order that the builders of the second temple might make no mistakes, the Lord plainly instructed them, in the form of a parable, regarding the nature of service acceptable in his sight. About a month after Zechariah began to prophesy, and just three months after the people had resumed work on the temple, “in the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts: Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying, If one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, (1) shall it be holy? And the priests answered and said, No.

“Then said Haggai, If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.”

A soul corrupted by sin is represented by the figure of a dead body in a state of putrefaction. All the washings and sprinklings enjoined in the ceremonial law were lessons in parables, teaching the necessity of a work of regeneration in the inward heart for the purification of the soul dead in trespasses and sins, and also the necessity of the sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit.

“Then answered Haggai, and said, So is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the Lord; and so is every work of their hands; and that which they offer there is unclean.”]

A mere participation in religious services and ordinances does not make a sinner a Christian. A wicked man does not become righteous merely by associating with those who fear God. A man is made holy, and acceptable with God, only when his unclean heart is made clean by the grace of Christ, through faith, and by obedience to words of truth and righteousness. A work of reformation and restoration must take place in every heart. Those who have had great light and many privileges may perform some good works, notwithstanding their impenitence and their refusal to be saved in God's appointed way. But these good works do not cleanse the soul from corruption. Only those who accept the light of God's truth, choosing to obey him, will be cleansed from the defilement of sin.

Having admonished the builders not to fall into the same error that had brought their forefathers into trial and captivity, and had resulted in the destruction of the first temple, Haggai continued: —

“And now, I pray you, consider from this day and upward, from before a stone was laid upon a stone in the temple of the Lord: since those days were, when one came to an heap of twenty measures, there were but ten: when one came to the press-fat for to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty. I smote you with blasting and with mildew and with hail in all the labors of your hands; yet ye turned not to me, saith the Lord. Consider now from this day and upward, from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, even from the day that the foundation of the Lord's temple was laid, consider it. Is the seed yet in the barn? yea, as yet the vine, and the fig-tree, and the pomegranate, and the olive-tree, hath not brought forth: from this day will (1) (2) I bless you."

Wonderful promise! Wonderful assurance of divine favor! Never, never, by their own efforts, could the Israelites have become pure and holy. But when, sinful and polluted as they were, the sport of their enemies, and suffering because of a terrible drought, they turned to the Lord in humility of heart, confessed their sins, and chose to obey the testimonies of his messengers, God recognized their effort to carry out his instruction, and he accepted them as his obedient children. He accepted them not because of their zeal and good works, but because of their faith in the power of the coming Saviour to cleanse from sin.

On the day when rich blessings were promised the Israelites because of their faith and their willing obedience, a message was given to Zerubbabel, their leader. "The word of the Lord came unto Haggai, . . . saying, Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, saying, I will shake the heavens and the earth; and I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother. In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, the son of Shealtiel, saith the Lord, and will make thee as a signet: for I have chosen thee, saith the Lord of hosts."

This personal testimony to Zerubbabel has been left on record for our special encouragement in time of trial. Zerubbabel had been sorely tried through all the years since he had led the Israelites forth from Babylon. God has a purpose in sending trial to his children. He never leads them otherwise than they would choose to be led if they could see the end from the beginning, and discern the glory of the purpose which they are fulfilling. He subjects them to discipline to humble them,— to lead them, through trial and affliction, to see their weakness and to draw near unto him. As they cry to him for help, he responds, saying, "Here am I."

[Christians are Christ's jewels. They are to shine brightly for him, shedding forth the light of his loveliness. Their luster depends on the polishing they (1) receive. They may choose to be polished or to remain unpolished. But (2) every one who is pronounced worthy of a place in the Lord's temple must submit to the polishing process. Without the polishing that the Lord gives they can reflect no more light than a common pebble.

Christ says to man, You are mine. I have bought you. You are now only a rough stone, but if you will place yourself in my hands, I will polish you, and the luster with which you shall shine will bring honor to my name. No man shall pluck you out of my hand. I will make you my peculiar treasure. On my coronation day, you will be a jewel in my crown of rejoicing.

The divine Worker spends little time on worthless material. Only the precious jewels does he polish after the similitude of a palace, cutting away all the rough edges. This process is severe and trying; it hurts human pride. Christ cuts deep into the experience that man in his self-sufficiency has regarded as complete, and takes away self-uplifting from the character. He cuts away the surplus surface, and putting the stone to the polishing wheel, presses it close, that all roughness may be worn away. Then, holding the jewel up to the light, the Master sees in it a reflection of himself, and he pronounces it worthy of a place in his casket.

"In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, will I take thee, . . . and will make thee as a signet: for I have chosen thee, saith the Lord of hosts." Blessed be the experience, however severe, that gives new value to the stone, and causes it to shine with living brightness.]

Character of the Papacy — No. 4

The Revelation of Its Iniquities

J. O. CORLISS

That the papacy did attain great power, history well attests. So great did it become, that it dictated the policy of the western world, both in religious and in civil affairs. Looking at it from the present standpoint of intelligence and self-direction, one hardly accounts for its power of almost universal domination. It was not possible for such mastery to be suddenly grasped, but it was the development of centuries. One point of vantage after another was secured by Machiavellian strategy, each leading forward to and touching another, which gave added authority and jurisdiction, until all men were led to see that no other way was open to them, either in time or in eternity, but cringingly to follow the dictation of the "church." This to them meant the man who happened for the time to be recognized as the head over all things in the world.

This was a dizzy eminence for one to occupy. But having been thus "lifted up," the "man of sin" there seated, drew "all men" unto him. In this respect he usurped the place of the Man of Calvary, and ruled the consciences of men, instead of permitting the Lord Jesus to do so. He even assumed the office of Christ, calling himself "God upon earth," and claiming ability to absolve men from their sins. He also challenged the titles of kings, and proceeded to depose them at will, claiming their subjects as his own, with the privilege of placing them under the rule of those who suited him best. He not only virtually said, "I will be like the Most High," but assumed to be actually like him, in every essential feature.

The steps by which this state of things came about may be briefly noted as follows: First, the ground was taken that because the Word of God is infallible, the church built on that Word must be the same. But, as in the very nature of things, the church could not be infallible if every one were left to his own private judgment in determining its doctrines, an infallible voice, or judge of the faith, must determine and pronounce upon what is and what is not truth. See "Systematic Study of the Catholic Religion," pages 94, 101, 102, ed. 1906.

Of course this theory would tend to make Bible study a secondary matter, even with priests, to say nothing of the laity under their instruction. Why should a priest trouble himself about original research in theology, when by so doing he might find himself at variance with the head of the church, and thus be condemned for heresy? It were far safer to let all such matters alone. But the clergy were not left to make such decisions. Innocent III, who assumed the title of "Vicar of Christ," said, in his commentary in Decretal 2: "It is enough for the laity to know that there is a God who rewards the good, and, for the rest, to believe implicitly what the church believes. Bishops and pastors must distinctly know the articles of the Apostles' Creed; the other clergy need not know more than the laity, and also that the body of Christ is made in the sacrament of the altar."

Thus the Bible could well be dispensed with, and approved catechisms be made to supply every need. We may well believe that this was the outcome of the matter, for on page 12 of the introduction to "Systematic Study of the Catholic Religion" we are assured that "well-instructed Catholics can see no reason why they should distrust her [the church's] guidance, and they would consider it as unwarrantable in them to question her authority as it would be for sons and daughters of a respectable family to ask their parents for proofs of their right to govern their home. Catholics, therefore, do not study the claims and the doctrines of the church in a doubting spirit."

Being kept ignorant of the Bible and its teachings, adherents of the papal system were taught to confide in the church, — which to a Catholic means the pope,— as to the infallible word of Christ himself. Deprived thus of the very fountain of truth, what other resource had they? — Absolutely none. This point secure, it was easy to hold over every head the threat of excommunication upon the least manifest desire to walk independently of the church. So effective was an edict of this character, that even kings, who naturally were as independent as monarchs have ever been since, lived in mortal dread of incurring the frown of their master the pope, whose displeasure meant to them degradation in this world, and damnation in the world to come.

The Coming Dawn

GENEVA ANDERSON

WHEN breaks the day! O glorious fruition
Of all our hopes, and death of all our fears!
Eternal life, the end of sin's condition,
The glad good-by to death, to sorrow's tears.
"Knowing as known,"— the veil is drawn away,
When the day breaks, and the shadows flee away.

When breaks the day! The sun departs in splendor
Behind the rugged mountains, brave and old;
The dying radiance of the sun so tender
Turns threatening clouds to purple, red, and gold;
But now the light is gone, the clouds are ashen gray,
"Till the day break, and the shadows flee away."

O Saviour mine, for whom my soul is longing
Far more than watchers for the morning light,
Or weary, panting hart for clear springs cooling,
Give me thy strength to work, by day or night;
Give me thy patience, grace to watch and pray,
"Till the day break, and the shadows flee away."

The Return of the Exiles — No. 8

Days of Anxiety

MRS. E. G. WHITE

STIRRING were the times during which Israel worked by faith to restore the temple at Jerusalem. Through the messages delivered by Haggai and Zechariah, the people were roused to put forth every possible effort to build. As they labored, they were sadly harassed by the Samaritans and others who feared not God.

The enemies of the faithful builders devised many discouraging hindrances. The provincial officers of the Medo-Persian realm visited the returned exiles, and requested them to state the name of the one who had commanded them to rebuild. If the Jews at that time had not been trusting the Lord for guidance, this inquiry made by men high in authority might have resulted disastrously to the builders. "But the eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews, that they could not cause them to cease, till the matter came to Darius." The officers were answered so wisely that they decided to write a letter to Darius Hystaspes, king of Medo-Persia, directing his attention to the original decree made by Cyrus, commanding that the house of God at Jerusalem be builded, and that the expenses for the same be paid from the king's treasury.

Darius searched for this decree, and found it, whereupon he directed those who had made inquiry, "Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews build this house of God in his place.

"Moreover," Darius declared, "I make a decree what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews for the building of this house of God: that of the king's goods, even of the tribute beyond the river, forthwith expenses be given unto these men, that they be not hindered. And that which they have need of, both young bullocks, and rams, and lambs, for the burnt-offerings of the God of heaven, wheat, salt, wine, and oil, according to the appointment of the priests which are at Jerusalem, let it be given them day by day without fail: that they may offer sacrifices of sweet savors unto the God of heaven, and pray for the life of the king, and of his sons."

The king further decreed that most severe penalties be meted out on any who should in any wise alter the decree; and he closed with the remarkable statement: "The God that hath caused his name to dwell there destroy all kings and people, that shall put to their hand to alter and to destroy this house of God which is at Jerusalem. I Darius have made a decree; let it be done with speed."

Thus the Lord, in his providence, prepared the way for an early completion of the temple. But for months before this decree was made, the Israelites had kept on working by faith, "the prophets of God helping them."

Just two months after Haggai's last recorded message was delivered, Zechariah had a most encouraging series of visions regarding the work of God in the earth. These messages, written out in the first six chapters of the book of Zechariah, were given in the form of parables and symbols. They came at a time of great uncertainty and anxiety, when it seemed as if the permission granted the Jews to rebuild was to be withdrawn. The future appeared very dark. God saw that his people were in need of being sustained and cheered by a revelation of his infinite compassion and love. His testimonies at this time were of peculiar significance to the men who were advancing in the name of the God of Israel.

After an introductory view of the nations having universal dominion in the earth, Zechariah hears "the angel of the Lord" inquiring, "O Lord of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years? And the Lord answered the angel that talked with me," Zechariah declares, "with good words and comfortable words.

"So the angel that communed with me said unto me, Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts: I am jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion with a great jealousy. And I am very sore displeased with the heathen that are at ease: for I was but a little displeased, and they helped forward the affliction.

"Therefore thus saith the Lord: I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies: my house shall be built in it, saith the Lord of hosts, and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem."

The prophet is now directed to cry out, saying, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts: My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad; and the Lord shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem."

Next the prophet sees the powers that had "scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem," symbolized by "four horns." Immediately afterward he sees "four carpenters," representing the agencies used by the Lord in restoring his people and the house of his worship, as decreed by Cyrus and his successors, as well as by God himself.

"I lifted up mine eyes again," says Zechariah, "and looked, and behold a man with a measuring line in his hand. Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof. And, behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him, and said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein: for I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her."

God had commanded that Jerusalem be rebuilt, and the measuring of the city was a symbol that he would give comfort and strength to his afflicted ones. His protecting care, they were assured, would be like "a wall of fire round about." O, how compassionate is our Heavenly Father! What comfort and hope there are in his promises!

The prophet is now inspired with an earnest message to the children of Israel who are still in Babylon, the land of their captivity. At the time the decree of Cyrus was given, nearly a score of years before, only a comparatively small number, a mere "remnant," had returned to Judea. By far the greater portion had failed of discerning the opening providence of God, as revealed in the decree of King Cyrus. They had chosen to remain behind, in a heathen land, rather than to return to Jerusalem.

And now, many years later, the Lord was preparing the way for these thousands who had lingered, to return. A chain of circumstances was rapidly leading to the confirmation of the decree of Cyrus and the issuance of a second decree by Darius Hystaspes. The Lord foresaw the troublous times that would soon follow in the reign of Xerxes — the Ahasuerus of the book of Esther. And so, in a time of special favor and opportunity, the message was given, through Zechariah: —

"Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord: for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the Lord. Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon. For thus saith the Lord of hosts: After the glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you: for he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye. For, (1) behold, I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants: and ye shall know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me."

How sad it is to contemplate that this touching appeal met with so little response! Had this entreaty to flee from Babylon been heeded, how different might have been the condition of the Jews in the trying times of Mordecai and Esther!

The Lord's purposes for his people (2) have ever been the same. He desires to bestow on the children of men the riches of an eternal inheritance. His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom. When those who choose to become obedient subjects of the Most High are finally saved in the kingdom of glory, God's purpose for mankind will have been fulfilled.

To us who are praying and longing for the coming of this most glorious kingdom, as well as to the children of Israel in the days of Zechariah, are spoken the words: "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee. And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord: for he is raised up out of his holy habitation."

Prayer and Praise

A. J. BRISTOL

"O come, let us sing unto Jehovah;
Let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation.
Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving;
Let us make a joyful noise unto him with psalms.
For Jehovah is a great God,
And a great king above all gods. . . .
O come, let us worship and bow down;
Let us kneel before Jehovah our Maker:
For he is our God,
And we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand.
To-day, O that ye would hear his voice!"

At this season when our minds are especially exercised in reference to drawing near the Lord, it is well that we consider the scripture quoted above, and others which so clearly teach that thanksgiving is one of the means of approach to God.

While it could doubtless be as truly said of many of the Lord's people in this time as it was of old, that "your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear;" and equally applicable to us would be the admonition to "wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well," yet we should bear in mind that it is "the goodness of God [that] leadeth thee to repentance." As we gratefully recall the tender mercy of the Lord in his dealings with us, our hearts will be melted to tenderness, and we shall truly repent of having wandered so far from our loving Father.

Failing to praise, we forget to pray, and we begin the course of the heathen, of whom the apostle wrote "that, knowing God, they glorified him not as God, neither gave thanks; . . . and even as they refused to have God in their knowledge, God gave them up unto a reprobate mind; . . . being filled with all unrighteousness." And then follows the long dark catalogue of sins of which they became guilty, and it seems to include every unclean and hateful thing. All this is the result of not giving thanks to God. If, upon examination, we find any of these things in our hearts, let us without delay begin to recount the mercies of God. Thank him that you are alive, and have been permitted to see your peril; thank him that it is not too late to be forgiven; and above all, thank him for the "Way" out of every difficulty.

Anciently the people of God were directed to erect monuments of the special experiences in which God wrought for them, and repeatedly the admonition is given to "beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments" in times of material prosperity. That these things might be kept in mind, the instruction was given to "talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children."

We are often reminded from the pulpit and by the printed page of our duty to pray, but not much is said or written of our duty to praise, and yet, if we carefully note in reading the Bible, we shall find the exhortation to praise is more frequent than is the one to pray. Frequently the two are mentioned together: "Rejoice always; pray without ceasing; in everything give thanks." "Continue steadfastly in prayer, watching therein with thanksgiving." "Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I will say, Rejoice. . . . The Lord is at hand. In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." "We need to praise God more 'for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men.' Our devotional exercises should not consist wholly in asking and receiving. Let us not be always thinking of our wants, and never of the benefits we receive. We do not pray any too much, but we are too sparing of giving thanks. We are the constant recipients of God's mercies, and yet how little gratitude we express, how little we praise him for what he has done for us."

While conditions in the world and our relation to them as bearers of the last message of mercy are such that we have felt constrained to observe a day of solemn fasting and prayer, if we have been faithful in putting away the evils which the fast has revealed, we may find confidence and courage to persevere by recounting the unmistakable evidences that this is the Lord's work, and that "hitherto hath Jehovah helped us." Having yielded our hearts fully to the Lord, and our lives to his service, it is our privilege to "look up" and rejoice.

"Serve Jehovah with gladness:
Come before his presence with singing.
Know ye that Jehovah, he is God;
It is he that hath made us, and we are his;
We are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.
Enter into his gates with thanksgiving.
And into his courts with praise:
Give thanks unto him, and bless his name.
For Jehovah is good; his loving-kindness endureth forever,
And his faithfulness unto all generations."
"Ascribe unto Jehovah the glory due unto his name:
Bring an offering, and come into his courts."

About the surest way to put one into leading-strings is to darken his vision. Put out one's eyes, and he sees no stumbling-block, because he walks in the blackest night. The blind always desire to be led, and they ask no questions about objects with which they do not come in contact. They follow the lead of any one, high or low, of any grade of intelligence, who volunteers to guide them in the way, because they are entirely helpless and dependent.

Very much after this sort were the people of the medieval ages. Having been refused the light which shines from God directly through his Word, in their inherent longing to be guided into a better existence they submitted to be led through midnight byways, not daring to question the breath of corruption which was constantly being wafted toward them, but continuously hoping that all would work at last for their eternal good. In justification of this latter statement, we quote from "The Pope and the Council," page 291, as follows: "Paradoxical as it may sound, it is an historical fact that the more suspicious and scandalous the conduct of the popes — with their exemptions, privileges, indulgences, and the like, and the consequent confusion in the church — appeared to pious men, the more inclined they felt to take refuge from their doubts and

Hold Thou My Hand

HOLD Thou my hand; through life's unfolding years
Be thou my guide;
The world is strange, my heart disturbed with fears,
Stay thou beside;
Thou know'st the way — man's way thyself hast trod;
Hold thou my hand. Direct my steps, O God.

Hold thou my hand; in pleasure and in pain
Be thou my guide;
Or sad or gay, let me not life disdain
Whate'er betide.
Thy plan unfold — thy plan of life for me;
Hold thou my hand, assurance rests in thee.

Hold thou my hand; in dark, bewildering doubt
Be thou my guide;
With thine own light encompass me about,
Nor from me hide.
If thou dost lead, Lord, triumph then I can;
Hold thou my hand. How weak, how blind is man!

Hold thou my hand, in triumph keep me meek;
Be thou my guide.
Forbid it, Lord, that I for self should seek;
Thou wilt provide.
With thy humility touch heart and mind;
Hold thou my hand till humbleness I find.

Hold thou my hand; when evening shadows wane,
Be thou my guide;
When death shall come to free me from earth's pain,
E'en then abide.
On yonder shore, beyond sin's bitter gall,
Hold thou my hand — on earth, in heaven, my all.

No. 9
Joshua and the Angel

MRS. E. G. WHITE

SATAN and his army were greatly discomfited and alarmed by the steady advancement made by the builders of the temple. The hosts of evil determined to put forth untiring effort to weaken and depress God's people by holding before them their imperfections of character. Satan well knew that if those who had long suffered because of transgression, could again be induced to disregard God's commandments, they would be brought once more under the bondage of sin. But the Lord, in infinite pity, strengthened his chosen people "with good words and comfortable words." In this crisis, he gave to his people a most forcible and impressive illustration of the work of Satan and the work of Christ, and the power of our Mediator to vanquish the accuser of his people. This is recorded in the third chapter of the prophecy of Zechariah.

In holy vision the prophet beholds Joshua the high priest, "clothed with filthy garments," standing before the Angel of the Lord, entreating the mercy of God in behalf of his people who are in deep affliction. Satan stands at his right hand to resist him. Because Israel had been chosen to preserve the knowledge of God in the earth, they had been, from their first existence as a nation, the special objects of Satan's enmity, and he had determined to cause their destruction. He could do them no harm while they were obedient to God; therefore he had bent all his power and cunning to enticing them into sin. Ensnared by his temptations, they had transgressed the law of God, and thus separated from the Source of their strength, and had been left to become the prey of their heathen enemies. They were carried into captivity to Babylon, and there remained for many years. Yet they were not forsaken of the Lord. His prophets were sent to them with reproofs and warnings. The people were awakened to see their guilt; they humbled themselves before God, and returned to him with true repentance. Then the Lord sent them messages of encouragement, declaring that he would deliver them from their captivity, and restore them to his favor. It was this that Satan was determined to prevent. A remnant of Israel had already returned to their own land, and Satan was seeking to move upon the heathen nations, who were his agents, to destroy them utterly.

As Joshua humbly pleads for the fulfilment of God's promises, Satan stands up boldly to resist him. He points to the transgressions of Israel as a reason why that people should not be restored to the favor of God. He claims them as his prey, and demands that they be given into his hands to be destroyed.

The high priest can not defend himself or his people from Satan's accusations. He does not claim that Israel are free from fault. In his filthy garments, symbolizing the sins of the people, which he bears as their representative, he stands before the Angel, confessing their guilt, yet pointing to their repentance and humiliation, relying upon the mercy of a sin-pardoning Redeemer, and in faith claiming the promises of God.

Then the Angel, who is Christ himself, the Saviour of sinners, put to silence the accuser of his people, declaring, "The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan; even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee: is not this a brand plucked out of the fire?" Israel had long remained in the furnace of affliction. Because of their sins they had been wellnigh consumed in the flame kindled by Satan and his agents for their destruction; but God had now set his hand to bring them forth. In their penitence and humiliation the compassionate Saviour will not leave his people to the cruel power of the heathen. "A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench."

As the intercession of Joshua is accepted, the command is given, "Take away the filthy garments from him," and to Joshua the Angel declares, "Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment." "So they set a fair miter upon his head, and clothed him with garments." His own sins and those of his people were pardoned. Israel were clothed with "change of raiment,"— the righteousness of Christ imputed to them. The miter placed upon Joshua's head was such as was worn by the priests, and bore the inscription, "Holiness to the Lord," signifying that notwithstanding his former transgressions, he was now qualified to minister before God in his sanctuary.

After thus solemnly investing him with the dignity of the priesthood, the Angel declared, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts: If thou wilt walk in my ways, and if thou wilt keep my charge, then thou shalt also judge my house, and shalt also keep my courts, and I will give thee places to walk among these that stand by." He would be honored as the judge or ruler over the temple and all its services; he should walk among attending angels, even in this life, and should at last join the glorified throng around the throne of God.

"Hear now, O Joshua the high priest, thou, and thy fellows that sit before thee: for they are men wondered at: for, behold, I will bring forth my servant the Branch." Here is revealed the hope of Israel. It was by faith in the coming Saviour that Joshua and his people received pardon. Through faith in Christ they were restored to God's favor. By virtue of his merits, if they walked in his ways and kept his statutes, they would be "men wondered at," honored as the chosen of Heaven among the nations of the earth. Christ was their hope, their defense, their justification and redemption, as he is the hope of his church to-day.

As Satan accused Joshua and his people, so in all ages he accuses those who are seeking the mercy and favor of God. In the Revelation he is declared to be "the accuser of our brethren," "which accused them before our God day and night." The controversy is repeated over every soul that is rescued from the power of evil, and whose name is registered in the Lamb's book of life. Never is one received from the family of Satan into the family of God without exciting the determined resistance of the wicked one. Satan's accusations against those who seek the Lord are not prompted by displeasure at their sins. He exults in their defective characters. Only through their transgression of God's law can he obtain power over them. His accusations arise solely from his enmity to Christ. Through the plan of salvation, Jesus is breaking Satan's hold upon the human family, and rescuing souls from his power. All the hatred and malignity of the arch-rebel is stirred as he beholds the evidence of Christ's supremacy, and with fiendish power and cunning he works to wrest from him the remnant of the children of men who have accepted his salvation.

He leads men into skepticism, causing them to lose confidence in God and to separate from his love; he tempts them to break his law, and then he claims them as his captives, and contests the right of Christ to take them from him. He knows that those who seek God earnestly for pardon and grace will obtain it; therefore he presents their sins before them to discourage them. He is constantly seeking occasion against those who are trying to obey God. Even their best and most acceptable services he seeks to make appear corrupt. By countless devices, the most subtle and the most cruel, he endeavors to secure their condemnation. Man can not meet these charges himself. In his sin-stained garments, confessing his guilt, he stands before God. But Jesus our Advocate presents an effectual plea in behalf of all who by repentance and faith have committed the keeping of their souls to him. He pleads their cause, and vanquishes their accuser by the mighty arguments of Calvary. His perfect obedience to God's law, even unto the death of the cross, has given him all power in heaven and in earth, and he claims of his Father mercy and reconciliation for guilty man. To the accuser of his people he declares, "The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan." These are the purchase of my blood, brands plucked from the burning. Those who rely upon him in faith receive the comforting assurance, "Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment." All that have put on the robe of Christ's righteousness will stand before him as chosen and faithful and true. Satan has no power to pluck them out of the hand of Christ. Not one soul that in penitence and faith has claimed his protection, will Christ permit to pass under the enemy's power. His word is pledged: "Let him take hold of my strength, that he may make peace with me; and he shall make peace with me." The promise given to Joshua is made to all: "If thou wilt keep my charge, . . . I will give thee places to walk among these that stand by." Angels of God will walk on either side of them, even in this world, and they will stand at last among the angels that surround the throne of God.

The fact that the acknowledged people of God are represented as standing before the Lord in filthy garments should lead to humility and deep searching of heart on the part of all who profess his name. Those who are indeed purifying their souls by obeying the truth will have a most humble opinion of themselves. The more closely they view the spotless character of Christ, the stronger will be their desire to be conformed to his image, and the less will they see of purity or holiness in themselves. But while we should realize our sinful condition, we are to rely upon Christ as our righteousness, our sanctification, and our redemption. We can not answer the charges of Satan against us. Christ alone can make an effectual plea in our behalf. He is able to silence the accuser with arguments founded not upon our merits, but on his own.

Yet we should never be content with a sinful life. It is a thought that should arouse Christians to greater zeal and earnestness in overcoming evil, that every defect in character, every point in which they fail to meet the divine standard, is an open door by which Satan can enter to tempt and destroy them; and, furthermore, that every failure and defect on their part gives occasion to the tempter and his agents to reproach Christ. We are to exert every energy of the soul in the work of overcoming, and to look to Jesus for strength to do what we can not do of ourselves. No sin can be tolerated in those who shall walk with Christ in white. The filthy garments are to be removed, and Christ's robe of righteousness is to be placed upon us. By repentance and faith we are enabled to render obedience to all the commandments of God, and are found without blame before him. Those who shall meet the approval of God are now afflicting their souls, confessing their sins, and earnestly pleading for pardon through Jesus their Advocate. Their attention is fixed on him, and when the command is given, "Take away the filthy garments," and clothe him with "change of raiment," and "set a fair miter upon his head," they are prepared to give him all the glory of their salvation.

(To be concluded)

The Lord Our Righteousness

T. E. BOWEN

RIGHTEOUSNESS is absolute perfection of life. It can not be fully described by human tongue or pen. Primarily it belongs to God. He is righteous. He also has made it possible for the creatures created by his infinite power to enter into and enjoy righteousness with him. But this can be received only as a gift, for righteousness, like life itself, belongs to God. Even though it be possible for intelligent beings to come into the possession of righteousness, still it must ever be confessed that the glory all belongs to God. Righteousness did not originate with men; therefore, having received it from another, there remains no room for boasting. Thus Daniel, offering his supplications unto God, exclaimed: "O Lord, righteousness belongeth unto thee, but unto us confusion of faces, as at this day." Ezra also prayed, and said: "O my God, I am ashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens. Since the days of our fathers have we been in a great trespass unto this day. . . . O Lord God of Israel, thou art righteous: . . . behold, we are before thee in our trespasses: for we can not stand before thee because of this."

Innocence, holiness of heart, and righteousness go together. By angels and those who never fell into sin, so long as perfect trust and faith are maintained in God, innocence and holiness and righteousness are enjoyed. All this our first parents shared until they yielded to the tempter. We can not fully realize what bliss it was to enjoy the perfect confidence and presence of the great God. We are told that even the tempter himself shuddered at the thought of his causing Adam and Eve to lose it.

"Satan went alone to mature plans that would most surely secure the fall of Adam and Eve. He had fears that his purposes might be defeated. And again, even if he should be successful in leading Adam and Eve to disobey the commandment of God, and thus become transgressors of his law, and no good come to himself, his own case would not be improved; his guilt would only be increased. He shuddered at the thought of plunging the holy, happy pair into the misery and remorse he was himself enduring. He seemed in a state of indecision; at one time firm and determined, then hesitating and wavering. His angels were seeking him, their leader, to acquaint him with their decision. They will unite with Satan in his plans, and with him bear the responsibility, and share the consequences. Satan cast off his feelings of despair and weakness, and as their leader, fortified himself to brave out the matter, and do all in his power to defy the authority of God and his Son."—"Great Controversy" (old edition), Vol. I, pages 31, 32.

This wicked prince once knew the blessedness of innocence and righteousness — harmony with God. This state of righteousness and obedience was exchanged for rebellion and disobedience. Man was beguiled into sin by Satan. Having once lost his happy state of harmony with God,— trust, love, and obedience,— he was forever powerless of himself to regain it. This must be wrought out for him by a power outside of and greater than himself; yea, even more mighty than the foe by whom he had been overcome. None in all the universe could accomplish this save Jesus, the only begotten Son of God.

The law of God describes his righteousness. It reveals the relationship of Creator to created, as well as that existing between created beings themselves. It is the great rule by which character is measured. It defines righteousness. It is the quick detector of unrighteousness — sin. It is not to be wondered at that as soon as Lucifer rebelled, he sought to destroy the law. That revealed the hideousness of his acts. It was and is as true in heaven as upon earth that "by the law is the knowledge of sin." The law defines righteousness. And so long as righteousness endures,

The City Elysian

PAST the setting of suns stands the city Elysian,
Unrevealed save to spirits anointed and free,
Which the chosen behold as a glorified vision
In splendor unveiled by the crystal-line sea,—
The clear, azure sea,— the wide-flashing sea,—
The wonderful, odorous, music-toned sea,—
That flows round the shores of the country of God,
Which only the feet of his freemen have trod.

Its walls stand superb in the sunshine eternal;
Round its turrets in ether the cloud-billows curl;
Not a fair stone is stained with a shadow diurnal;
And each massy gate is a portal of pearl,—
One lustrous great pearl,— a bewildering pearl,—
A glorious, fathomless, mystical pearl,—
That haunts me and taunts me with far-off delight,
In visions of day-tide and dreams of the night.

I dream of it often when sickness and sorrow
Pass over my spirit and scourge as a rod,
And fill me with longings for some glad to-morrow,—
Some glimpse of that city whose builder is God,—
Whose founder is God,— whose maker is God,—
Where the blest reign forever and ever with God;
And then how it seems to grow nearer — so near
That the strains of its music break low on my ear.

And then as its splendors are spread out before me,
Enchanting my senses, alluring my soul,
What billows of rapture roll o'er me and o'er me,
Till earth and its troubles from under me roll;—
Beneath me they roll,— far away from me roll,—
As distant as east from the west is their roll;—
And I seem like a child on the warm, loving breast
Of a mother who soothes it and lulls it to rest.

Shall we see it?— Ah, yes! for us it was builded,—
For us its foundations were measured of old,—
For us were its turrets of ivory gilded,
Its battlements burnished with silver and gold,—
With virginal gold,— with yellow bright gold,
And metals more precious than silver and gold,—
For us it is waiting who wearily roam
As aliens afar from our country and home.

How often, God help us! far from it we wander,
Our bruised feet marking the way with our blood;
Of the joys of this life growing fonder and fonder
As if over yonder no proud city stood,—
No bright city stood,— no light city stood,—
No royalest, comeliest, white city stood,—
While we who are heirs by a kinship divine
Are content with the huts and the husks of the swine.

Joshua and the Angel

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Concluded)

ZECHARIAH'S vision of Joshua and the angel applies with peculiar force to the experiences of God's people in the closing up of the great day of atonement. The remnant church will be brought into great trial and distress. Those who keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, will feel the ire of the dragon and his hosts. Satan numbers the world as his subjects; he has gained control of the apostate churches. But here is a little company that are resisting his supremacy. If he could blot them from the earth, his triumph would be complete. As he influenced the heathen nations to destroy Israel, so in the near future he will stir up the wicked powers of earth to destroy the people of God. All will be required to render obedience to human edicts in violation of the divine law. Those who will be true to God and to duty will be menaced, denounced, and proscribed. They will be betrayed "both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends."

Their only hope is in the mercy of God; their only defense will be prayer. As Joshua was pleading before the Angel, so the remnant church, with brokenness of heart and earnest faith, will plead for pardon and deliverance through Jesus their Advocate. They are fully conscious of the sinfulness of their lives, they see their weakness and unworthiness; and as they look upon themselves, they are ready to despair. The tempter stands by to accuse them, as he stood by to resist Joshua. He points to their filthy garments, their defective characters. He presents their weakness and folly, their sins of ingratitude, their unlikeness to Christ, which has dishonored their Redeemer. He endeavors to affright the soul with the thought that their case is hopeless, that the stain of their defilement will never be washed away. He hopes so to destroy their faith that they will yield to his temptations, turn from their allegiance to God, and receive the mark of the beast.

Satan urges before God his accusations against them, declaring that they have by their sins forfeited the divine protection, and claiming the right to destroy them as transgressors. He pronounces them just as deserving as himself of exclusion from the favor of God. "Are these," he says, "the people who are to take my place in heaven, and the place of the angels who united with me? While they profess to obey the law of God, have they kept its precepts? Have they not been lovers of self more than of God? Have they not placed their own interests above his service? Have they not loved the things of the world? Look at the sins which have marked their lives. Behold their selfishness, their malice, their hatred toward one another."

The people of God have been in many respects very faulty. Satan has an accurate knowledge of the sins which he has tempted them to commit, and he presents these in the most exaggerated light, declaring, "Will God banish me and my angels from his presence, and yet reward those who have been guilty of the same sins? Thou canst not do this, O Lord, in justice. Thy throne will not stand in righteousness and judgment. Justice demands that sentence be pronounced against them."

But while the followers of Christ have sinned, they have not given themselves to the control of evil. They have put away their sins, and have sought the Lord in humility and contrition, and the divine Advocate pleads in their behalf. He who has been most abused by their ingratitude, who knows their sin, and also their repentance, declares, "The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan. I gave my life for these souls. They are graven upon the palms of my hands."

The assaults of Satan are strong, his delusions are terrible; but the Lord's eye is upon his people. Their affliction is great, the flames of the furnace seem about to consume them; but Jesus will bring them forth as gold tried in the fire. Their earthliness must be removed that the image of Christ may be perfectly reflected; unbelief must be overcome; faith, hope, and patience are to be developed.

At times, the Lord may seem to have forgotten the perils of his church, and the injury done to her by those who follow principles which he can not indorse. But God has not forgotten. Nothing in this world is so dear to the heart of God as his church. He marks every action of the members. It is not his will that worldly policy shall corrupt her record as a representative of heaven. Nothing so offends the heart of Christ as injury done those whom he died to save. His heart of love is grieved when the lame are turned out of the way by the crooked paths made by others. God does not leave his people to be overcome by Satan's temptations. He will chastise those who misrepresent him. But he will be gracious to all who sincerely repent. Christ loves his church. He will give all needed help to those who call upon him for strength for the development of Christlike character.

The people of God are sighing and crying for the abominations done in the land. With tears they warn the wicked of their danger in trampling upon the divine law, and with unutterable sorrow they humble themselves before the Lord on account of their own transgressions. The wicked mock their sorrow, ridicule their solemn appeals, and sneer at what they term their weakness. But the anguish and humiliation of God's people is unmistakable evidence that they are regaining the strength and nobility of character lost in consequence of sin. It is because they are drawing nearer to Christ, and their eyes are fixed upon his perfect purity, that they so clearly discern the exceeding sinfulness of sin. Their contrition and self-abasement are infinitely more acceptable in the sight of God than is the self-sufficient, haughty spirit of those who see no cause to lament, who scorn the humility of Christ, and who claim perfection while transgressing God's holy law. Meekness and lowliness of heart are the conditions for strength and victory. The crown of glory awaits those who bow at the foot of the cross. Blessed are these mourners; for they shall be comforted.

The faithful, praying ones are, as it were, shut in with God. They themselves know not how securely they are shielded. Urged on by Satan, the rulers of this world are seeking to destroy them; but could their eyes be opened, as were the eyes of Elisha's servant at Dothan, they would see the angels of God encamped about them, by their brightness and glory holding in check the hosts of darkness.

As the people of God afflict their souls before him, pleading for purity of heart, the command is given, "Take away the filthy garments" from them, and the encouraging words are spoken, "Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment." The spotless robe of Christ's righteousness is placed upon the tried, tempted, yet faithful children of God. The despised remnant are clothed in glorious apparel, nevermore to be defiled by the corruptions of the world. Their names are retained in the Lamb's book of life, enrolled among the faithful of all ages. They have resisted the wiles of the deceiver; they have not been turned from their loyalty by the dragon's roar. Now they are eternally secure from the tempter's devices. Their sins are transferred to the originator of sin. And the remnant are not only pardoned and accepted, but honored. A "fair miter" is set upon their heads. They are to be as kings and priests unto God. While Satan was urging his accusations, holy angels, unseen, were passing to and fro, placing upon them the seal of the living God. These are they that stand upon Mount Zion with the Lamb, having the Father's name written in their foreheads. They sing the new song before the throne, that song which no man can learn save the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. "These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God."

Now is reached the complete fulfilment of those words of the Angel: "Hear now, O Joshua the high priest, thou, and thy fellows that sit before thee: for they are men wondered at: for, behold, I will bring forth my servant the Branch." Christ is revealed as the Redeemer and Deliverer of his people. Now indeed are the remnant "men wondered at," as the tears and humiliation of their pilgrimage give place to joy and honor in the presence of God and the Lamb. "In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel. And it shall come to pass, that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem."

The Lord Our Righteousness

T. E. BOWEN

(Concluded)

That sixth day, on Calvary, was the most important day for our world since the sixth day of creation, when the human race found its birth in the creation of Adam and Eve. That day the Father fulfilled the text in 2 Cor. 5:21. He, then, that very day, made his Son to be sin on our behalf. This was actually done. Had it not been so, death could not have claimed by its power his holy Son. But how could this be? one may ask. No one but God knows. The how of it can never be told, but the blessedness of it for us is that it is so.

Sinner, stop and ponder this truth. God's own Son, after thirty-three years of resisting temptation successfully,— more powerful, more subtle, than any of us ever endured or met,— at the end of such a life as that, with the testimony of that voice from heaven only a few days before, proclaiming, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," was actually treated by his Father as if he were one of the veriest sinners. From this some faint idea can be had of the terrible enormity of sin. This Jesus endured for us. And this agony the Father endured for us, that it might be possible for him to present to those who believe, and who with Jesus "endure temptation," the blessed "gift of [Jesus'] righteousness." Jesus knew no sin. We know no righteousness. God made Jesus to be sin, that we who know no righteousness "might become the righteousness of God in him." O, the blessedness of it all! It is a living truth. It is that blessed truth for us all to receive by living faith.

It was through the disobedience of one, Adam, that "the many were made sinners." It is through the "obedience of the one," Jesus, that the many are "made righteous."

Now shall we conclude that since Jesus has won righteousness back, we can continue in sin, and meet the approbation of the Father?—God forbid! For if disobedience was so severely dealt with in the angels who rebelled against God, and in the father of our race, let us not think we shall escape the penalty if we likewise transgress. Here is where thousands fail, and miss obtaining the gift of righteousness. The one extreme is to think there is nothing to do, since Jesus won it; the other extreme is to conclude that by our own works we can in some manner earn righteousness. The one is as fatal as the other.

Jesus placed his merits within our reach, but it is only through faith and obedience to God's revealed will that righteousness is imputed to us. Never can it be earned. God places the righteousness of his Son upon only the humble, obedient believer in Jesus (although by right it is not his, nor ever could be), just as surely as he made Him who knew no sin to be sin in our stead. So it will be eternally true that Jesus was made sin when he did not deserve to be so counted. It will equally be true eternally that God counted the redeemed from earth righteous, when in very fact they deserve not to be so counted. Well may we exclaim, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!"

God's plan will eternally exalt that Son who left the glory which he had, freely laying that all aside, that he might win back to loyalty, through his love and life of self-sacrifice, a lost world. No true follower of Jesus will take any pleasure in magnifying himself or counting as meritorious anything he has ever done, in view of such wonderful condescension as is exemplified in the life of Christ Jesus. All such glory becomes contemptible, fitly compared to "filthy rags." All such glorying is worse than vain, because it at once proclaims to the universe that the subject of divine grace and mercy does not appreciate what Jesus has suffered to make it even possible for sin to be forgiven. Like the man in the parable, who had not the wedding garment, he fails to appreciate the worth of Christ's righteousness by thinking his own will be accepted of God.

God's holy law stands guard at the city's gate. None will be admitted who can not present in that supreme hour of eternal destiny the spotless righteousness of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To each saint that truth presented by Paul to the church at Cor-

What It Cost

WORTHIE HARRIS HOLDEN

Didst ere thy heart yearn for some wandering one
As the father's heart yearned o'er his prodigal son?
Or hast thou ever felt the fearfulness
Of the weight of love and its soul distress?
Knowest thou the watchings through nights of care,—
Of the anxious heart-pleadings in fervent prayer?

Then canst thou know far as mortal can know
What was the weight of the world of woe,
What were the yearnings and soul distress
Of the wrestling there in the wilderness,
Of the lone Man of Sorrows in midnight prayer
Burdened for souls in the garden there,
Of the agony breaking his great heart of love
On the cross, while our Father beheld him above.

If ere thou hast known the soul's passion and strife
For friend or companion, for brother or wife,
Thank God he has given thee this mite to know
The anguish he knew in the weight of our woe;
Let his benediction be thine to impart
That sympathy sorrow alone gives each heart,
Let grace prune thy passion, his love rule thy day,
And know through thy sorrow he's with thee alway.

The Return of the Exiles — No. 10

"Not by Might, nor by Power"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Intimately associated with Joshua, the high priest, was Zerubbabel, governor of Judea. It was under the leadership of these two men that the remnant of Israel returned at the close of the seventy years' captivity. They also led out in the re-establishment of the ancient worship at Jerusalem. In the second year of Cyrus, Zerubbabel laid the corner-stone of the temple. It was Zerubbabel and Joshua who, in response to the messages of the Lord through Haggai and Zechariah, "rose up," with courage renewed, and once more "began to build the house of God which is at Jerusalem." These men were true leaders, and "the spirit of all the remnant of the people" was largely influenced by the cheerful willingness with which they carried out the Lord's commands.

Immediately after Zechariah's vision of Joshua and the angel, given to the high priest as a personal testimony for his own encouragement and the encouragement of all the people of God, the prophet received a personal testimony regarding the work of Zerubbabel. "The angel that talked with me," Zechariah declares, "came again, and waked me, as a man that is waked out of his sleep, and said unto me, What seest thou? And I said, I have looked, and behold a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps, which are upon the top thereof: and two olive trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof.

"So I answered and spake to the Angel that talked with me, saying, What are these, my Lord? . . . Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts. . . .

"Then answered I, and said unto him, What are these two olive trees upon the right side of the candlestick and upon the left side thereof? And I answered again, and said unto him, What be these two olive branches which through the two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves? . . . Then said he, These are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth."

From the two olive trees the golden oil was emptied through the golden pipes into the bowl of the candlestick, and thence into the golden lamps that gave light to the sanctuary. So from the holy ones that stand in God's presence his Spirit is imparted to the human instrumentalities who are consecrated to his service. The mission of the two anointed ones is to communicate to God's people that heavenly grace which alone can make his Word a lamp to the feet and a light to the path.

In rebuilding the house of the Lord, Zerubbabel had been encompassed with manifold difficulties. In former years, adversaries had "weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and troubled them in building," "and made them to cease by force and power." But the Lord interposed in behalf of the faithful builders, and now he speaks through his prophet, Zechariah, to Zerubbabel, saying, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts. Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it."

Throughout the history of God's people, great mountains of difficulty, apparently insurmountable, have loomed up before those who were advancing in the opening providences of God. Such obstacles to progress are permitted by the Lord as a test of faith. When hedged about on every side, this is the time above all others to trust in God and in the power of his Holy Spirit. We are not to walk in our own strength, but in the strength of the Lord God of Israel. It is folly to trust in man or to make flesh our arm. We must trust in Jehovah; for in him is everlasting strength. The One who, in response to words and deeds of faith, made the way plain before his servant Zerubbabel, is able to clear away every obstacle devised by Satan to hinder the progress of his cause. Through the exercise of persevering faith, every mountain of difficulty may be removed.

Sometimes God trains his workers by bringing to them disappointment and apparent failure. It is his purpose that they shall learn to master difficulty. He seeks to inspire them with a determination to make every apparent failure prove a success.

Oftentimes men pray and weep because of the perplexities and obstacles that confront them. But if they will hold the beginning of their confidence steadfast unto the end, God will make their way clear. Success will come to them as they struggle against apparently insurmountable difficulties; and with success will come the greatest joy.

This was true of Zerubbabel; and for his encouragement he was given, through Zechariah, the assurance: "The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it; and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you. For who hath despised the day of small things? for they shall rejoice, and shall see the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel, with those seven; they are the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth."

The promise, "The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it," was literally fulfilled. "The elders of the Jews builded, and they prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet and Zechariah the son of Iddo. And they builded, and finished it, according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes king of Persia. And this house was finished on the third day of the month Adar [the twelfth month], which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king."

Shortly afterward, the restored temple was dedicated. "The children of Israel, the priests, and the Levites, and the rest of the children of the captivity, kept the dedication of this house of God with joy, and offered at the dedication of this house of God an hundred bullocks, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs, and for a sin-offering for all Israel, twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel."

This second temple did not equal the first in magnificence, nor was it hallowed by those visible tokens of the divine presence which pertained to the first temple. There was no manifestation of supernatural power to mark its dedication. No cloud of glory was seen to fill the newly erected sanctuary. No fire from heaven descended to consume the sacrifice upon its altar. The shekinah no longer abode between the cherubim in the most holy place; the ark, the mercy-seat, and the tables of the testimony were not to be found therein. No voice sounded from heaven to make known to the inquiring priest the will of Jehovah.

And yet this was the building concerning which the Lord had declared by the prophet Haggai, "The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former." "I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts." For centuries afterward the Jews vainly endeavored to show wherein the promise of God, given by Haggai, had been fulfilled; yet eventually, when the Desire of all nations actually appeared and hallowed the precincts of the temple by his personal presence, pride and unbelief had blinded their minds to the true meaning of the prophet's words. The second temple was honored, not with the cloud of Jehovah's glory, but with the living presence of One in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily,— God himself manifest in the flesh. The "Desire of all nations" had indeed come to his temple, when the Man of Nazareth taught and healed in the sacred courts. In the personal presence of Christ during his earthly ministry, and in this only, did the second temple exceed the first in glory.

Following the dedication of the house of God, the Israelites "set the priests in their divisions, and the Levites in their courses, for the service of God, which is at Jerusalem; as it is written in the book of Moses. And the children of the captivity kept the passover upon the fourteenth day of the first month. For the priests and the Levites were purified together, all of them were pure, and killed the passover for all the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the priests, and for themselves. And the children of Israel, which were come again out of captivity, and all such as had separated themselves unto them from all the filthiness of the heathen of the land, to seek the Lord God of Israel, did eat, and kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with joy: for the Lord had made them joyful, and turned the heart of the king of Assyria unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of God, the God of Israel."

Faith and Earnest Effort

E. K. SLADE

THE race to be run, the battles to be fought, and the victories to be won, will require the very best of our effort, and much earnestness and zeal. Many seem to have been led to feel that inasmuch as it is God that worketh in us, it will be just as well for them to move along from day to day in an easy, formal way, repenting, resisting, praying, and working as if our part in the plan of God for our redemption counted but little. But it is plainly indicated in the Word of God that no one is properly a candidate for redemption whose whole heart is not in it, or who is not sufficiently decided in his choice to place himself and all that he is at God's disposal in this work. Many will come up to the close of probation only to be suddenly and terribly disappointed.

We desire to add to the Christian graces, but it is only by "giving all diligence" that we may hope to make any progress in this. An abundant entrance is ministered into the everlasting kingdom of God to those who will "give diligence" to make their calling and election sure. In no degree are we permitted to believe that a formal or half-hearted service will be acceptable. It must be nothing short of loving God with the whole heart. The thoroughness of effort required in seeking for wisdom is presented by the wise man in these words: "If thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God." Only by having some knowledge of how men seek for silver and gold, can we understand the force of these words.

Many are content to go on year after year without experiencing any change of heart, or making any advancement in the Christian life, but they hope that sometime, in some way, it will be all right with them, and they go on trusting. God's way is pointed out in his Word. The Scriptures are intended to tell us what our attitude shall be to the promises and provisions of God, whereby we are to be redeemed. The soul that delighteth itself in fatness is the one that heeds the words, "Harken diligently unto me." There is to be a diligent searching for the light, life, and power contained in the Word of God. It is not that God is not willing to give, or that he reluctantly bestows his gifts, but he is a wise giver, and can bestow his gifts only when and where they will be a blessing.

The same thing is true of prayer. It is easy for persons to form the habit of praying, and to be quite systematic in that practise, and yet come very far short of the true, effectual prayer. To pray without ceasing must be an experience that will be characterized by much earnestness and intense prevailing with God. In "Early Writings," page 131, we have pointed out two companies. One company is represented as careless and indifferent, many of whom were being shaken out by the way. The other company is represented as persevering in pleading with God, and they are the company that was seen occupying a plane high above those of the earth.

The Christian must not only draw near to God, but he must steadfastly resist the devil. Steadfastness and earnestness will be required in this. The words, "Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin," indicate something of the earnestness and real effort required. Unto one of the churches it was said, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." God desires that those who seek to be overcomers become intensely earnest in the matter. He would have his children understand that in this time there must be an awakening on the part of his people in all that pertains to the Christian life.

After referring to the formal and lukewarm state of the church at this time, the Lord, through his servant John, pleads with his people to be zealous and repent. It has been pointed out that there must be a repentance such as has not been seen in the lives of many. More than an ordinary effort is to be brought into this. We are to be zealous and repent. In the current in which we all find ourselves in this world, there are but two ways that we can go. It is either up-stream or down-stream. There are more ways than one that we can go down-stream. There is but one way for a person to make progress in the upward way. That way is for him to bend to the oars and couple with his faith a zeal and earnestness that will put the best of his ability in his effort. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

The Roman Catholic Church in Mexico

THE dim traditionary history of Mexico shows us shadowy tribes and nations passing across the stage, acting each its part, and then disappearing to make room for other actors. Each tribe and nation had its gods, and some were handed down from one nation to another. The mythology of Mexico is very much mixed, and as much might be said of the saintology of the Roman Catholic Church in Mexico to-day. They have saints who were, only four centuries ago, celebrated as Aztec gods. The Aztecs, when they took possession of the Toltec country, adopted many of the Toltec gods and demigods. The Toltecs were nature worshipers, and made offerings of fruits, grains, and flowers to their gods. This peaceful god of the Toltecs, who took pleasure in the offerings of the fruits of the soil, soon took a place by the side of the terrible god of war of the Aztecs, and shared with him the rite of human sacrifices.

Finally many of the Aztec gods became Christian saints soon after the conquest. They brought with them into the Christian Church their characteristic virtues as gods. The goddess of the rains became Our Lady of the Mists, or Our Lady of the Rains. The saints retained the same power over the elements which they, as Aztec or Toltec gods, were supposed to have. In many places there are shrines to some Christian saint who is supposed to have power over the clouds, mists, or rain. It is shown that in most instances, in Aztec times, a temple or shrine existed on the

Conversion

E. B. MELENDY

Holy Bible, book divine,
Let thy light upon me shine.
Guide my feet from darkest night
Safely onward into light.

Jesus, Saviour, pity me,
Thou who died upon the tree,
Save me from all outward sin,
Make me clean and pure within.

Jesus, hear me, ere I die,
Nightly, hourly, would I cry,
Save me, Jesus, by thy blood;
Wash me in the cleansing flood!

Jesus, thou alone art mine,
I would be, Lord, only thine;
Cleanse me now, O Lord, I plead,
Cleanse me wholly and indeed!

O I thank thee, blessed Lord,
That at last thy grace I've heard.
Make me ever true to thee,
I would thine, thine only, be.

In the Days of Queen Esther

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The seventy years' captivity dated from the time when the Babylonian kings began to hold universal sway. God gave Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, much "majesty, and glory, and honor." "All people, nations, and languages, trembled and feared before him: whom he would he slew; and whom he would he kept alive; and whom he would he set up; and whom he would he put down."

This same universal sway was exercised by Nebuchadnezzar's descendants until, nearly seventy years later, in the days of Belshazzar, because of the wickedness of the nation, the kingdom was "divided, and given to the Medes and Persians." Thus arose the second universal monarchy, Medo-Persia.

It was only about two years afterward that Cyrus, king of Medo-Persia, issued the remarkable decree providing for the restoration of all the Israelites, "the children of the captivity," to their home in the land of Canaan.

Nearly fifty thousand, under the leadership of Zerubbabel and Joshua, took advantage of this providential opportunity to return. These were, however, comparatively speaking, only a few, a mere "remnant," of all the Israelites scattered throughout the provinces of Medo-Persia. Many chose to remain in the land of their captivity, rather than to accompany their brethren, and to assist in restoring the temple services.

Nearly twenty years passed by. Many of the remnant who returned to Judea, had fallen into a backslidden condition, and were doing no more to restore the house of God than were their brethren living elsewhere in the Medo-Persian realm. But as the result of the appeals of Haggai and Zechariah, the returned exiles repented before God, and labored diligently to complete the temple. The Lord blessed them, and they were greatly prospered. Their efforts were brought to the notice of Darius Hystaspes, who was the monarch ruling at that time; and he was impressed to issue a second decree, fully as favorable as the one issued by Cyrus over twenty years before.

Thus did God, in mercy, provide another wonderful opportunity for the Jews in the Medo-Persian capital, and throughout the provinces, to return to the land whence they had been carried captive. And the Lord not only wrought a change of feeling in the hearts of men in authority, so that they favored the Jews in their realm; but he also inspired Zechariah, his prophetic messenger, to plead with them most earnestly to flee from their Babylonian surroundings, and return to Jerusalem.

"Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord: for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the Lord. Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon!"

How amazing is God's love, how infinite his compassion! He pleads with the wayward to return unto him. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon."

The Lord desired that those who had once named his name, but who now dwelt in Babylon, should become a praise in the earth, to the glory of his name. Nearly a century had passed by since, because of their sins, he had been compelled to allow them to be taken captive to Babylon. And yet their affliction was to be a means of salvation. Through the prophet Ezekiel, the Lord revealed his desire to save the transgressor, even by means of calamity. "I will bring him to Babylon," the Lord declared, "and will plead with him there for his trespass that he hath trespassed against me." In tender pity the Lord continued to plead with every suffering captive. Some chose to listen and to learn; these found salvation in the midst of affliction.

Those who listened to the pleadings of heavenly agencies, and repented with full purpose of heart, are likened by the prophet Ezekiel to "the highest branch of the high cedar," which was to be planted "upon an high mountain and eminent: in the mountain of the height of Israel." A remnant would return; and God gave every captive Israelite in Babylon an opportunity to form a part of this remnant.

It was those "whose spirit God had raised," who returned under the decree of Cyrus. But God ceased not to plead with the ones who voluntarily remained in the land of their exile; and, through manifold agencies, he made it possible for them also to return. But the vast number who failed to respond at the time of the decree of Cyrus, remained unimpressible to later influences working in their behalf. When Zechariah, in unmistakable language, warned them to flee from Babylon without delay, they heeded not the gracious invitation.

Conditions in the Medo-Persian realm rapidly changed. Darius Hystaspes, under whose reign the Jews were shown marked favor, was succeeded by Xerxes the Great, the Ahasuerus of the book of Esther. It was during his reign that the Jews of Medo-Persia, those who had failed of heeding God's warning message to flee for their lives, were called to face a terrible crisis. A few years before, God had provided a way of escape; but this had been passed by, and now all the Jews were brought face to face with death.

Haman the Agagite, an unscrupulous man high in authority in the Medo-Persian realm, was the one through whom Satan sought at this time to counterwork the purposes of God. Haman cherished bitter malice against Mordecai the Jew, a godly man who had done Haman no harm, but had simply refused to show him the reverence that belongs to God alone. Scorning "to lay hands on Mordecai alone," Haman plotted "to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai."

Misled by the false statements of Haman, Xerxes the Great was induced to issue an edict providing for the massacre of all the Jews "scattered abroad and dispersed among the people in all the provinces" of the Medo-Persian kingdom. A certain day was appointed, on which the Jews were to be destroyed and their property confiscated. Little did the king realize the far-reaching results that would have accompanied the complete carrying out of this decree. Satan himself, the hidden instigator of the scheme, was planning to rid the earth of those who preserved the knowledge of the true God.

"In every province, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, there was great mourning among the Jews, and fasting, and weeping, and wailing; and many lay in sackcloth and ashes." The decrees of the Medes and Persians could not be revoked; apparently there was no hope; all the Israelites were doomed to destruction.

But the plots of the enemy were defeated by a Power that reigns among the children of men. In the providence of God, Esther, a Jewess who feared the Most High, had been made queen of the Medo-Persian kingdom. Mordecai was a near relative of hers. In their extremity, they decided to appeal to King Xerxes in behalf of their people. Esther was to venture into his presence as an intercessor. "Who knoweth," said Mordecai, "whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

The crisis that Esther faced demanded earnest, quick action; but both she and Mordecai realized that unless God should work mightily in their behalf, all their own feeble efforts would be unavailing. So Esther took time for communion with God, the source of her strength, and the One in whose hand is the heart of every earthly ruler, to turn it whithersoever he will, as he turneth the rivers of water. "Go," Esther directed Mordecai, "gather together all the Jews that are present in Shushan, and fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink three days, night or day: I also and my maidens will fast likewise; and so will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law; and if I perish, I perish."

The events that followed in rapid succession,— the appearance of Esther before the king, the marked favor shown her, the banquets of the king and the queen with Haman as the only guest, the troubled sleep of the king, the public honor shown Mordecai, and the humiliation and fall of Haman upon discovery of his wicked plot against the Jewish people,— all these are parts of a familiar story. In a marvelous manner God wrought in behalf of his penitent people; and a counter-decree issued by the king, allowing them to fight for their lives, was rapidly communicated to every part of the realm by mounted couriers who were "hasted and pressed on by the king's commandment." "And in every province, and in every city, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, the Jews had joy and gladness, a feast and a good day. And many of the people of the land became Jews; for the fear of the Jews fell upon them."

On the day appointed for their destruction, "the Jews gathered themselves together in their cities throughout all the provinces of King Ahasuerus, to lay hand on such as sought their hurt: and no man could withstand them; for the fear of them fell upon all people." Angels that excel in strength had been commissioned by God to protect his people while they gathered themselves together, and "stood for their lives."

The trying experiences that came to God's people in the days of Esther, were not peculiar to that age alone. The Revelator, looking down the ages to the close of time, declared by inspiration, "The dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." In the near future we shall see these words fulfilled, as the Protestant churches unite with the world and with the papal power against commandment-keepers. The same spirit that actuated those who persecuted the true church in ages past, will lead Protestants to pursue a similar course toward those who will maintain their loyalty to God. Church and state are now making preparations for the last great conflict.

The decree which is to go forth against the people of God will be very similar to that issued by Ahasuerus against the Jews in the time of Esther. The Protestant world to-day see, in the little company keeping the Sabbath, a Mordecai in the gate. His character and conduct, expressing reverence for the law of God, are a constant rebuke to those who have cast off the fear of the Lord, and are trampling upon his Sabbath; the unwelcome intruder must by some means be put out of the way.

The same masterful spirit that plotted against the faithful in ages past is still seeking to rid the earth of those who fear God and obey his law. Satan will excite indignation against the humble minority who conscientiously refuse to accept popular customs and traditions. Men of position and reputation will join with the lawless and the vile to take counsel against the people of God. Wealth, genius, education, will combine to cover them with contempt. Persecuting rulers, ministers, and church-members will conspire against them. With voice and pen, by boasts, threats, and ridicule, they will seek to overthrow their faith. By false representations and angry appeals, they will stir up the passions of the people. Not having a "thus saith the Scriptures" to bring against the advocates of the Bible Sabbath, they will resort to oppressive enactments to supply the lack. To secure popularity and patronage, legislators will yield to the demand for Sunday laws. Those who fear God can not accept an institution that violates a precept of the decalogue. On this battle-field comes the last great conflict of the controversy between truth and error. And we are not left in doubt as to the issue. Now, as in the days of Esther and Mordecai, the Lord will vindicate his truth and his people.

Mordecai was advanced to the position of honor formerly occupied by Haman. He was "next unto King Ahashuerus, and great among the Jews, and accepted of the multitude of his brethren;" and he sought to promote the welfare of his people. Thus did God bring his chosen people once more into favor at the Medo-Persian court, making possible the carrying out of his purpose to restore them to their own land. But it was not until several years later, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes I, the successor of Xerxes the Great, that any considerable number returned to Jerusalem to assist their brethren in the restoration, under the leadership and spiritual watch-care of Ezra.

Farsightedness

G. D. BALLOU

At the Friday meeting of the recent week of prayer in one of our Western institutions, the testimonies turned on the question of a preparation for foreign missionary work. Many clear, pointed testimonies were borne, but the illustration used by a young Japanese student of the institution seemed more clear and unique than any of the others. He said in substance: —

"Many people are far-sighted and have to get glasses to adjust their eyes for near work. If these should go to a foreign field without this adjustment, they would still be far-sighted. The only way to get ready for foreign work is to have the eyes corrected for near work." Comment would spoil this.

A Personal Experience

W. H. SAXBY

When starting out in this precious work, I used to read over some of the "exceeding great and precious promises" of God's Word, and they seemed far above and beyond me, or as if they were only for the great and good of Bible times. The question would often present itself to me, "How can I verify these promises in my own individual experience?" My mind finally settled on testing this promise: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Mal. 3: 10. Here the Lord throws out a definite challenge in finance. He says, in other words, Be faithful in paying your tithe and in making offerings, and prove me; put me to the test, and see what I will do for you; watch my prospering hand in all your temporal affairs. I felt confident that I could pay a tithe. I could make offerings and pledges, and I would by his assisting grace.

At the General Conference at Battle Creek, Mich., in the fall of 1885, it was decided that Mrs. Saxby and I should go to Washington, D. C., to open the work there. We were in Kentucky at the time. Now was my opportunity to carry out more fully the cherished desire. After talking the matter over with my wife, I then and there made the following vow (no credit to me, it was all the grace of God): that if the Lord would open the way before us, and would bless and prosper us in our work in Washington, at the close of the first year he should have one fifth of every dollar received. If we should remain there the second year, he should receive one fourth, in the same way. If the third year, one third; and if the fourth year, one half. We were there a little over three years and a half.

Immediately after we arrived at Washington, Jan. 13, 1886, a new, precious, larger experience opened before us than ever before. I wish to say right here, and to emphasize it, that when we take, by the grace of God, a large, liberal course toward his work, we shall not be alone in it. "The liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand." Isa. 32: 8. We are informed in Mal. 3: 10 what God will do for us, and in Luke 6: 38 what man will do. "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete

Thy Will Be Done

Not in dumb resignation we lift our hands on high;
Not like the nerveless fatalist, content to do and die.
Our faith springs, like the eagle's who soars to meet the sun,
And cries exulting unto thee, "O, Lord, thy will be done."

Thy will! It bids the weak be strong; it bids the strong be just;
No lips to fawn, no hand to beg, no brow to seek the dust.
Whenever man oppresses men beneath the liberal sun,
O, Lord, be there; thine arm made bare, thy righteous will be done.

Ezra the Priest, the Scribe

MRS. E. G. WHITE

About seventy years after the return of the first company of exiles under Zerubbabel and Joshua, Artaxerxes Longimanus came to the throne of Medo-Persia. The name of this king is connected with sacred history by a series of remarkable providences. It was during his reign that Ezra and Nehemiah lived and labored. Artaxerxes Longimanus is the one who issued the third and final decree for the restoration of Jerusalem, 457 B. C. While on the throne, he saw the return of a company of Jews under Ezra, the completion of the walls round about Jerusalem by Nehemiah and his associates, the reorganization of the temple services, and great religious reformations instituted by Ezra and Nehemiah. During the long period when Artaxerxes held universal sway, he often showed favor to God's people, and recognized in his trusted and well-beloved Jewish friends, Ezra and Nehemiah, men of God's appointment, raised up for special work.

The experience of Ezra while living among the Jews who remained in Babylon, was so unusual that it attracted the favorable notice of King Artaxerxes, with whom Ezra freely conversed regarding the power of the God of heaven, and his purpose in restoring his people to Jerusalem. Born of the sons of Aaron, Ezra, in addition to his priestly training, had acquired a familiarity with the writings of the magicians, the astrologers, and the so-called wise men of the Medo-Persian realm. But he was not satisfied with his spiritual condition. He longed to be in full harmony with God: he longed for wisdom to carry out God's will. And so he "prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it." This led him to apply himself diligently to a study of the history of God's people, as given in the writings of Old Testament prophets and kings. He was impressed by the Spirit of God to search the historical and poetical books of the Bible, to learn why the Lord had permitted Jerusalem to be destroyed, and his people to be carried captive into a heathen land.

Ezra gave special study to the experiences of God's chosen people, from the time the promise was made to Abraham, to the deliverance from Egyptian bondage and the exodus. He studied the instruction given them at the foot of Mount Sinai, and throughout the long period of the wilderness-wandering. As he learned more and still more concerning God's dealings with his children, and began to realize how sacred was the law given at Sinai, Ezra's heart was stirred as never before. He experienced a new and thorough conversion, and determined to master the records of Old Testament history, that he might use this knowledge, not for selfish purposes, but to bring blessing and light to his people. Some of the prophecies were about to be fulfilled; he would search diligently for the light that had been obscured.

Ezra took pains with his studies. He endeavored to gain a heart-preparation for the work he believed was appointed him. He sought God earnestly, that he might be a workman of whom his Lord would not be ashamed. He searched out the words that had been written concerning the duties of God's denominated people; and he found the solemn pledge made by the Israelites, that they would obey the words of the Lord; and the pledge that God, in return, had made, promising them his blessing as a reward of obedience.

With painstaking effort Ezra sought to arrive at the true sense of the Old Testament scriptures, and to revive their original meaning. He became thoroughly conversant with the writings of Moses. His desire to please God led him to strive earnestly to learn the true significance of the ten commandments. He searched for all those statements in sacred history that relate to the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, and to the laws written in books, which the Israelites had been directed to preserve carefully as the commands of God.

These laws contained in books were not a new revelation, but a repetition of the ceremonial laws given at Sinai. Before Moses left the children of Israel, at the command of God, to die in the land of Moab, the laws that had formerly been given were repeated and enlarged upon. Some methods for their enforcement were given; some precepts were explained, and the reasons why they had been given were made plain. Upon several occasions the judgments of God had fallen upon transgressors; the commands that had been transgressed at these times were repeated. Transgressors were to know that disobedience would surely bring the punishment of God.

Ezra inquired into the oracles of God diligently, that he might exert an influence in accordance with the expressed will of God. He felt that, for himself, he must do the will of the Lord; for only as he should bring his mind into harmony with truth could he be taught to labor in harmony with the Word of God. As he learned to yield his mind and will to the control of God, there were brought into his life the principles of true sanctification, which, in latter years, had a molding influence not only upon the minds of the youth who sought his instruction, but upon all others who associated with him.

God chose Ezra to be an instrument of good unto Israel, that the Lord might put honor upon the priesthood, the glory of which had been greatly eclipsed during the captivity. Ezra developed into a man of extraordinary learning, and became "a ready scribe in the law of Moses." These qualifications made him an eminent man in the Medo-Persian kingdom.

Ezra became a mouthpiece for God, educating those about him in the holy principles that govern in heaven. To live according to the commandments of God,— this was the rule of his life, his purpose. He first learned, and then he taught. He learned to conduct his own life in accordance with truth and righteousness; then he set himself to teach Israel the statutes and judgments of God. That which he learned of truth he communicated to others, in order that the same living influence might work in their lives. During the remaining years of his lifetime, whether near the court of the king of Medo-Persia or at Jerusalem, his principal work was that of a teacher. With painstaking care he taught the law of the Lord, and urged the importance of obedience. His example in word and deed carried with it a weight of influence; for the Spirit of God was with him. Teaching thus, he educated his fellow men in the knowledge of truth that would live through eternal ages.

Our Saviour's Dwelling-Place

M. W. DE L'HORBE

Our Saviour greatly desires to dwell among his people. He has expressed this desire, in different ways from the beginning. By creating man and visiting him, he showed a desire for his companionship. When man departed so far from the Lord that "every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually," God was grieved, but still showed a desire to dwell with him by preparing an ark for saving all who would enter it.

The Lord traveled with Israel in all their wanderings through the wilderness. His presence was known to them by the cloud by day, and pillar of fire by night. He was that Rock that followed them, and supplied all their needs. "For they drank of that spiritual Rock that went with them: and that Rock was Christ." 1 Cor. 10: 4, margin.

"He Changeth Not"

HE changeth not, but day by day,
In spite of every adverse fate
That rises up to bar my way,
With all the ills I contemplate
Mayhap to come to mar my lot,
He is the Lord, he changeth not.

He changeth not, though storms assail,
And lightnings flash across my skies,
Though sorrow's fiercest pang and wail
Wring bitter tear-drops from my eyes,
Banished from each familiar spot —
He is the Lord, he changeth not.

He changeth not, so I can trust
Myself entirely to his hand
Though labors hard are on me thrust.
The why I may not understand;
Why need I fear though foes may plot?
He is the Lord, he changeth not.

The Return of the Exiles — No. 12

Ezra the Priest, the Scribe

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Concluded)

THE results of Ezra's timely effort to revive an interest in the study of Holy Writ, were given permanency by his painstaking, life-long work of preserving and multiplying copies of the Old Testament Scriptures. During the captivity, the knowledge of God's will had to some extent been lost. Ezra gathered all the copies of the law that he could find, and had many copies of these made and distributed. The pure Word, thus diligently multiplied and placed in the hands of many people, gave knowledge that was of inestimable value.

As Ezra strove to promulgate the truths he had learned, his capabilities for labor increased and developed. He became a man of piety and zeal, because the truth was a sanctifying power in his soul. He was the Lord's witness to the world of what Bible truth is when revealed in the daily life of the receiver. His life, like the life of Christ, sowed the seeds of truth, by a revelation of the pure principles that can save the soul. Far happier would professed Christians be to-day if they would in the same way reflect the light of heaven upon the pathway of others, teaching in the life the statutes and judgments that rule in the heavenly courts.

(1) Shall we let the example of Ezra teach us the use we should make of our knowledge of the Scriptures? The life of this servant of God should be an inspiration to us to serve the Lord with heart and mind and strength. We each have an appointed work to do, and this can be accomplished only by consecrated effort. We need first to set ourselves to know the requirements of God, and then to practise them. Then we (1) can sow seeds of truth that will bear fruit unto eternal life.

Ezra's faith that God would do a mighty work for his people, led him to make known to King Artaxerxes his desire to return to Jerusalem that he might revive an interest in the study of God's Word, and assist his brethren in restoring and building up the holy city. Ezra declared that his entire trust was in the God of Israel, who was abundantly able to protect and care for his people. The king was deeply impressed. He well understood that the Israelites who wished to return, were going to Jerusalem in order that they might serve the living God, the Creator of the heavens and the earth; yet so great was the king's confidence in the integrity of Ezra, that he showed him marked favor. Artaxerxes not only granted him his request, but bestowed rich gifts for the temple service, made him a special representative of the Medo-Persian kingdom, and conferred on him extensive powers to carry out the purposes that were in his heart.

This decree of Artaxerxes Longimanus for the restoring and building of Jerusalem, is the third issued since the close of the seventy years' captivity. It is remarkable for the expressions it contains regarding the God of heaven; for the recognition it gives to the attainments of Ezra; and for the liberality of the grants made to the remnant people of God. Artaxerxes refers to Ezra as "the priest, the scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the Lord, and of his statutes to Israel;" "a scribe of the law of the God of heaven." The king united with his counselors in offering freely "unto the God of Israel, whose habitation is in Jerusalem;" and in addition to the bestowal of rich gifts, he made provision for meeting many heavy expenses by ordering that they be paid "out of the king's treasure-house."

The king's special anxiety was to assist in carrying out the commands of the God of heaven. "Thou art sent of the king, and of his seven counselors," he declared to Ezra, "to inquire concerning Judah and Jerusalem, according to the law of thy God which is in thine hand." And he further decreed: "Whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven, let it be diligently done for the house of the God of heaven: for why should there be wrath against the realm of the king and his sons?"

Artaxerxes arranged for the restoration of the members of the priesthood to their ancient rites and privileges. In giving permission to the Israelites to return, he made particular mention of the priests and Levites, and he added: "We certify you, that, touching any of the priests and Levites, singers, porters, nethinims, or ministers of this house of God, it shall not be lawful to impose toll, tribute, or custom, upon them." He also arranged for the appointment of civil officers to govern the people justly, in accordance with the Jewish code of laws. "Thou, Ezra, after the wisdom of thy God that is in thine hand," he decreed, "set magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people that are beyond the river, all such as know the laws of thy God; and teach ye them that know them not. And whosoever will not do the law of thy God, and the law of the king, let judgment be executed speedily upon him, whether it be unto death, or to banishment, or to confiscation of goods, or to imprisonment."

Thus, "according to the good hand of his God upon him," Ezra persuaded the king to make abundant provision for the return of all of the people of Israel, and of the priests and Levites, in the Medo-Persian realm, who were minded "of their own free will to go up to Jerusalem." What rejoicing this decree must have brought to those who had been uniting with Ezra in a study of God's purpose concerning his people! The sentiment of the hearts of many is expressed in the words of praise uttered by the servant of the Lord in devout thanksgiving to God for his wonderful providences. "Blessed be the Lord God of our fathers," Ezra exclaimed, "which hath put such a thing as this in the king's heart, to beautify the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem; and hath extended mercy unto me before the king, and his counselors, and before all the king's mighty princes."

Character of the Papacy — No. 10

"Conclusion of the Whole Matter"

J. O. CORLISS

WHILE a conflict of authority in the Catholic Church is pending, which threatens to rend that body asunder, we may safely predict that the policy of the papacy will be to close up its ranks for united work in conquering the world to itself. At the Council of Trent many modifications of doctrine were apparently conceded in order to return to the fold the recalcitrants of the Reformation; but not until the proportions of that movement had assumed threatening aspect.

So now we may look for an early movement from Rome in a desperate effort to retain the leading lights of its present system. Knowing, as it does, that the liberal branch of the church has in mind the conquest of Protestantism, according to their candid confessions, as already noted, the papacy must, to save what it has already gained by ages of manipulation, do something to secure what it considers a prize in sight, as viewed from the waning efficacy of Protestantism.

Under One Power

To form some sort of union by which to accomplish its age-long design is the only logical outcome of the present controversy, because to do otherwise will be to see slip away an opportunity that has cost astute diplomacy, and almost infinite treasure. Besides, the fulfilment of prophecy demands such a union. Referring to a symbolic beast which was to make war with the saints, in order to compel their obedience to its mandates, the prediction is made thus: "And all that dwell upon the earth shall wor-

trust in him as our Saviour; that will give us the patience of Job, the boldness and integrity of Daniel, the meekness of Moses, the purity of soul which Joseph possessed, and the love and charity which John the Beloved had, although imprisoned on the Isle of Patmos. Do you need this education? Do you need these traits of character in your daily life? When the work goes hard, what a comfort to rest awhile under the protection of him who is training and teaching us the principles of true education and true missionary endeavor.

Ida Fischer Carnahan.

A Missionary Education

In the work of soul saving, the Lord calls together laborers who have different plans and ideas and various methods of labor. But with this diversity of minds, there is to be revealed a unity of purpose. Oftentimes in the past the work which the Lord designed should prosper has been hindered because men have tried to place a yoke upon their fellow workers who did not follow the methods which they regarded as the best.

No exact pattern can be given for the establishment of schools in new fields. The climate, the surroundings, the condition of the country, and the means at hand with which to work, must all bear a part in shaping the work. The blessings of an all-round education will bring success in Christian missionary work. Through its means souls will be converted to the truth.

"Ye are the light of the world," Christ declares. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." God's work in the earth in these last days is to reflect the light that Christ brought into the world. This light is to dissipate the gross darkness of ages. Men and women in heathen darkness are to be reached by those who at one time were in a similar condition of ignorance, but who have received the knowledge of the truth of God's Word. These heathen nations will accept eagerly the efforts made to instruct them in a knowledge of God.

Very precious to God is his work in the earth. Christ and heavenly angels are watching it every moment. As we draw near to the coming of Christ, more and still more of missionary work will engage our efforts. The message of the renewing power of God's grace will belt the world. Those that will be sealed will be from every nation and kindred and tongue and people. From every country will be gathered men and women who will stand before the throne of God and before the Lamb in worship, crying, "Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb." But before this work can be accomplished, we must experience right here in our own country the work of the Holy Spirit upon our hearts.

God has revealed to me that we are in positive danger of bringing into our educational work the customs and fashions that prevail in the schools of the world. If the teachers are not guarded in their work, they will place on the necks of their students worldly yokes instead of the yoke of Christ. The plan of the schools we shall establish in these closing days of the work is to be of an entirely different order from those we have instituted in the past.

For this reason, God bids us establish schools away from the cities, where without let or hindrance, we can carry on the work of education upon plans that are in harmony with the solemn message that is committed to us for the world. Such an education as this can best be worked out where there is land to cultivate, and where the physical exercise taken by the students can be of such a nature as to act a valuable part in their character building, and to fit them for usefulness in the fields to which they will go.

God will bless the work of those schools that are conducted according to his design. When we were laboring to establish the educational work in Australia, the Lord revealed to us that this school must not pattern after any schools that had been established in the past. This was to be a sample school. The school was organized on the plans that God had given us, and he has prospered its work.

I have been shown that in our educational work we are not to follow the methods that have been adopted in our older established schools. There is among us too much clinging to old customs, and because of this we are far behind where we should be in the development of the third angel's message. Because men could not comprehend the purpose of God in the plans laid before us for the education of the workers, methods have been followed in some of our schools which have retarded rather than advanced the work of God. Years have passed into eternity with small results that might have shown the accomplishment of a great and sacred work. If the Lord's will had been done by the workers in earth as the angels do it in heaven, much that now remains to be done, would be already accomplished, and noble results would be seen to follow our missionary efforts.

The usefulness learned on the school farm is the very education that is most essential for those who go out as missionaries to many foreign fields. If this training is given with the glory of God in view, great results will be seen. No work will be more effectual than that done by those who, having obtained an education in practical life, go forth to mission fields with the message of truth, prepared to instruct as they have been instructed. The knowledge they have obtained in the tilling of the soil, in the erection of buildings, and in other lines of manual work, and which they carry with them to their field of labor, will make them a blessing even in heathen lands.

Before we can carry the message of present truth in all its fulness to other countries we must first break every yoke. We must come into the line of true education, walking in the wisdom of God, and not in the wisdom of the world. God calls for messengers who will be true reformers. We must educate, educate, to prepare a people who will understand the message, and then give the message to the world.

Mrs. E. G. White.

Experiences in Teaching in China

Civil officials in China were chosen from among men holding literary degrees. A qualification for these much-coveted honors, until recent years, was a thorough knowledge of the writings of Confucius and Mencius, two of China's greatest sages, who urged men to become virtuous. But lacking the power, which the gospel of Jesus Christ alone can give, Chinese officials often come far short of that most excellent quality. So great has been the influence of Confucius' writings on the Chinese mind, that it has resulted in the foundation of a system of ethics now hoary with age. No less than five Confucian temples can be pointed out in this large city.

To these men the entrance of foreigners meant not only a blow for their prestige, but it endangered their long-cherished ideas of religion. It was from the ranks of these men that money was subscribed, five thousand dollars, for an eighty-thousand edition of an anti-Christian tract.

Thus Hunan was the last to open her doors to resident foreign missionaries. And then, let it be remembered, Chang-sha still forbade foreign workers to stay ashore overnight. At length the blood of British martyrs, Brethren Bruce and Lowis, was shed, and then Great Britain demanded that Chang-sha, in Hunan, be opened as a treaty port.

After this, wherever the missionary went, he was followed by a guard of soldiers, which gave an entirely wrong impression of Christianity. One Chinese "evangelist" in particular used his connection with the foreign missionary to assist men to evade the Chinese laws and the demands of Chinese officials. So-called "gospel halls" sprang up on all sides, like a harvest of rice. The heathen subscribed large sums of money in the aggregate to purchase buildings for this alleged purpose. The writer was instrumental in closing some of these places of ill fame. But the evil they did will long persist.

Such is the outlook which Chang-sha presents to the school-teacher. No two persons will ever look at the same situation alike, or meet it in the same way, yet each may be essentially right. Personally, although an evangelist, I fail to see why any one branch of the work should be judged the most important. The teacher has a most important place in evangelistic work in China, as I hope to show in my next article.

(To be concluded)

"From every quarter of this world of ours, comes the cry of sin-stricken hearts for a knowledge of the God of love. Millions upon millions have never so much as heard of God or of his love revealed in Christ. It is their right to receive this knowledge. They have an equal claim with us in the Saviour's mercy. And it rests with us who have received the knowledge, with our children to whom we may impart it, to answer their cry. To every household and every school, to every parent, teacher, and child upon whom has shone the light of the gospel, comes at this crisis the question put to Esther the queen at that momentous crisis in Israel's history, 'Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?'"

C. PELMULDER

We mourn the death of those whose lives are ending
Upon the forefront of the battle-ground,
Boldly the triumphs of the cross extending,
And build a monument beside their mound.

Yet ofttimes nobler one has lived in quiet,
As wild flowers bloom where silent waters lave,
Whose life was only known to those near by it —
Now but a slab to mark his lonely grave.

Somehow the life of one sincerely living
The Christ life here, 'midst enemies and friends —
The life of kindness, charity, and giving —
Is missed most sadly when, alas, it ends.

They're laid away, their life and labors ended,
And though upon no stately shaft expressed,
Their works with others' lives have so been blended
That these do follow them, although they rest.

The Return of the Exiles — No. 13

The Journey to Jerusalem, under Ezra

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The decree of Artaxerxes was made in the seventh year of his reign, B. C. 457. Once more the dispersed of Judah were given opportunity to work out the purpose of God in restoring Zion. In the raising up of Ezra as a leader, God's providence was manifest. Some discerned this, and gladly took advantage of the privilege of returning under circumstances so favorable.

A general place of meeting was designated, and at the appointed time those who were desirous of going to Jerusalem assembled for the long journey. "I gathered them together to the river that runneth to Ahava," says Ezra, "and there abode we in tents three days."

The number who responded to the call to leave Babylon, was disappointingly small. Ezra had expected that a large number would return. But many of those who had acquired houses and lands, had no desire to sacrifice these possessions. They loved ease and comfort rather than hardship and privation, and were well satisfied to remain. Their example proved a hindrance to many who might otherwise have chosen to cast in their lot with God's people, and advance by faith.

As Ezra looked over the company assembled, he was surprised to find "none of the sons of Levi." Where were the members of the tribe that had been set apart for the sacred service of the temple? To the call, "Who is on the Lord's side?" the Levites should have been the first to respond. During the period of the captivity, and afterward, they had been granted many privileges. They had enjoyed fullest liberty to minister to the spiritual needs of their Jewish brethren in Babylon. Synagogues had been built, in which the priests conducted the worship of God, and instructed the people. The observance of the Sabbath, and the performance of sacred rights peculiar to the Jewish faith, had been freely allowed.

But with the passing of the years after the close of the captivity, conditions changed, and many new responsibilities rested upon the leaders in Israel. The temple at Jerusalem had been rebuilt and dedicated, and more priests were needed to carry on its services. There was pressing need of men of God to act as teachers of the people. And besides, the Jews remaining in Babylon were in danger of having their religious liberty restricted. Through the prophet Zechariah, as well as by their late experience in the troublous times of Esther and Mordecai, God had plainly warned his people to flee from Babylon. The time had come when it was perilous to dwell longer in the midst of heathen influences. In view of these changed conditions, the priests in Babylon should have been quick to discern in the call, "Who is on the Lord's side?" a special call to them to return to Jerusalem.

The king and his princes had done more than their part in opening the way for every one who feared God to return. They had provided abundant means for carrying forward the work of God; but where were the men? The sons of Levi failed at a time when their presence was greatly needed at Jerusalem, and when the influence of their decision to return would have led many others to follow their example. Their strange indifference is a sad revelation of the attitude of the Israelites in Babylon toward God's purposes for his people.

Once again Ezra addressed the Levites in Babylon with the words, "Who is on the Lord's side?" To emphasize the importance of quick action, he chose nine "chief men," and two "men of understanding," as special messengers to return and persuade their brethren to accompany them to Jerusalem.

While the travelers tarried, these trusted messengers hastened back to "Iddo the chief," and "his brethren the nethinims," with the plea, "Bring unto us ministers for the house of our God." This entreaty was heeded; a few halting souls made final decision to return. Ezra acknowledged with gratitude that "by the good hand of our God," his messengers succeeded in returning to the camp quickly with about forty priests, and two hundred twenty nethinims,— men upon whom he could depend as wise ministers and good teachers and helpers.

Those who expected to return with Ezra were now ready to start. Before them was a journey that would occupy several months. The men were taking with them their wives and children, and their substance, besides large treasures for the temple and its service. Ezra was aware that enemies lay in wait by the way to attack, plunder, and destroy him and his company; yet he had asked from the king no armed force for their protection.

Before setting out on the journey, he sought the protection of the Most High. "I proclaimed a fast there, at the river of Ahava," says Ezra, "that we might afflict ourselves before our God, to ask of him a right way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance." Earnest prayer was offered to God for his blessing upon the undertaking. Says Ezra: "I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken unto the king, saying, The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him."

Under ordinary circumstances, it would have been wholly right and proper for Ezra to accept the offer of an armed escort. But in this instance, he had expressed himself to King Artaxerxes so freely regarding his steadfast confidence in the protecting care of the God of Israel, that he was ashamed to ask the king for protection. He believed that in view of all that had been said regarding the true God, the faith of the king in the power of God would be strengthened if the Israelites, on their part, would exercise faith.

In this matter, Ezra and his companions discerned an opportunity to magnify the name of God before the heathen; and so they determined to put their trust wholly in him. They knew that if they kept the law of the Lord continually before them, and practised this law, they would be protected by the breastplate of righteousness. They realized that if they wilfully chose to violate even one precept of the decalogue, they would be like a soldier without a breastplate,— unprotected from the assaults of Satan. "So we fasted," said Ezra, "and besought our God for this: and he was entreated of us."

By prayer and fasting, by self-examination and confession of sin, they sought to come into harmony with God and his holy law. They pleaded with the Lord to purge them from their sins. All harshness and impatience of spirit were put away. Self was crucified; the Lord God was exalted, and he alone. They knew that their strength was to be gained not in wealth, not in the power and influence of idolatrous men, but in the favor of God. Through conformity to his will, they hoped for success. They could not afford to lessen their influence over men, in behalf of the truth, by allowing unsanctified traits of character to obtain the mastery. Nor could they afford to create in the minds of their heathen friends a single doubt as to the sincerity of the profession of faith made by God's commandment-keeping people. They well knew that if they succeeded in their important mission, it would be because they had complied with the requirements of God, thus making it possible for his blessing to accompany them. Under these peculiar circumstances, they asked for no guard of soldiers. The heathen must not be given occasion to ascribe to the strength of man the glory that belonged to God alone.

But the blessing of God does not take the place of prudence and forethought. As a special precaution in safeguarding the treasure, Ezra "separated twelve of the chief of the priests,"— proved men, wise men of opportunity, men of faithfulness and determined fidelity,—"and weighed unto them the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, even the offering of the house of our God, which the king, and his counselors, and his lords, and all Israel there present, had offered." These men were solemnly charged to act as vigilant stewards over the treasure entrusted to their care. "Ye are holy unto the Lord," Ezra declared; "the vessels are holy also; and the silver and the gold are a free-will offering unto the Lord God of your fathers. Watch ye, and keep them, until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests and the Levites, and chief of the fathers of Israel, at Jerusalem, in the chambers of the house of the Lord.

"So took the priests and the Levites the weight of the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, to bring them to Jerusalem unto the house of our God."

The care exercised by Ezra in providing for the transportation and safekeeping of the Lord's treasure, is an object-lesson worthy of thoughtful study. Only those whose trustworthiness had been proved, were chosen; and they were instructed plainly as to their responsibility before God. In the appointment of faithful officers to act as treasurers of the Lord's goods, Ezra recognized the necessity and value of order and organization in connection with the work of God.

During the few days that the Israelites had tarried to seek the Lord for protection and guidance, every provision was completed for the long journey. "We departed from the river of Ahava," Ezra writes, "on the twelfth day of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem: and the hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of such as lay in wait by the way." They were on the way about four months, reaching Jerusalem "on the first day of the fifth month," in the seventh year of Artaxerxes. The multitude that accompanied Ezra — several thousand in all, including women and children — necessitated a slow journey, but all were preserved in safety.

The Lord wrought for the returning Jews. Even their enemies were restrained from doing them harm. None were able to intercept them, and their journey was a prosperous one.

This experience is a lesson to all those who have set their faces toward the New Jerusalem. The Christian pilgrim is to make his journey one of trust in the keeping power of God. There will always be enemies, emissaries of Satan, on the alert to hurt and destroy every soul who is not on guard, and who has not provided himself with the Christian armor of righteousness and peace.

Fellow pilgrim, let strict faithfulness and determined fidelity characterize your every act. Let every step of the journey to the New Jerusalem be taken with eyes fixed on Jesus, the author and finisher of your faith. Those who will keep the way of the Lord, in strict obedience, will have the guardianship of heavenly angels as they travel Zionward. All self-seeking, all dissension and strife, will be put away. Unity and harmony will prevail.

May we take these experiences in the history of Israel to heart, consecrate ourselves anew to God, and live to the honor and glory of his name.

Lessons from Past Experiences —No. 23

GEO. O. STATES

It was five years after the Testimony referred to in our last article was given when the Lord gave the light on health reform. We were living near Battle Creek, in 1863, when Sister White had that wonderful vision upon the matter of health reform. Brethren Smith and Amadon, the local elders of the church, used to call the attention of the church to what the Lord had shown his servant, and soon we learned that there was a book being published on the matter, called "How to Live," and that among other things Sister White had been shown that the people expecting to be translated would give up eating pork. It was quite a trial, but as soon as our people learned what the Lord had said on that question, they gladly accepted the light given.

Soon the book was out, and there seemed to be a desire on the part of the families among our people to secure a copy. Our ministers and church elders would read from it at our Sabbath services, and when the right time came, the subject was presented to our people in a way that made a stir all through our ranks.

In those days, when our church elders read from Sister White's writings, we all listened with deep interest, firmly believing that we were listening to what the Lord had been pleased to communicate to his people through his chosen servant. I well remember, as Brother White used to speak in the church, bringing out and reading extracts from that wonderful vision, how deeply interested we were. We did not stop to parley over it, and wonder how much of what was written was caused by Brother White's influence over his wife. I can not recall the circumstances, but I well remember that at one time Brother White took a position which the Lord showed through his servant was wrong. Brother White did not stop to question the matter. He took his position in harmony with the mind of the Spirit of God. It was the same with our other leading ministers; when God reproved them, they did not stop to parley, but said, "I was wrong, and I confess it, and now I am right." There seemed to be a desire among our people generally to keep in line with all the advance light God was giving the remnant church. Some expressions in my mother's prayers are still ringing in my ears to this day, such as, "O Lord, as thy servants go out to present this truth, may they present it in its purity." In our local prayer-meetings in the church the same burden was expressed. There seemed to be a general desire among our people all through our ranks to accept every ray of light that God saw fit to bring to us through his servant.

Our people generally believed that what Sister White wrote was what the Lord was opening before her in vision. My heart has ached for years as I have seen coming in among us a lack of giving heed to the Testimonies. It is a sorrowful fact that there are thousands, especially among our younger members, who know very little of what is in the Testimonies. I have wondered whether God might not remove this gift from among us if this slighting of the Testimonies should continue.

"God's people have departed from their simplicity. They have not made God their strength, and are weak and faint, spiritually. I have been shown that unbelief in the Testimonies has been steadily increasing as the people backslide from God. It is all through our ranks, all over the field. But few know what our churches are to experience. I saw that at present we are under divine forbearance; but no one can say how long this will continue. No one knows how great the mercy that has been exercised toward us. But few are heartily devoted to God. There are only a few who, like the stars on a tempestuous night, shine here and there among the clouds. God will work a work in our day that but few anticipate. He will raise up and exalt among us those who are taught rather by the unction of his Spirit, than by the outward training of scientific institutions." These words were given us years ago. Have we heeded them?

"Faith in God is the master secret. There were a hundred slingers in Israel who could have hit Goliath's forehead if it had been a wooden target; but there was only one with self-possession enough to face the living giant, and he was a youth who slung with one hand and kept hold of God with the other."

The Road to Honor

ELLA M. ROBINSON

The banquet hall was silent, and the revelers gone.
  The prince his chamber sought, and, in the solitude,
  Gazed out into the chilly blackness of the night,
And fondly wished the glimmer of the coming morn —
Wished he might see but one fond token of the morn.

The elements were raging wild and fierce without;
  The Storm Wind and the Torrent sang their mournful dirge;
  Yet deeper far the midnight in that prince's soul,
And fiercer there the storm of anxious fear and doubt —
Aye, darker, deeper, wilder, than all storms without.

"O Life! how empty thou of all that men call joy!
  Thou heldest yesterday the apple temptingly;
  To-day its sweetness turns to ashes on our lips;
To-morrow memory's core remains but to annoy; —
Pray, hast thou aught of gold but turns to base alloy?

"O, why was man created but for one short day
  Of disappointments sore? Or can there be beyond
  A bright, eternal future, full of peace and joy?"
Then through the rifted cloud, stole one lone, feeble ray:
It was the morning star, the harbinger of day.

It pierced the gloom around, as tenderly it shone,
  A star of hope to light one dark and lonely soul.
  "O Maker and Upholder of yon glorious orbs,
Thy plan is broad enough for all; thy power I own;
O, grant me, holy Lord, a place near to thy throne."

He slept, and in his dream a shining one stood by,
  Who spoke, a holy radiance beaming from his brow:
  "O prince, thy prayer is heard. The great God loveth him
Who is of humble heart. The Lofty One and High
Doth seek the contrite soul, and to the meek draws nigh.

"O, humble now thyself, and I will write thy name
  Upon this glorious page! Yet through eternity
  Thou shalt be lowliest of all the ransomed ones;
But there is room for thee if thou dost not seek fame.
O, speak the word alone, and I will write thy name!"

With scorn the prince replied, "Thy humble blessings keep;
  I choose the robe and crown, though but for life's few years;
  For heaven would be hell stripped of my majesty.
Not service, but a crown of glory do I seek."
The angel turned, and wept such tears as angels weep.

But still the prince dreamed on, and there before his view,
  He saw the Saviour bear his cross toward Calvary,
  And while rude soldiers pierced those precious hands and feet,
The sufferer prayed, "Forgive, they know not what they do."
He heard the cry, "'Tis done." A voice said, "For you —

"For you he bore the cross and died a death of shame."
  The prince awoke. 'Twas morn, and in that gilded room,
  He bent the humble knee, and breathed a contrite prayer:
"I care naught for this world, its glory, honor, fame,
If only thou wilt hear me for his precious name.

"Thy power, how great! but O, how wonderful thy love!
  O, grant me, Lord, a share of thy abounding store,
  That I may know the joy of humble service here,
And worthy be to fill a lowly place above!
O, may I see, and know, and serve the One I love!"

. . . . .

Again we see the prince; his hair is silvery white.
  How bent! How slow his steps! A simple robe he wears.
  His wealth has gone to bless the peasants round his door;
Another bears his crown; his brow wears heaven's pure light;
And by a humble cot he kneels to pray at night.

He sleeps, and in his dream again he seems to see
  The messenger divine, who whispers, bending low,
  "Thy Heavenly Father knows thy humble work of love;
And, hark! he hath prepared an honored place for thee
Among the ransomed ones; for thou shalt ever be,

"Through all eternity, near to the Blessed One
  Whom all high heaven adore; and he shall teach thee more
  Of his eternal power, and boundless love divine;
For thou shalt view each star, and go from sun to sun
With Jesus as thy guide,"— thus spake the shining one.

The Return of the Exiles — No. 14

A Revival and a Reformation

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The coming of Ezra and his company to Jerusalem brought courage and hope into the hearts of many who had long labored under trying difficulties. Since the first company of exiles had returned with Zerubbabel and Joshua, over seventy years before, much had been accomplished in the work of restoration. The temple had been finished; the walls of the city had been partially repaired. Yet much remained undone. At times, the people had become disheartened, and had well-nigh ceased all effort to restore the city. Even during the years of comparative peace following the troublous times of Queen Esther, but little was done to upbuild the wall.

The indifference of many of the Israelites who had returned, is directly traceable to their violation of the plain precepts of the law given at Sinai. Some who had returned, remained faithful; but many of their children and children's children, lost sight of the law of heaven. The Mosaic code, given for the good of the people, was sadly disregarded. Sin was in the camp. Even some of the men who had been entrusted with sacred responsibilities, lived in open sin. Their course of action largely neutralized the efforts of others to advance the cause of God; for so long as flagrant violations of God's law were allowed to go on unrebuked, the blessing of heaven could not rest richly upon the people.

In the providence of God, those who returned with Ezra had sought the Lord earnestly, before undertaking their journey. They had humbled themselves before God, confessing their sins, and imploring forgiveness. With agony of soul they had pleaded for divine guidance and blessing. The experiences through which they had just passed, led them to realize that in God alone was their strength, and that sin, by separating them from the source of their power, would leave them weak and defenseless. Many of them had become strong in faith; and as these mingled with the discouraged and the indifferent, their influence for good was a powerful factor in the work of reform instituted soon afterward by Ezra.

On the fourth day after the arrival at Jerusalem, the treasures of silver and gold, with the vessels for the service of the sanctuary, were delivered by the treasurers into the hands of the temple officers. Every article was examined "by number and by weight." The delivery of the treasures was made in the presence of witnesses, with the utmost exactitude. Nothing had been lost. The care exercised in this transaction is an object-lesson of the care with which the Lord would be pleased to have the affairs of his cause conducted at all times and in every place.

The children of the captivity who had returned with Ezra, "offered burnt-offerings unto the God of Israel," for a sin-offering, and as a token of gratitude and thanksgiving for the protection of holy angels during their journey. "And they delivered the king's commissions unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors on this side the river; and they furthered the people, and the house of God."

Ezra's arrival at Jerusalem was opportune. His brethren were in great need of the influence of his presence. Soon after his return, some of the chief men of Israel approached him with a serious complaint. Some of "the people of Israel, and the priests, and the Levites," had so far lost sight of the holy character of the commands of Jehovah given them through Moses, that they had intermarried with the surrounding heathen peoples. "They have taken of their daughters for themselves, and for their sons," Ezra was informed, "so that the holy seed have mingled themselves with the people" of heathen lands; "yea, the hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass."

In his study of the causes that led to the Babylonish captivity, Ezra had learned that the terrible apostasy of Israel was largely traceable to their mingling with the surrounding nations. Had they obeyed God's command to keep separate from the heathen, they would have been spared many sad and humiliating experiences. And so, when the servant of God was informed that notwithstanding the plain lessons of the past, men of prominence in Israel had dared transgress the laws given them as a safeguard against apostasy, his heart was made inexpressibly sad. "When I heard this thing," he says, "I rent my garment and my mantle, and plucked off the hair of my head and of my beard, and sat down astonied.

"Then were assembled unto me every one that trembleth at the words of the God of Israel, because of the transgression of those that had been carried away; and I sat astonied until the evening sacrifice." The servant of God suffered intense agony of soul over the commission of sins so grievous by those who had had great light and privileges.

At the time of the evening sacrifice, Ezra arose, and, once more rending his garment and his mantle, he fell upon his knees, and unburdened his soul in earnest supplication to God. Spreading out his hands unto the Lord, he exclaimed, "O my God, I am ashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens."

Ezra remembered the goodness of God in again giving his people a foothold in their native land, and he was overwhelmed with righteous indignation and with grief at the thought of their ingratitude.

"Since the days of our fathers," the humble suppliant continued, "have we been in a great trespass unto this day; and for our iniquities have we, our kings, and our priests, been delivered into the hand of the kings of the lands, to the sword, to captivity, and to a spoil, and to confusion of face, as it is this day. And now for a little space grace hath been showed from the Lord our God, to leave us a remnant to escape, and to give us a nail in his holy place, that our God may lighten our eyes, and give us a little reviving in our bondage. For we were bondmen; yet our God hath not forsaken us in our bondage, but hath extended mercy unto us in the sight of the kings of Persia, to give us a reviving, to set up the house of our God, and to repair the desolations thereof, and to give us a wall in Judah and in Jerusalem.

"And now, O our God, what shall we say after this? for we have forsaken thy commandments, which thou hast commanded by thy servants the prophets. . . . And after all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great trespass, seeing that thou our God hast punished us less than our iniquities deserve, and hast given us such deliverance as this; should we again break thy commandments, and join in affinity with the people of these abominations? wouldest not thou be angry with us till thou hadst consumed us, so that there should be no remnant nor escaping? O Lord God of Israel, thou art righteous: for we remain yet escaped, as it is this day: behold, we are before thee in our trespasses: for we can not stand before thee because of this."

Ezra's language in this petition is that of true humiliation of soul, the contrition that prevails with God in prayer. Only the prayer of the humble enters into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. "Though the Lord be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off." "To this man will I look," saith the Lord, "even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word."

The sorrow of Ezra and of his associates over the evils that had insidiously crept into the very heart of the Lord's work, wrought repentance. Many of those who had sinned, were deeply affected. "The people wept very sore." They had begun to realize, in a limited degree, the heinousness of sin, and the horror with which God regards it. The sacredness of the law spoken at Sinai was brought clearly before their minds, and many trembled at the thought of their transgressions.

One of the company, Shechaniah by name, acknowledged that all the words spoken by Ezra were true. "We have trespassed against our God," he confessed, "and have taken strange wives of the people of the land: yet now there is hope in Israel concerning this thing." Shechaniah proposed that all who had transgressed, should make a covenant with God to forsake their lives of sin, and to be adjudged "according to the law." "Arise," he bade Ezra, "for this matter belongeth unto thee: we also will be with thee: be of good courage, and do it."

"Then arose Ezra, and made the chief priests, the Levites, and all Israel, to swear that they should do according to this word."

This was the beginning of a wonderful reformation. With infinite patience and tact, and with careful consideration for the rights and welfare of every individual concerned, Ezra and his associates labored to lead the repentant of Israel into a right way of living. Above all things else, Ezra was a teacher of the law; and as he gave personal attention to the examination of every case, he sought to impress upon the mind of the sinner the holiness of the law of heaven, and the blessings to be gained through obedience to this law.

The Bible in Education—No. 3

M. E. KERN

Enough has been said perhaps to show the Bible to contain the foundation principles of all knowledge. Thus the truths of the Bible are the pedestal upon which all knowledge rests, and as creatures of God's handiwork we are absolutely helpless intellectually and spiritually without his revelation. Any system of education which does not contain this Book as its foundation can not educate man to fulfil the purpose of his creation, but is built on the inventions of man, and will go down when everything that is artificial and untrue shall perish.

To the mind that has gotten a firm grasp of truth there is a unity of all knowledge, and the artificial divisions for the sake of study and teaching do not appear as something entirely distinct and separate from the other lines of thought. All truth is God's truth; and if the teacher is permeated with the Bible, and it is a very part of his life, and he recognizes the fact that it contains the foundation of all knowledge, it will affect his consideration of every subject; and without any forced or mechanical process, he will teach what he has seen and heard, he will lead his students to the fountain from which he quenches his thirst. I care not whether he is teaching the life of Jesus or the principles of mathematics, this will be true. If the Bible is brought in in any other way, it is the form without the Spirit, and the students will intuitively feel that there is something insincere about it. The truly Christian teacher who understands these principles will spiritualize so-called common things, while the theoretically Christian teacher will allow the spiritual to become common. The monks were wont to withdraw themselves from the world, and adopt every device to keep themselves spiritual, even to having sacred music played during meals; but the evil was within, and such methods would not alter it.

I thoroughly believe in the use of the Bible in every branch of education, and that the first impressions of the child should be from the very words of the Holy Book. Gladstone, in his dying hours, repeated the Lord's prayer

By the Red Sea

MRS. M. SOLLARS

Now my feet have reached the borders
  Of the sea, the great Red Sea;
There's no boat to bear me o'er,
  And no passage way I see,
Yet I'm trusting, firmly trusting,
  In his promises to me,—
He who stilled the raging waters
  Of the stormy Galilee,—
For his ways are never my ways,
  And his footsteps are unknown.
With a host encamping round me,
  I can never be alone:
"I'll be with thee, freely with thee;
  I will make thy pathway bright,—
After clouds and after shadows,—
  Peaceful, calm as morning light."

The Return of the Exiles — No. 14

A Revival and a Reformation

(Concluded)

MRS. E. G. WHITE

WHEREVER Ezra labored, there sprang up a revival in the study of the Holy Scriptures. Teachers were appointed to instruct the people; the law of the Lord was exalted and made honorable. The books of the prophets were searched, and the prophecies foretelling the coming of the Messiah brought hope and comfort to many a sad and weary heart.

More than two thousand years have passed by since Ezra "prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it;" yet this long lapse of time has not lessened the influence of his pious example. Throughout the centuries, the record of his life of consecration has been an inspiration to many who have determined to "seek the law of the Lord, and to do it." His steadfastness of purpose, his careful methods of study, his diligence in teaching the Holy Scriptures to the common people, his unwavering trust in God, his abhorrence of sin, his patience and kindly consideration in dealing with the erring,— these and other striking characteristics of his life have had an ennobling influence on the lives of many who have been impressed by the Holy Spirit to emulate his example. Ezra's motives were high and holy; all that he did was actuated by an intense love for souls. And to the end of time, the compassion and tenderness that he ever revealed toward those who had sinned either wilfully or through ignorance, should be an object-lesson to all who seek to bring about reforms. God desires his servants to be as firm and unyielding as a rock, where right principles are involved; and yet, withal, they are to manifest the kindly sympathy and the forbearance revealed in the lives of Ezra and of Christ. Like Ezra, they are to teach transgressors the words of life, which contain principles that are the foundation of all right-doing.

In this age of the world, when Satan is seeking through manifold agencies to blind the eyes of the people against the binding claims of the law of God, there is need of Ezras,— of men who can cause many to "tremble at the commandment of our God." There is need of true reformers who will point transgressors to the great Lawgiver, and teach them that the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. There is need of men mighty in the Scriptures; men whose every word and act exalts the law of Jehovah; men who, in this time of apostasy and unbelief, labor to strengthen the faith of their fellow men in the law and the prophets. Teachers are needed, O, so much! to inspire hearts with reverence and love for the Holy Scriptures, which have been given for the admonition of us upon whom the ends of the world are come.

Often has the cause of God languished because of a lack of reverence for the precepts of Holy Writ. Often has the name of God been brought into dishonor by those who, while professing to be Christians, have neglected the study of the Word, and have allowed grievous sins to come into their lives.

God calls for a revival and a reformation. The words of the Bible, and the Bible alone, should be echoed from the pulpits of our land. In the sermons of many pulpits of to-day there is not that divine manifestation which awakens the conscience and brings life to the soul. The hearers can not say, "Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?" There are many who are crying out for the living God; many who are longing for the bread of life. Let the Word of God speak to the people. Let them hear the voice of him whose word can renew the soul unto everlasting life.

God's servants are now to proclaim faithfully his Word in all lands, to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people; for the Lord has "set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."

To-day God is sending to his people the comforting message: "Fear not; for I am with thee: I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west; I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth; even every one that is called by my name: for I have created him for my glory, I have formed him; yea, I have made him."

"There shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

"And in that day thou shalt say, O Lord, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedst me. Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid: for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song; he also is become my salvation. Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation.

"And in that day shall ye say, Praise the Lord, call upon his name, declare his doings among the people, make mention that his name is exalted. Sing unto the Lord; for he hath done excellent things: this is known in all the earth. Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion: for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee."

Literature

THE poetry of the Psalms and Proverbs, the strains of Isaiah, and the sublime visions of heaven and the New Jerusalem given to John, are unequaled in the literature of the world. Here we are among the fountains and mountain streams whence the stream of the highest literature has flowed. The greatest men of letters have received their inspiration here. Mr. Ruskin confesses that the power and beauty of all he has written was derived from his early and continuous reading of the Bible, his mother requiring him when a boy to read aloud a chapter every day, till his mind became thoroughly imbued and saturated with its spirit and imagery. If we can fill the minds of our children and youth with these grand thoughts and words of God, they will be saved from the corrupting influence of much of the literature which floods the world to-day, and which many of our young people are reading. Their taste for the murky and filthy waters of the valley will be taken away if we can bring them to appreciate these living streams. O for power to do it! But we are slow to learn. We are timid to break away from the beaten path in which we were led. In Biblical literature there is a wonderful field for some servant of God to develop. A writer in the Educational Review, in speaking of the question of literature, says: "The strange preference for what may be called heathen classics becomes all the more unaccountable when the objectionable nature of some portions of them is considered. . . . If they were fully and literally translated, they would be subject to lawful interdiction on account of their corrupting influence."

Dr. Franklin read the story of Ruth to a circle of French infidels after listening to a tirade against the Bible, representing it as an Oriental tale, but not giving the source. These educated ignoramuses listened with delight to this unique and

The Last Call for Reapers

MRS. EDITH B. GOODRICH

THE last call for reapers is sounding to-day.
Rise up! Like Elisha, leave plow, and away!
Let those who are world-bound still stay by their stuff;
The Master hath called thee, and that is enough.

Let nothing now hinder. Shake off every coil.
Stand free, and go forth in the harvest to toil.
See! see! the great fields are all waving and white;
Go work while 'tis day, swiftly cometh the night.

All chains that have held thee must now be cast off;
Let no one delay thee by frown or by scoff.
Nor mother, nor father, nor loved one should stay
That one who is called. Harvest hands — ho! away!

He calleth! He calleth! On far foreign shores
The heathen are waiting with wide-open doors.
Why stand ye here idle? Why longer delay?
Rise up, O ye reapers, and hasten away.

Eternal Riches

MRS. E. G. WHITE

CHRIST'S teachings are of a character to impress the mind with the superiority of eternal things, and to impregnate the present life with the interests of eternity.

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth," the Saviour declared, "where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

"No man can serve two masters." As Christ visited the places where worldly gain was occupying men's thoughts and energies, and marked the worshipers at the shrine of Mammon, he said, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!" With the confidence of one who knew, he said, "Ye can not serve God and Mammon. Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your Heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?

"Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? (for after all these things do the Gentiles seek) for your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things."

(1) The Lord looks with pity on those who allow themselves to be burdened with household cares and business perplexities. They are cumbered with much serving, and neglect the one thing essential. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," the Saviour says, "and all these things shall be added unto you." That is, Look away from this world to the eternal. Put forth your most earnest endeavors to obtain those things upon which God places value, and which Christ gave his precious life that you might secure. His sacrifice has thrown open wide to you the gates of heavenly commerce. Lay up your treasure beside the throne of God, by doing with his entrusted capital the work that he desires done in the winning of souls to a knowledge of the truth. This will secure you eternal riches.

The possession of the Word of God places great responsibilities upon us; for it makes us accountable for the means that he entrusts to us. It is a great privilege to have money to invest in the cause of God; and that man is blessed who desires to place it where instead of ministering to selfish desires, it will help to work out the purposes of God. The offerings made to help carry out the plan of salvation, bring joy to the giver and glory to the One for whose sake they are made.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." God gave Christ to the world. The Son of God laid aside his royal robe and kingly crown, and leaving his high command in heaven, came to earth as a man. Through the years of childhood and youth and manhood he was subject to poverty and to all the temptations that beset the human race.

(2) When we think of the great gift of heaven for the redemption of a sinful world, and then consider the offerings that we can make, we shrink from drawing a comparison. The demands that might be made upon a whole universe could not compare with that one gift. Immeasurable love was expressed when one equal with the Father came to pay the price for the souls of men, and bring to them eternal life. Shall those who profess the name of Christ see no attraction in the world's Redeemer, be indifferent to the possession of truth and righteousness, and turn from the heavenly treasure to the earthly?

"And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. (2) But every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God."

This gospel message is one of the most precious passages in the New Testament. When it is accepted, it yields in the lives of the receiver good deeds whose value is far above that of diamonds and gold. It has power to bring gladness and consolation into the earthly life, and to bestow eternal life upon the believer. O that we might have our understanding so enlightened by grace that we could take in its full meaning! The Father is saying to us, I will bestow upon you a treasure more precious than any earthly possession, a treasure that will make you rich and blessed forever.

(3) In this life our possessions are limited, but the great treasure that God offers in his gift to the world, is unlimited. It comprehends every human desire, and goes far beyond our human calculations. In the great day of final decision, when every man shall be judged according to his deeds, every voice of self-justification will be hushed; for it will be seen that in his gift to the human race the Father gave all he had to give, and that they are without excuse who have refused to accept the gracious offering.

We have no enemy without that we need to fear. Our great conflict is with unconsecrated self. When we conquer self, we are more than conquerors through him who has loved us. My brethren, there is eternal life for us to win. Let us fight the good fight of faith. Not in the future, but now, is our probation. While it lingers, "seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things,"— the things which now so often serve Satan's purpose as snares to deceive and destroy,— "shall be added unto you." God's chosen ones must be gold, not wood, hay, and stubble. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled."

"The Meeting Is Yours"

MAX HILL

THE place was at church, the hour was twelve-thirty, the occasion was a social meeting. The leader had read a lengthy portion of the Testimonies, with comments. The noon whistles had blown,— on time, as a dozen watches testified,— but the leader, like the brook, seemed inclined to "go on forever." I supposed it was just a talk he was giving. Imagine my surprise then, at

My Keeper

ALICE M. AVERY HARPER

My help shall come from yonder hills
Where beams my Father's gracious face;
For he it is my being thrills
With gleams of joy and wondrous grace.
He will not suffer me to fall;
He watches o'er me while I sleep,
He hears my oft-repeated call,
And leadeth all his fainting sheep.

Though anguish be my portion here,
And care unnerve the weary heart,
I will look up beyond the hills,
And from his truth will ne'er depart.
Though heaven and earth may be removed,
And every island flee away,
Jehovah God shall be my help
Through darkest night or cheerless day.

Beyond the hills, those sacred hills,
Where brightly gleam those gates of pearl,
The glories of that peaceful land,
With all its treasures, shall unfurl.
In those green pastures, broad and fair,
Where weary pilgrims shall be blest,
Where fragrant breezes fill the air,
With his redeemed I'll be at rest.

For me his heart was rudely pierced;
With grief and shame his head was bowed;
On lonely Calvary's awful crest
He died amid the mocking crowd.
That tender face, that saddened brow,
That dreadful cruelty I see,
When Christ was smitten for my sins,
And crucified on Calvary.

And yet my dear Redeemer lives,
My precious Saviour, King, and Friend;
My contrite heart to him I give,
His trusting child he will defend.
Beyond the everlasting hills,
Beyond the shadow and the pain,
This vision sweet my spirit thrills.
He lives! the Lamb for sinners slain!

Words to Teachers and Students

MRS. E. G. WHITE

WE have been instructed again and again that the character of the education that has long been current, can not stand the test of the Word of God. The subject of education is one that should interest every Seventh-day Adventist. The Lord says to us, Seventh-day Adventists are not to place themselves under the counsel and instruction of teachers who know not the truth for this time. The molding and fashioning of minds should not be left to men who have not comprehended the importance of a preparation for that life which measures with the life of God.

Some among our teachers have been charmed by the sentiments of infidel authors. In a representation given me I saw one holding in his hand one of these books and recommending it to our teachers as a book from which real help could be obtained along educational lines. Another was holding in his hand books of an altogether different character. He placed his hand upon the one who had recommended the infidel author, and said, "Advice of the kind you have given is opening the door for Satan with his sophistries to find easy entrance to your schools. These books contain sentiments that your students should be instructed to avoid. Human minds are easily charmed with studies that lead to infidelity. These books produce in the minds of the students a distaste for the study of the Word of God, which is eternal life to all who follow its instruction. Such books are not to find entrance in any school where the youth are being taught to be learners of the greatest of teachers."

With solemn voice the Speaker continued: "Do you find with these authors that which you can recommend as essential to true higher education? Would you dare recommend their study to students who are ignorant of their true character? Wrong habits of thought, when once accepted, become a despotic power that fastens the mind as in a grasp of steel. If many who have received and read these books had never seen them, but had accepted the words of the divine Teacher in their place, they would be far in advance of where they now are in a knowledge of the divine truths of the Word of God, which make men wise unto salvation. These books have led thousands where Satan led Adam and Eve — to a knowledge that God forbade them to have. Through their teachings, students have turned from the Word of the Lord to fables."

I am instructed to say to students, In your search for knowledge, climb higher than the standard set by the world; follow where Jesus has led the way. And to teachers I would say, Beware how you sow the seeds of unbelief in human hearts and minds. Cleanse yourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. The crowning glory of Christ's attributes was his holiness. The angels bow before him in adoration, exclaiming, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty. He is declared to be glorious in his holiness. Study the character of God. By beholding Christ, by seeking him in faith and prayer, you may become like him.

The standard of education in our schools is lowered as soon as Christ ceases to be the pattern of teachers and students. Teachers are to understand that their work is not to be confined to the knowledge contained in text-books; it is to reach higher, far higher than it does. A course of self-discipline is to educate them to conform the character to the divine similitude. Self dies hard, but when the teachers have that wisdom that cometh from above, they will discern the true object of our educational work, and reforms will be made that will give the youth a training that is according to the Lord's plan of development and growth, and will fit them to become members of the family of heaven.

We need now to work in spiritual lines, seeking to purify ourselves from every defect of character. Christ must be formed within, the hope of glory. He must be received by every individual who would have an individual experience. We are to be rooted and grounded and established in the faith by the teachings of the Word. The truth has power to sanctify the receiver, and this work of sanctification will be accomplished for us as we have an individual knowledge of Christ, and learn to link up with him, and to walk by faith and prayer.

R. C. PORTER

FEARFUL will be the account that will be met by false shepherds in the day of judgment. It were better for a man that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he drowned in the depth of the sea, than that by his unfaithfulness to the solemn charge of his ministry to "preach the word" he should allow souls to drift to ruin unwarned, and their blood be upon his garments.

More than fifty years ago we were instructed through the spirit of prophecy that the time would come when there would be a shaking among us. It was stated plainly that this shaking would be caused by a revival of the straight testimony. When we see the shaking coming precisely as predicted, caused by the revival of the straight testimony as declared, shall we then be longer in a state of questioning as to where we should stand in this crisis? The present situation is the strongest confirmation of the truthfulness and reliability of the spirit of prophecy. It declared that we should see just this at this very time. It declared that some would be shaken out. It stated plainly that these who would not receive the straight testimony, would endeavor "to unsettle the established faith of the body." The next step brings us to the latter rain.

When the shaking time is past, the body will not be left torn and distracted, as the result of the shaking. In place of that, the ones who were opposed to organization, and unwilling to harmonize with church order, will have been shaken out. "My attention was then turned to the company I had seen, who were mightily shaken. I was shown those whom I had before seen weeping and praying with agony of spirit. The company of guardian angels around them had been doubled, and they were clothed with an armor from their head to their feet. They moved in exact order, like a company of soldiers."—"Early Writings," page 132.

The Time Is Short

ARCHER WRIGHT

BROTHER, the time is short,—
Not many years to teach the Word
Which millions yet have never heard:
Be faithful to exhort.
O leave not now the gospel field!
Soon will the last saved soul be sealed,
"The Son of man shall be revealed:"
The time is short.

Brother, the time is short,—
Not many years of giving now.
O keep your hand firm on the plow,
Christ's precious cause support.
God's closing work is moving fast,
And soon the harvest will be past;
This call for means may be the last:
The time is short.

Brother, the time is short,—
Not many years to win the fight.
The battle now is at its height,
But soon the last report
Shall ring out from the gospel fort,
Defeating Satan's last resort.
Be valiant; for the time is short,
The time is short.

A Message to the Churches

SANITARIUM, CAL., Feb. 10, 1908.

"AWAKE, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean. Shake thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem: loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion. For thus saith the Lord, Ye have sold yourselves for naught; and ye shall be redeemed without money."

The Lord has instructed me to say to our churches: There is no safety in placing confidence in human wisdom or strength. "Whom shall he teach knowledge?" the prophet Isaiah asks; "and whom shall he make to understand doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breast. For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little: for with stammering lips and another tongue will he speak to this people. To whom he said, This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear. But the word of the Lord was unto them precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken.

"Wherefore hear the word of the Lord, ye scornful men, that rule this people which is in Jerusalem. Because ye have said, We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us: for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves: therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste. Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding-place."

The figures here used by the prophet are representations of spiritual things. "Who among us," he asks, "shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil; he shall dwell on high: his place of defense shall be the munitions of rocks: bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure. Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty: they shall behold the land that is very far off."

The Kingdom of Christ

(1) [The government of the kingdom of Christ is like no earthly government. It is a representation of the characters of those who compose the kingdom. "Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God?" Christ asked, "or with what comparison shall we liken it?" He could find nothing on earth that would serve as a perfect comparison. His court is one where holy love presides, and whose offices and appointments are graced by the exercise of charity. He charges his servants to bring pity and loving-kindness, his own attributes, into all their office work, and to find their happiness and satisfaction in reflecting the love and tender compassion of the divine nature on all with whom they associate.]

"Look unto Zion, the city of our solemnities," the prophet continues; "thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams; wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby. For the Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawgiver, the Lord is our king; he will save us. . . . The inhabitants shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity."

"Be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create," the Lord exhorts; "for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying. There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed.

"And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them.

"And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord."

The power of Christ alone can work the transformation in heart and mind that all must experience who would partake with him of the new life in the kingdom of God. "Except a man be born again," the Saviour said, "he can not see the kingdom of God." The religion that comes from God is the only religion that can lead to God. In order to serve him aright, we must be born of the divine Spirit. This will purify the heart and renew the mind, and give us a new capacity for knowing and loving God. It will give us willing obedience to all his requirements.

Privileges and Duties of Believers

Every converted soul should labor for unity of spirit and action with the One who prayed that he and his disciples might be one. The followers of Christ do his cause decided injury when they follow the customs and habits of the world. Truth that is not lived, that is not imparted to others, loses its life-giving power, its healing virtue. Every one must learn to work, and to stand in his place as a burden-bearer. Every addition to the church should be one more agency for the carrying out of the great plan of redemption. The entire church, acting as one, blending in perfect union, is to be a living, active missionary agency, moved and controlled by the Holy Spirit.

Having acknowledged Christ as the Saviour of the world, the disciples were charged to prove before men their claims, by representing in their lives the beauty and purity of his character. They had been called to repentance, and had been baptized in his name. In his name they were to call others to repentance. And all who would accept the offer of forgiveness were to be baptized in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. By this ordinance believers were to be admitted to church-fellowship; and from this time of open profession, a divine change was to be revealed in their lives. As members of Christ's church on earth they were to represent the principles of his church in heaven.

Speaking to his church, Christ said, "And I say unto you, That if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." The professed Christian who is not a Christian in practise, is not included in this promise. It is only when the voice of the church becomes the voice of Christ, that the promise can be received in its fulness.

The upbuilding of the kingdom of God is retarded or urged forward according to the unfaithfulness or fidelity of human agencies. The work is hindered by the failure of the human to co-operate with the divine. Men may pray, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven;" but if they fail of acting out this prayer in their lives, their petitions will be fruitless.

Church Discipline

Let none speak lightly of the duty of the church to administer censure and rebuke; neither let them criticize the action of the church when this painful task becomes necessary. Christ has given plain instruction regarding the duty of the church toward those who, while professing to be loyal members, are bringing dishonor to the cause of God by their course of action. "Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted," he says, "shall be rooted up." God has commanded that those who prove themselves unworthy of church-fellowship shall be separated from his body. Those who speak against the exercise of this authority, speak against the authority of Christ.

The one who first brought temptation into the courts of heaven is constantly working against the peace and prosperity of the church on earth. To those who will listen to his words, Satan represents the authority of the church as harsh and lacking in sympathy, because it seeks to free the members from corrupting influences. It was Satan's purpose in heaven to dethrone God, and himself take the place of the Most High. He failed in this purpose, and was cast out from the heavenly courts; and since that time he has tried to instil in the hearts of men and women the belief that God is arbitrary and harsh in his dealings with his creatures.

The church does injustice to God when it allows to exist as part of itself elements that are bringing dishonor to his cause. In the responsibilities God has laid upon his church, he gives to each individual a part to act, with encouragement to draw upon the wisdom of God for his help. But there are those who depart from the way of the Lord, and who take sides with the tempter and his sympathizers; and there should be those in the church who in the fear of God will act with justice and righteousness and faithfulness in administering reproof. Ellen G. White.

A Last-Day Sign

E. H. GATES

While passing through the Strait of Sunda on a recent trip from Singapore to Sumatra, I sighted the island of Krakatoa but a few miles away, the scene of one of the most violent volcanic eruptions of the latter days; in fact, it is said to be one of the greatest of the kind in history. This event took place in 1883, and is known in history as the "Java Earthquake," the island being not many miles from the coast of Java, Sumatra being on the opposite side of the island.

In 1680 there was an eruption at the same place, but less severe than the one under consideration. The convulsion of which I shall write took place Aug. 26-28, 1883. Three months before this the volcano began to show signs of activity by throwing up steam, pumice stone, and dust. August 26 a fearful explosion took place. As a result of the openings made, the sea rushed into the bowels of the earth, and coming in contact with the intense heat raging there, produced other most terrific explosions, which blew away the whole side of the island, leaving a vertical cliff in place of the rounded outline that existed previously. Other islands were formed in the vicinity from the material thrown away from Krakatoa. Stones, dust, and ashes were shot into the air to the height of seventeen miles. The finer and lighter dust reached the higher layers of air, and by these currents was carried to every continent on earth. This red dust suspended in the air produced for many months remarkably brilliant sunsets. At Batavia, one hundred miles away, the air was darkened by the great amount of ashes thrown up, and lamps had to be lighted in the daytime. Such vast quantities of pumice stone were vomited up, that it floated on the sea for hundreds of miles. In fact, when I passed the island, I saw this stone still floating in small quantities.

The air disturbance was world-wide. On this point the Encyclopedia Britannica says: "The culminating paroxysm of Krakatoa on the morning of August 27 gave rise to an atmospheric wave, which, traveling outward from the volcano as a center, became a great circle at 180° from its point of origin, whence it continued traveling onward and contracting until it reached a node at the antipodes to Krakatoa. It was then reflected or reproduced, traveling backward again to the volcano, where it once more returned in its original direction. In this manner its repetition was observed not fewer than seven times at many of the stations, four passages having been those of the wave traveling from Krakatoa, and three of the wave traveling from its antipodes, subsequently to which its traces were lost."

The noise of the explosion was perhaps heard at a greater distance than that of any previous convulsion of nature. The sounds were heard at Batavia, one hundred miles away; at Sourabaya, Java, three hundred fifty miles distant (as the captain of our ship informed me); at Bangkok, Siam, 1,413 miles; as well as in South and West Australia. It was also heard at the Philippine Islands, 1,450 miles distant; at Ceylon, 2,058 miles away; and at Rodriguez, nearly 3,000 miles distant.

The effect of the eruption on the waters of the ocean was equally as remarkable, and was the most disastrous on the near-by shores of Java and Sumatra. The successive explosions raised seas that swept over the land, engulfing and utterly blotting from existence whole towns and villages, with all living creatures in them. In Java 3,600 persons lost their lives. The total loss of life was probably not far from 50,000. The captain of our ship told me that a vessel at anchor at Telok Betong, Sumatra, was carried ten miles inland, and left on a hill forty feet above sea-level, where it can be seen to this day. Even at Cape Horn, nearly 8,000 miles away, the waves were felt.

Within the last two or three years these earth tremors have become more and more frequent, and will in the future constitute one of the most prominent of the last-day tokens. These will culminate in the last "great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great." Then every island (not Krakatoa only) shall flee away, and the mountains shall not be found. Then the cities of the nations shall fall, and great Babylon shall come in remembrance before God to receive from his hand the cup of wrath. At that time the heavens shall depart as a scroll, and the islands and mountains shall be moved out of their places. In the caverns and chasms formed by these mighty convulsions, kings and great men shall vainly try to hide from the face of the Son of God, whose truth they have rejected. Then happy shall be the man who has learned from the lessons of the present disasters the meaning which God intended they should convey.

Lessons from Past Experiences —No. 24

GEO. O. STATES

The light on health reform has come to us step by step as we were able to stand it. In 1865 this word came to us: "The health reform, I was shown, is a part of the third angel's message, and is just as closely connected with it as are the arm and hand with the human body. I saw that we as a people must make an advance move in this great work. Ministers and people must act in concert. God's people are not prepared for the loud cry of the third angel."

It is over forty years since this counsel was given. In that same testimony we were told that we should provide a home for the afflicted, where they may learn how to take care of their bodies that they may prevent sickness. Our people should have an institution, of their

At Sinai

MRS. EDITH B. GOODRICH

"And he gave unto Moses . . . two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God." Ex. 31: 18.

On Sinai's smoking mountain,
'Mid thunder and 'mid flame,
To speak his ten commandments
The Lord in glory came.
So terrible the splendor
That even Moses said,
"Exceedingly I tremble,
And quake with mighty dread."

"Set bounds about the mountain,"
Jehovah gave command,
"And fully warn the people
That all may understand;
Beyond this certain limit
Nor man nor beast may dare
To step upon the mountain
Lest death shall smite him there."

And when the trumpet sounded
Loud, loud, and louder still,
The people trembled greatly,
While awe each soul did fill;
And longer still it sounded,
And louder, yet more loud;
Then Moses spake; Jehovah
Then answered from the cloud.

He spoke his ten commandments,
Inscribed them with his hand
On stone; and these forever
Unchangeable shall stand,
His government's foundation,
His will for all the world,—
The transcript of his nature
To all the earth unfurled.

But — what! Has man dared alter
That written by his Lord?
Dared meddle with one precept,
Destroying the accord?
Think well! At Sinai's mountain
Jehovah did declare,
"The seventh day is Sabbath,"
And has he changed it? — Where?

. . . . .

O soul, pause long! Consider!
If light to thee is given,
Arise, obey thy Maker:
How else canst thou gain heaven?

Teaching the Sabbath Truth

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) THE days in which we live are times that call for constant vigilance, times in which God's people should be awake to do a great work in presenting the light on the Sabbath question. They should arouse, and warn the inhabitants of the world that Christ is soon coming the second time with power and great glory.

Satan is actively at work in every place, calling men and women to his service. He is working vigilantly to bring in his soul-destroying theories. Shall we be less earnest and active than he? God forbid; while the enemy of truth is using his powers to deceive and discourage, and to destroy the power of the messages that God would have come to his people, let those who have received the light discern the signs of the times and the fulfilment of prophecy, and arouse to earnest effort. O that I could say something to arouse those who profess to be the people of God to believe that the word of God is to stand forever!

This is a time for the Lord's servants to work with undiminished zeal to carry the third angel's message to all parts of the world. The work of this message is spreading far and near; yet we should not feel satisfied, but hasten to carry to thousands more the truth regarding the perpetuity of the law of Jehovah. From all our institutions of learning, from our publishing houses, from our sanitariums, the message is to be proclaimed. The people of God everywhere are to be aroused to cooperate in the great, grand work represented by the first, second, and third angel's messages. (1) This last warning to the inhabitants of the earth is to make men see the importance God attaches to his holy law. So plainly is the truth to be presented, that no transgressor, hearing it, shall fail to discern the importance of obedience to the Sabbath commandment.

"The Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you: every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

"Six days may work be done; but the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed.

"And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon Mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God." (2) There are abundant evidences of the immutability of God's law. It was written with the finger of God, never to be obliterated, never to be destroyed. The tables of stone are hidden by God, to be produced in the great judgment-day, just as he wrote them.

I am instructed to say to our people, Gather together from the Scriptures the proofs that God has sanctified the Sabbath, and let the words of the Lord be read before the congregations, showing that all who turn aside from a plain "Thus saith the Lord" will be condemned. The Sabbath has been the test of the loyalty of God's people in all ages. "It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever," the Lord declares.

In giving the word of God to the people, there is nothing to be argued. The word of the Lord is given for the observance of the seventh day; let this word be given to the people, and not the words of men. In so doing you throw the burden of responsibility upon those who reject it; and the arguments of opposers are arguments against the specifications of the word. While you exalt a "Thus saith the Lord," the controversy is not with the worker, but with God.

(1) There is work for all to do in order that the simple truths of the Word of God may be made known. The words of Scripture should be printed and published just as they read. It would be well if the nineteenth and the greater portion of the twentieth chapters of Exodus, with verses twelve to eighteen of the thirty-first chapter, were printed just as they stand. Crowd these truths into small books and pamphlets, and let the word of God speak to the people. When a discourse concerning the law is preached that is right to the point, if you have any means of doing so, get it into a printed leaflet. Then when those who plead for Sunday laws meet you, place these leaflets in their hands. Tell them that you have no discussion over the Sunday question; for you have a plain "Thus saith the Lord" for the keeping of the seventh day.

The apostle Jude writes: "Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained unto this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . Remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; how that they told you that there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit. But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life."

The people who profess to believe in the soon coming of Christ to judge the earth, should be thoroughly aroused to the situation. They should examine their own hearts and lives, to see if they stand in the position to which Jude, the servant of Christ, calls them. Physicians and ministers should be assured that they are themselves keeping the commandments of God; for this they must do if they would be saved in his kingdom. If we lose heaven, we lose everything. Then let us, in this time of proving, weed out from our characters everything that would exclude us from the city of God. Let us remember that our hearts and minds are to be purified by obedience to the truth.

(1) Evangelism p. 232

(2) Commentary, Vol. 1 p. 1109

I urge my brethren and sisters to read their Bibles as they have never yet read them. The evidences that we are in the last days are being given us right in our own ranks. Some who have become self-sufficient, and have rejected the counsel of the Lord, are being left to follow their own human judgment. Let those who have been influenced by the words and works of such, discern the signs of the times, and see in these men the very ones of whom the apostles have warned us. And as we see these predictions being fulfilled before our eyes, may we be led to a more earnest study of the Scriptures, and to a determination to believe and to teach the word of the living God.

Annual Offering for the Aged Poor and Orphans

W. H. THURSTON

The time is at hand for another offering for the aged poor and orphans among us. "Ye have the poor with you always," said the Master, "and whensoever ye will ye may do them good." The first Sabbath in April is the time appointed to do good to the worthy poor and orphans by contributing of our means which the Lord has entrusted to us.

Anciently the Lord instructed his people that the poor should never cease out of the land, and provisions were made to care for them. They were commanded to open the hand wide to their brethren, to the poor and to the needy in the land. This was a blessing to the giver, for it is a declaration of the Bible that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Thus the poor and needy were supplied from the abundance of those who had possessions. There are still, and always will be, the poor and needy in the land, and they are to be looked after and provided for by those who are in a condition to share with them.

Doubtless all will remember that plans were formulated a year ago whereby each union conference would provide places and care for the aged poor and orphans in its territory. This we believe to be an equitable adjustment, and satisfactory to all. This being understood, we will now come forward with our offerings to supply the needs of those dependent upon us, the Lord's children. "For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." So let us all be representatives of those on his right hand, the blessed, and be a blessing to the poor and needy by a liberal offering. Let all give as the Lord has prospered them, and then we can only say, "Of thine own have we given thee." "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord."

Let all remember the date, April 4, the first Sabbath in April. Let us come up to this day with thanksgiving, pay our vows unto the Most High, and contribute freely to the homeless and helpless and to the aged poor in our land. Any members of the "little flock" who do not have the privilege of assembling with the believers, may send their offerings to the treasurer of the church of which they are members, or direct to the treasurer of the conference in case they have not yet united with any church. These offerings should all be sent through the proper channel to the union conference treasurer.

What Is Modernism?

J. O. CORLISS

The terms "Modernism," and "Modernist" are of themselves modern, as applied to religious dogmas. The phase of religious thought which has been christened by this name was set forth in a late issue of the New York Independent as "the most important and most ominous event in the history of the Christian church that has appeared since the declaration of the dogma of infallibility by the Vatican Council."

It can not be denied that the movement has stirred the religious world to its very foundation, and many theories as to its meaning and outcome have issued from the press of various countries. Many seem to regard the matter in an ominous light, though none of the general statements so far have given any very definite reasons for their views. To the earnest student of prophecy, however, the movement means more than it can to those who reason about it from a purely philosophical standpoint. These see in it a war of religious opinion, which will prove a test to all the inhabitants of the nations.

This controversy, into which the whole religious world seems disposed to enter, has been started within the fold of the Roman Catholic Church, the largest communion of professed believers in Christ, in all the earth. One thing which gives so much prominence to the affair has been the general belief that the will of the pope of Rome has, by force of the most complete religious organization known, extended to, and entirely swayed the impulses of, the most remote member of the Church of Rome. So far, however, from this being true, the Roman curia have dicovered enough heresy in the church to oblige the pope to issue an encyclical condemning every one who does not believe the medieval doctrines of the church, which were made the test of heresy during the Middle Ages.

This document brands Modernism as "the synthesis of all heresies," and, in order to stamp it out, the papacy recommends inquisitorial methods in all schools whatsoever. Subversive books are thus to be torn from the hands of the laity; suspected teachers are to be deprived of their holdings, and college professors are to be driven from their chairs. And further, error of all kinds is to be combatted "even to the shedding of blood." All this, that the least taint of this most hateful doctrine may be wiped out. Prof. Charles A. Briggs, in a late issue of the New York Independent, says very aptly that "this encyclical divides the Catholic Church throughout the world more distinctly than it ever has been divided before into irreconcilable camps, between which a war of extermination has been declared."

That which gives some force to Professor Briggs' statement is the contention of the Modernists that the encyclical has grossly misrepresented their positions. This is not the place to review the technical differences between the papacy and its antagonists. The gist of the matter is that the opponents of the papacy deny the infallibility of the pope, hence disclaim his right to bear absolute sway over the consciences of men. They therefore advocate the reconstruction of the church government, on a constitutional and democratic basis.

Modernism is not a system of well-defined doctrines to which all liberal Catholics subscribe. On the other hand, while each representative of the offending ones, like Josef Müllet of Bavaria, Abbé Müller of Munich, the archbishops of Algiers and Avignon, the bishop of Tarentaise, in France, Father Tyrrell of England, besides many Italian, French, German, and even American church notables, maintains his own personal views regarding particular tenets of faith, like average higher critics, all are agreed on the question of reform in the church government.

Now as to how this controversy is affecting those "higher up" among so-called Protestants. These see much to be commended in the positions of the Modernists, as stated by themselves. For instance, they claim that every man has the right "to work for the common good, in the way he thinks best, without troubling himself about the authority of the church." This sentiment seems to appeal to many Protestants as the only reasonable thing, and makes them feel like drawing nearer to the doctrines of Modernists. In other words, every man having an independent doctrine, feels that he can heartily unite with a movement which lets him believe what he chooses, and yet holds him in bonds of fellowship. This sentiment is now in the very air men breathe, and is permeating the real vitals of religious impulse everywhere.

This seems indeed to suggest the

"Stablished in the Faith"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

A MESSAGE from the Lord has been given me for the churches that claim to believe the truth for these days. I am bidden to say to you, Study carefully the parable of the talents. This parable, spoken by the lips of the greatest of teachers, was given us as an object-lesson.

The light of present truth is a precious talent lent to God's people by him who is truth. It is not to be hoarded, but constantly imparted. The Lord desires that his professed people shall themselves profit by the truths received. It is given, first for their own development — of heart and mind and affections; then for the help and enlightenment of those in the darkness of unbelief.

In this age the Lord is sending his servants with no ordinary message, but with special truths that must come before believers of every rank and tongue. Many of our church-members have never studied fully into the more sure word of prophecy, and do not understand the facts that have made us what we are. All should bring into exercise the powers of the intellect, that they may clearly understand the different phases of present truth, and especially the subjects of prophecy which were opened to us when the message of Christ's soon coming was first heralded.

We are living in a time when, the Word of God declares, Satan will come down with great power, to work with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish. He will work with such subtilty and power that, if it were possible, he would deceive the very elect. God's professed people need to heed the danger signals, and ever be on the watch.

A great danger threatens us in the influence of some who have not followed on step by step to know the Lord. False doctrines have come into our ranks in some places, doctrines that are creating a careless neglect to keep the way of the Lord. There are among us men who in the past God has used to his name's glory, but who are now being ensnared by Satan's deceptions. Many who once prized the truth, because they have refused to heed the instruction God has sent, have become independent and full of self-justification. These men are not to be entrusted as guides for us or for our youth.

"The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, Stand in the gate of the Lord's house, and proclaim there this word, and say, Hear the word of the Lord, all ye of Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship the Lord. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place. Trust ye not in lying words, saying, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, are these."

The Jews flattered themselves that in spite of departure from him, the Lord would protect from injury their temple and those who worshiped in it. They put their trust in outward advantages, and overlooked the necessity of purity of character, which alone God could bless. "Trust ye not in lying words," the prophet declared, "saying, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, are these. For if ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings; if ye thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbor; if ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, neither walk after other gods to your hurt: then will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers, forever and ever."

"Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: Put your burnt-offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh. For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices: but this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you. And they harkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the counsels and in the imagination of their evil heart, and went backward, and not forward. Since the day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day I have even sent unto you all my servants the prophets, daily rising up early and sending them: yet they harkened not unto me, nor inclined their ear, but hardened their neck: they did worse than their fathers."

When men's hearts are softened and subdued by the working of the Holy Spirit, they will give heed to counsel; but when they turn away from the admonitions of the Lord, their hearts gradually become hardened until all their religious service is tainted with self. When men thus turn away from reproofs and warnings because they do not want to hear or receive truth that condemns their course of action, the Lord leaves them to be led by other influences. Because they refuse the truth, he allows them to accept falsehoods which become snares to their own destruction. They are given over to blindness of eyes and hardness of heart.

I call upon our churches to heed the warnings that have been coming to us for years. Let us remember that God lives and reigns, and let this thought lead us to walk humbly and trustingly before him. Our chief study should be how we can best glorify God. The servant of God whose life and character reflect most of the likeness of Christ is the one who will bring to God the greatest honor.

My brethren and sisters, keep your lamps trimmed and burning. If you will cling steadfastly to a "Thus saith the Lord," you will learn the science of true education. Those teachings and questions that arise that have not for their authority a "Thus saith the Lord," let them be unrepeated by you. We need, dear people of God, a modest simplicity, and a great increase of faith. We need to have the soul-temple cleansed, that the Holy Spirit may come in and take up his abode with us. We are to stand forth in the world to the praise of him who has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light.

There comes to our people at this time the exhortation and warning: "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power."

The Light-Keeper's Cry

M. B. VAN KIRK

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? harken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness." Isa. 55: 1, 2.

The Master Hath Need of Thee

NANNIE BEAUCHAMP JONES

The Lord is calling, is calling to me,
"Lift up your eyes, look abroad and see,
The harvest is ripe, the laborers few,
And now I am calling, am calling for you."

Voices are calling from over the sea,
And hands stretch out to you and to me;
"Come over and help us, O give us the light
E're falleth the shadow of endless night."

I list the call from over the sea,
Lifting and drifting o'er mountain and lea;
'Tis the voice of my Saviour, O how can I stay
While souls are sinking along the bleak way?

"Unto One of the Least"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?"

The occasion was one on which Christ was surrounded by a large company of people. In the crowd were Pharisees and Sadducees, priests and lawyers, there in the hope of catching something in Christ's words that they might report to the Jewish authorities, and thus cause his work to cease. It was at the suggestion of these enemies that the lawyer asked the Saviour the question, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?"

As an open book Christ read the heart of the plotters, and looking at the lawyer, he asked, "What is written in the law? how readest thou?" And the lawyer answered, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." "Thou hast answered right," said Christ; "this do, and thou shalt live."

The lawyer had not obeyed this precept, and he knew it; but, desiring to justify himself, he asked, "Who is my neighbor?"

In reply Christ related an incident with which many of those present were familiar. "A certain man," he said, "went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.

"And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side. And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked at him, and passed by on the other side.

"But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

"And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee."

In the word-picture which the Saviour draws for his hearers, a sharp contrast is drawn. A certain man in his journey is attacked by thieves, robbed and wounded, and then left by the roadside to die. A priest, passing that way, comes to the place where the man lies, and though seeing his need, passes on without rendering any aid. Another passes, a Levite, whose special office it was to care for the sick and suffering, but he, as he looks at the wounded man, does not think of his duty, but of self. He sees, where the clothing has been stripped from the man, that his naked body is bruised and bleeding; but instead of giving the help it is in his power to give, he hurries from the scene, leaving the sufferer to his misery.

Then a certain Samaritan comes to the place. And when he sees him, he has "compassion on him." He binds up his wounds; and when he has done all that he can for the sufferer in such a place, he sets him on his own beast, and, walking beside, leads the way to the nearest tavern. There he cares for the sick man through the night, and in the morning, places him in the care of the keeper of the inn, asking him to care for him until his return, when he will surely repay him.

The Samaritan fulfilled his duty to his fellow man. The priest and the Levite, in whose hearts selfishness reigned, proved themselves unkind and unmerciful. Self is a hard tyrant, and while this power rules in the life, we can not do unto others as we would have them do to us. To fulfil the golden rule, the life must be transformed, the human nature must become a partaker of the divine.

The people had listened with intense interest to the narrative, and when at its close the Saviour asked, "Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him that fell among thieves?" Many joined with the lawyer in answering, "He that showed mercy on him." Then said Jesus to the lawyer, "Go, and do thou likewise."

The parable of the good Samaritan outlines true missionary work, and in this work God's people are all to have a part. No one is excused who neglects the duty he owes to his fellow men. In doing this work we fulfil the law of God. The Lord has pledged himself to bless those who fulfil his command to love him supremely and their neighbor as themselves.

It is not talk, it is not profession, or claims to piety and godliness, that are of value with God, but it is the work of righteousness that reveals a Christlike character. To obey the law of God means to be quick to see the necessities of our fellow beings, and quick to help them without stopping to inquire, Do they believe the same doctrines that I believe? To obey God's law means to act as God's helping hand in relieving the necessities of suffering humanity, no matter what the religious belief of those in need. Those who do this work, and who are loyal to the principles of God's truth, are living the gospel.

The Lord takes careful notice of deeds of compassion and mercy shown by men to their fellow men. In his book of remembrance is written down every deed of mercy performed. "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."

The Saviour devoted more time and labor to healing the afflicted of their maladies than to preaching. His last injunction to his apostles, his representatives on the earth, was that they lay hands on the sick that they might recover. When the Master shall come again, he will commend those who have visited the sick and relieved the necessities of the afflicted. "I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat," he will say to those at his right hand. "I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. . . . Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Importance of Walking in the Light

G. B. THOMPSON

The Saviour says, "Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you." To abide in the light we must continually walk in the light. This means a present, living experience. A dead experience of the past is of no value to us now. Many may be able to say, "I have run through a troop; and by my God have I leaped over a wall." But this will do no good unless it is a present, personal reality.

It is comparatively easy to trust in an experience of the past, to a time when we were sure that the light of the Lord's countenance shone upon us. But this may prove a snare not only to ourselves, but to others as well. It is natural to conclude that because we were once chosen of the Lord as a leader and teacher in his work, and great blessings were brought through our labor to many souls, we are still in the light. But this is not conclusive evidence. It all depends upon whether or not we have continued to walk in the light. It is possible to change leaders imperceptibly, and thus

Higher Ground

JOHN M. HOPKINS

"Take your stand on higher ground."—Mrs. E. G. White.

Higher, higher, ever higher,
  Let this word your motto be;
Greater knowledge, greater wisdom,
  More of Christ and purity.

Difficulties may assail you,
  Trials in your path abound,
But make every seeming hindrance
  Stepping-stones to higher ground.

Higher, higher, ever higher,
  Nothing less should satisfy.
To exalted heights aspire;
  Ever on your God rely.

Do not weakly faint or falter;
  Grasp the next ascending round
In the ladder reaching upward
  Unto higher, holier ground.

Let not earthly, vain allurements
  E'er entice your soul away;
These can charm but to deceive you,
  They are fleeting as the day.

But in wisdom, truth, and virtue,
  Purest, lasting joys are found;
These will be your crown of glory,
  "Take your stand on higher ground."

In this holy, grand endeavor,
  Heaven will help you, God will bless;
He can make severest trials
  Means of blessing and success.

Then arise, gird on the armor,
  Ever in the right be found;
Let this motto be your watchword:
  "Take your stand on higher ground."

Thus your life will prove a blessing,
  As you daily pass along,
By the love of God expressing
  In your service, in your song;

And when ends your earthly mission,
  With your banner victory-crowned,
You may still with Christ in glory
  "Take your stand on higher ground."

"So Have I Sent Them"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

God has given me a message for his people. Those who claim to be Bible Christians, if they are daily under the converting power of the Holy Spirit, will cherish a spirit of brotherly kindness. Their words and actions will testify that they are followers of the lowly Jesus; their lives will be marked by a spirit of service.

There are among church-members those whose habits and practises reveal that they have not come out fully from under the banner of rebellion. Brethren and sisters, this ought not so to be. The Lord wants us to appreciate the privilege we have of being good and of doing good. He wants us to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. It is our privilege to sit at the feet of him in whom is no sin, then to go forth to labor with him for the uplifting of our fellow men.

The blood-bought souls of Jesus Christ are to recognize the right of every man to be a sharer in the blessings of the gospel. Our fellow men have personal and social rights; they have claims upon our sympathy and love. The Lord makes a demand upon our services to help the needy and oppressed to the utmost of our ability. We are to learn to value souls as Christ values them, aside from all difference of circumstance and rank. Brethren, let us carry a burden for the weak and poor. Let us give them proof of our sympathy. And let us not withhold our encouragement from those who are laboring in hard portions of the Master's vineyard.

Every true Christian will be a missionary; for he will look upon himself as the servant of Christ. In that wonderful prayer of Christ recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John, the Saviour prayed, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." As Christ was a missionary from a higher world to this, so his followers are to be missionaries, teaching the truth of the gospel by precept and example, showing men and women how to live righteous and godly lives in this present evil world.

"For this cause came I into the world," Christ declared to Pilate, "that I should bear witness unto the truth." No true disciple of Christ can be silent in regard to the message of truth. As missionaries of the cross, they will lift up Christ as the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.

"Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth," the Saviour prayed. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

When the light that God sends to his people is appreciated, they will not walk in darkness. For them the true Light shines, and not for them alone, but for those also with whom they are brought into association. "A city that is set on a hill," Christ said, "can not be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Brethren, does your light shine to all that are in the house? Or do you seek to hide your light when you are in the presence of worldlings? Remember that light is given you that through you others may receive its blessings. You are to let it shine in the words you speak, in the spirit you manifest, in the deeds you do. The light of truth received by you should make you Christ's representative, wherever you are.

The knowledge of the truth for this time brings with it a wonderful responsibility. It calls for the revelation of the grace of obedience, and a rising up from our former selfishness to a life of service for Christ. It appeals to us to be wholly on the Lord's side, to take our position for truth and righteousness. We all need to engage in the work of self-examination if we would be ready to meet the Lord when he comes. We need to learn to be Christians in the home, in every walk of life, to take up the cross, and bear it after Christ.

In our endeavors to form characters after the divine similitude, we shall meet with trial. There will be crosses to be borne, but in these experiences we may have the sympathies and help of heavenly angels. They are sent forth to minister unto them that shall be heirs of salvation. My brethren and sisters, lift the cross of self-denial and self-sacrifice. Cling closely to the precious Saviour. Let your daily life bring honor to God. By your words and your works reveal that you have one great object in view. Christ is soon coming, and souls are perishing in ignorance and sin. Let it be yours to give these souls the message of salvation. When the purifying, refining influence of the truth is felt in our own lives as it should be, we shall reveal in our works the fruits of righteousness.

Probationary time will soon close. We have but little longer in which to make known the truth for this time. That which we do must be done quickly, or it will be forever too late. Souls are perishing all around us without a knowledge of God and his last message of mercy to men. Now is our time to leave no opportunity unimproved to seek and to save the lost, no word unspoken that will shed light and knowledge on our fellow men. Brethren, labor on, while the day lasts. The night cometh when no man can work. If we refuse to do the work to which our knowledge of present truth calls us, who will do it?

The Sacredness of the Gospel Ministry

W. J. FITZGERALD

We are living in a time of false standards and improper measurements. Everything, even human life, is estimated commercially, and a money value is placed upon it. All religious barriers and restraints are ruthlessly swept aside by the ever-increasing tide of worldliness that is submerging the professed church of God. Those things formerly regarded as sacred have come to be treated as secular. A secular stamp prominently marks everything that presents itself to

Wait for God

O soul, so sore oppressed
And fraught with pain,
So burdened and distressed
With struggles vain,
Thy struggling cease, and fix thy hope in God,
And meekly bow beneath the chastening rod,
And wait for God.

Thy soul must needs be still,
And patient wait;
God's holy, sovereign will
Shall fix thy fate:
The holy things of God belong to God;
Thy constant part to pray and hope and plod,
And wait for God.

If thou hast wrought and prayed
As if in vain,
Let no rash zeal invade
God's own domain;
Thy part to plant and till the stubborn sod,
And keep the path that patient faith has trod,
And wait for God.

To wait is not of sloth,
But doing well;
For faith and works are both
The powers that tell.
Thine is to be and do thy very best,
And leave with God to be and do the rest —
But wait for God.

Ministering with Faithfulness and Simplicity

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The work of the faithful minister is no child's play: earnest, untiring effort is required to wrench the prey from the hands of the enemy. But God will sustain his servants in the work that he himself has committed to their hands. Whatever the trials and difficulties that the ambassador of Christ may have to meet, it is his privilege to carry them all to God in prayer. He can weep between the porch and the altar, pleading, "Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach." And by the study of the Scriptures, and earnest, wrestling prayer, he may become "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." (2)

Christ said to his disciples, as they toiled by the sea of Galilee, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." When the gospel net is cast, there should be watching by the net, with tears and earnest prayers. Let the workers determine not to let the net go until it is drawn ashore, with the fruit of their labor. Sometimes they may be compelled to say, with Peter, "We have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing;" but still it is the Master's command, as of old, "Cast the net on the right side of the ship;" work on in faith, and God will give success. Though at times we may feel discouraged as we see how many obstacles there are in the way of Christian living, and how slowly the work of God seems to advance, our duty remains the same.

The minister's duty is not done when he has preached the truth from the desk. As a shepherd of the flock, he should care for the sheep and the lambs, searching out the lost and straying, and bringing them back to the fold. He should visit every family, not merely as a guest to enjoy their hospitality, but to inquire into the spiritual condition of every member of the household. His own soul must be imbued with the love of God; then by kindly courtesy he may win his way to the hearts of all, and labor successfully for parents and children. He is to sow the seeds of truth beside all waters. (1) [Let him seek to keep the church alive by teaching its members how to labor with him for the conversion of sinners. This is good generalship; and the result will be found far better than if he should seek to perform the work alone.]

To all our ministers I would say, Encourage your brethren to connect with you in your labors. All the gifts and talents of the church are to be set to work. Let all desire on the part of any to have a controling power be put away. There has been danger with some of marking out exactly what this or that man should do. Let the Lord do this work, and guide his own servants. "We are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." Give the Lord room to work human minds. Give the workers abundant freedom to work out the plans of God in harmony with their brethren. This will save much overwork for the few. Let the strong traits of character that would lead to the control of others be subdued by the grace of Christ. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

The command comes to us as a people from the highest authority: "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee." The spirit of Christ will be upon all who will walk with God in humility of heart.

A constant effort to promote personal piety should be seen in all our public labors. [It is harder to reach the hearts of men to-day than it was twenty years ago. The most convincing arguments may be presented, and yet sinners seem as far from salvation as ever. Ministers should not preach sermon after sermon on doctrinal subjects alone. Practical godliness should find a place in every discourse.]

(3) [Dwell not on the negative points of questions that arise, but gather to your minds affirmative truths, and fasten them there by much study and earnest prayer and heart-consecration. Keep your lamps trimmed and burning; and let bright rays shine forth, that men, beholding your good works, may be led to glorify your Father which is in heaven.

The Great Teacher held in his hand the entire map of truth, but he did not disclose it all to his disciples. He opened to them those subjects only which were essential for their advancement in the path to heaven. There were many things in regard to which his wisdom kept him silent. As Christ withheld many things from his first disciples, knowing that then it would be impossible for them to comprehend them, so to-day he withholds many things from us, knowing the capacity of our understanding.] (3)

When we are tempted to climb above the simplicity of the truth, we need to study Christ's method of teaching. We need to learn to talk as simply as Christ talked,— so simply that the little child and the unlearned can understand us. It was the simplicity with which Christ presented the word that drew hearts to him. Yet he spoke with assurance and power. Noblemen and some of the chief priests and rulers believed on his word.

We are to work as Christ worked. We are to move carefully. We are not to pour out ideas that contradict the light that God has given; neither are we to follow methods that are opposed to his will. Let us tread in Christ's footsteps. As we follow him, we may know that we are walking in the pathway of light.

Who Governs the World?

T. E. BOWEN

This question has long been one of controversy, both in heaven and upon earth. One text of Scripture affords us a very decisive answer. It reads: "For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of peace." Isa. 9: 6.

There has arisen one who contests this statement. He claims the rule of this earth. When these two met, face to face, Satan disputed the right of this Son given unto us, this Child born unto us, to rule, or in any way intrude into the government of the world. He assumed the entire control of earth's affairs. Addressing Christ, he said: "If thou wilt fall down and worship me," "all these things will I give thee." But the Prince of peace neither bowed down nor admitted that this usurper had complete control of affairs.

It is true that Satan has been permitted to occupy Adam's place as prince of this world for a time,— from the beginning up until such time as the Son was given to us,— and has not been entirely banished even since Christ became our representative in heaven itself. But he could not hold authority above that which Adam himself had. And Adam in the beginning was placed

The Sabbath

MAY WAKEHAM

'TIS Sabbath eve, and in the west
The golden sun has sunk to rest.
Now silent falls the evening shade
O'er vale and hill, o'er field and glade.

The graceful fir bends in the breeze;
The birds chirp softly in the trees;
A sacred hush, a gentle peace,
Bid man from earthly cares to cease.

A call to praise, a call to prayer,
Seem floating on the quiet air;
And angel whispers from above
Bring messages of hope and love.

'Tis holy time, God's day of rest;
'Twas made by him, by him 'twas blest;
In paradise this boon was given,
A binding link 'twixt earth and heaven.

O Sabbath eve! in thy sweet calm
The troubled spirit finds a balm,
And Heaven bends low the soul to greet
Alone with God in converse sweet.

May all thy hours, sweet day of rest,
Be welcome to this troubled breast
Until, life's voyage forever o'er,
We greet thee on yon golden shore.

The Promise of the Spirit

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I HAVE felt that we do not pray as much as we should. There is nothing more needed in the work than the practical results of communion with God. We should hold convocations for prayer, asking the Lord to open the way for the truth to enter the strongholds where Satan has set up his throne, and dispel the shadow he has cast athwart the pathway of those whom he is seeking to deceive and destroy. We have the assurance, "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

We need a firm reliance upon God if we would be saved from the power of Satanic influences. If we will keep close to the teachings of the Word, its truths will be our safeguard from the delusions of these last days. We need to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Why do we not rely more trustingly upon the grace and power of Christ? Why do we not believe with all our hearts? We have a Friend in the courts of heaven who assures us, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."

The Christian church began its existence by praying for the Holy Spirit. It was in its infancy, without the personal presence of Christ. Just before his ascension Christ had commissioned the disciples to preach the gospel to the world. "Ye shall receive power," he said, "after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high."

In obedience to the word of their Master, the disciples returned to Jerusalem, and for ten days they prayed for the fulfilment of God's promise. These ten days were days of deep heart-searching. The disciples put away all difference that had existed among them, and drew close together in Christian fellowship. As they prayed, they realized what a privilege they had had in being permitted to associate so closely with Christ. Sadness filled their hearts as they thought of how many times they had grieved his heart of love by their failure to understand the lessons that for their good he had been trying to teach them.

At the end of the ten days the Lord fulfilled his promise by a wonderful outpouring of his Spirit. When they were "all with one accord in one place" in prayer and supplication, the promised blessing came. "Suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."

In the heavenly courts, Christ, with the angels who had accompanied him to heaven, had been received. All the heavenly intelligences joined in this coronation service of their Lord. The pentecostal outpouring upon the disciples was heaven's communication to them that his inauguration was complete.

The multitude who had come together, when they heard the disciples "speak with other tongues," were amazed at the divine manifestation. Some were in doubt, and said one to another, "What meaneth this? Others mocking said, These men are full of new wine." But this was the power of the Holy Spirit. "Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and harken unto my words: for these men are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; and it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy: and I will show wonders in the heavens above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke: the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come: and it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved."

"And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and of prayers. And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles. And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added unto the church daily such as should be saved."

Christ has made provision that his church shall be a transformed body. illumined with the light of heaven, possessing the glory of Immanuel. It is his purpose that every Christian shall be surrounded with a spiritual atmosphere of light and peace. There is no limit to the usefulness of the one who, putting self aside, makes room for the working of the Holy Spirit upon the heart, and lives a life wholly consecrated to God.

What was the result of the outpouring of the Spirit upon the day of Pentecost? — The glad tidings of a risen Saviour were carried to the utmost bounds of the inhabited world. The hearts of the disciples were surcharged with the benevolence so full, so deep, so far-reaching, that it impelled them to go to the ends of the earth, testifying, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." As they proclaimed the truth as it is in Jesus, hearts yielded to the power of the message. The church beheld converts flocking to her from all directions. Backsliders were reconverted. Sinners united with Christians in seeking the pearl of great price. Those who had been the bitterest opponents of the gospel became its champions. The prophecy was fulfilled, that the weak shall be "as David," and the house of David "as the angel of the Lord." Every Christian saw in his brother the divine similitude of love and benevolence. One interest prevailed. One subject of emulation swallowed up all others. The only ambition of the believers was to reveal the likeness of Christ's character and to labor for the enlargement of his kingdom.

Notice that it was after the disciples had come into perfect unity, when they were no longer striving for the highest place, that the Spirit was poured out. They were of one accord. All differences had been put away. And the testimony borne of them after the Spirit had been given was the same. Mark the word: "The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one soul." The spirit of Him who died that sinners might live animated the entire congregation of believers.

Christ declared that the divine influence of the Spirit was to be with his followers to the end of time. But the promise is not appreciated as it should be; and therefore its fulfilment is not seen as it might be. With many the promise of the Spirit is a matter little thought of; and the result is only what might be expected,— spiritual drought, spiritual darkness, spiritual declension and death. Minor matters occupy the attention, and the divine power which is necessary for the growth and prosperity of the church, and which would bring all other blessings in its train, is lacking, though offered in its infinite plentitude.

It is the absence of the Spirit that makes the gospel ministry so powerless. Learning, talent, eloquence, every natural or acquired endowment, may be possessed; but without the presence of the Spirit of God, no heart will be touched, no sinner won to Christ. On the other hand, if they are connected with Christ, if the gifts of the Spirit are theirs, the poorest and most ignorant of his disciples will have power that will tell upon hearts. God makes them channels for the outflowing of the highest influence in the universe.

My brethren and sisters, plead for the Holy Spirit. God stands back of every promise he has made. With your Bibles in your hands say, "I have done as thou hast said. I present thy promise, 'Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.'" Christ declares, "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son."

Preparation to Meet God

S. B. WHITNEY

A preparation for the Lord's coming is of the first and greatest importance to every human being just now. In it is included every duty and privilege connected with Christian life and experience. No development nor activity of Christian living can be named which is not included in the character of one who is ready to meet the Lord when he comes. The sum total of this preparation is expressed in the one word, holiness, or wholeness; in another word, perfection.

This wholeness, or perfection, is nothing short of the righteousness of Christ, of which the perfect and holy law of God is the standard. Therefore it must consist in a perfect obedience to that perfect law, or keeping the "commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."

The eternal purpose of God is that ultimately the inhabitants of this world shall be "holy and without blame before him in love," and this is the object for which the elect are chosen. Eph. 1:4. God sent his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, "that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us" (Rom. 8:3, 4); and without holiness no man shall see the Lord. Heb. 12:14. The one hundred forty-four thousand will be "without fault before the throne of God." Rev. 14:5.

But how is this righteous character to be obtained? Not by any good deeds that we may do. Any attempt to secure that righteousness by efforts of ours, will be only to put on "filthy rags" instead of "white raiment," to linger in bondage, instead of emerging into the liberty of the children of God. But when by faith we take Christ with his righteousness into our hearts and lives, the "law of the Spirit of life," which is in him, makes us free from the "law of sin and death" (Rom. 8:2); and we enter into the relations of the new covenant, whereby the law of God is put into our minds and written on our hearts. Heb. 8:10. Then, and then only, there will be no condemnation; then the fruits of faith will appear; then shall we have a righteousness which will be witnessed by the law and the prophets (Rom. 3:21), and will give us a "right to the tree of life," and an entrance "through the gates into the city." Rev. 22:14.

Why Should We Move?

WM. COVERT

Probably no people in civilized lands move more than do Seventh-day Adventists. Many churches are weakened, and some broken up each year, because of this moving spirit. Large sums of money are expended in this way every season in transportation. Much time is also consumed, and business given up, because of their moving. Household goods and other belongings are injured, or sold at a sacrifice in every exchange of the family home. Our churches and conferences are frequently discouraged and embarrassed by this unsettled spirit. But it is urged that our people should get out of the cities with their families, and establish schools in the country. This is correct; still the cities are not to be abandoned by us; for there are thousands living in them who must yet be reached, and saved by the everlasting gospel that is to be brought to them through the preaching of the third angel's message. Nothing in the Testimonies is more emphatically urged than the importance of laboring now for the people in the large cities of America. The whole situation should be weighed, and all the Testimonies bearing on the subject studied together.

The object of our schools is to provide laborers for the gospel field, and advanced students while attending these schools are to do evangelistic work for the people in the cities. Moving is necessary in order that laborers be properly distributed in different parts of the great harvest-field; but such moving should be directed by churches, conferences, and mission boards, so that qualified persons may be placed in the various fields according to their needs. Divine wisdom is required for such appointments, and they should by all means be made in harmony with the gospel plan of organization and with wise counsel.

Abraham was separated from relatives, and moved out of his native country, but the Lord gave special directions about it. The children of Israel were moved from Egypt to Canaan, but God planned the Exodus and led in the moving.

Present truth must now be given by messengers preaching it unto all the world; but the question still to be asked is, "How shall they preach except they be sent?" The sending should be done by proper authority. The membership of the early church at Jerusalem was allowed to be scattered because it became congested, and was too local in its operations; but the Lord kept his hand upon the situation, and took care of the result, so as to bring good to his cause out of it; those who "were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." In our own times, and connected with our own work, there has been some well-advised moving for the betterment of the cause. The Battle Creek College was moved from Battle Creek to Berrien Springs, but the Lord gave specific directions both as to the moving and the location. The Review and Herald publishing interests and the General Conference headquarters were moved from Battle Creek to Washington, D. C.; but the Lord through his Spirit gave definite counsel, which was followed by his servants who had that work in charge. Scores of missions have been established, and hundreds of laborers have gone abroad, but plans have been followed, and system has been observed, in doing these things. The burden of moving workers should and will continue, but the best interests of the cause can not be well served by irregularities in this matter. The Lord may sometimes bless an independent move because of his supreme goodness and for the truth's sake, which at times is carried in this manner; but order and harmony is the Lord's established way, and it is better at all times to follow God's order.

The Testimonies advise moving some members when churches become congested, or when one has imbibed the habit of criticizing others, yet it would be better for all concerned to follow kind counsel in all such cases. "Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory." "Without counsel purposes fail."

But aside from all the moving which is after the Lord's regulations, there is a much larger volume of it done by the people without counsel. And here is where the injury is seen. Some move to a far-off place, where but few people live, because cheap land can be secured in such places. In this way many are leaving densely populated districts, where there are multitudes who should hear the truth, and are locating where they can have but little opportunity in the way of giving the message. They read some glowing advertisement written by hired experts about lands which are described as exceedingly fertile, with a climate all that mortals could wish.

My Soul's Cry

COLD is the world, O Jesus!
  Naught but thy love can show
The pathway over the deserts
  And mountains where I go;
Let not thy Spirit's halo
  Be hidden from my sight;
Cold is the world around me,
  Loud are the storms of night.

Great are the weights of anguish
  The soul of man must bear;
And oft I almost perish,
  In wild and sick despair.
O, when the waves of passion
  Roll higher and increase,
Come thou, O loving Saviour!
  Utter thy words of peace.

Thou who hast borne life's sorrows
  Knowest what throbs of pain
Assail my feeble spirit.
  O, take away the stain,
The tarnish, give me power
  That I may rise above;
Cold is the world around me,
  Great is thy tender love.

There is no other ransom,
  There is no other way;
Thou alone canst show me
  The price my soul must pay;
And when my feet are nearing
  The border land of rest,
O, place thine arms around me,
  And draw me to thy breast.

Praising the Lord

MRS. E. G. WHITE

WHEN a sense of the loving-kindness of God is constantly refreshing the soul, it will be revealed in the countenance by an expression of peace and joy. It will be manifest in the words and works. And the generous, holy spirit of Christ, working upon the heart, will yield in the life a converting influence upon others.

"I will mention the loving-kindness of the Lord," the prophet Isaiah declared, "according to all that the Lord hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his loving-kindnesses. For he said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Saviour. In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old."

(1) [Have we not reason to talk of God's goodness, and to tell of his power? When friends are kind to us, we esteem it a privilege to thank them for their kindness. How much more should we count it a joy to return thanks to the Friend who has given us every good and perfect gift. Then let us, in every church, cultivate thanksgiving to God. Let us educate our lips to praise God in the family circle. Let us teach our children to offer praise and thanksgiving to God. Let our gifts and offerings declare our gratitude for the favors we daily receive. In everything we should show forth the joy of the Lord, and make known the message of God's saving grace.]

In the second chapter of 1 Samuel is recorded the prayer of a consecrated woman who served and glorified God. She prayed: "My heart rejoiceth in the Lord, mine horn is exalted in the Lord: my mouth is enlarged over mine enemies; because I rejoice in thy salvation. There is none holy as the Lord: for there is none beside thee: neither is there any rock like our God." Hannah's offering of thanksgiving for the answer to her prayer is a lesson to those who to-day receive answers to their requests. Do we not neglect to return praise and thanksgiving to God for his loving-kindness?

David declares, "I love the Lord, because he hath heard my voice and my supplications. Because he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live." God's goodness in hearing and answering prayer places us under heavy obligation to express our thanksgiving for the favors bestowed upon us. We should praise God much more than we do. The blessings received in answer to prayer should be promptly acknowledged. The record of them should be placed in our diary, that when we take the book in hand, we may remember the goodness of the Lord, and praise his holy name.

We grieve the spirit of Christ by our complaints and murmurings and repinings. We should not dishonor God by the mournful relation of trials that appear grievous. All trials that are received as educators will produce joy. The whole religious life will be uplifting, elevating, ennobling, fragrant with good words and works. The enemy is well pleased to have souls depressed, downcast, mourning, and groaning; he wants such impressions made as to the effect of our faith. But God designs that the mind shall take no low level. He desires every soul to triumph in the keeping power of the Redeemer. The psalmist says: "Give unto the Lord, O ye mighty, give unto the Lord glory and strength. Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name; worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." "I will extol thee, O Lord; for thou hast lifted me up, and hast not made my foes to rejoice over me. O Lord my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me. . . . Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of his. Give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness."

It is Satan's work to talk of that which concerns himself, and he is delighted to have human beings talk of his power, and of his workings through the children of men. Through indulgence in such conversation the mind becomes gloomy and sour and disagreeable. We may become channels of communication for Satan, through which words flow that bring no sunshine to any heart. But let us decide that this shall not be. If we look constantly to Jesus and become daily learners of him, we shall become like him in character. His teachings, faithfully followed, will qualify us for membership in the heavenly family. Then let us learn to put away all in us that is unlovely, and seek to become the true children of God.

All heaven is interested in our salvation. The angels of God, thousands upon thousands, and ten thousand times ten thousand, are commissioned to minister to them that shall be heirs of salvation. They guard us against evil, and press back the powers of darkness that are seeking our destruction. Have we not reason to be thankful every moment, thankful even when there are apparent difficulties in our pathway?

The Lord himself is our helper. "Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem. . . . The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; he will save, he will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love; he will joy over thee with singing." This is the testimony that the Lord desires us to bear to the world. His praise shall continually be in our hearts and upon our lips.

The psalmist exclaims, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy; and gathered out of the lands, from the east, and from the west, from the north, and from the south. They wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way; they found no city to dwell in. Hungry and thirsty, their soul fainted in them. Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distresses. And he led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation. O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!"

"That Which Was Lost"

ERNEST LLOYD

ONE of the most remarkable economic features of this age is the discovery of wealth in waste products, and the recovery of very valuable material from that which was formerly thrown away. In the early days of the manufacture of coal gas, no one knew what to do with the tar which was left behind in the waste receivers. The accumulation of it in great quantities became a serious difficulty. When allowed to run off into a river, it simply hurt the vegetation, harmed shipping, and poisoned the fishes. Then science came to the rescue, and to-day that waste product is saved, and the number of useful things that can be made from it is wonderful. The chemist gives from it to the silk-weaver his beau-

A Song of Trust

I WOULD not seek to know God's "when,"
For he doth not reveal to men
The hour of his own will.
Content am I his time to bide;
In his deep love I safe confide;
And there I rest so still.

I would not seek to know God's "why,"
Which hid from mortal mind must lie,
Until to man made known;
That God doth choose sufficeth me;
I would not all his working see,
Till step by step 'tis shown.

I would not seek to know God's "how,"
His wisdom's way he shows not now;
But love all things doth guide;
When doubt, with subtle art, assails,
All-conquering faith o'er all prevails;
My plans I lay aside.

I would not seek to know God's "where,"
Provided he doth lead me there:
Since he will guard my way.
God's paths all end in life and light;
True faith, at last, will change to sight;
The night, to cloudless day.

God's "when" and "why," God's "how" and "where,"
I leave in his all-loving care:
He knows: I ask no more.
I ne'er could plan my way alone,
My utter helplessness I own,
And his sweet will adore.

The Need of Watchfulness

MRS. E. G. WHITE

NEVER was there a time when Christian men and women, in all walks of life, were in so great need of clear spiritual eyesight as now. It is not safe to lose sight of Christ for one moment. His followers must pray, and believe, and love him fervently.

A very thorough work must be done in cleansing the soul-temple from its natural depravity. The Christian must be wide-awake to resist the increeping of a spirit of licentiousness among those who claim to be sanctified. When our hearts are clean, washed, and made white by the blood of the Lamb, the work will go forward in our experience that was outlined in the wonderful prayer of Christ: "For their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth."

What shall be said regarding the man who has been greatly blessed as a teacher of righteousness, yet who in time of temptation is betrayed into a sinful course? Satan in the form of a heavenly angel has come to him as he approached Christ in the wilderness of temptation, and he has gained the victory.

Coming to the Son of God, the great deceiver claimed to be commissioned by the Father with a message to the Saviour. He need no longer hunger. "If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread." But by such an act as this, Christ would have broken his promise that he would never exercise his divine power in order to escape any difficulty or suffering that man in his humanity must meet. "It is written," he replied to the tempter, "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Jesus met Satan with the words of Scripture. "It is written," he said. In every temptation the weapon of his warfare was the Word of God. Satan demanded of Christ a miracle as a sign of his divinity. But that which is greater than all miracles, a firm reliance upon a "thus saith the Lord," was a sign that could not be controverted. So long as Christ held to this position, the tempter could gain no advantage.

It was in the time of greatest weakness that Christ was assailed by the fiercest temptations. Thus Satan thought to prevail. By this policy he had gained the victory over man. When strength failed, and the will power weakened, and faith ceased to repose in God, then those who had stood long and valiantly for the right, were overcome. Moses was wearied with the forty years' wandering of Israel, when for the moment his faith let go its hold upon infinite power. He failed just upon the borders of the promised land. So with Elijah, who had stood undaunted before King Ahab; who had faced the whole nation of Israel, with the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal at their head. After that terrible day upon Carmel, when the false prophets had been slain, and the people had declared their allegiance to God, Elijah fled for his life before the threats of idolatrous Jezebel. Thus Satan has taken advantage of the weakness of humanity. And he will still work in the same way. Whenever one is encompassed with clouds, perplexed by circumstances, or afflicted by poverty or distress, Satan is at hand to tempt and annoy. He attacks our weak points of character. He seeks to shake our confidence in God, who suffers such a condition of things to exist. We are tempted to distrust God, to question his love. Often the tempter comes to us as he came to Christ, arraying before us our weakness and infirmities. He hopes to discourage the soul, and to break our hold upon God. Then he is sure of his prey. If we would meet him as Jesus did, we would escape many a defeat. By parleying with the enemy we give him an advantage.

"Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and setteth him on a pinnacle of the temple, and saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone."

Again, the temptation is prefaced with the insinuation of distrust, "If thou be the Son of God." Christ was tempted to answer the "if," but he refrained from the slightest acceptance of the doubt. He would not imperil his life, in order to give evidence to Satan. "It is written," he declared, "thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

When Satan quoted the promise, "He shall give his angels charge over thee," he omitted the words, "to keep thee in all thy ways;" that is, in all the ways of God's choosing. Jesus refused to go outside the path of obedience. While manifesting perfect trust in his Father, he would not place himself, unbidden, in a position that would necessitate the interposition of his Father to save him from death. He would not force Providence to come to his rescue, and thus fail of giving man an example of trust and submission.

Jesus was victor in the second temptation, and now Satan manifests himself in his true character. But he does not appear as a hideous monster with cloven feet and bat's wings. He is a mighty angel, though fallen. He avows himself the leader of rebellion, and the god of this world.

Placing Jesus on a high mountain, Satan caused the kingdoms of the world, in all their glory, to pass in a panoramic view before him. The sunlight lay on templed cities, marble palaces, fertile fields, and fruit-laden vineyards. The traces of evil were hidden. The eye of Jesus, so lately greeted by gloom and desolation, now gazed upon a scene of unsurpassed loveliness and prosperity. Then the tempter's voice was heard: "All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it. If thou therefore wilt worship me, all shall be thine."

The strength of this temptation to the Saviour was greater than the human mind can understand. Christ's mission could be fulfilled only through suffering. Before him was a life of sorrow, hardship, and conflict, and an ignominious death. He must bear the sins of the world. He must endure separation from the Father's love. Now the tempter offered to yield up the power he had usurped. Christ might deliver himself from the dreadful future by acknowledging the supremacy of Satan. But to do this was to yield the victory in the great controversy. It was in seeking to exalt himself above the Son of God, that Satan had sinned in heaven. Should he prevail now, it would be the triumph of rebellion.

Christ declared to the tempter, "Get thee behind me, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Satan had questioned whether Jesus were the Son of God. In his summary dismissal he had proof that he could not gainsay. Divinity flashed through suffering humanity. Satan had no power to resist the command. Writhing with humiliation and rage, he was forced to withdraw from the presence of the world's Redeemer. Christ's victory was as complete as had been Adam's failure.

So we may resist temptation, and force Satan to depart from us. Jesus gained the victory through submission and faith in God, and by the apostle he says to us, "Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." We can not save ourselves from the tempter's power; he has conquered humanity, and when we try to stand in our own strength, we shall become a prey to his devices; but "the name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe." Satan trembles and flees before the weakest soul who finds refuge in that mighty name.

It is those who have had the most light that Satan most assiduously seeks to ensnare. He knows that if he can deceive them, they will, under his control, clothe sin with garments of righteousness, and lead many astray. I say to all, Be on your guard; for as an angel of light, Satan is walking in every assembly of Christian workers, and in every church, trying to win the members to his side. I am bidden to give to the people of God the warning, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked."

The Political Church

B. M. HEALD

The organized methods for the purpose of uniting church and state are very apparent, and the rapid growth in this direction is alarming; yet how few realize and appreciate the real situation, how few are acquainted with the direful results of the union of church and state; in fact, how few clergymen and men of responsibility in the church care to know and understand the present-day conditions.

The churches seem to be seized by a spirit of Law instead of Love. This is very evident in the aim and object of the many church leagues and societies; there exist at the present time over forty "Sunday observance" societies, all being organs of the nominal church, appealing for the enforcement of the laws.

The following is a plank in the platform of one of these church leagues: "That through the various political parties we nominate and pledge for the executive, ministerial, and judicial offices, men who by their character and personal influence will insure the enforcement of the law, and that we vote only for such persons."

Notice the trend of argument, as presented by a prominent speaker of one of these church leagues: That at present the liquor men are to a very great extent controlling politics; now if the church can form a federation systematized in the form of leagues, societies, or associations, and put politicians in office as the result of the vote of the church, then, instead of law being made as result of the liquor vote, it will be made as result of the church vote. Then the inevitable step will be that what laws are desired by the church will be passed and enforced, as the executive, ministerial, and judicial officers will be under obligation to the church.

The platform of the church confederacy,— that "the kingdom of Christ must enter the realm of law through the gateway of politics, and that we should swear an oath of allegiance to Christ in politics, and march in one grand army to the polls to worship God,"— is of a suspicious nature, and contrary to the teachings of Christ.

Christ taught that his kingdom is not of this world; if it were, then his servants would fight.

Again: he came not to judge the world, but to save the world. By force? — No; but by love. The Spirit says, "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Rev. 22:17. Furthermore, if the nominal churches were filled with the Holy Spirit, there would be no need of resorting to law; for the gospel is the power of God unto salvation.

Of all institutions the church can not afford to sacrifice, for political consideration, her position as the light of the world. As has well been said, "Christ wants no help from Cæsar." The watchword of the remnant church is, "Not by might, nor by power, put by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." Church federation would have us adopt the following: "Not by thy Spirit, but by our might and our power."

Lessons from Past Experiences — No. 26

GEO. O. STATES

Ever since I can remember, my mother took the Review. As soon as I could read, I remember reading articles from a man from New England. He wrote so much that just his initials were placed after his name. In 1859-60, when Brethren James White and J. N. Loughborough began to agitate the matter of organization, this brother thought he saw a departure from the simplicity of the truth, and that our people were going into the world. He wrote a number of articles in which he presented quite reasonable arguments in opposition to organization. The arguments for and against this question were confusing our people. Many of them honestly believed that if we should organize, we would depart from the truth. At that time Testimony No. Six was published, and we were told that "the people of God should move understandingly, and should be united in their efforts. They should be of the same mind, of the same judgment; then their efforts will not be scattered, but will tell forcibly in the upbuilding of the cause of present truth. Order must be observed, and there must be union in maintaining order, or Satan will take advantage. A stormy future is before us; and the church should be awake to make an advance move that they may stand securely against his plans. It is time that something was done. God is not pleased to have his people leave the matters of the church at loose ends, and suffer the enemy to have the whole advantage and control affairs as best pleases him. Unless the churches are so organized that they can carry out and enforce order, they have nothing to hope for in the future; they must scatter into fragments. If ministers of God would unitedly take their position, and maintain it with decision, there would be a uniting influence among the flock of God. Separating bars would be broken to fragments. Hearts would flow together, and unite like drops of water. Then there would be a power and strength in the ranks of Sabbathkeepers far exceeding anything we have yet witnessed."

As soon as this Testimony from the Lord was received, our brother who had so bitterly opposed organization, gave up his opposition, and fell in line with the body, although it was hard to do it. In thinking over the confusion that existed among us before we were organized, and what it was that brought us to the unity of the faith, I have thought of late, "What would we do were it not for the gift of the spirit of prophecy among us?"

During the summer and fall of 1861 a number of general meetings were held in Battle Creek to study this question and perfect more fully the organization. It was not long after the Lord gave the light on this important question before we had State conferences, which were organized into a General Conference. As time passed on, and we were in danger of going to extremes, we were told, "While God's people are justified in securing church property in a lawful manner, they should be careful to maintain their peculiar and holy character. I saw that unconsecrated persons would take advantage of the position which the church has recently taken, and would overstep the bounds, carry matters to extremes, and wound the cause of God."

Thus you see as this people were in danger of going to extremes in the matter of organization, the Lord sent us just the counsel we needed. "I was pointed back, and saw that in every important move, every decision made, or point gained, by God's people, some have arisen to carry matters to extremes, and to move in an extravagant manner, which has disgusted unbelievers, distressed God's people, and brought the cause of God into disrepute. The people whom God is leading out in these last days, will be troubled with just such things. But much evil will be avoided if the ministers of Christ will be of one mind, united in their plans of action, and united in effort. If they will stand together, sustain one another, and faithfully reprove and rebuke wrong, they will soon cause it to wither."

As the ministers heeded this counsel, the Lord blessed in the work, and the ministers who were so strongly opposed to organization ceased to oppose, and all united in establishing the churches. There was some difference in the matter of choosing a name, but when we

I CARED much for the thought of fame
In all the years that went before;
Ambition was no empty name,
Men's praise was pleasant, and no more;
But now, when truth I never dreamed
Has come like morning into night,
Since God's good Spirit on me beamed
With all its beautiful delight,

I work with other strength and will,
With joy unknown in by-gone days;
Men wonder at the new-found skill;
With deaf-grown ears I hear their praise,
Searching with throbbing pulse to find
That Word of life which satisfies,
And drink content with heart and mind
In sweet approval of God's eyes.

Faith, Not Feeling

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"EXAMINE yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." Some conscientious souls on reading this immediately begin to criticize their every feeling and emotion. But this is not correct self-examination. It is not the petty feelings and emotions that are to be examined. The life, the character, is to be measured by the only standard of character, God's holy law. The fruit testifies to the character of the tree. Our works, not our feelings, bear witness of us.

The feelings, whether encouraging or discouraging should not be made the test of the spiritual condition. By God's Word we are to determine our true standing before him. Many are bewildered on this point. When they are happy and joyous, they think that they are accepted by God. When a change comes, and they feel depressed, they think that God has forsaken them.

God does not look with favor upon those self-confident ones who loudly exclaim, "I am sanctified, I am holy, I am sinless." These are Pharisees who have no foundation for their assertion. Those who, because of their sense of utter unworthiness, dare scarcely lift up their eyes to heaven, are nearer to God than those who claim so much piety. They are represented by the publican, who, with his head on his breast, prayed, "God be merciful to me a sinner," and went to his house justified, rather than the self-righteous Pharisee.

But God does not desire us to go through life with a distrust of him. We owe our Heavenly Father a more generous view of his goodness than is accorded to him by our manifest distrust of his love. We have an evidence of his love — an evidence which amazes angels and is far beyond the comprehension of the wisest of human beings. "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." While we were yet sinners, God gave his Son to die for us. Can we doubt his goodness?

Behold Christ. Dwell upon his love and mercy. This will fill the soul with abhorrence for all that is sinful, and will inspire it with an intense desire for the righteousness of Christ. The more clearly we see the Saviour, the more clearly shall we discern our defects of character. Confess your sins to Christ, and with true contrition of soul cooperate with him by putting these sins away. Believe that they are pardoned. The promise is positive, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Be assured that the Word of God will not fail. He who has promised is faithful. It is as much your duty to believe that God will fulfil his word, and forgive you, as it is to confess your sins.

Exercise faith in God. How many there are who go through life under a cloud of condemnation! They do not believe God's Word. They have no faith that he will do as he has said. Many who long to see others resting in the pardoning love of Christ do not rest in it themselves. But how can they possibly lead others to show simple, childlike faith in the Heavenly Father when they measure his love by their feelings?

Let us trust God's Word implicitly, remembering that we are his sons and daughters. Let us train ourselves to believe his Word. We hurt the heart of Christ by doubting, when he has given us such evidences of his love. He laid down his life to save us. He says to us: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Do you believe that he will do as he has said? Then, after you have complied with the conditions, carry no longer the burden of your sin. Let it roll upon the Saviour. Trust yourself with him. Has he not promised to give you rest? But to many he is obliged to say, sorrowfully, "Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life." Many manufacture for themselves burdens which are grievous to bear.

Look steadfastly to Jesus. Behold him, full of grace and truth. He will make his goodness pass before you, while he hides you in the cleft of the rock. You will be enabled to endure the seeing of him who is invisible, and by beholding you will be transformed. Faith is not feeling. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. There is a form of religion which is nothing more than selfishness. It takes pleasure in worldly enjoyment. It is satisfied with contemplating the religion of Christ, and knows nothing of its saving power. Those who possess this religion regard sin lightly because they do not know Jesus. While in this condition they estimate duty very lightly. But a faithful performance of duty goes hand in hand with a right estimate of the character of God.

There is earnest work to do for the Master. Christ came to preach the gospel to the poor, and he sent his disciples forth to do the same work he came to do. So he sends forth his workers today. Sheaves are to be gathered for him from the highways and hedges. The tremendous issues of eternity demand of us something besides an imaginary religion, a religion of words and forms, where the truth is kept in the outer court, to be admired as we admire a beautiful flower; they demand something more than a religion of feeling, which distrusts God when trials and difficulties come. Holiness does not consist in profession, but in lifting the cross, doing the will of God. Saying, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?" will not secure for us an entrance into the kingdom of heaven. "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected."

Attaining and Obtaining

G. B. THOMPSON

THE tendency at the present time is to endeavor to attain unto perfection through a development of the good that is supposed to be in us. But this is a fallacious error. It is really the pagan idea of salvation. It is salvation by works rather than by faith.

The apostle Paul said, "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh), dwelleth no good thing." Rom. 7:18. And what Paul knew concerning this matter, every other Christian should know. It is impossible to develop any perfection out of that which is wholly imperfect. "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one." No pure water can be drawn from an impure fountain.

We should not forget that we do not attain unto righteousness. It is a matter of obtainment instead of attainment. No man, by his own efforts, can attain to a religious experience. Love can not be worked up. Love comes from God. It is an obtainment, secured through the indwelling presence of the Holy Spirit.

Our own attainments are described thus: "But we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags; and we all do fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away." Isa. 64:6. True righteousness is obtained through faith. It is imputed to us through Christ. "Abraham believed God, and it [Abraham's faith] was counted to him for righteousness." "But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteous-

The Preacher

He held the lamp of truth that day
So low that none could miss the way;
And yet so high, to bring in sight
That picture fair,— the world's great Light,—
That, gazing up (the lamp between),
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

He held the pitcher, stooping low,
To lips of little ones below;
Then raised it to the weary saint,
And bade him drink, when sick and faint!
They drank,— the pitcher thus between,
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

He blew the trumpet soft and clear,
That trembling sinners need not fear;
And then, with leader note, and bold,
To raze the walls of Satan's hold!—
The trumpet coming thus between,—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

But when the Captain says, "Well done,
Thou good and faithful servant! Come,
Lay down the pitcher and the lamp,
Lay down the trumpet, leave the camp,"
The weary hand will then be seen,
Clasped in those pierced ones — naught between.

Co-operation

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." The work of salvation is a work of co-partnership, a joint operation. No man can work out his own salvation without the aid of the Holy Spirit. The co-operation of divine and human forces is necessary for the formation of right principles in the character. Man is to make the most strenuous efforts to overcome the tempter, to subdue natural passions; but he is wholly dependent upon God for success in the work of overcoming the propensities that are not in harmony with correct principles. Success depends wholly upon willing obedience to the will and way of God. Character develops in accordance with conformity to the divine plan. But man must work in Christ's lines. He must be a laborer together with God. He must submit to God's training, that he may be complete in Christ.

God has originated and proclaimed the principles on which divine and human agencies are to combine in temporal matters as well as all spiritual achievements. They are to be linked together in all human pursuits, in mechanical and agricultural labor, in mercantile and scientific enterprises. In all lines of work it is necessary that there be co-operation between God and man. God has provided facilities with which to enrich and beautify the earth. But the strength and ingenuity of human agencies are required to make the very best use of the material. God had filled the earth with treasure, but the gold and silver are hidden in the earth, and the exercise of man's powers is required to secure this treasure which God has provided. Man's energy and tact are to be used in connection with the power of God in bringing the gold and silver from the mines, and trees from the forest. But unless by his miracle-working power God co-operated with man, enabling him to use his physical and mental capabilities, the treasures in our world would be useless.

We can not keep ourselves for one moment. "We are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." We are utterly dependent upon God every moment of our lives.

God desires every human being in our world to be a worker together with him. This is the lesson we are to learn from all useful employment, making homes in the forest, felling trees to build houses, clearing land for cultivation. God has provided the wood and the land, and to man he has given the work of putting them in such shape that they will be a blessing. In this work man is wholly dependent upon God. The fitting of the ships that cross the broad ocean is not alone due to the talent and ingenuity of the human agent. God is the great Architect. Without his co-operation, without the aid of the higher intelligences, how worthless would be the plans of men. God must aid, else every device is worthless.

The human organism is the handiwork of God. The organs employed in all the different functions of the body were made by him. The Lord gives us food and drink, that the wants of the body may be supplied. He has given the earth different properties adapted to the growth of food for his children. He gives the sunshine and the showers, the early and the latter rain. He forms the clouds and sends the dew. All are his gifts. He has bestowed his blessings upon us liberally. But all these blessings will not restore in us his moral image, unless we co-operate with him, making painstaking effort to know ourselves, to understand how to care for the delicate human machinery. Man must diligently help to keep himself in harmony with nature's laws. He who co-operates with God in the work of keeping this wonderful machinery in order, who consecrates all his powers to God, seeking intelligently to obey the laws of nature, stands in his God-given manhood, and is recorded in the books of heaven as a man.

God has given man land to be cultivated. But in order that the harvest may be reaped, there must be harmonious action between divine and human agencies. The plow and other implements of labor must be used at the right time. The seed must be sown in its season. Man is not to fail of doing his part. If he is careless and negligent, his unfaithfulness testifies against him. The harvest is proportionate to the energy he has expended.

So it is in spiritual things. We are to be laborers together with God. Man is to work out his own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in him, both to will and to do of his good pleasure. There is to be co-partnership, a divine relation, between the Son of God and the repentant sinner. We are made sons and daughters of God. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." Christ provides the mercy and grace so abundantly given to all who believe in him. He fulfils the terms upon which salvation rests. But we must act our part by accepting the blessing in faith. God works and man works. Resistance of temptation must come from man, who must draw his power from God. Thus he becomes a co-partner with Christ.

The infinitely wise and all-powerful God proposes co-operation with his frail, erring creatures, whom he has placed on vantage-ground. On the one side there are infinite wisdom, goodness, compassion, power; on the other, weakness, sinfulness, absolute helplessness, poverty, dependence. We are dependent upon God, not only for life and all its blessings, but for our entrusted talents, and for all the resources required in the work we must do if we accept the invitation to work with God. Man's intellect, his understanding, his every valuable thought, the opportunities and privileges that are placed within his reach, all come from him who is the way, the truth, and the life. We have nothing of ourselves. Our success in the Christian life depends upon our co-operation with Christ, and our submission to his will. It is not a sign of pure, consecrated service for a worker to follow his own way. Every worker is to willingly obey his Leader, to receive and practise every word of God.

We are to be individual toilers. Character can not be bought or sold. It is formed by patient, continuous effort. Much patience is required in the striving for that life which is to come. We may all strive for perfection of character, but all who come into possession of it will earn it step by step, by the cultivation of the virtues which God commends. The Holy Spirit presents before man the agencies provided for his transformation. If he heeds the words, "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me," he will receive help from a power that is infinite.

Man is given the privilege of working with God in the saving of his own soul. He is to receive Christ as his personal Saviour and believe in him. Receiving and believing is his part of the contract. This means abiding in Christ, showing in him at all times and under all circumstances a faith that works by love and purifies the soul from all defilement. Christ is the author of this faith, and he demands that it be constantly exercised.

The apostle Paul declares, "Ye are God's husbandry; ye are God's building." The material for the building is plainly specified in the words: "Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." Here we are shown how we may co-operate with God. Man is to work constantly upon the plan of addition, while God works on the plan of multiplication. Thus man grows in spirituality, until he presents to the world, to angels, and to men, such perfection of character that in the heavenly courts the words are spoken, "Ye are complete in him."

The plan of redemption was arranged in the councils between the Father and the Son. Then Christ pledged himself to render an account for man if he proved disloyal. He pledged himself to make an atonement which would unite every believing soul to God. He who lays his sins upon the substitute and surety, thus becoming a partaker of the divine nature, can unite with the apostle in saying: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places." "That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus." In his infinite love Christ devised the plan of salvation. This plan he stands ready to fulfil in behalf of all who will cooperate with him. In their behalf he says to the Father, Do not impute their sins to them, but lay them on me. Be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities remember no more. They have accepted my merits, and made peace with me; and they shall make peace with me. My righteousness is theirs, and for my sake bless them with all spiritual blessings.

Joining With the World

MAX HILL

And he brought forth his people with joy,
And his chosen with singing, . . .
That they might keep his statutes,
And observe his laws. Ps. 105: 43, 45.

Through all the ages before the children of Israel went into Egypt, there to be made the slaves of their former hosts, God's people knew the commandments of God, and a few of them observed his precepts. But the world knew him not, and had no regard for his law. In their Egyptian bondage the children of Israel had no choice; they were compelled to perform the tasks imposed upon them. But there came a time when deliverance was promised. All who would might go with Moses to a land of freedom, where they might be their own masters, serving a God of love, whose presence meant prosperity.

A mighty host went out of Egypt, rich and strong and great. Over them God "spread a cloud for a covering, and fire to give light in the night." Their enemies were subdued before them, and at length the pleasant valleys of Canaan were given them. But some there were who refused to leave Egypt, many murmured on the way and perished, many rebelled against their patient leader, even against God himself. Then, having settled in the goodly land, many of them mingled with the strange peoples about them, intermarried among them, learned their revolting practises, worshiped their idols. Thus in a large measure the very plan of God in leading them out of Egypt was defeated; for while they were free to "keep his statutes, and observe his laws," they refused to do so, the direct result of mingling with the world about them.

One of the most striking messages for the remnant people of God is, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate;" "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers: for . . . what portion hath a believer with an unbeliever?" Has not God in these words called out a people from the darkness of spiritual Egypt, "that they might keep his statutes, and observe his laws"?

Then wherefore any linking up with the world? Can one handle coal and hope to be clean? Can one drink liquor and be sober? Can one mingle with the world and serve God sincerely? The world is full of societies, clubs, guilds, unions, lodges, whose objects are for anything and everything but the pure service of God. Some of them — most of them, in fact — have commendable features; some of them are "Christian." But with that very "Christianity," much vaunted as it is, there are the seeds of evil, the gratification of selfish aims and ambitions, the worship of some man-made idol, a seeking to the state for recognition and support. It may be that "temperance" is a wheel of the machine; but alongside of it is the wheel "Sunday sacredness." And be assured some of the leading spirits will work for one as strongly as for the other. All members of such organizations are naturally classed together as supporters of all these lines; the fees and dues of all are used for the advancement of all departments.

What, then, shall be the attitude of those who would represent the Lord in their teachings and in their lives? Shall they go with these good people as far as possible, with the hope that some good may come of it? They may show their colors in times of crisis — true; they may by voice and vote oppose error — true again; they may, by well-ordered lives, lead others to the right — and this is true. But will they do it without compromise? Will they take part in all the intemperate feastings, late hours, and excitements these societies indulge in, and then talk temperance? Will they support by time and strength and means these clubs, while their own household of faith struggles on leaderless and unsupported for want of their talent and purse? Shall they affiliate with these organizations whose objects are to convert and uplift the world, by any possible combination of church and state, influence or statute, while all about them are those who need above all things else the personal touch of a ministering hand?

But there is no end. Yes, yes, there is an end,—"There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." Prov. 14: 12.

What would it not mean to the cause of God in the earth if every professed child of his were standing squarely on the solid platform of truth, never wavering! If the world expected none of God's people to mingle with them, because they were too busy with the King's business to come down! If every child of God stood for temperance in every act of life, justice for every man, equality before the law, and godliness above all things! Then would it be truly said, as of old: "What one nation in the earth is like thy people, even like Israel, whom God went to redeem unto himself for a people, and to make him a name, and to do great things for you, and terrible things for thy land, before thy people, whom thou redeemest to thee out of Egypt, from the nations and their gods?" 2 Sam. 7: 23. "Blessed is the nation whose God is Jehovah, the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance." Ps. 33: 12.

Church and State in Early New England

J. O. CORLISS

The dominant religious sentiment in Great Britain in the seventeenth century was fairly expressed by one Robert Baillie, a Scotch commissioner, when contemplating the growth, and increasing influence of the Puritans in Parliament. Said he: "Liberty of conscience, and toleration of all and any religion, is so prodigious an impiety that this religious Parliament can not but abhor the very meaning of it."

This spirit of intolerance finally drove many of the minority in religious thought to seek refuge from persecution. This was found in the wilderness of America. But strange as it may seem, those pilgrims, who had become such through religious intolerance, sought to establish in their new home the same sort of government that had made them desolate wanderers from their native heath. They had not yet learned that to put religious beliefs under the direction of civil government must work hardship to those in the minority.

They believed that their sufferings in England had been due alone to the enforcement of an erroneous faith, and since their own views were certainly orthodox, no harm could possibly follow a legal demand for all to profess these, because such enforced uniformity would insure peace and harmony in the com-

This department will appear in the first issue of each month of the REVIEW AND HERALD

It will be devoted to the consideration of Christian education in the denomination, involving the work of primary, intermediate, and advanced schools. The principles of education in a broad sense will be discussed in their application to the methods employed in the different grades of these schools. Reports of the work done in all parts of the world will be published. The preparation of workers to carry the gospel to all lands and the immediate finishing of the third angel's message will be kept prominently before the schools as the leading aim in Christian education.

This department is conducted by the Department of Education of the General Conference.

"Without me ye can do nothing." We must train ourselves to feel constantly the truth of these words of our Master. It is very easy to lean upon our own strength and to our own understanding. True wisdom is found in God alone. Real strength is always received from his arm of might. The grace which he gives, and the power which he bestows, are sent most freely. Why, then, need we ever fail to trust him?

Christian teachers are under-shepherds. As such they may have the enjoyment of the Chief Shepherd in seeing peace and happiness brought into the lives of their pupils. As did he, so will they, live a life of self-sacrifice and self-denial, gladly turning from every earthly enticement, choosing rather a life of weary labor and toil if possible, that thereby they may help some to gain life eternal. Such under-shepherds will certainly hear the "Well done, thou good and faithful servant" from the lips of the Chief Shepherd, and from him they will receive the crown of everlasting life, and with him they may behold the eternal joy of those for whom they have labored.

The Next Year's School

As this school year for our institutions in the northern portion of the world is closing, our thoughts naturally turn, not only to the year just passing, but also to another year's work. It is now time to lay plans broad and deep for successful schools. We have every reason to believe that, on the whole, prosperity has attended our work during the year now closing. In the southern hemisphere, our schools are now in the midst of their year's work. Reports from them indicate a substantial growth. We are indeed profoundly grateful for this.

Our church-schools are no longer experiments. The question, however, of financing them is yet a perplexing one, and it may always be. The boards of these schools may well begin at once to plan for teachers, equipment, and financial support for the next year. During this vacation, it will be greatly to the advantage of the schools to have a fund constantly accumulating with which to conduct the work of next year. There is a feeling of confidence which lasts throughout the whole year when the work of the school is entered upon only after reasonable plans have been perfected. The instances are not rare of the failure of our schools because of a lack of definite planning. Money can be secured, teachers employed, and all arrangements made weeks before the school is to open, with much better effect than where these matters are delayed, and have to be attended to with undue haste. The education of our children is surely a sacred responsibility, and we need to exercise much thought and care and perseverence in it.

The Missionary Gardens

Many dollars can be brought into the treasury of the Lord to be used in spreading this gospel to foreign lands, if our children are given, and properly care for, missionary gardens. Many of our church-schools have given attention to this point, and have encouraged the children in preparing and caring for these gardens in connection with their school work. This is, however, a matter to which parents may well lend substantial encouragement and direction. The children not only get the benefit from the work and education of properly raising the products from the garden; but better than this, they are, in a practical way, taught to see the true object of the labor and gain; namely, the giving of truth to hungry souls, and seeking for their welfare.

Parents' Meetings

Well-conducted parents' meetings are of inestimable value in our churches. Where principles and methods of dealing with children are considered from an impartial point of view, without reference to some one's else children, great good results. In the churches where we have schools established, if parents were to meet two or three times during this vacation for prayer and reading of the Testimonies and for dispassionate study, the effect of these meetings would be seen in a very marked way, in every phase of the work of the schools during the coming year.

We live in a time when every wind of doctrine is blowing with reference to the education of children. God has given to us a sure guide — the word of his testimony. It should be studied prayerfully and intelligently, that we may know our whole duty. Meetings for this purpose are now too little appreciated by us. Here is room for improvement.

The Educational Missionary Movement

A Broader View

In carrying forward the Lord's work at home and abroad, those in positions of responsibility must plan wisely so as to make the best possible use of men and of means. The burden of sustaining the work in many of the foreign fields must be largely borne by our conferences in the home land. These conferences should have means with which to assist in opening new fields, where the testing truths of the third angel's message have never yet penetrated. Within the past few years, doors have been thrown open as if by magic, and men and women are needed to enter these doors, and begin earnest work for the salvation of souls.

Our educational institutions can do much toward meeting the demand for trained workers for these mission fields. Wise plans should be laid to strengthen the work done in our training-centers. Study should be given to the best methods for fitting consecrated young men and young women to bear responsibility, and to win souls for Christ. They should be taught how to meet the people, and how to present the third angel's message in an attractive manner. And in the management of financial matters, they should be taught lessons that will help them when they are sent to isolated fields where they must suffer many privations, and practise the strictest economy.

The Lord has instituted a plan whereby many of the students in our schools can learn practical lessons needful to success in after-life. He has given us the privilege of handling precious books that have been dedicated to the advancement of our educational and sanitarium work. In the very handling of these books, the youth will meet with many experiences that will teach them how to cope with problems that await them in the regions beyond. During their school life, as they handle these books, many learn how to approach people courteously, and how to exercise tact in conversing with them on different points of present truth. As they meet with a degree of success financially, some

(1) will learn lessons of thrift and economy, which will be of great advantage to them when they are sent out as missionaries.

The student who takes up the work of selling "Christ's Object Lessons" and "Ministry of Healing" will need to study the book they expect to sell. As they familiarize their minds with the subject-matter of the book in hand, and endeavor to practise its teachings, they will develop in knowledge and spiritual power. The messages in these books are the light that God has revealed to me to give to the world. The teachers in our schools should encourage the students to make a careful study of every chapter. They should teach these truths to their students, and seek to inspire the youth with a love for the precious thoughts the Lord has entrusted to us to communicate to the world.

Thus the preparation for handling these books, and the daily experiences gained while bringing them to the attention of the people, will prove an invaluable schooling to those who take part in this line of effort. Under the blessing of God, the youth will obtain a fitting up for service in the Lord's vineyard.

There is a special work to be done for our young people by those bearing responsibility in local churches throughout the conferences. When the church officers see promising youth, who are desirous of fitting themselves for usefulness in the Lord's service, but whose parents are unable to send them to school, they have a duty to perform in studying how to give help and encouragement. They should take counsel with parents and youth, and unite in planning wisely. Some youth may be best fitted to engage in home missionary work. There is a wide field of usefulness in the distribution of our literature, and in bringing the third angel's message to the attention of friends and neighbors. Other youth should be encouraged to enter the canvassing work, to sell our larger books. Some may have qualifications that would make them valuable helpers in our institutions. In many instances, if promising youth were wisely encouraged and properly directed, they could be led to earn their own schooling by taking up the sale of "Christ's Object Lessons" or "Ministry of Healing."

In selling these books, the youth would be acting as missionaries; for they would be bringing precious light to the notice of the people of the world. At the same time, they would be earning money to enable them to attend school, where they could continue their preparation for wider usefulness in the Lord's cause. In the school, they would receive encouragement and inspiration from teachers and students to continue their work of selling books; and when the time came for them to leave school, they would have received a practical training fitting them for hard, earnest, self-sacrificing labor that has to be done in many foreign fields, where the third angel's message must be carried under difficult and trying circumstances.

How much better is this plan, than for students to go through school without obtaining a practical education in field work, and, at the end of the course, leave under a burden of debt, with but little realization of the difficulties they will have to meet in new and untried fields! How hard it will be for them to meet the financial problems that are connected with the pioneer work in foreign lands! What a burden some one will have to carry until the debts incurred by students have been paid!

On the other hand, how much more might be gained, if the self-supporting plans were followed! The student would often be enabled to leave the educational institution, nearly or wholly free from personal indebtedness; the finances of the school would be in a more prosperous condition; and the lessons learned by the student while passing through these experiences in the home field would be of untold value to him in foreign fields.

Let wise plans now be laid to help worthy students to earn their own schooling by handling these books, if they so desire. Those who earn sufficient means in this way to pay their way through a course at one of our training-schools, will gain a most valuable practical experience that will help fit them for pioneer missionary work in other fields.

A great work is to be done in our world in a short time, and we must study to understand and appreciate, more than we have in past years, the providence of God in placing in our hands the precious volumes, "Christ's Object Lessons" and "Ministry of Healing," as a means of helping worthy students to meet their expenses while in training, as well as a means of liquidating the indebtedness on our educational and medical institutions.

Great blessings are in store for us, as we wisely handle these precious books given us for the advancement of the cause of present truth. As we labor in accordance with the Lord's plan, we shall find that many consecrated youth will be fitted to enter the regions beyond as practical missionaries; and, at the same time, the conferences in the home field will have means with which to contribute liberally to the support of the work that shall be undertaken in new territory.

Getting Results

IN education as in everything else it is results which count. No matter what the hindering cause may be, no matter how many obstacles may confront, if a man gets no results in his undertakings, he is a failure. He will be judged by only one standard — results.

The history of the men who have made a success in life, reveals that kind of courage which never says "can't." The young man who feels that he has no opportunity to gain an education is mistaken. He is looking at life from the wrong view-point.

"Poverty, humble origin, and unfavorable surroundings need not prevent the cultivation of the mind." He needs to see that circumstances are largely under his own control, and that by invincible determination he can make circumstances his servant.

"Search, study, and pray; face every difficulty manfully and vigorously; call the power of will and the grace of patience to your aid, and then dig more earnestly till the gem of truth lies before you, plain and beautiful, all the more precious because of the difficulties involved in finding it." Such is the instruction given by the Spirit of God, and it should fire every young man with an inspiration which would carry him on to victory and success.

With many the difficulties of obtaining an education lie in the direction of financial embarrassment. The young man who goes to school, and takes with him a well-filled trunk of clothes, with the assurance from his parents that his bills will be settled each month, knows very little of the real struggles of those youth who, having reached the age of eighteen or twenty years, are told by their parents that they may go to school if they can find a place where they will be permitted to work for their board and tuition. They start out with no money, no books, and a very limited supply of clothing, and the attempt is made to gain an education. Now comes the real test. Will the young man's courage stand the ordeal of several years' struggle? Too often it fails before the goal is reached; and it is right here where many of our young people need a helping hand. A few words of encouragement, and a little financial help, will often save the day, change the whole life current, and out of discouragement and failure bring grand results.

Principles and Methods

Character the Foundation of True Education

THE proper training of mind and muscle constitutes an important part of true education in which a symmetrical development of the man is required. For convenience we have formed the practise of using the terms moral, mental, and manual, in referring to the threefold man, making such an application of these terms as to include all that pertains to the work of renewing for which true education stands. For ages in the past the intellectual side of the triangle has received the major part of attention in the work of education. In recent years there has been quite an awakening to the importance of giving attention to the training and developing of the physical man. A worldly educational system will not be able to provide for the proper development of the moral man, which is by far the most important side of the triangle,— really that which is the foundation of true education. A sound mind in a sound body may pass very well when only a career in this world and success for this life are under consideration; but in the system of education involving a fitting up for the Lord's work in this world, and for eternal life in the world to come, the highest possible development of only the mental and manual part of man will be of no avail whatever.

There are many giants of intellect, and many men of prodigious stature and physical strength, who may be skilful as well as strong, whose training will be only eternal failure when it comes to the consideration of fitness for enduring life. The evolutionary idea in education is that a constant development for better is going on, which may seem to harmonize with this development of the mental and physical faculties in compliance with the laws of nature. Such a development favors the idea that it is only a reform that is required, but true

Thou Sun of Righteousness

WORTHIE HARRIS HOLDEN

JESUS, the Christ,— thou Light of all the world,
Enshrouding all who breathe the breath of life,
Illuminating every mind to know
Of right and wrong, which was by nature blind,—
Thy radiance floods our souls, and yet so still
We scarcely sense its coming and its power,
Just as the dawn that shineth more and more
Until the perfect day.
And like the sun
That shineth o'er our world, thou dost delight
The souls of men,— the simple and the wise,—
For all may joy alike who share thy light,
And bask within the sunshine of thy love.
Yet to the soul who yearns to know the depths
Of knowledge hid therein, thy Word unfolds
Through its prismatic crystals more and more
Its varied beauty. Ne'er can we discern
Its heights and depths, nor fathom nor explore.

Immanuel, we glory in thy light,
And glorying are glorified thereby.

Full brightness of the glory of our God
We can not now endure, but in thy courts,
Wherein the Lamb shall be the light thereof,
There we shall dwell in its effulgent day.
Darkness and sin fore'er shall flee away.
Though now we dim behold, as through a glass,
We then shall see his face, and know his will
Even as we are known,— and dwell for aye
Within the splendor of eternal day.

What the Word of God Is to Us

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) GOD has given us his Word as a lamp to our feet and a light to our path. Its teachings have a vital bearing on our prosperity in all the relations of life. Even in our temporal affairs it will be a wiser guide than any other counselor. Its divine instruction is the only way to success. There is no social position, no phase of human experience, for which the study of the Bible is not an essential preparation.

(1) The Bible is the great standard of right and wrong, clearly defining sin and holiness. Its living principles, running through our lives like threads of gold, are our only safeguard in trial and temptation.

The Bible is a chart, showing us the waymarks of truth. Those who are acquainted with this chart will be enabled to tread with certainty in the path of duty, wherever they may be called to go.

The Bible contains a simple and complete system of theology and philosophy. It is the book that makes us wise unto salvation. It tells us how to reach the abode of eternal happiness. It tells us of the love of God as shown in the plan of redemption, imparting the knowledge essential for all,— the knowledge of Christ. He is the Sent of God; he is the Author of our salvation. But apart from the Word of God, we could have no knowledge that such a person as the Lord Jesus ever visited our world, nor any knowledge of his divinity, as indicated by his previous existence with the Father.

The Bible is not written for the scholar alone; on the contrary, it was designed for the common people. The great truths necessary for our salvation are made as clear as noonday, and none will mistake and lose their way except those who follow their own judgment instead of the plainly revealed will of God.

The Word of God strikes at every wrong trait of character, molding the whole man, internally and externally, abasing his pride and self-exaltation, leading him to bring the spirit of Christ into the smaller as well as the larger duties of life. It teaches him to be unswerving in his allegiance to justice and purity, and at the same time always to be kind and compassionate.

The appreciation of the Bible grows with its study. Whichever way the student may turn, he will find displayed the infinite wisdom and love of God. To him who is truly converted, the Word of God is the joy and consolation of the life. The Spirit of God speaks to him, and his heart becomes like a watered garden.

A Strengthener of the Intellect

There is nothing more calculated to strengthen the intellect than a study of the Bible. No other book is so potent to elevate the thoughts, to give vigor to the faculties, as the broad, ennobling truths of the Bible. If God's Word were studied as it should be, men would have a breadth of mind, a nobility of character, that is rarely seen in these times.

No knowledge is so firm, so consistent, so far-reaching, as that obtained from a study of the Word of God. If there were not another book in the wide world, the Word of God, lived out through the grace of Christ, would make man perfect in this world, with a character fitted for the future, immortal life. Those who study the Word, taking it in faith as the truth, and receiving it into the character, will be complete in him who is all in all. Thank God for the possibilities set before humanity.

"Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." "Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all." "For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the word of the Lord endureth forever." The time devoted to a study of God's Word and to prayer will bring a hundredfold return.

The Word of God is the living seed, and as this seed is sown in the mind, the human agent must give diligent care to the successive stages of its growth. How is this to be done? — After the Word has been prayerfully received, it is to be cherished, and practised in the daily life. It is to spring up and bear fruit, putting forth first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear.

The Spirit Necessary

It is not enough to study the Bible as other books are studied. In order for it to be understood savingly, the Holy Spirit must move on the heart of the searcher. The same Spirit that inspired the Word must inspire the reader of the Word. Then will be heard the voice of heaven. "Thy Word, O God, is truth," will be the language of the soul.

The mere reading of the Word will not accomplish the result designed of heaven; it must be studied and cherished in the heart. The knowledge of God is not gained without mental effort. We should diligently study the Bible, asking God for the aid of the Holy Spirit, that we may understand his Word. We should take one verse, and concentrate the mind on the task of ascertaining the thought which God has put in that verse for us. We should dwell on the thought till it becomes our own, and we know "what saith the Lord."

There is but little benefit derived from a hasty reading of the Scriptures. One may read the Bible through, and yet fail to see its beauty, or to comprehend its deep and hidden meaning. One passage studied until its significance is clear to the mind, and its relation to the plan of salvation is evident, is of more value than the perusal of many chapters with no definite purpose in view, and no positive instruction gained. Keep your Bible with you. As you have opportunity, read it; fix the texts in your memory. Even while you are walking the streets, you may read a passage, and meditate upon it, thus fixing it in mind.

The life of Christ, that gives life to the world, is in his Word. It was by his word that Jesus healed disease and cast out demons; by his word he stilled the sea, and raised the dead; and the people bore witness that his word was with power. He spoke the word of God, as he had spoken to all the prophets and teachers of the Old Testament. The whole Bible is a manifestation of Christ. It is our source of power.

As our physical life is sustained by food, so our spiritual life is sustained by the Word of God. And every soul is to receive life from God's Word for himself. As we must eat for ourselves in order to receive nourishment, so we must receive the Word for ourselves.

(1)
The Faith I Live By, p. 7

We are not to obtain it merely through the medium of another mind.

Yes, the Word of God is the bread of life. (1) Those who eat and digest this Word, making it a part of every action and of every attribute of character, grow strong in the strength of God. It gives immortal vigor to the soul, perfecting the experience, and bringing joys that will abide forever.

Thanksgiving

G. B. THOMPSON

The Word admonishes us to give "thanks always for all things . . . in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ to God, even the Father." Eph. 5:20, A. R. V. We are here exhorted to live in such a frame of mind that from the heart there will be continually springing up thanksgiving to God. Not much room given for murmuring, complaining, faultfinding, backbiting, or gossiping. All these are to be put aside, and we are instead to give thanks "always." But who does this?— Surely everybody ought to, and if we had anything like a true conception of our Father's mercy and protection for us, we would do so. Yet many, even when they pray, fail to mingle any thanksgiving with their petitions,— always asking for something and giving no thanks for that which they are continually receiving. Surely this is supreme selfishness.

And, further, we are to give thanks for "all things." Mark the words, "All things." Whether things go as I want them to, or think they should, I am to thank God just the same. It is altogether likely that if I saw as God sees, I would be thankful that I did not have my own way. When afflicted, or pressed with care, or perplexed, or despairing of success, if persecuted and apparently forsaken, or in danger, or delivered from all appearance of danger, in any and all the varied circumstances of life, "always," and for "all things," we are to thank God and be happy. When mocked, scoffed at, and lied about, we are not to get the blues, and seek revenge. All we have to do is to thank God that things are as good as they are, and be happy. What a different world this would be if all would heed this injunction!

Of course we all, if Christians, give thanks at times. If we are in an earthquake, and escape the débris alive, we have a period of giving thanks. But why should we not be even more thankful if we escape the earthquake altogether? Yet we seldom think of this. We are on a railroad train, a terrible wreck occurs, and a score or more of our fellow passengers are maimed and killed. We escape, and are so thankful to our Heavenly Father for his merciful care. But we take a long journey in a train and escape a wreck altogether. Are we as thankful then as if we had been wrecked and barely escaped with life? Or are we more thankful when we are wrecked, than when we are not? If so, why so?

The Faith I Live By, p. 22

We are aroused from a burning building at night, and barely escape before the structure collapses. We are very thankful for the care and deliverance of our Lord. But we sleep all night, being shielded wholly from fire during the night. Are we as thankful in the morning as if the house had been burned over our head, and we barely escaped? But should we not be? We are sick and recover. We feel thankful to the Great Physician for healing us. But many go for months in robust health, and fail to be thankful. Should we not be as thankful for escaping sickness altogether as we are when restored to health when sick? But are we?

Let us learn to remember constantly that it is in Him that we "live, and move, and have our being;" that each moment that we live we have something for which to thank the Lord, that he hears our prayers and answers them, and we should therefore continually thank him for all his mercies. Shall we not be real Christians, and give thanks always for all things?

Warning the Cities

CLARENCE SANTEE

There is no branch of the work that has caused more perplexity than the problem of successfully warning the cities. There is no part that calls more loudly in its pressing need. To enforce what I would say in regard to city work, I will first give to you, in brief, some of the conditions that make the call most imperative that this matter be considered now.

We were told years ago of the conditions that would prevail just before the close of this message, and how the restraining hand would be removed. Speaking of the different elements of destruction, the "Spirit of Prophecy," Vol. I, pages 82-85, says:—

"These wonderful exhibitions will be more numerous and terrible just before the second coming of Christ, and the end of the world, as signs of its speedy destruction." "These fiery issues have been and will be his agents to blot out from the earth very wicked cities." "Greater wonders than have yet been seen will be witnessed by those upon the earth a short period previous to the coming of Christ." "In the day of the Lord, just before the coming of Christ, God will send lightnings from heaven in his wrath, which will unite with fire in the earth. The mountains will burn like a furnace, and will pour forth terrible streams of lava, destroying gardens and fields, villages and cities. . . . The earth will be convulsed, and there will be dreadful eruptions and earthquakes everywhere."

This was written more than fifty years ago. Coming down to six years ago, I read in "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VII, page 83: "The time is near when large cities will be visited by the judgments of God. In a little while, these cities will be terribly shaken. No matter how large or how strong their buildings, no matter how many safeguards against fire may have been provided, let God touch these buildings, and in a few minutes or a few hours they are in ruins. The ungodly cities of our world are to be swept away by the besom of destruction."

Some say that the Testimonies tell of things after they have come, but not before. But since that was written, six years ago, or more, men have witnessed its fulfilment in the shaking of cities, and their destruction by fire, in a manner that has never before been witnessed.

The prophet Jeremiah says: "Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee; this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, because it reacheth unto thine heart." "Destruction upon destruction is cried; for the whole land is spoiled; suddenly are my tents spoiled, and my curtains in a moment." Jer. 4:18, 20.

They have reached this point; and we see San Francisco, Valparaiso, and Kingston shaken down; while a city of thirty thousand at the foot of Mount Pelee was laid silent in death with one blast of the sulphurous vapors of the burning mountain. Many thousands who inhabited these cities, are now beyond reach of help. These things did not happen this way. The cities are ripe for the judgments of God.

You will remember the article from the pen of the servant of the Lord in which this statement occurs: "The destroying angels are to-day executing their commission. Death will come in all places. This is why I am so anxious for our cities to be warned. There is a work to be done by canvassing in our cities that has not been done. . . . Now is our time to work."

If God would warn those living on the other side of the flood by Noah, Sodom by Lot, or Nineveh by Jonah, he will as surely warn the honest in these wicked cities in these last days. He has a way that it can be done. There must be faith in the breast of him who undertakes it. How can it be done the most quickly and successfully? Concerning the city work, we read, in "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VI, page 32: "The Lord has instructed us that the camp-meeting is one of the most important instrumentalities for the accomplishment of this work." But this will accomplish little unless thorough house-to-house work is done. The best results follow when faithful house-to-house workers take a package of tracts inclosed in an envelope, and one of our missionary papers, and leave one at every house where they will be taken, giving out a paper, and saying that they will call and get the package unless, after reading, the person with whom it is left desires to keep it; if so, he can have it for five cents. The next week these workers should go over the same ground with the next issue of the paper, and a second package of tracts, taking up the first. People are not so likely to destroy the packages if they know that you will REST the bier, comrades. Drop to the earth your burden:

Hands that the King has touched are devoted to other deeds.
He has raised gladness up from the leaden couch of sorrow;
He has passed on his way to the finding of others' needs,
And he bids you follow him.

Time there was when he looked on your tears with pity,
Fashioned his way to meet you as you sought the grave.
Now,— hear his calm voice as he questions in gentle wonder,
"Know ye not, friends, that I came? that my hand was stretched to save?
Why are your eyes still dim?" (2)

Glowing with love is the path that stretches toward Judah,
The path that lies thick with stones, and scarred by the autumn rains.
Feet there must be upheld by the spirit of that strong Master,
Pressing on to the Bethanys, leaving behind the Nains:
The cup has yet to brim.

Lazarus sleeps, but his sleep shall find an awakening;
Cometh the day of the visitation on Olivet's height.
Lift up your heads, and voice not a bitter and weary sorrow;
Behold, the captives shall burst through the gates of the hadean night,
In the arms of the cherubim.

Disseminating Temperance Principles

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) [GOD bids his people blend harmoniously in their service for him, that they may work in Christ's lines. This last message of warning must be brought to the world, and there are continual calls for those who will go forth and carry the message to the missionary fields that are calling for help. There are some who can not themselves go to these fields, but they can help with their means in support of the work.

Many can engage in the work of selling our periodicals. Thus they can earn means for the work in foreign fields while sowing seeds of truth in the byways and hedges in the home field. Such labor will be blessed of God, and it will not be done in vain.

(2) [Wherever you are, let your light shine forth. Hand our papers and pamphlets to those with whom you associate, when you are riding on the cars, visiting, conversing with your neighbors; and improve every opportunity to speak a word in season. The Holy Spirit will make the seed productive in some hearts.] (1)

As a people we should cultivate kindliness and courtesy in our association with those whom we meet. Let us avoid any abruptness of manner, and strive always to present the truth in an easy way. This truth means life, eternal life to the receiver. Study therefore to pass easily and courteously from subjects of a temporal nature to the spiritual and eternal. A most courteous manner characterized the work of the Saviour. Seek in the most gentle way to introduce your mission. While walking by the way, or seated by the wayside, you may drop into some heart the seed of truth.

[I have words of encouragement to speak in regard to the special number of the Watchman, which the Southern Publishing House is soon to bring out. I shall rejoice to see our conferences help in this work by taking a large number of this issue for circulation. Let there be no forbiddings placed upon the effort, but let all take hold to give this temperance number a wide circulation.

There could be no better time than now for a movement of this kind, when the temperance question is creating such wide-spread interest. Let our people everywhere take hold decidedly to let it be seen where we stand on the temperance question. Let everything possible be done to circulate strong, stirring appeals for the closing of the saloon. Let this paper be made a power for good. Our work for temperance is to be more spirited, more decided.]

Precious light will be given in the publications you scatter through the towns and cities. Your humble prayers, your unselfish activity, will be blessed of God, and the truth as it is in Jesus will come to those who need it. The words that Christ spoke to men while he was in the world, he will speak again through his humble faithful followers. Through them he will give to men the bread of life and the waters of salvation. Brethren, take up this work in humility of heart. The simplicity of true godliness will cause you to be respected, and will lead men and women to seek the source of your power. Believe, and you will (3) receive the things you ask for.

[The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is an organization with whose efforts for the spread of temperance principles we can heartily unite. The light has been given me that we are not to stand aloof from them, but, while there is to be no sacrifice of principle on our part, as far as possible we are to unite with them in laboring for temperance reforms.] My husband and I in our labors, united with these temperance workers, and we had the joy of seeing several unite with us in the observance of the true Sabbath. Among them there is a strong prejudice against us, but we (4) shall not remove this prejudice by standing aloof. God is testing us. (4) [We are to work with them when we can, and we can assuredly do this on the question of utterly closing the saloon.

As the human agent submits his will to the will of God, the Holy Spirit will make the impression upon the hearts of those to whom he ministers. I have been shown that we are not to shun the W. C. T. U. workers. By uniting with them in behalf of total abstinence, we do not change our position regarding the observance of the seventh day, and we can show our appreciation of their position regarding the subject of temperance. By opening the door, and inviting them to unite with us on the temperance question, we secure their help along temperance lines; and they, by uniting with us, will hear new truths which the Holy Spirit is waiting to impress upon hearts.] (4)

My brethren, be workers together with Christ. Make every possible effort in season and out of season to spread the light of present truth. The Lord has taught us how safe is the cable that anchors us to the living Rock. Here is an opportunity to labor for those who have truth on some points, but who on other points are not safely anchored. Keep in touch with the people wherever you can. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."]

"Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." "Blessed is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates, and waiting at the posts of my doors." "He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength. Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: but they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint." "In that day that I cried thou answeredst me, and strengthenedst me with strength in my soul."

I entreat every soul to seek for true conversion of heart, and then labor for the salvation of precious souls.

A Call of the Eleventh Hour

F. E. FAIRCHILD

"YET if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begins at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" 1 Peter 4:16-18.

This solemn text is confronting every Seventh-day Adventist in the world. Not only does it speak in thunder tones to the faithful minister, Bible worker, and canvasser, but to every one for whom the precious blood of Jesus was shed on Calvary's cross. This scripture says that "if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf." Now, the faithful canvassers are certainly included in this class. And when persecution and sore trials come in like a

Trust Is Best

I THINK if thou couldst see,
  With thy dim mortal sight,
How meanings dark to thee
  Are shadows hiding light,
Truth's efforts crossed and vexed,
Life's purpose all perplexed,—
If thou couldst see them right,
I think that they would seem all clear, and wise, and bright.

And yet thou canst not know,
  And yet thou canst not see;
Wisdom and sight are slow
  In poor humanity.
If thou couldst trust, poor soul,
Thou wouldst find peace and rest;
Wisdom and sight are well, but trust is best.

Self-Love or Self-Sacrifice

MRS. E. G. WHITE

HUMAN beings belong to one great family,— the family of God. The Creator designed that they should respect and love one another, ever manifesting a pure, unselfish interest in one another's welfare. But Satan's aim has been to lead men to self first; and yielding themselves to his control, they have developed a selfishness that has filled the world with misery and strife, setting human (1) beings at variance with one another. Selfishness is the essence of depravity, and because human beings have yielded to its power, the opposite of allegiance to God is seen in the world to-day. Nations, families, and individuals are filled with a desire to make self a center. Man longs to rule over his fellow men. Separating himself in his egotism from God and his fellow beings, he follows his unrestrained inclinations. He acts as if the good of others depended on their subjection to his supremacy.

Selfishness has brought discord into the church, filling it with unholy ambition. If Christians are sanctified through a belief in God's Word, why do they so often speak words that would bruise the hearts of others? Why do they acknowledge no law but the law of selfishness? Under the baleful influence of selfishness, men have lost the sense of what it means to love one another with a Christlike love.

Love for Christ unites man to his fellow man in unselfish interest. This is the science of benevolence. He whose heart is filled with the love that centers in God, realizes that he must deal justly and tenderly with his fellow beings because they have been redeemed by the blood of Christ. Supreme love for God leads us to seek the highest good of humanity.

Selfishness destroys Christlikeness, filling man with self-love. It leads to continual departure from righteousness. Christ says, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." But self-love is blind to the perfection which God requires.

How great the love of God is! God made the world to enlarge heaven. He desired a larger family. And before man was created, God and Christ entered into a covenant that if he fell from his allegiance, Christ would bear the penalty of transgression. Man fell, but he was not left to the power of the destroyer. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." To the Redeemer was given all power to impart to fallen human beings for their benefit and blessing.

While on this earth, the Saviour was sorely tried. He was tempted in all points like as we are. He poured out his soul with strong crying and tears as he looked upon the backslidden condition of the people he had brought out of bondage. He saw them full of pride and self-exaltation, full of selfishness and covetousness. All this he must labor to overcome. He must live among them the life that God requires all his children to live. He must stand free from the slightest taint of impurity. Not in the least particular must he deviate from the principles of righteousness.

The gulf made by sin has been bridged. All may come boldly to the throne of grace, seeking help in every time of need. While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. He took the place of the sinner, that he might present the repentant sinner to the Father, saying, "Lay his guilt on me. I have espoused his cause." Holding out his hands, bearing the marks of his crucifixion, the Saviour says, "I have graven that sinner upon the palms of my hands. No longer look upon him as guilty. Let him stand before thee guiltless; for I have borne his iniquity." At the cross, justice and mercy met together, and righteousness and peace kissed each other. God bowed his head in recognition of the completeness of the offering made for sin, and said, "It is enough."

As we contemplate the great love of God, shall not our hearts be subdued and softened, yea, broken? Shall we not be filled with patience, long-suffering, and love? Shall we not die to self?

Christ came to this world to reveal the love of God. His followers are to continue the work which he began. Let us strive to help and strengthen one an- (1) other. Seeking the good of others is the way in which true happiness can be found. Man does not work against his own interest by loving God and his fellow men. The more unselfish his spirit, the happier he is, because he is fulfilling God's purpose for him. The breath of God is breathed through him, filling him with gladness. To him life is a sacred trust, precious in his sight because given by God to be spent in ministering to others.

"Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love. . . . If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God loves his brother also."

Nehemiah — No. 1

S. N. HASKELL

THE character of Nehemiah can be studied with profit by Christians in every walk of life. He was truly an "all-round character." We find him presented as a business man, a contractor and a builder; an organizer, a governor, and a reformer, and with it all a God-fearing Christian and a Bible student.

The position he held as cup-bearer to the Persian king was a very important one. The artist has represented Nehemiah as a youth standing before the king; instead of that he was a man in the prime of life. The cup-bearer held in his power the life of the king, and none except the most trusted subjects were permitted to fill that office. Like Daniel, he won the respect of the king. This was shown by the king's refusing to let him go to Jerusalem until Nehemiah set the date of his return.

Nehemiah had grasped the magnitude of the whole work in his mind; he decided it would be of no use to go up to Jerusalem unless ample provision was made for the work; and, in his first request to the king, he asked for sufficient timber to complete the work and for royal authority to carry the whole undertaking through without interruption. Neh. 2: 5-10.

His wisdom is shown also in his taking a critical survey of the whole situation before he began the work. He evidently planned the completed work in his mind before he began to build, thus he was able to make every stroke count when the work was started. Neh. 2: 12-16.

His ability as an organizer, as well as a builder, was shown in the building of the wall. No ordinary mind could have organized the whole force of Israel into one band of workers as Nehemiah did.

When we remember that he accomplished in fifty-two days a work that the various leaders in Israel had been trying to accomplish for nearly one hundred years, we have a faint conception of the magnitude of the work.

Three distinct calls had been sounded throughout Babylon, calling all Israel to leave Babylon and build up the city and walls of Jerusalem; but the mass of Israel slumbered and slept amid the luxuries of Babylon. From childhood they had heard of the broken walls of Jerusalem; but it became to them as a pleasant song, a bit of sentiment, and failed to arouse them from their lethargy.

Daniel over ninety years before had said that the street and walls of Jeru-

Treasure Hidden[1]

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE sayings of Christ are to be valued not merely in accordance with the measure of man's understanding; they are to be considered in the important bearing which Christ himself gave them. He took old truths, of which he himself was the originator, and placed them before his hearers in heaven's own light. And how different was their representation! What a flood of meaning, and brightness, and spirituality was brought in by their explanation!

Christ set forth deeper and more spiritual truths than had ever before been heard from ruler, scribes, or elders. "I am the way, the truth, and the life," he declared. The rich treasures of truth opened before the people attracted and charmed them. They were in marked contrast with the spiritless, lifeless expositions of the Old Testament Scriptures by the rabbis. And the miracles which Jesus wrought kept constantly before his hearers the honor and glory of God. He seemed to them a messenger direct from heaven; for he spoke not to their ears only, but to their hearts. As he stood forth in his humility, yet in dignity and majesty, as one born to command, a power attended him; hearts were melted into tenderness. An earnest desire was created to be in his presence, to listen to the voice of him who uttered truth with such solemn melody.

At the beginning of his ministry, Christ had declared the character of his work. "And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read. And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord."

That word was fulfilled. The sick were healed, demoniacs were restored, lepers and paralytics were made whole. The dumb spoke, the ears of the deaf were opened, the dead were brought to life, and the poor had the gospel preached to them. Every miracle wrought by Christ convinced some of his true character. Had a man in the common walks of life done the same works that Christ did, all would have declared that he was working by the power of God. But there were those who did not receive the light of heaven, and they set themselves more determinedly against this evidence.

The Jews were expecting an earthly prince, who would deliver them from the power which God had declared would rule over them if they refused to keep the way of the Lord, and obey his laws. They had made their proud boast that Israel's king, the star arising from Judah, would break their thraldom, and make of them a kingdom of priests.

It was not the absence of external honor and riches and glory that caused the Jews to reject Jesus. The Sun of Righteousness, shining amid the moral darkness in such distinct rays, revealed the contrast between sin and holiness, purity and defilement, and such light was not welcome to them. Christ was not such a one as themselves. The Jews could have borne the disappointment of their hopes better than they could bear the righteous denunciation of their sins. In parables, Christ laid bare their professed sanctity. He compared them to whitened sepulchers, deceiving the people by their pretensions to purity.

In his youth, Christ was subject to his parents,— an example of obedience to all the youth. In his youth he learned the trade of a carpenter, and earned his bread by the sweat of his brow. Thus he honored physical labor. It should be an encouragement and source of strength to every human being, in the performance of the commonplace duties of life, to know that Jesus toiled to provide for his own temporal wants.

The teachings of Christ, in precept and example, were the sowing of the seed afterward to be cultivated by his disciples. The testimony of these fishermen was to be referred to as the highest authority, by all the nations of the world. They had not learned in the schools of the prophets; but Jesus had been their teacher, and had given them knowledge uncorrupted by tradition and bigotry. Christ scattered the heavenly grain, which minds and hearts that desired light and knowledge might gather up as precious treasure sent from heaven.

After his resurrection, Christ opened the understanding of his followers, that they might understand the Scriptures. Everything had been transformed by the working of the arts of Satan. Truth was covered up by the rubbish of error, and hidden from finite sight. When Christ had foretold his humiliation, rejection, and crucifixion, the disciples would not take in his meaning. It had been a part of their education that the Messiah would set up a temporal kingdom; and when Christ spoke of his sufferings, they did not understand his words. He reproved them because of their slowness of apprehension, and promised them that when the Comforter should come, he would bring many things to their remembrance.

Christ had many truths to give to his disciples, of which he could not speak, because they did not advance with the light that was flashed upon Levitical laws and the sacrificial offerings. They did not accept the light, advance with the light, and follow on to still greater brightness as Providence should lead the way. And for the same reason, Christ's disciples of 1898 do not comprehend important matters of truth. So dull has been the comprehension even of those who teach the truth to others, that many things can not be opened to them until they reach heaven. This ought not to be. But as men's minds become narrow, they think they know all, when they have only a glimpse of truth. They close their minds, as if there were no more for them to learn; and should the Lord attempt to lead them on, they would not accept the increased light. They cling to the spot where they see light, when that which they see is only a glimmer of the bright beams they might enjoy. They know very little of what it means to follow in the footsteps of Christ.

In their harmonious relation, the truths of Scripture are like links in a chain. Just as fast as our minds are quickened by the Spirit of God to comprehend light, and in humbleness appropriate it, we shall dispense it to others, and give the glory back to God. The development of truth is the reward of the humble-hearted seeker who will fear God, and walk with him. The truth which the mind grasps as truth is capable of constant expansion and new development. While we behold it, the truth is revealed in all its bearings in the life and character, and becomes more clear, and certain, and beauteous. The mind that grasps it in its preciousness becomes elevated, ennobled, sanctified.

Far, very far, are human minds from grasping the teachings of Christ. These are old truths in new settings. The entire system of Judaism was the gospel veiled. Those who will not consider are like the Jews. It is humbling to their dignity and pride to work the mines of truth. But the Light of the world is sending his divine rays to illuminate the entire Jewish economy, and the minds that have been accepting the sayings of men as the commandments of God are to be educated to look to God himself, the author of all truth.

In his habits and customs and practices, Christ did not conform to the standard of the world. What a lesson he gives to the churches that bear his name! They are not to exalt themselves above the Majesty of heaven, their Redeemer. What do men find in the example of Christ to justify them in their feelings of superiority, in keeping themselves apart from their fellow men, hiding themselves from their own flesh, because they have obtained more of this world's goods than their neighbors? Because the world honors the wealthy and despises the poor, shall those who claim to follow Jesus do the same? Whose example are such following? Surely not the example of him who said, "He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised," "to preach the gospel to the poor."

Very many teachers are content with a supposition in regard to the truth. They have crude ideas, and are content with a surface work in searching for truth, taking for granted that they have all that is essential. They take the sayings of others for truth, being too indolent to put themselves to diligent, earnest labor, represented in the Word as digging for hidden treasure. But man's inventions are not only unreliable, they are dangerous; for they place man where God should be. They place the sayings of men where a "Thus saith the Lord" should be. The world's Redeemer alone possesses the key to unlock the treasure-house of the Old Testament. He explores hidden things. He separates the precious truth from superstition and error and the devisings and imaginings of men.

Sharp, clear perceptions of truth will never be the reward of indolence. Investigation of every point that has been received as truth will richly repay the searcher; he will find precious gems. And in closely investigating every jot and tittle which we think is established truth, in comparing scripture with scripture, we may discover errors in our interpretation of Scripture. Christ would have the searcher of his Word sink the shaft deeper into the mines of truth. If the search is properly conducted, jewels of inestimable value will be found. The Word of God is the mine of the unsearchable riches of Christ.

The Basis of Confidence

G. B. THOMPSON

Have you sometimes feared that in the trying times just before us, you would cast away your hope, and make shipwreck of your faith? Many in times of special trial have done this, and there is danger that each of us may do likewise. Many a soldier has proved a coward, and in the heat of the battle, when his presence was needed most, has fled from the field of conflict. There are moral cowards as well.

But we need not fear. Perfect love casts fear out of our hearts. The Lord is able to make us stand. He can uphold us with the right hand of his righteousness. Have you placed yourself in his hands? If so, there is no power which is able to pluck you out of your Father's hand.

I used to wonder how I could know that I would stand when confronted with the beast and his image, and forced to struggle amid the trials of the closing conflict. But I have settled it like this: If I stand now, I have the assurance that I will stand then. If I am an overcomer to-day, I can have assurance that I may be an overcomer to-morrow. It is simply a matter of a daily walk with God. "As thy days, so shall thy strength [security, margin] be." Deut. 33:25, A. R. V. The daily overcomer can look with confidence into the future, and with an abiding trust in God, expect in his name to triumph. But it will be a day-by-day fight for victory.

But what confidence can we have of being an overcomer in harder trials if we are being defeated in the conflicts we are now having? "If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses? and if in the land of peace, wherein thou trustedst, they wearied thee, then how wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?" Jer. 12:5. The soldier who is defeated in a skirmish can hardly expect to win in a pitched battle.

But be of good courage, for we have a Captain who has never lost a battle, One "who always leadeth us in triumph." 2 Cor. 2:14, A. R. V. In him we can triumph each day till the end. And we have assurance for the future. The blessed Lord has provided that "neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Let us never forget that we are fighting a vanquished foe, and in all these things we are "more than conquerors through him that loved us."

Nehemiah — No. 2

S. N. HASKELL

While we may admire Nehemiah in his character as an organizer and a builder, yet the finest traits in his character are seen when we study him as a Christian and a Bible student.

The first glimpse of this side of his character is seen in his sorrow on account of the desolate condition of Jerusalem. We can imagine how he was brought face to face with the proposition, whether he loved the cause of God more than the good position he held in the court of the king. No doubt many earnest prayers were offered before he came to the place where he was willing to attempt what was considered an almost hopeless task, in the face of countless difficulties. No wonder that his face betrayed the inward struggle of his soul, and was noticed by the king!

Nehemiah's constant trust in God is shown by his sending up a prayer to heaven for wisdom before he answered the king. If all were in such close touch with heaven, there would be more men through whom God could work mightily for the advancement of his work in the earth. Nehemiah had an experience with God; he had something to tell. It would have been of great interest to us if he had recorded the testimony he bore in that first large gathering that he held after he reached Jerusalem. It was a stirring personal testimony of how God had wrought for Nehemiah personally, and perhaps he related his experience during that three months before he came to the place where he could relinquish his high position, and give all there was of him for the work of his God. All we have recorded is,— "Then I told them of the hand of my God, which was good upon me; as also the king's words that he had spoken unto me;" and the same spirit of self-sacrifice entered into the people and they said, "Let us rise up and build."

If every worker had a deep, living experience in the things of God to relate to the people, it would inspire courage and hope in their hearts. A stream can rise no higher than its fountain; we can not impart what we have not received. This truth is taught in the following scripture: "Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort whereby we ourselves are comforted of God; for as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation aboundeth by Christ."

The power Nehemiah had with the people was measured by the depth of the Christian experience he himself had experienced. Every man's usefulness in the cause is measured by the depth of his own Christian experience.

When Nehemiah was "laughed to scorn" by the enemies of the work, he replied, "The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build." He took no credit to himself, but gave all the honor to God. Over and over again, as the difficulties thickened around this faithful worker, we have his prayers recorded; he cries out to God for help, but does not slacken his efforts to forward the work. With weapons of war in one hand, and laboring tools in the other, they work from daylight until the stars come out, and watch all night. When the people might become discouraged, Nehemiah's words of courage, "Our God shall fight for us," bring new hope and courage to the weary workers. Nehemiah did not direct others to do what he himself did not share. During the rush of work he never took off his clothes, except for washing; he was ready for any emergency that might arise day or night. When the conflict waxed the hottest, and the enemy was trying every device to turn him from the work and discourage him, we hear him pray, "O God, strengthen my hands," as he steadfastly refuses to make any compromises whatever with the enemy, or even to hide in the temple from their assaults.

When Tobiah, Sanballat, and the false prophets were striving by every means in their power to discourage him Nehemiah has no words for them, his prayer ascends as he hastens on with his work: "My God, think thou upon Tobiah and Sanballat according to these their works," etc. He leaves it all with the Lord, and keeps at the work the Lord has given him to do. If he had stopped to parley with the enemy one moment, he would never have finished the wall in fifty-two days.

When the workers in the third angel's message are so absorbed in hastening the work that they have no time nor words to spend on the enemy, we shall see the loud cry of the message, and a mighty work accomplished in a very short time.

Even the nobles were in league with the enemy, and were reporting Nehemiah's fashioned. Most earnest attention must be given to the education which will impart a knowledge of salvation, and will conform the life and character to the divine similitude. It is the love of God, the purity of soul woven into the life like threads of gold, that is of true worth. The height man may thus reach has not been fully realized.

"For the accomplishment of this work a broad foundation must be laid. A new purpose must be brought in and find place, and students must be aided in applying Bible principles in all they do. Whatever is crooked, whatever is twisted out of the right line, is to be plainly pointed out and avoided; for it is iniquity not to be perpetuated."

Putting these Bible quotations and the Testimonies side by side, it is clear that the Spirit of God is yet to do marvelous things with and for God's people. All our people must submit themselves to this power, and all our institutions must become mediums of its operation. This power will baptize the people for service, and cause God's servants to see eye to eye and work heart to heart in finishing the work. It will then be cut short in righteousness. Wm. Covert.

Impartiality in Education

Who can determine which one of a family will prove to be efficient in the work of God? There should be general education of all the members, and all our youth should be permitted to have the blessings and privileges of an education at our schools, that they may be inspired to become laborers together with God. They all need an education that they may be fitted for usefulness in this life, qualified for places of responsibility both in private and public life. There is great necessity of making plans that there may be a large number of competent workers; and many should fit themselves as teachers, that others may be trained and disciplined for the great work of the future. The church should take in the situation, and by their influence and means seek to bring about the much-desired end. Let a fund be created by generous contributions for the establishment of schools for the advancement of educational work. We need men well trained, well educated to work in the interest of the churches. They should present the fact that we can not trust our youth to go to seminaries and colleges established by other denominations, but must gather them in where their religious training will not be neglected. God would not have us in any sense behind in educational work; our college should be far in advance in the highest kind of education.

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." "The entrance of thy word giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple." If we do not have schools for our youth, they will attend other seminaries and colleges, and will be exposed to infidel sentiments, cavilings and questionings concerning the inspiration of the Bible. There is a great deal of talk concerning higher education, and many suppose that this higher education consists wholly in an education in science and literature; but this is not all. The highest education includes the knowledge of the word of God, and is comprehended in the words of Christ, "That they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

Though we have come short of doing what we might have done for our youth and children in the past, let us now repent and redeem the time. The Lord says, "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land: but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword."— Mrs. E. G. White.

"Take Time to Be Holy"

He who is seeking to qualify himself for the sacred work of God should be careful not to place himself on the enemy's ground, but should choose the society of those who will help him to obtain divine knowledge. God suffered John, the beloved disciple, to be exiled to Patmos, where he was separated from the world's bustle and strife, shut away from every outside influence, and even from the work that he loved. Then the Lord could commune with him, opening before him the closing scenes of this world's history. John the Baptist made his home in the wilderness, there to receive of God the message he was to bear to prepare the way for the coming One. So far as consistent, we should shun every influence which would tend to divert the mind from the work of God. And those especially who are young in faith and experience should beware that they do not in self-confidence place themselves in the way of temptation.— Selected.

A Sure Reward

His [Christ's] impressive parable of the Good Shepherd represents the responsibility of every minister and of every Christian who has accepted a position as teacher of children and youth and a teacher of old and young, in opening to them the Scriptures. If one strays from the fold, he is not followed with harsh words and a whip, but with winning invitations to return. The ninety and nine that had not strayed do not call for the sympathy and tender, pitying love of the shepherd. But the shepherd follows the sheep and lambs that have caused him the greatest anxiety and have engrossed his sympathies. The disinterested, faithful shepherd leaves all the rest of the sheep, and his whole heart and soul and energies are taxed to seek the one that is lost. And then the figure — praise God! — the shepherd returns with the sheep, carrying him in his arms, rejoicing at every step; he says, "Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost." I am so thankful we have in the parable, the sheep found. And this is the very lesson the shepherd is to learn,— success in bringing the sheep and lambs back.

There is no picture presented before our imagination of a sorrowful shepherd returning without the sheep. And the Lord Jesus declares that the pleasure of the shepherd, and his joy in finding the sheep, causes pleasure and rejoicing in heaven among the angels. The wisdom of God, his power and his love, are without a parallel. It is the divine guarantee that not one, even of the straying sheep and lambs is overlooked, and not one left unsuccored. A golden chain — the mercy and compassion of divine power — is passed around every one of these imperiled souls. Then shall not the human agent co-operate with God? Shall he be sinful, failing, defective in character himself, regardless of the soul ready to perish? Christ has linked him to his eternal throne by offering his own life. — "Christian Education."

Simplicity as Related to Teaching

The results of good teaching, being so numerous and far-reaching, it is necessary that those who intend to devote their life, or a portion of it, to this work, should endeavor to learn how to teach. It is also important that those who are now teaching should learn to do better work, even though they be regarded as competent teachers. It is not probable that any modern teacher has achieved perfect success in that work, although there was a time when one man realized in himself that high ideal. That man was Jesus Christ. This is a fact too familiar to require proof. He is an example in this respect as well as all others. Moses was instructed to construct the tabernacle that was erected anciently, exactly according to the pattern; and to-day, the methods of the greatest Teacher the world ever produced are open to our scrutiny,— a pattern to all teachers who desire to improve.

Conspicuous among the distinguishing features of his teachings, is simplicity, the result of which was that the "common people heard him gladly." The common people admire and understand simplicity. Many writers and speakers do not have great success, do not influence to any great extent the masses of the people, because of the lack of simplicity in their manners and language. Is there not the same lack in many who assume the responsibility of teaching and training the youth?

The writer well remembers a circumstance in his boyhood days which demonstrates the value of simplicity in the teaching art. He needed special help in solving an algebraic problem. The teacher spent much time and labor to make the problem clear, but having failed, the pupil sought the assistance of another teacher in the same school, and received the help that he needed in a very few minutes. The teacher first mentioned failed, not because she did not understand the principles involved in solving the problem, for she solved it correctly; but she spent too much time and talk in explaining unimportant details; her thoughts were disconnected. and not clearly expressed. Such teaching was confusing. But the other teacher, explaining in a few well-chosen words the salient points in the solution of the problem, very easily and quickly gave the required information. The faculty of coming to the point at once, and clearly and quickly giving the information needed — no more no less — is simplicity that is appreciated by students, and tends to make the teacher's work easier, and much more inspiring and effective.

One chief essential in teaching is clearness. We can not see the bottom of streams of muddy water, however shallow; but the eye may penetrate very deep streams, if their waters are clear. This is also true in regard to deep thoughts and difficult subjects. Just as clear water, though deep, appears shallow, so deep thoughts may be easily grasped by students of ordinary intellects, if the teacher's methods and expressions are very clear.

In the very nature of things, clearness is the result of simplicity. How simple are the words and teachings of the Great Teacher! "He made truth beautiful by presenting it in the most direct and simple way. His language was pure, refined, and clear as the running stream." As a result, he had thousands of intensely interested pupils; and such teaching in our schools will produce the same results. Let us pray and work for such teaching ability, and joyfully view its inevitable results.

W. C. Mathewson.

Results of Christian Education

The work of teachers is an important one. They should make the Word of God their meditation. God will communicate by his own Spirit to the soul. Pray as you study, "Lord, open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." When the teacher will rely upon God in prayer, the Spirit of Christ will come upon him, and God will work through him by the Holy Spirit upon the minds of the students. The Holy Spirit fills the mind and heart with sweet hope, and courage, and Bible imagery, and this will be communicated to the students; the words of truth will grow in importance, and assume a breadth and fulness of meaning of which you have never dreamed. The beauty and riches of the Word of God have a transforming influence upon mind and character; the sparks of heavenly love will fall upon the hearts of the children as an inspiration. We may bring hundreds and thousands of children to Christ if we will work for them.

Let all to whom these words may come be melted and subdued. Let us in our educational work embrace far more than we have done of the children and youth, and there will be a whole army of missionaries raised up to work for God. I say again, Establish schools for the children where there are churches,— those who assemble to worship God.— Mrs. E. G. White.

The Value of Teaching in an Ungraded School

An Illustration

Forty years ago the number of educated women was small everywhere. It was larger in Ohio than in most States, but not so large but that one might safely say of any well-prepared woman that she would probably become a teacher. This, Miss Thoburn became at the early age of eighteen. But though young in years, she was remarkably mature in judgment, and had that admirable admixture of frank kindliness with native leadership which enables its happy possessor to become at once the friend and guide of others. She, who was afterward to open the way to college education for Christian young women in India, began her experience as a humble country school-teacher in Ohio. And, indeed, it is no mean preparation for any place of usefulness in life to meet at life's threshold the severe test of a "country schoolmarm's" experiences. What tact and shrewdness and native force that experience calls for in any successful issue of it, only those know who have tried and either failed or succeeded. If we were advising a missionary candidate with suitable preparation, who, for any reason, is detained in the home land for a while, we would recommend a year's experience in a country schoolroom as likely to exercise and develop all those qualities most needed in a foreign missionary.— Effective Workers in Needy Fields.

Development of Individuality

The teacher is to develop individuality, not to absorb it. She should teach pupils to do, not what she wills, because she wills it, but what is right, because it is right. The moment Miss Duzenberry leaves her room, the pupils are in an uproar, showing by their extravagant misbehavior how great was the will-pressure upon them, and how lamentable a reaction is sure to follow when the pressure is removed. Besides, think what a strain it puts upon these little minds and bodies. Our whole system of primary instruction is barbarous. But when to the crowded seats, bad ventilation, infectious atmosphere, long hours, and unnatural discipline, you add a constant nervous excitement, you have every requisite for fitting children for madhouses or for coffins.— C. W. Bardeen.

The School

Schools of the Early Church

The tender solicitude of the early Christians for the religious instruction of their children is one of their most beautiful characteristics. They taught them even at the earliest dawn of intelligence the sacred names of God and the Saviour. They sought to lead the infant minds of their children up to God by familiar narratives from Scripture, of Joseph, of young Samuel, of Josiah, and of the holy child Jesus. The history of the patriarchs and prophets, apostles and holy men, whose lives are narrated in the Sacred Volume, were the nursery tales with which they sought to form the tender minds of their children. As the mind of the child expanded, the parents made it their sacred duty and delightful task daily to exercise him in the recital of select passages of Scripture relating to the doctrines and duties of religion. The Bible was the entertainment of the fireside. It was the first, the last, almost the only school-book of the child; the sacred psalmody, the only song with which his infant cry was hushed as he was lulled to rest on his mother's arm. The sacred song and the rude melody of its music were, from the earliest periods of Christian antiquity, an important means of impressing the infant heart with sentiments of piety, and of imbuing the susceptible minds of the young with the knowledge and faith of the Scriptures. . . .

The purpose of these early Christian parents, as of the ancient Jews, was to train up their children in the fear of God. In order that the children might be exposed as little as possible to the corrupting influence of heathen association, their education was conducted within the healthful precincts of the home. As a result, they grew up without a taste for debasing pleasures; they acquired domestic tastes; and, when the time came, they took their place as consistent and earnest workers in the church. . . .

The beauty of this character made its impression upon an age notorious for its vice. It extorted unwilling praises from the enemies of Christianity. A celebrated heathen orator exclaimed, "What wives these Christians have!" "A noble testimony," says a writer of note, "to the refining power of women, and the most beautiful tribute to the gentle, persuasive influence of her piety, which all antiquity, heathen or Christian, furnishes." —Coleman.

What Estimate Do You Place on Your Boy?

As we visit from place to place, and see the indifference so many manifest in the future welfare of their children, we are led to ask this question, "What estimate do they place upon their boys?" Their love for position, power, and honor are the inducements held out to lay claim upon their best energies. These all appear to be objects worthy of aspiration, but they universally fall short of the high ideal that God has set for his children. With these ideals eternity is lost sight of, and the estimate placed upon children is measured chiefly by the possibilities of worldly aggrandizement. But what are the results? How many there are who see no further than that which is found in worldly glory and honor. They seem to be dazed when told that a storm is coming which will dash to nothing all their fine hopes. "Because iniquity shall be multiplied, the love of the many shall wax cold." In no way is this scripture more manifest than in the lack of interest shown by many parents in the eternal welfare of their children.

One reason for this state of affairs is that the ideals of many parents concerning the education of their children are not pure ones. The system of education which is in vogue in the world is planned to meet the demands of the world. The courses of instruction are so arranged as to influence the child's impressions at the earliest period of his life. It is planned that the child shall be in school just at the time when his services are of the least value to his money-loving parents. "Why," says the money lover, "go to the expense of establishing and maintaining a church-school when we can educate our children just as well in public schools?" Such statements only impress us more and more with the very low estimate which parents place upon their boys.

Public schools, like many state governments, are arranged with specific objects in view. As such they serve their purpose; but the child of God, a citizen of the heavenly King, should have higher and more exalted ideals than those which dominate the public school. It is true that many great and useful men have been educated in public schools: but, if the truth were known in many cases would be seen a "Jochebed" or a "Mary" for a mother, whose untiring watchfulness over them, and whose careful and prayerful instruction in their early childhood, laid the foundation of an unreasonable lesson, induces a superficial habit of study,— a skimming over the surface of things. The child studies, that he may live through the recitation; not that he may learn and remember. He passes thus through a book, and thinks himself wise while he is yet a fool,— a mistake that is no less common than fatal.

The motto of the wise teacher should be, "Not how much, but how well." He should always ask, Is it possible that the child can master this lesson, and probable that he will? It is better that a class should make but very slow progress for several weeks, if they but acquire the habit of careful study and a pride of good scholarship,— a dread of failure,— than that they should ramble over a whole field, firing at random, missing oftener than they hit the mark, and acquiring a stupid indifference to their reputation as marksmen, and a prodigal disregard of their waste of ammunition, and their loss of the game.

In assigning lessons, the importance of good habits of study should be considered, and the lessons given accordingly. At the commencement of a term, the lessons should always be short, till the ability of the pupils is well understood, and their habits as good students are established. As the term progresses, they can be gradually lengthened as the capacity of the class will warrant, or their own desire will demand. It is frequently judicious to consult the class about the length of the lessons, though of course their judgment can not always be relied on; for they are almost always ready to undertake more than they can well perform. Assigning, however, somewhat less than they propose, will take from them all excuse for failure. When the lesson is given, a failure should be looked upon as a culpable dereliction of duty, as incompatible with a good conscience as it is with good scholarship. This high ground can not be taken, however, unless the teacher has been very judicious in the assignment of the lesson.— Page.

Home Training

It is surprising to see how little is done by many parents to save their own children. Every family in the home life should be a church, a beautiful symbol of the church of God in heaven. If parents realize their responsibilities to their children, they would not under any circumstances scold and fret at them. This is not the kind of education any child should have. Many, many children have learned to be faultfinding, fretful, scolding, passionate children, because they were allowed to be passionate at home. Parents are to consider that they are in the place of God to their children, to encourage every right principle and to repress every wrong thought.

If in their own homes children are allowed to be disrespectful, disobedient, unthankful, and peevish, their sins lie at the door of the parents. It is the special work of fathers and mothers to teach their children with kindness and affection. They are to show that as parents they are the ones to hold the lines, to govern, and not to be governed by their children. They are to teach that obedience is required of them, and thus they educate them to submit to the authority of God.

Does not mother remember that she herself had to learn in jots and tittles before she could be helpful? It is a wrong to children to refuse to teach them little by little. Keep these children with you. Let them ask questions, and in patience answer them. Give your little children something to do; and let them have the happiness of supposing they help you. There must be no repulsing of your children when trying to do proper things. If they make mistakes, if accidents happen, and things break, do not blame. Their whole future life depends upon the education you give them in their childhood years. Teach them that all their faculties of body and mind were given them to use, and that all are the Lord's, pledged to his service. To some of these children the Lord gives an early intimation of his will. Parents and teachers, begin to teach the children to cultivate their God-given qualities.— Mrs. E. G. White.

Alcohol Neither a Food nor a Medicine

In a previous article mention was made of the fact that the cause of temperance has been weakened by the prevalent ideas concerning alcohol as a medicine. Brandy and whisky have long been regarded as stimulants and therefore, as such, useful in emergencies.

"A falsehood which dies hard is the idea that stimulants, of whatever kind, actually give strength, and are necessary for the maintenance of health and vigor. Such is not the case, and the well-worn comparison that they are the whip and spur, and not the corn and grass, is strictly accurate. Anything accomplished under the influence of stimulants is done at the expense of blood and tissue, and, if frequently repeated, at the expense of the constitution."— Sir W. Broadbent, M. D., LL. D.

But let us even grant that a whip is sometimes necessary under exceptional circumstances. Is alcohol a stimulant? Is it useful in shock, in surgical collapse, or other conditions where prompt assistance is imperative? Dr. Munro, Physician to the Glasgow Royal Infirmary, says: "It has yet to be proved that the heart muscle can be stimulated by alcohol." Let us examine the evidence. The following is from Martin and Stevens (1889) of the Biological Laboratory of Johns Hopkins University. "Experiments have shown that blood containing only one quarter of one per cent of alcohol diminished within a single minute the work done by the heart; and that blood containing one-half per cent so seriously affected its working power that it was scarcely able to drive a sufficient amount of blood to supply its own nutrient arteries."

Again: it might be asked, Is it not useful in reviving those who have fainted? In giving any remedy by mouth, the mere act of swallowing stimulates the heart, causing it to beat more quickly. This is especially noticed if the liquid is warm or irritating. So that the same result may be obtained by non-alcoholic liquids, thus obviating the depressing effects which follow almost immediately on the taking of alcohol into the system. George W. Crile, A. M., M. D., in an article on "Blood Pressure in Surgery" has, by direct experiment on the state known as "shock," shown that alcohol only aggravates the conditions resulting therefrom.

The prolonged use of alcohol results in an abnormal enlargement of the heart, due to dilatation and increase in fat at the expense of the heart muscle. "Drs. Bauer and Bollinger found that in Munich one in every sixteen of the hospital patients died from this disorder."— Sir Victor Horsley. This condition is common among beer-drinkers. Is it not strange that what produces death should have ever been supposed to revive in the least the vital forces?

We are told by the "brewers' association" that it has been proved that alcohol is a food. The proof is said to rest upon the experiments of Professor Atwater, in showing that alcohol is oxidized in the human body. This he claimed was one of the essentials of a food. In reply one could not do better than to quote further from "Alcohol and the Human Body:"—

"A food may be defined as any substance which, when absorbed into the blood, will nourish, repair waste, and furnish force and heat to the body without causing injury to any of its parts. It does not follow, because a substance is oxidized in the living tissues, that the results of such oxidation are of use to the body: on the contrary, many poisons are so oxidized. For instance, morphia and phosphorus are oxidized as far as possible by the tissues, the body striving to get rid of such poisons by the method of oxidation, just as in daily life we get rid of noxious materials by burning them in a rubbish heap. The fact that a substance is burned up in the body does not in the least entitle it to be called a food."

With this evidence in mind, we may, with positiveness, say that alcohol has not place either as a food or a medicine. In any amount, however small, and under all circumstances, it acts as a poison.

Reviews

In the prosecution of study by any class of students, frequent reviews are necessary. This is so, because the memory is very much aided by repetition and by association. But, further, the understanding is often much improved by a review. Many of the sciences can not be presented in independent parts, nor can all the terms employed be fully appreciated till these parts are again viewed as a whole. Many things which were but dimly seen the first time they were passed over, become perfectly clear to the mind when viewed afterward in connection with what follows them.

In conducting reviews, regard must be had to the age and character of the pupils, and to the branch pursued. In arithmetic, and indeed in mathematics generally, where so much depends upon every link in the great chain, very frequent reviews are necessary. Indeed, almost daily it is profitable to call up some principle gone over before. In several branches, where the parts have a less intimate connection, as in geography, natural philosophy, and some others, the reviews may be at greater intervals. It would be well, I think, in every common school, to have a review-day once a week. This, besides the advantage already indicated, will lead the children to study for something beyond recitation.

Nor is it enough, at the review, that the questions of the text-book be again proposed to the children. If this be all, they will exercise only their memories. As far as possible the subject should be called up, and the application of principles to practical life should be dwelt upon. If this course is expected by the learners, they will think during the week, in order to anticipate the examination of the teacher; and this thinking is more profitable to them than the knowledge itself.

It is always well, besides the periodical reviews, to have a general review at the close of any particular study. This enables the teacher to detect any false conceptions which the pupil has entertained during the first course. He can now present the subject as a whole, and view one part by the light of another. In natural philosophy, how much better the law of reflected motion can be appreciated after the subject of optics has been studied, in which the doctrine of reflection in general has been fully discussed and illustrated! In physiology, what light is thrown upon the process of growth in the system, by the subsequent chapters on absorption and secretion! How much clearer is the economy of respiration understood when viewed in connection with the circulation of the blood! A general review, then, is an enlightening process, and it is always profitable, with, perhaps, one exception. When it is instituted with reference to a public examination, it is very doubtful whether the evil is not greater than the good. It then degenerates into an effort to appear well at a particular time; it is again studying in order to recite; and I look upon it as no small evil that the mind should have any object in view which comes in between it and the grand desire to know,— to master the subject for its own sake, and not simply for the purpose of being able to talk about it on one great occasion.— Selected.

The Jewish Home School

JEWISH education began with the mother. . . . The very household duties that she performed molded her children in accordance with the national discipline. "The Sabbath meal, the kindling of the Sabbath lamp, the setting apart of a portion of dough from the bread for the household, these are but instances with which every 'taph,' as he clung to his mother's skirts, must have been familiar.". . . More than this, it was in the school of the mother's knee that the stories of patriarchs and prophets, of statesmen and warriors, of poets and sages, of kings and judges, wise men and patriots, and the great Lawgiver himself,— the whole forming the very best body of material for the purposes of child nurture found in any language,— were told and retold until they became parts of the mind itself. It was not strange, but quite the contrary, that Timothy, although the son of a Gentile, and living at a distance from any school or synagogue, should have thoroughly known the Holy Scriptures from his infancy. As teachers of their children, the women of every country may learn lessons from the matrons of Israel.

Up to ten years of age, the Bible was the sole text-book. From ten to fifteen the Mischna, or traditional law, was used; and after that the pupil was admitted to the discussions of the rabbinical schools. . . . Bible study began with the book of Leviticus. Then came other parts of the Pentateuch; next the prophets, and finally the Hagiographa.— Hinsdale.

Sympathy

WE should seek to enter into the feelings of the youth, to sympathize with them in their joys and sorrows, their conflicts and victories. Jesus did not remain in heaven, away from the sorrowing and sinful, but he came down to this world that he might become acquainted with the weakness, the suffering and temptations, of the fallen race. He reached us where we were, that he might lift us up. Such should be our work. We must come to the youth where they are, and make their case our own, if we would benefit them. If these youthful disciples are overcome by temptation, I hope that you who are older in experience will not deal with them harshly, or regard their efforts with indifference. Remember that you yourselves have shown but little strength to resist the tempter's power. Be as patient with these lambs of the flock as you wish others to be with you. God has so constituted us that even the strongest desire sympathy. How much more, then, do children need it. Even a look of compassion will often soothe and strengthen the tried and tempted child.

Jesus calls to every wanderer, "My son, give me thine heart;" "return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings." The youth can not be happy without the love of Jesus. He is waiting with pitying tenderness to hear the confessions of the wayward, and to accept their penitence. He watches for some return of gratitude from us, as the mother watches for the smile of recognition from her beloved child. The great God teaches us to call him Father. He would have us understand how earnestly and tenderly his heart yearns over us, in all our trials and temptations. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." The mother might sooner forget her child, than God could forget one soul that trusts him.— Selected.

True Education Uplifting

WE often speak of "educated people," which is, perhaps, correct enough, as we mean it; but, in fact, and in a broad sense, there are none who are entirely uneducated. Education consists of what is learned, and, from the day we first see the light, we are learning. But it is to be lamented that the knowledge acquired too often consists of the wisdom of this world, and much of it only degrades the learner, making him worse off by its possession.

Another term for education, and perhaps a better one, would be character building; and true teachers are workmen engaged in building characters that are destined to shine as the stars forever and ever. We read in "Christ's Object Lessons," page 332, that "a character formed according to the divine likeness is the only treasure that we can take from this world to the next." Such a character can be formed only by leading the mind to grasp the great truths of eternal things; and just here comes in the importance of Bible study. On page 37 of "Christian Education" is this statement: "No other study will so ennoble every thought, feeling, and aspiration as the study of the Scriptures."

The great work of the Master Teacher was to train the mind to drink in life-giving, character-building truths from the great fountain of knowledge, and all the under teachers may engage in the same all-important work. "In all his teaching Christ brought the mind of man in contact with the Infinite mind. . . . He taught them to behold him as manifested in his works, in his Word, and by his providences."—"Christ's Object Lessons," page 25.

What unlimited resources are at the command of the humble, God-fearing teacher by which the mind can be led to feed upon the thoughts of Him who is infinite in wisdom! It is said of the astronomer Kepler that while gazing at the heavens through a telescope, he became so enraptured that he exclaimed, "My God, I think thy thoughts after thee!" And so it is. When we study the works of God, from the construction of the tiniest flower, to the balancing of the heavenly bodies in their orbits, we are brought in contact with the Infinite mind. It is a very comforting and reassuring thought that we can read the thoughts of God in the things of nature as well as in his Word, and thus come to know him, whom to know aright is life everlasting.

The awakening of the young people among us is a hopeful omen, and the Spirit of the Lord is sending the children and youth to the schools to be "polished after the similitude of a palace," by faithful teachers who have a keen appreciation of their responsibility.

Our Schools

For Each Church

IN all our churches, and wherever there is a company of believers, church-schools should be established; and in these schools there should be teachers with a true missionary spirit, for the children are to be trained to become missionaries. It is essential that the teachers be educated to act their part in instructing children of Sabbath-keepers not only in the sciences, but in the Scriptures. These schools, established in different localities, and conducted by God-fearing men and women, as the case demands, should be built upon the same principles as were the schools of the prophets.

I say again, Establish schools for the children wherever there are churches; where there are those who assemble to worship God, let there be schools for the children. Work as if you were working for your life to save children from being drowned in the polluting, corrupting influences of this life.

If people would encourage the church in which they are members, and establish small, humble school buildings in which to do service for God, they would accommodate their own children within their borders.

Therefore, in localities where there is a church, a school should be established, if there are no more than six children to attend. A teacher should be employed who will educate the children in the truths of the Word of God, which are so essential for these last days, and which it is so important for them to understand. A great test is coming: it will be upon obedience or disobedience to the commandments of God.

There should be schools established wherever there is a church or company of believers. Teachers should be employed to educate the children of Sabbath-keepers.— Mrs. E. G. White.

A School in Mexico

At San Luis Potosi we have established a mission school. It is increasing in numbers, and now has an enrolment of eighteen. We received the first Mexican this month, and now have three of this nationality among our students. We hope that this is the beginning of a large enrolment of Mexicans, for we long to be working for them more than we now are. There are quite a number of others who wish to enter the various grades of the school next year. We can not increase our school at the present time by more than three or four, as we do not have room. If we could have another teacher, there is no doubt but there would be sufficient work for two of us.

There are about twelve hundred English-speaking people here, among whom a teacher or colporteur could work while studying the Mexican language. Practically nothing has been done for these people. We could arrange for the teacher to do teaching enough to cover the expense of room, board, and tuition while learning the language. At the end of the year the teacher ought to be able to engage in teaching English to the Mexicans.

I believe that in all the large cities of Mexico there is opportunity for the kind of work which we are doing. The influence of godly teachers will tell much for the truth. So far I have taught the Bible freely, with the exception of the Sabbath question, on which I have said nothing, but will do so when the time comes. The other day one of the little girls said, "Mrs. Fattebert, why don't you have school on Saturday? I am so lonesome on that day I don't know what to do." Then a little boy said, in answer, "Why, don't you know she can't work on Saturday? She is a Seventh-day Oddfellow." We believe that there is a splendid opportunity for consecrated teachers to do a wonderful work in this country.

Mrs. Ellen B. Fattebert.

Loma Linda School of Evangelists

Our work here is progressing very well. Elders R. S. Owen and Luther Warren will be connected with the school during the coming year. The Lord has greatly blessed our field work this year. During the first half of the year, each class spent from two to four weeks in field work. At present we are developing the field work on a little different plan, designed to give each student a half-day each week in canvassing, giving Bible readings, health talks, etc. We find that this is a much more satisfactory way of carrying on the work. It seems to us that it is also productive of much more good. Some of our oldest students are taking more active interest in it, and are entering the field. Our nurses' training-class is to continue for ten months. The length of term for advanced students is only nine months.

Through the avenue of the Sabbath-school each quarter our students take up special donations for some part of the field. This is in addition to the regular Sabbath-school donations. We shall be glad to devote the next quarter's special donation to helping the Latin Union school. The plans which we have adopted in this matter have proved a great blessing, and have created a greater interest in foreign missions.

Adelphian Academy

Our young people in East Michigan are stirred up as I have never seen them before to educate themselves for the work. The suggestion which was recently made by the General Conference, of taking earnest steps to see that each student leaving the school is placed directly in some position in the work, is being carried out here in this conference as I have never seen it anywhere else. Our school is yet young, and we are not ready to send out many finished workers; but our young people are doing what they can, and using the ability which they have to forward this message. Every day we get new and broader views of how momentous and very urgent is this third angel's message. We are seeing more and more how perfectly our ideals of Christian education fit into its proclamation. Surely we are living in grand times in the history of this world. To be a wide-awake Seventh-day Adventist is to be a king. I see more and more every day how our schools can give a preparation to our young people which is far ahead of anything they can obtain in the schools of the world.

R. B. Thurber.

Western Slope Academy

We have had a very pleasant school year. The Lord has blessed us greatly, and to him we give all the praise. There was a good interest at the close of the school, in spite of the fact that so many of the advance students had to stop on account of work. We enrolled ninety during the year, this being a far greater enrolment than previously.

From a financial standpoint, our school has been very successful. We also feel encouraged to know that several of our students will enter the church-school work the coming season.

Our school enjoys the sympathy and confidence of all the patrons, and they are well pleased with the progress made. We have had three teachers, but our work was so heavy the school board voted to build another recitation room, and hereafter employ four teachers. Our school board is interested in having the school conducted according to the true principles of Christian education, and is willing to do anything in its power to advance the work.

We have printed a neat little calendar describing our plans for the next year, which we shall be pleased to mail to interested students or parents. A copy of this calendar or any information concerning the school will be gladly furnished. Address the Western Slope Academy, Palisade, Colo.

Educational Notes

The summer school of the Central Union Conference began at College View, June 23, and is to continue six weeks. A large number of teachers and those who are planning to teach are in attendance.

Brother W. C. Mathewson, who has been connected with Cedar Lake Academy the past year as principal, is to engage in ministerial work in the Western New York Conference during the coming year.

Word comes from the summer school being held at Graysville that, while the attendance is not as large as was hoped, a most excellent spirit prevails, and commendable work is being done by the school as a whole.

The Florida Conference has recently established an intermediate school at Fort Ogden. It now has an enrolment of thirty-two. The present term began May 4, and will close December 24. It is in charge of Brother B. D. Gullett.

The Huntsville Manual Training-School for the colored people has made arrangements for a summer school to be conducted from June 2 to July 28. Plans have been laid for an effective teaching course, and as nearly all the colored teachers are expected to be in attendance, a very important and profitable meeting is expected.

The Keene Industrial Academy has raised two hundred dollars for the Latin Union school. This is the largest donation received thus far, and this school has shown a very commendable interest in raising this large sum. It will greatly rejoice the hearts of our people in the Latin Union field to know of this generous help. We trust our other schools will do proportionately as well.

Sister Eliza Warner, the educational secretary of the South Carolina Conference, writes that they are planning to establish a number of mission schools in the State during the coming summer. The plan is to connect the school with isolated Sabbath-keepers as a nucleus, and draw the patronage largely from people not of our faith. We trust that this plan may prove of much benefit to the work in this conference.

Elder D. T. Shireman recently paid a visit to Washington on his way North. Elder Shireman is conducting an industrial school at Toluca, N. C. He is visiting the North to solicit assistance from those interested in education in the South, for the upbuilding of his school. This school publishes a little paper descriptive of its work, entitled the Toluca Industrial Advocate. Elder Shireman is certainly doing a most valuable work.

Brother J. W. Christian, president of the South Dakota Conference, writes: "We shall have this summer an army of student helpers numbering about twenty-one engaged in ministerial, Bible reading, and canvassing work; and still the doors are open for more who are worthy, and who desire to prepare to enter these various callings. The missionary enthusiasm of our schools is wonderful. It surely gives cause for rejoicing."

Another Sunday-Closing Effort

A VERY rigid Sunday-closing ordinance is in force in Iola, Kan., and labor of all kinds is interdicted. The Iola Daily Record places at the head of its report of the quiet Sunday, the following ditty: —

"You musn't work Sunday, Sunday, Sunday,
You musn't work Sunday, because it is a sin.
But you can work Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday,
And all the whole week till Sunday comes again."

The report goes on to say: —

"For the first time in the history of the town, not a single store was open. The clothing, dry-goods, meat-markets, and general stores have always been closed on Sunday. But the bakeries, the soda-fountains, the cigar stores, the news stands have always been open. But yesterday they were all closed. Women who had paid little attention to the talk of Sunday closing, and didn't believe that the law would be enforced, were surprised to find that their supply of bread was not sufficient to last the day out, and they had to borrow from a neighbor. The families accustomed to ice-cream Sunday evening were forced to forego the pleasure.

"In only a very few places yesterday was it possible to get a match for the cigar purchased Saturday night. The cigar cases in restaurants and hotels were draped in black, and tobacco and other sinful things were cut out."

This campaign in behalf of Sunday sacredness has attracted more than local attention. The Kansas City Journal referred to the matter in the following editorial: —

"That spirit of intolerance which seeks to make Sunday a rigidly 'moral' day, and assumes that to do this it is necessary to shun all material activities for twenty-four hours each week, will no doubt rejoice at the 'lid' that has been placed on Iola, Kan. In an effort to make Iola a good place to stay away from on Sundays, the town council has passed rigid blue-laws, that are even worse than those musty and antiquated statutes under which Judge Wallace of Kansas City seeks to make himself popular, and fails so thoroughly. The first day of the 'lid' at Iola saw all business suspended. Even the sale of bread and meat was forbidden. Livery stables refused to hire conveyances, and the luckless traveling man who reached Iola after midnight Saturday night, was compelled to leave his baggage at the station. Telephone girls were threatened with arrest if they presumed to conduct their godless vocation on Sunday.

"Here in Kansas City we have been experiencing the Sunday crusade for several months, and know something of its afflictions. Last Sunday a crowd of unfortunates who had been driven out of their homes because of the flood were assembled in Convention Hall. They were hungry, and an attempt was made to buy provisions for them. It was only after a long search that a few loaves of bread were found that could be bought, and these were secured and given to the suffering. But the man who sold this bread that the needy might be fed was violating the law, as Judge Wallace construes it, and he may yet have to account to that stern pillar of justice for his unrighteousness.

"It is remarkable that in this enlightened day and generation a thriving and progressive city should be subject to a Sunday-closing program so rigid as to bring discomfort to many citizens and to nearly all of its visitors. Kansas City is suffering the annoyance of a law passed by the Missouri Legislature half a century ago, and revived by a judge who, in public spirit, is contemporaneous with the statute he enforces. There is a point of rational action when many of the activities of a community may be suspended on the sabbath; but when it is forbidden, as it is in Iola, that one should buy bread and meat, call a physician by telephone, have one's baggage transferred, or read the newspapers, then that community might well pause and inquire whether it is living in the year 1908 or 1708, and if there are not some witches around that ought to be hauled up and burned."

THE annual meeting of the Texas Conference Association of Seventh-day Adventists will be held in connection with the camp-meeting at Keene, Tex., appointed for July 30 to Aug. 9, 1908. All the legal business of the conference will be transacted at that time, and the officers for the coming year will be elected. The first meeting will be called Tuesday, August 4, at 9:30 A. M.

CLARENCE SANTEE, President.

Notice!

THE camp-meeting for Northern California will be held at Eureka, Humboldt Co., July 23 to August 2.

We hope all our brethren and sisters will come early to the camp, so that we may begin the regular meetings Thursday morning, July 23. This will be an important meeting for this part of the conference, and we hope there will be a large attendance.

S. N. HASKELL, President Cal. Conference.

Texas Camp-Meeting

THE Texas annual conference will be held in connection with the camp-meeting at Keene, Tex., July 30 to Aug. 9, 1908. The regular business of the year will be transacted at that time, officers elected, and reports submitted, and as far as possible, plans will be laid for broader work for the coming year. The first meeting of the conference will be called Friday, July 31, at 9:30 A. M. We shall hope to see all delegates at this first meeting, as committees will be appointed at that time, and the work of the conference arranged.

It will be necessary for each church to elect its delegates as soon as possible, at the quarterly meeting or before; and the clerk or the elder should send the names of the persons elected to E. Harris, Keene, Tex. Each church will be entitled to one delegate for the church, without regard to numbers, and another delegate for each fifteen members.

CLARENCE SANTEE, President.

Sabbath Song

In Eden's pure and sacred shade
The holy Sabbath day was given,
The first highway divinely made
To lead our souls from earth to heaven.

By Sinai's high and holy hill
We bowed before our Father's face;
We learned in peace to do his will
And bind in one the human race.

The day was sanctified and blest
With hymn and prayer and reverent praise,
And truly made a day of rest,
Like that of saints in endless days.

Conflict and Victory[1]

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"Unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels."

(1) The expression, "He that overcometh," indicates that there is something for every one of us to overcome. The overcomer is to be clothed in the white raiment of Christ's righteousness, and of him it is written: "I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels." O, what a privilege it is to be an overcomer, and to have our names presented before the Father by the Saviour himself! (2) And when, as overcomers, we shall be "clothed in white raiment," the Lord will acknowledge our faithfulness as verily as in the days of the early Christian church he acknowledged the "few names even in Sardis" who had "not defiled their garments;" and we shall walk with him in white, for through his atoning sacrifice we shall be accounted worthy.

(2) My dear friends, in view of these encouraging promises, how earnestly should we strive to perfect a character that will enable us to stand before the Son of God! Only those who are clothed in the garments of his righteousness will be able to endure the glory of his presence when he shall appear with "power and great glory."

It means much to be an overcomer. The besetments of the enemy and all his evil agencies must be firmly resisted. Every moment we must be on guard. Not for one instant are we to lose sight of Christ, and of his power to save in the hour of trial. Our hand must be placed in his, that we may be upheld by the power of his might.

We read further: "To the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth; I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name. Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet; and to know that I have loved thee."

A battle is continually going on between the forces for good and the forces for evil, between the angels of God and the fallen angels. We are beset before and behind, on the right hand and on the left. (3) The conflict that we are passing through is the last we shall have in this world. We are now in the midst of it. Two parties are striving for the supremacy. In this conflict we can not be neutral. We must stand either on one side or on the other. If we take our position on the side of Christ, if we acknowledge him before the world in word and work, we are bearing a living testimony as to whom we have chosen to serve and honor. In this important period of earth's history, we can not afford to leave any one in uncertainty as to whose side we are on.

(4) The True Witness declares: "Behold, I have set before thee an open door." Let us thank God with heart and soul and voice; and let us learn to approach unto him as through an open door, believing that we may come freely with our petitions, and that he will hear and answer. It is by a living faith in his power to help, that we shall receive strength to fight the battles of the Lord with the confident assurance of victory.

"Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth." In this scripture is brought to view the hour of temptation that is to try them that dwell upon the earth. We are now living in this trying hour. There is no escape for any from this conflict. If in your life there are defective traits of character that you are not striving to overcome, you may be assured that the enemy will endeavor to take advantage of them; for he is watching vigilantly, seeking to spoil the faith of every one. (4) In order to gain the victory over every besetment of the enemy, we must lay hold on a power that is out of and beyond ourselves. We must maintain a constant, living connection with Christ, who has power to give victory to every soul that will maintain an attitude of faith and humility. If we are self-sufficient, and think that we may go on just as we please, and yet hope to come out on the right side finally, we shall find that we have made a terrible mistake. (4) As those who hope to receive the overcomer's reward, we must press forward in the Christian warfare, though at every advance we meet with opposition.

"Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown." Here again we are admonished to faithfulness, in view of the conflict. We must not yield any point that we have already gained. From now on till Jesus comes, the battle will wax fiercer and still fiercer. We shall have to meet and resist men who are regarded as very wise and learned, but who are not spiritually wise unto salvation. Our only hope of saving our own souls and of helping others to be saved, is to receive the righteousness of Jesus Christ. We are seeking for a crown, a crown of glory that fadeth not away. (4) As overcomers we are to reign with Christ in the heavenly courts; and we are to overcome through the blood of the Lamb and the word of our testimony.

"Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

"And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the beginning of the creation of God; I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou (5) wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth."

Those who profess to serve Christ, while in life they deny him, are not thoroughly converted, and are regarded by Christ as very offensive. To every such one he says, "I will spue thee out of my mouth. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see.

"As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and re-

It will profit us to study carefully the book of Revelation. There are in this book many precious truths that we should bring into our daily experience.

We are not to rest quietly, with the thought that the devil will have nothing to do with us; but we can have the assurance that we shall not be left helpless, to be overcome by him. Yet if we, like many others, put forth no special efforts to resist him, he will work to lead us away from the truth. If we give him the least encouragement, he will not wait for a further invitation to come into our hearts. He will take possession of the mind, and then, although we may even think that we are being wonderfully led by the Lord, we shall be deceived. Our minds have been bought with an infinite price, and we can not afford to give them over to the control of the enemy. We have no right to follow impulse, and regard it as the guidance of heaven. We must have evidence that we are receiving the stamp of the divine character, such as will be acknowledged in the heavenly courts.

The Lord desires us to know what is our work in this world. Those who have come into right relation to God will have a living experience in carrying out his purposes. They will be enabled to help those who are tempted. Angels of God will open the way before them, and as they follow the leadings of the Holy Spirit, they will work for their neighbors and friends.

If, while professing to know the truth, we lead others away from Christ by our example, there rests upon us a terrible accountability. It is a sad truth that some are carrying out plans and methods of their own devising, believing these to be right, when in reality they are working contrary to the purposes of God. Because they fail of maintaining a living connection with God, they are led by a spirit that is at enmity with God and his work. O that these deceived souls may yet repent and be converted!

Why should we be so particular in regard to our life-conduct? O, there is a world lying in darkness, waiting for the Light of life, a world for whom Christ has given his life! In his plan for the redemption of the fallen race, Jesus came to the earth, and was subject to the same temptations wherewith man is beset. No one will be called to pass through temptations so severe as were those our Saviour endured. Because of this, our great High Priest knows how to succor those who are tempted. He knows how to sympathize with us when in our great need we call for help. There are severe trials before every one of us, yet we need not fail. In the hour of temptation, Christ will not leave his children, but will send his angels to minister unto us. He will answer our prayers for deliverance.

S. N. HASKELL

When Nehemiah entered upon his work at Jerusalem, the conditions were much as in the days of Haggai, when the people lived in ceiled houses, but neglected the house of God. They looked well after their own things, but neglected to provide for the support of the worship of the Lord.

After the good meetings, described in the eighth and ninth chapters of Nehemiah, were held, as a result of the study of God's Word, the people began to see their duty in regard to supporting the worship of the house of God. The first step in this direction was an ordinance to charge themselves yearly with a third part of a shekel for the service of the house of God. This money was to supply the showbread, the meat-offerings, and various other offerings throughout the year, and "for all the work of the house of our God." This sum, a little more than sixteen cents, may seem small; but when faithfully paid by the thousands of Israel, it amounted to a large sum yearly.

The amount of wood necessary to keep the altar fires constantly burning, and to consume the large number of offerings, was another item of expense, and was borne by the priests and Levites and the people alike. The record states: "We cast lots among the priests, the Levites, and the people, for the wood-offering, to bring it into the house of our God, after the houses of our fathers, at times appointed year by year." Here is an important principle in supplying the running expenses of the church, that is worthy of special notice, — priests, Levites, and people all shared alike in this expense. Those officiating at the altar, as well as the worshiper, paid their yearly tax of sixteen cents to provide for the daily service; and all alike took their turn in supplying wood. In other words, if the same principle was carried out at the present day, when the plate is passed to collect offerings for church expenses, the collectors would pass up to the pulpit as well as to the pews.

The next step in Nehemiah's reform was to return the first-fruit of all their increase into the treasure-house of the Lord. Many at the present day think that if they have paid their tithes, they are exempt from all other duties in giving to the Lord. Those taught by Nehemiah were not troubled that way; for he taught them to give abundantly to support all the works of the Lord before he mentioned the tithe. After abundant provision was made to support the different parts of the work, he made provision for all to bring in their tithe to support those officiating in the temple service. The tithe was often paid in products of the field and vineyard, and was all to be brought to the tithe chamber in the temple. Suitable persons were to have the oversight of the tithe, and the Levites as well as the people, were to pay a faithful tithe.

If the plan of Nehemiah was carried out in every organization, there would be less perplexity and fewer debts. All went well while Nehemiah was there to look after the work; but when he returned to Babylon for a time, grave mistakes were made. The people intermarried with the heathen around them, and, as a natural result, lost sight of their duty of supporting the work of the Lord. The tithe-chamber, which should have been well filled, was empty. The high priest, who should have stood as an example to the people, was allied unto Tobiah, the adversary of the Lord. Tobiah needed a home; and as the tithe-chamber was empty, Eliashib prepared this "great chamber" for him. It was shame enough that the tithe-chamber should have been empty, but double shame that Tobiah, the enemy of the Lord, should occupy it. No wonder that Nehemiah inserts after this record the words, "But in all this time was not I in Jerusalem." Upon Nehemiah's return he cast Tobiah out, and cleansed the chamber.

As a result of the tithe being withheld and misapplied, those who should have been doing the work of the Lord, were working at manual labor to support themselves and families, and the house of the Lord was forsaken.

Nehemiah's first work, after preparing the tithe-chamber, was to gather the Levites together, and set them in their different places. He did not wait to see if there would be tithe to support them before he gathered them together and set them to work. When the people saw aggressive steps being taken, and workers in the field, "then brought all Judah the tithe . . . unto the treasuries." The same course to-day will bring like results. When the people see aggressive work being done, and workers going into the field in simple faith, they will pay a faithful tithe. Show me a conference where self-sacrificing workers are going ahead, doing aggressive work in the cause of God; and I will show you a conference where the people pay a faithful tithe, and have confidence in their leaders. On the other hand, show we a conference where no aggressive work is being done, where the ministers divide their time between their own farming interests and visiting the churches, and I will show you a poor treasury and withheld tithe.

Nehemiah made provision for faithful tithe-paying in the future, and appointed four trusty men to distribute the tithe. When Nehemiah began his work of reform, the people made a solemn covenant that they would keep the Sabbath. But upon his return from Babylon, he found they had broken their covenant with God, and were desecrating his Sab-

God's Plans

God might have stood the cedars on the hills,
The strong night-watchman by the sounding sea,
Without the tardy growth from slender spires
To the crowned heads against the sunset fires;
But other plans had he.

It pleased him that in nature, or in grace,
Seed-germ or soul, toward him should all things grow,
Reaching, aspiring, from beginnings small,
Till the sweet day when Christ is all in all,
And we his will shall know.

Conflict and Victory [1]

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Concluded)

The Lord desires us to pray much, and to maintain a firm hold on his divine power. His blessings are to be sought, not merely for our own benefit, but for the benefit of our fellow men. In view of the power of our influence for good or for ill, we can not afford to deviate from the right way; for if we do wrong, we may lead some one else astray. "Make straight paths for your feet," writes the apostle Paul, "lest that which is lame be turned out of the way." If with clear, sanctified vision, we keep our eyes fixed upon Jesus, and walk by faith, we shall not stumble and fall. By beholding, we shall become changed into the likeness of the divine.

Our Saviour laid aside his royal robe and kingly crown, and left the glories of heaven to come to this world. He clothed his divinity with humanity. He designed that the fallen humanity might touch his humanity, and receive from him power to be partakers of the divine nature, and to overcome the corruption that is in the world through lust. He is our pattern, and I beseech of you, my brethren, to lay hold of the power that is ours through the union of the divine and the human in Christ. He overcame for us, and we may claim his merits. We may plead his power, his virtue. And as we co-operate with him, and live in harmony with his law, he will cleanse our natures from sin, and impart to us his righteousness.

The world is to be warned of the impending judgments of God that precede the second coming of Christ. Those who know the truth should be taught to labor earnestly for their neighbors and friends. Special efforts must be put forth in behalf of those who do not know the truth. As we ourselves learn more and more how to overcome through the blood of the Lamb, and through the word of our testimony, we shall labor to help those who are weak, and who have been unable to overcome.

There are many who have never heard from the Word the reasons for our faith; and yet some of our ministers feel a burden to hover over little companies of believers in an effort to hold them together. The best way to hold them together is to induce them to maintain a living connection with God, and to exert their influence in seeking to draw others to him. It is our work to help others to place their feet upon the right foundation, and to understand their duty through a prayerful study of the Scriptures.

Satan knows that his time is short, and he is putting forth every effort in his power to destroy our faith in God and in his Word. His agencies are following us constantly, seeking to induce us to follow his plans, and to take a wrong course in word and deed. But if we will grasp the power that Christ offers, seeking the Lord diligently, and watching unto prayer, we shall have all power and wisdom to meet the attacks of the enemy.

Many of our people do not seem to realize that the time has come for every one to take his stand positively on the side of Jesus Christ and the heavenly angels. By their indifference, by carelessness in word and act, they leave themselves open to the molding influences of the enemy. They seem asleep as regards the issues that are now before the world.

A View of the Conflict

I wish to read to you the description of a scene that passed before me not many years ago. This is published in "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VIII, pages 41-43:—

"In vision I saw two armies in terrible conflict. One army was led by banners bearing the world's insignia; the other was led by the blood-stained banner of Prince Emmanuel. Standard after standard was left to trail in the dust, as company after company of the Lord's army joined the foe, and tribe after tribe from the ranks of the enemy united with the commandment-keeping people of God. An angel flying in the midst of heaven put the standard of Emmanuel into many hands, while a mighty general cried out with a loud voice: 'Come into line. Let those that are loyal to the commandments of God and the testimony of Christ now take their position. Come out from among them, and be ye seperate, and touch not the unclean, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and you shall be my sons and daughters. Let all who will come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty.'

"The battle raged. Victory alternated from side to side. Now the soldiers of the cross gave way, 'as when a standard-bearer fainteth.' Isa. 10: 18. But their apparent retreat was but to gain a more advantageous position. Shouts of joy were heard. A song of praise to God went up, and angels voices united in the song, as Christ's soldiers planted his banner on the walls of fortresses till then held by the enemy. The Captain of our salvation was ordering the battle, and sending support to his soldiers. His power was mightily displayed, encouraging them to press the battle to the gates. He taught them terrible things in righteousness, as he led them to step by step, conquering and to conquer.

"At last the victory was gained. The army following the banner with the inscription, 'The commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus,' was gloriously triumphant. The soldiers of Christ were close beside the gates of the city, and with joy the city received her King. The kingdom of peace and joy and everlasting righteousness was established.

"Now the church is militant. Now we are confronted with a world in midnight darkness, almost wholly given over to idolatry. But the day is coming in which the battle will have been fought, the victory won. The will of God is to be done on earth, as it is done in heaven. Then the nations will own no other law than the law of heaven. All will be a happy, united family; clothed with the garments of praise and thanksgiving,—the robe of Christ's righteousness. All nature, in its surpassing loveliness, will offer to God a constant tribute of praise and adoration. The world will be bathed in the light of heaven. The years will move on in gladness. The light of the moon will be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun will be sevenfold greater than it is now. Over the scene the morning stars will sing together, and the sons of God will shout for joy, while God and Christ will shout in proclaiming, 'There shall be no more sin, neither shall there be any more death.'

"This is the scene that is presented to me. But the church must and will fight against seen and unseen foes. Satan's agencies in human form are on the ground. Men have confederated to oppose the Lord of hosts. These confederacies will continue until Christ shall leave his place of intercession before the mercy-seat, and shall put on the garments of vengeance. Satanic agencies are in every city, busily organizing into parties those opposed to the law of God. Professed saints and avowed unbelievers take their stand with these parties. This is no time for the people of God to be weaklings. We can not afford to be off our guard for one moment.

"'Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand.'"

[1] Sermon at the Workers' Institute, Oakland, Cal., March 7, 1908.

As I see representations of the terrible conflict that is now waging, and realize that those who are victorious will be with their Lord forevermore, I feel as if I can not spare myself. I must do all I can to help others win the victory and the crown of life. I am now in my eighty-first year, and yet I can not lay down the burden. My pen is in my hand almost constantly, except when I am in attendance at some meeting. I am always glad when I can have the privilege of speaking to a company of people, in the hope that the words I speak will be received, and will exert an influence for good upon life and character.

Since my return from Australia, I have felt a great burden for the work in Oakland. Frequently the Lord has revealed to me, as an indication of unfaithfulness on the part of his people, the little that is being done in our large cities. In the camp-meetings and tent-meetings that have been held in Oakland, I have stood before our own people, and with most earnest entreaties have labored to persuade them to give the truth to those who know it not. But many in our churches say, "We want your labors; we want you to preach to us." Let those who believe the truth, go out and preach it. Let them practise it before their neighbors. The Lord calls upon you, my brethren, to gain a deep, living experience in the things of God. There are sacrifices that we must make. Shall we let the multitudes who know nothing of the truth, perish in their sins, unwarned? Satan is planning to hold these souls fast. He is seeking to hedge up our opportunities for reaching them. But the God of heaven is also at work in their behalf. As you seek to labor for them, his angels will go before you to prepare their hearts, and the same heavenly agencies will go with you as you visit them, to tell them of the sin-pardoning Saviour.

Who will now carry this burden? In view of the great needs all about us, who can be content to hover over our own churches, neither gaining nor imparting strength? Let those who have a living connection with God, go out and labor for unbelievers. We do not call for those who are half asleep to go in their present condition, but we beseech them to awake, to lay hold of the arm of infinite strength, and then go forth speaking the words of life.

Let us now seek God with all the heart, that we may find him. For your soul's sake, I ask you to resist the devil. The promise is that he will flee from you. Put on the whole armor of righteousness, and press the battle to the gates. Heavenly angels will be with you to minister to your needs. You can speak the words of truth, and they will make an impression upon the heart.

How many of those present will now take a position on the Lord's side, enlisting to fight the good warfare? Ask the Saviour to anoint your eyes with the heavenly eyesalve, that you may have spiritual discernment. Break with the enemy, and come into line with the soldiers of Jesus Christ, and with heavenly angels. Here is a world perishing in sin. I beg of you, for Christ's sake, to work along right lines.

Are there those who will pledge themselves to live a life of prayer, ceasing to find fault, ceasing to criticize their brethren, and striving henceforth to be colaborers with Christ Jesus? There are souls to be saved, and we can not afford to lay stumbling-blocks in one another's way. Now we ask you to seek the Lord with all the heart. Will those who are determined to cut loose from every temptation of the enemy, and to seek for heaven above, signify such determination by rising to their feet. [Nearly all of the congregation present responded.]

We desire that every one of you shall be saved. We desire that for you the gates of the city of God shall swing back on their glittering hinges, and that you, with all the nations who have kept the truth, may enter in. There we shall give praise and thanksgiving and glory to Christ and to the Father evermore, even forever and ever. May God help us to be faithful in his service during the conflict, and overcome at last, and win the crown of life eternal.

[Praying] My Heavenly Father, I come to thee at this time, just as I am, poor and needy, and dependent upon thee. I ask thee to give me and give this people the grace that perfects Christian character. Wilt thou have compassion upon this people? Let thy light shine into the chambers of the mind, and into the soul-temple. My Saviour, thou hast given thy life to purchase thine inheritance, that, as overcomers, they may enter the kingdom of God, where they shall go no more out forever. Bless those who have signified their desire to serve thee. Put thy Spirit upon them.

I ask thee, Heavenly Father, to let thy Holy Spirit come to this people. May thy salvation be revealed. Touch their hearts, and make them very tender. Soften them by thy Holy Spirit, and help them to see the work to be done for their neighbors, and for souls that are perishing all around them. O awaken them to their responsibilities! May they wash their robes of character, and make them white in the blood of the Lamb. Wilt thou encircle them in the arms of thy mercy? Plead with them through the impressions of thy Holy Spirit, that they may try to let their light shine to those that have not known the truth. Put thy church in order, O Lord, that they may labor for souls.

My Saviour, reveal thyself to this people. Let thy love be expressed — O let it be revealed! Hold thy people, that Satan may not have his will and way with them. Help them to press through all opposition, that at last they may lay their crowns at the feet of Jesus in the city of God; and thy name shall have all the glory. Amen.

Ptolemy's Almagest and Canon

The astronomical records of the ancients, by whose means we are able to fix with certainty the chronology of the earlier centuries of the "times of the Gentiles," are contained in the "Syntaxis," or "Almagest," of Ptolemy.

In the existence of this invaluable work, and in its preservation as a precious remnant of antiquity, the hand of Providence can clearly be traced. The same divine care which raised up Herodotus and other Greek historians to carry on the records of the past from the point to which they had been brought by the writings of the prophets at the close of the Babylonish captivity,— the Providence which raised up Josephus, the Jewish historian, at the termination of New Testament history, to record the fulfilment of prophecy in the destruction of Jerusalem,— raised up also Ptolemy in the important interval which extended from Titus to Hadrian, that of the completion of Jewish desolation, to record the chronology of the nine previous centuries, and to associate it in such a way with the revolutions of the solar system as to permit of the most searching demonstration of its truth.

Ptolemy's great work, the "Almagest," is a treatise on astronomy, setting forth the researches of ancient observers and mathematicians with reference to the position of the stars, the exact length of the year, and the elements of the orbits of the sun, moon, and planets. This work was written in Greek, and subsequently translated into Arabic, Persian, Hebrew, Latin, etc.; it became the text-book of astronomic knowledge both in the East and in Europe, and retained that high position for about fourteen centuries, or till the time of Copernicus, and the birth of modern astronomy, three centuries ago.

The chronological value of the "Almagest" is owing to the fact that it interweaves a series of ancient dates with a series of celestial positions. It contains a complete catalogue of the succession of Babylonian, Persian, Grecian, and Roman monarchs, from Nabonassar to Hadrian and Antoninus, together with the dates of their accession and the duration of their reigns. Its astronomic events are referred to definite historic dates, and by this connection there is conferred on the latter the character of scientific certainty. . . .

With reference to Ptolemy's Canon, or chronological list of the monarchs of the four great empires, Lindsay says: —

"The complete harmony that is to be found in this canon with the dates previously determined by eclipses, entitles it to our highest confidence. That Ptolemy was its author, and not Theon, is confirmed by the fact that it is not continued beyond Antoninus, in whose reign our author dates most of his observations. We have had abundant evidence that he was philoponos and philalethes, a lover of labor and a lover of truth, and are fully warranted to regard this canon as giving to ancient history math-

Kept

'Tis sweet to know I am the Father's child,
Whate'er betide;
E'en though around me swirls an ocean wild,
His hand doth guide.

Kept, safely kept, why should my heart know fear?
He watcheth me.
He only would his tim'rous child draw near,
His grace to see.

We stand amid the storm on mountain-side,
The lightning's glare;
The thunders roar o'er valleys far and wide,
Faith would despair.

But to our fearsome hearts is whispered, "Kept,"
Nor need we dread;
For though our world be torn and tempest-swept,
Hope is not dead.

Kept by the power of God, along life's way,
Faith triumphs still;
Strength to each soul, according to our day,
To do his will.

An Appeal to Ministers

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The Lord has instructed me to say to his people that he demands a deeper consecration on their part, in every conference, in every church, in every household. Said the messenger: Speak to the leading men, saying, You should give to the people an example of what may be done by the human agent in holy living by coming into close relation to God. Do all in your power to send home the messages of warning that have been given. Wake up the watchmen; for their unbelief has paralyzed the efforts of many who would become workers.

"As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. Then shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.

"But know this, that if the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing." (1)

"Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?" I repeat this. Many among professedly Christian teachers and pious men are not such at heart. They have not been purifying their souls by obeying the truth. And because the religious experience of many has been only a profession, meat has not been given in due season, and God has been greatly displeased. Blessed is that servant, the Lord declares, whom his Lord when he comes shall find faithful. "Verily I say unto you, That he shall make him ruler over all his goods.

"But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, my lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

This lesson is being fulfilled all around us and right in our midst. In the indifference and boasting of men and women to-day, the words of the evil servant are being repeated, "My Lord delayeth his coming." In our large cities every kind of wickedness imaginable is being revealed, and yet among the masses, yes, even among the scoffers, there are some who are listening for the trumpet to give the signal of alarm. But they listen in vain. The appropriate warnings have not been given. Is it not high time that the messengers should awake, and give the warning message that is to prepare the world for the judgments that are right upon us?

Let there be an awakening, and heartfelt confessions of sin. Let there be a seeking after God. Let the shepherds throw off the lethargy that is upon them. Wake up, brethren, for Christ's sake wake up! Let earnest, organized efforts be made that light may go forth to those in darkness, who are eating and drinking with those who are befogged with skepticism.

Our sinful condition of lukewarmness has been coming on for years. We are far behind in following the instructions given to enter the cities, and erect memorials for the cause of present truth. For many years the instruction has been repeated to us regarding the work to be done in the cities; yet there seems to be a deathlike slumber upon many ministers and people. There are a few who have been doing all in their power, but the burden of this work has not been borne upon the hearts of our people; they are not urged to co-operate, and to set in order the things that remain, that are ready to die.

At our meetings held in the cities, and at our camp-meetings, we do not ask for great demonstrations, but we ask that the men who come before the people to present the truth shall be in earnest, and shall reveal that God is with them. There must be a special seeking after God, that the work of the meeting may be carried on under the deep movings of the Holy Spirit. There must be no mingling of the wrong with the right. In the past we have had abundant evidence that God will work through those who place themselves wholly on his side; and this evidence will again be given. We must have at our camp-meetings Christians of the class of whom it was said, "Ye are the light of the world." "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Those who seek the Lord in humility of heart will be uplifted and refreshed.

Avoid the Errors of the Past

Those who take hold of the work at this time are not to repeat the mistakes that have been made in the past, when men have sought to control and rule their fellow workers. God forbids that this spirit shall come into his work. Another message than this is to be borne. Those who have felt a burden to place yokes on the necks of their brethren who desired to labor, are called upon to repent and be converted. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near." The message of the third angel is to go forth with a loud voice. Wake up the watchmen; leave them not to settle back in their deathlike slumber.

By words and works some have declared, "My Lord delayeth his coming," and the thief is preparing to steal in and destroy their goods. O that our brethren would awake to the situation! Every presentation possible may be made to them, but unless the plowshare of truth shall plow up the fallow ground of the heart, there will be no thorough work done. Hearts that are hard will not be broken until there is deep and sincere repentance. Unless there is a thorough reconversion, some will fall back into the same ways that have been followed for the past eight years.

A Word to the Wavering

Of those who are constantly working to undermine faith in the message God is sending to his people, I am instructed to say, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate." Come into the light, brethren, and lead others to the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Those who in faith accept the leadings of the Spirit of God will see where their dangers lie, and will make decided moves in the right direction.

There are some who have not accepted the messages God has sent, and these have sown the seeds of unbelief until tares have sprung up and multiplied. Those who themselves have a tottering faith are constantly working to weaken the faith of those who come within the reach of their influence. Those who have stood directly in the way of the work of God for the past fifteen years, are not to be sustained or given influence.

Now, brethren and sisters, is your time to obtain an experience that will be invaluable to you in the future. But there can be no compromise. Those who desire to be accepted as workers in the future of this cause, must advance step by step heavenward. "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

Forty

J. N. LOUGHBOROUGH

THERE are many things stated in the Scriptures connected with the number forty. There were more than forty men who bound themselves with an oath that they would neither eat nor drink until they had killed Paul. Acts 23:12, 13. If they kept their oath, they must long since have died of starvation; for Paul escaped their evil designs. Then there is Paul's statement that five times of the Jews he "received forty stripes save one." 2 Cor. 11:24.

The rain at the time of the flood continued for forty days and forty nights. Gen. 7:12. Twice Moses was in the mount forty days and forty nights, receiving the law and statutes from the Lord. Ex. 24:18. Forty days the spies searched the land of Canaan. Num. 13:25. Forty days and nights Elijah went in the strength of food provided by the angel of God. 1 Kings 19:4, 8. Jonah's preaching at Nineveh was, "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.' Jonah 3:4. Forty days was the time of our Saviour's fast in the wilderness. followed by those fierce temptations of Satan. Matt. 4:2. After the Lord's resurrection he was seen more or less. for forty days before his ascension to heaven. Acts 1:3.

We have also account of many events connected with a period of forty years. When Moses was forty years old, he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter. Heb. 11:24. This shows that in that time forty years was the age in life when one became his own master, to speak for himself. We have the account of the forty years of Moses' life as a shepherd, and the forty years of his leading of Israel through the wilderness. In the warfare of the nations against Israel, there was a period of forty years when they had rest under the reign of Othniel, Caleb's younger brother. Judges 3:10. Forty years the land had rest after the overthrow of the Midianites, who were thrown into consternation by the sound of the trumpets of Gideon, the flash of the lamps, and the mighty shout of his three hundred men, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." Judges 7:18. There was forty years' rest after the conquest of Barak against Sisera, who gained his victory by following the counsel of Deborah the prophetess. Judges 5:7. Then we have the account of the deliverance of Israel into the hands of the Philistines for forty years, because of the evils which they had wrought. Judges 13:1. Then there was Eli's forty years' reign, closing with his death, which was hastened by the slaughter of his two unrestrained sons, and the loss of the ark. 1 Sam. 4:15-18.

Saul reigned for forty years, and then for disobeying the Lord, and for consulting with a familiar spirit, he was slain in battle. 1 Chron. 10:13, 14; Acts 13:21. Saul was succeeded by King David, who also reigned for forty years. 1 Kings 2:11. His reign was followed by that of his son, King Solomon, who reigned "over all Israel in Jerusalem" for forty years. 1 Kings 11:42. There is also the account of King Jehoash (called Joash in 2 Chron. 24:1), who reigned forty years in Jerusalem, and "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all his days wherein Jehoida the priest instructed him." 2 Kings 12:1, 2. But alas! in his last days he poorly requited Jehoida; for he slew his sons. During the reign of David there is a period of forty years mentioned (1 Kings 2:11), at the expiration of which Absalom entered into a conspiracy against his father's kingdom. 2 Sam. 15:7, 10, 11. For forty years the Lord made the land of Egypt utterly desolate, from the tower of Syene, even unto the border of Ethiopia, because they said, "The river is mine, and I made it." Eze. 29:8-12. Still further on is mentioned the forty years Israel had "borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chion your images, the star of your God, which ye made to yourselves." For this cause they were taken "into captivity beyond Damascus." Amos 5:25-27.

There is still another period of forty years, as I write, which is nearer. It is connected with the planting and rise of the third angel's message on the Pacific Coast. It is just forty years to-day (July 19, 1908) since Elder D. T. Bourdeau and myself, with our wives and my son, first set foot on California soil in San Francisco, from the deck of the steamer "Golden City," for the purpose of opening up the work in this field. There were not at that time half a dozen persons west of the Rocky Mountains that were in full sympathy with present truth. Now, in the Pacific Coast field, there are two union conferences, comprised of nine organized conferences and two missions. There are two hundred fifty-three churches, with 12,314 members. In these conferences there are one hundred eleven ordained ministers, forty-four licentiates, and eighty-nine who hold missionary license. For the preparation of workers we have two colleges, one academy, five intermediate schools, and scores of church-schools. Connected with this educational work there are eighty-seven teachers.

Then there is the medical and health work, which "occupies the same relation to the message as the right hand and arm to the body." There are five large sanitariums under conference control. Connected with these are eleven graduated physicians, one hundred sixty-six nurses, and one hundred twenty-two other helpers. Beside this, there are nine sanitariums managed as individual enterprises. In these are twelve graduated physicians, and over thirty nurses.

Then there is a strong, well-organized publishing house, furnishing material to hundreds of the "King's Messengers" to introduce in the homes of the people. We do not speak of what has been accomplished with any spirit of boasting. We realize to some extent that, had there been that devotion to the work that the message and times demand, and more of a trust in the Lord's power to accompany the efforts put forth, far greater results would now be apparent. But with the facilities now in hand, if the workers go forth in the strength of Israel's God, looking to him for his power to carry on the work, he using us as his instruments, soon it could be said of the work on the Pacific Coast, "It is done."

The Book of Daniel

The Gospel of the Kingdom

THE EDITOR

BY the incarnation of Christ, provision was made for establishing the everlasting kingdom of God upon earth. By taking our flesh, the eternal Son established in himself a personal union between divinity and humanity, and brought the gift of eternal life within reach of every member of the human family through his fellowship with Christ. This is the fundamental truth in the gospel of the kingdom, which is set forth with clearness in various scriptures. Thus we read: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us." "That which was from the beginning, that which we have heard, that which we have seen with our eyes, that which we beheld, and our hands handled, concerning the Word of life (and the life was manifested, and we have seen, and bear witness, and declare unto you the life, the eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us); that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you also, that ye also may have fellowship with us: yea, and our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." "By his life and his death, Christ has achieved even more than recovery from the ruin wrought through sin. It was Satan's purpose to bring about an eternal separation between God and man; but in Christ we become more closely united to God than if we had never fallen. In taking our nature, the Saviour has bound himself to humanity by a tie that is never to be broken. Through the eternal ages he is linked with us. 'God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son.' He gave him not only to bear our sins, and to die as our sacrifice; he gave him to the fallen race.

Thoughts of Heaven

ELLA M. ROBINSON

SWEET seemed the vesper hour as we heard
The minister read from the Holy Word
Of the celestial city, bright and fair;
And as we knelt in solemn, reverent prayer,
We felt and knew the blessed Lord was there.
We lingered there a while, loath to depart:
The preacher spoke: "It hath not entered heart
Of any man, the rapture and delight,
The peace and joy, the glory and the light,
Of our blest home; still let us tell to-night
What we most long for in that home of love,
Our best conceptions of the joys above."

The artist rose: "Ah, this were heaven for me,
To gaze upon the landscape ever free
From taint of sin, and pure and good, the same
As first from the Creator's hand it came.
I'd paint no drooping flower, no fading leaf,
No sights of sickness, dying, sin, or grief.
I'd watch the glowing sunsets stretch away
With sevenfold the brightness of our day.
But O, the rapture when my eyes behold
The walls of jasper and the streets of gold!
The crystal sea! the throne of dazzling light!
The hosts of saints all robed in spotless white!"

The student spoke: "Through all eternity
This boon alone were heaven enough for me:
The power to study without weariness,
The power to learn the mighty mysteries
Of time and space, of suns and worlds untold,
The mysteries millenniums unfold,
The mysteries eternities still hold."

A little child spoke next: "It seems to me
To have a pair of wings would really be
The very best of all: for then I'd fly,
Just as the birds do, up into the sky,
I'd learn to call each one of them by name:
No one would harm them, and they'd be so tame.
I'd lead the wolves and lions with my hand.
They would not hurt me in that heavenly land."

And next a woman, worn and pale and weak:
Her voice was feeble, and she scarce could speak
Above a whisper; but her radiant eyes
Gave meaning to her words: "Ah, this my prize,—
To feel no more of pain and sickness there,
To grow each day more beautiful and fair,
To feel the vigor of eternal youth —
Ah, this were joy! yea, this were heaven in truth!"

Then spoke the youth whose voice led our praise:
"I wonder often if the endless days
A sweeter bliss will bring than joyful song,
A rapture more profound than with the throng
To join in David's choir, with heart and voice —
Of all the joys of heaven, this were my choice."

The teacher rose: "O may it ever be
My lot, my joy, through all eternity
To tell the wondrous grace that ransomed me
To sinless angels who have never known
What it could mean to have a heart of stone,—
What it could mean to feel the pangs of woe,
Of doubt and sorrow, and of sin below.
I'll tell the grace, the love, the power divine,
That melted even this hard heart of mine."

There was a pause, the minister spake low:
"My children, one and all, pray would you know
The joy that thrills my heart, that dims my eye,
That fills my soul with sweetest ecstacy,
With longing and desire, and yearnings sore,
Each time I think of heaven's blessed store
Of joys? 'Tis this — nor wisdom's mystery,
Nor glory, beauty, sweetest rhapsody;
Though every one a part of heaven's bliss,—
One joy alone makes heaven for me; 'tis this,—
To lean upon the blessed Saviour's breast,
Like that disciple whom he loved the best;
To know and feel that he is ever near,
To pour my heart-felt praises in his ear —
A blest reward for life's small sacrifice.—
'Tis this alone I ask for as my prize."

Our Publications

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) THE great and wonderful work of the last gospel message is to be carried on now as it has never been before. The world is to receive the light of truth through an evangelizing ministry of the Word in our books and periodicals. Our publications are to show that the end of all things is at hand. I am bidden to say to our publishing houses, Lift up the standard; lift it up higher. Proclaim the third angel's message, that it may be heard by all the world. Let it be seen that "here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Let our literature give the message as a witness to all the world.

Our workers should now be encouraged to give their first attention to books that deal with the evidences of our faith, which teach the doctrines of the Bible, and will prepare a people to stand in the trying times before us. Having brought a people to the enlightenment of the truth by prayerful labor in Bible instruction, and through a wise use of our publications, we are to teach them to become laborers in word and doctrine. We are to encourage them to scatter the books that deal with Bible subjects, and whose teachings will prepare a people to stand, having their loins girded with truth, and their lamps burning.

We have been asleep, as it were, regarding the work that may be accomplished by the circulation of well-prepared literature. Let us now, by the wise use of periodicals and books, preach the Word with determined energy, that the world may understand the message that Christ gave to John on the Isle of Patmos. Let every human intelligence who professes the name of Christ testify, The end of all things is at hand; prepare to meet thy God. (1)

Our publications should go everywhere. Let them be issued in many languages. The third angel's message is to be given through this medium and through the living teacher. You who believe the truth for this time, wake up. It is our duty now to bring in all the means possible to help those who understand the truth to proclaim it. Part of the money that comes in from the sale of our publications should be used to increase our facilities for the production of more literature that will open blind eyes and break up the fallow ground of the heart.

There is danger of our brethren entering into commercialism, and becoming so engrossed in worldly business that the truths of the Word of God in their purity and power are not brought into the life. The love of trade and gain is becoming more and more prevalent. My brethren, let your souls be truly converted. If ever there was a time when we needed to understand our responsibilities, it is now, when truth is fallen in the streets, and equity can not enter. Satan has come down with great power, to work with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; and everything that can be shaken will be shaken, and those things that can not be shaken will remain. The Lord is coming very soon, and we are entering into scenes of calamity. Satanic agencies, though unseen, are working to destroy human life. But if our life is hid with Christ in God, we shall see of his grace and salvation. Christ is coming to establish his kingdom on the earth. Let our tongues be sanctified, and used to glorify him. Let us work now as we have never worked before. We are exhorted to "be instant in season, out of season." We are to make openings for the presentation of the truth. We are to improve every opportunity of drawing souls to Christ.

As a people we are to be reconverted,

(1) Colporteur Ministry, p. 145, 146

our lives sanctified to declare the truth as it is in Jesus. In the work of scattering our publications, we can speak of a Saviour's love from a warm and throbbing heart. God alone has the power to forgive sins; if we do not speak this message to the unconverted, our neglect may prove their ruin. Blessed, soul-saving, Bible truths are published in our papers. There are many who can help in the work of selling our periodicals. The Lord calls upon all of us to seek to save perishing souls. Satan is at work to deceive the very elect, and now is our time to work with vigilance. Our books and papers are to be brought before the notice of the people; the gospel of present truth is to be given to our cities without delay. Shall we not arouse to our duties?

If we are making the life and teachings of Christ our study, every passing event will furnish a text for an impressive discourse. It was thus the Saviour preached the gospel in the highways and byways; and as he spoke, the little group that listened to him swelled to a great company. Present-day evangelists are to be workers together with Christ. These, just as verily as the first disciples, have the assurance: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

The work to be carried on by the people of God is declared in the words of inspiration: "Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare the way before thee. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." "Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my Spirit upon him; he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street. A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth; and the isles shall wait for his law."

God invites all men to the fullest investigation of the claims of his law. His Word is sacred and infinite. The cause of truth is to go forth as a lamp that burneth. Earnest study of the Word of God will reveal the truth. Sin and wrong will not be sustained, but the law of God will be vindicated. "Thus saith the Lord, he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; he that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth bread to the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein: I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light to the Gentiles; to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison-house." Christians are to seek their light from the Word of God, and then in faith go forth to give that light to those who sit in darkness.

S. N. HASKELL

The character of Nehemiah stands forth as a beacon-light in a stormy sea. Israel had lost faith in the literal statements of the prophets concerning the building of the wall of Jerusalem. They little realized that their own course for scores of years had stood in the way of their seeing accomplished what they most desired. They were confused and disheartened, and blinded by sin.

Nehemiah was a thorough business man. He did not set forth the claim of being a prophet, priest, or king; he did not sit down and complain because of Israel's sins; but, in the name of the Lord, he arose and demanded that they put away their sins.

When he called upon the people to arise and build, there was a great cry from the people and their wives against their brethren, the Jews, because of oppression. They were held in bondage by financial claims of their brethren on lands and other property; even their sons and daughters were held in bondage by their brethren. This stirred the very soul of Nehemiah with anger,— not an anger born of self-interest, or because of a desire to retaliate, but because the spirit of oppression prevented the blessing of God from resting upon their efforts. This spirit of oppression God hates, and he will not suffer it, even when it is exercised upon those not of the household of faith. See 2 Samuel 21. God's message is, "Undo the heavy burdens, and let the oppressed go free; and . . . break every yoke." Isa. 58:5-7.

Nehemiah feared the effect of this sin among the people of God more than the work of all the hosts of hell, or all of Satan's emissaries. His first business was to purge the camp from the sin of oppression. This led to the work of restoring lands, vineyards, and olive yards; houses and money; corn, wine, and oil. When this was done, the people entered into a solemn covenant with God and with one another. This covenant they promised to keep, and, as afterward in the days of Zacchæus, it brought to them the salvation of God. Luke 19:1-9.

Nehemiah was a noble and generous-hearted man. He did not seek the highest place, or demand the highest wages. The former governors had been chargeable unto the people, and took from them bread, wine, and silver, and allowed their servants to rule over the people. Nehemiah purchased no land for himself, but fed at his own table one hundred fifty of the Jews and rulers, besides those who came unto them from the heathen. He required not the bread of the governor because the bondage was heavy upon the people. He then could pray, "Think upon me, my God, for good according to all that I have done for this people." "Remember me, O my God, concerning this, and wipe not out my good deeds that I have done for the house of my God, and for the office thereof." Neh. 5:19; 13:14.

There is a marked contrast between the character of Nehemiah and that of Ezra; there were elements in Nehemiah's character which Ezra did not possess. When Ezra saw the sins of the people that would separate them from God, he rent his own garment and mantle, and plucked off the hairs of his own head and beard, and sat down astonished until the evening sacrifice. He then arose and fell upon his knees and plead with God in behalf of the people; he was grieved because of their sins.

Another element was needed in the character of their ruler in order to bring forth repentance on the part of these hardened Jews. When Nehemiah was sent to them he was more like Joshua, when on a certain occasion the Lord commanded him saying, "Get thee up; wherefore liest thou thus upon thy face? Israel hath sinned, and have also transgressed my covenant which I commanded them." Joshua 7:10,11.

Because Israel had intermarried with the heathen around them until their children spoke both languages, and could not discern the purity of the Jewish tongue, Nehemiah contended with them. He plucked the hair from their heads, and "made them sware by God, saying, ye shall not give your daughters unto their sons, nor take their daughters unto your sons, or for yourselves." They had even defiled the priesthood, and Nehemiah felt that something should be done before God could pour out his Spirit upon them. Neh. 13:25.

The walls of spiritual Israel are now to be built, and it becomes each one to build over against his own house. Only those who have clean hands and a pure heart will stand in this trying time. Now is the time for the law of God to be in our minds and written in our hearts. If worldly thoughts and interests, and the cares of this life, absorb the mind, we shall lose our interest in present truth; and the reading of other books will take the place of reading the Bible. We will look afar off for the coming of the Lord; Satan will enter the heart and erect his idols, which we will be led to worship.

Those who receive the seal of God in their foreheads will be protected in the time of trouble. It is now that we must reflect the image of Jesus fully. Now is the time to prepare to give the loud cry of the third angel's message. "The seal of God will never be placed upon the forehead of an impure man or woman. It will never be placed upon the forehead of the ambitious, world-loving man or woman. It will never be placed upon the forehead of men or women of deceitful hearts or

LIGHTNINGS flash across the sky,
And the wild wind rages high;
But no fears my thoughts alarm,
God will keep me from all harm.

He has kept me all these years,
Kept me through both joys and tears;
And he oft my heart hath stirred
By the power of his Word.

I will trust him every day,
As he guides me o'er the way;
Let him lead me where he will,
Give him all my heart to fill.

Father, take my hand in thine,
Let thy presence round me shine;
Fill me with thy precious love,
Keep my thoughts on things above;

In thine image make me grow;
Cleansed from sin, and white as snow,
Let me sing thy praise above;
God is good, for "God is love."

Circulate the Publications

— No. 1

MRS. E. G. WHITE

IN the night of March 2, 1907, many things were revealed to me regarding the value of our publications on present truth, and the small effort that is being made by our brethren and sisters in the churches for their wide circulation.

I have been repeatedly shown that our presses should now be constantly employed in publishing light and truth. This is a time of spiritual darkness in the churches of the world. Ignorance of divine things has hidden God and the truth from view. The forces of evil are gathering in strength. Satan flatters his coworkers that he will do a work that will captivate the world. While partial inactivity has come upon the church, Satan and his hosts are intensely active. The professed Christian churches are not converting the world; for they are themselves corrupted with selfishness and pride, and need to feel the converting power of God in their midst before they can lead others to a purer or higher standard.

An Encouraging Experience

The afternoon of March 2 I spent in counsel with Brother and Sister S. N. Haskell, discussing the work in Oakland, and their plans to go East to spend some time in South Lancaster. After our visit I was weary, and retired early. I was suffering with rheumatism in my left side, and could get no rest because of the pain. I turned from side to side, trying to find ease from the suffering. There was a pain in my heart that portended no good for me. At last I fell asleep.

About half-past nine I attempted to turn myself, and as I did so, I became aware that my body was entirely free from pain. As I turned from side to side, and moved my hands, I experienced an extraordinary freedom and lightness that I can not describe. The room was filled with light, a most beautiful, soft, azure light, and I seemed to be in the arms of heavenly beings.

This peculiar light I have experienced in the past in times of special blessing, but this time it was more distinct, more impressive, and I felt such peace, peace so full and abundant no words can express it. I raised myself into a sitting posture, and I saw that I was surrounded by a bright cloud, white as snow, the edges of which were tinged with a deep pink. The softest, sweetest music was filling the air, and I recognized the music as the singing of the angels. Then a Voice spoke to me, saying, "Fear not; I am your Saviour. Holy angels are all about you."

"Then this is heaven," I said, "and now I can be at rest. I shall have no more messages to bear, no more misrepresentations to endure. Everything will be easy now, and I shall enjoy peace and rest. O, what inexpressible peace fills my soul! Is this indeed heaven? Am I one of God's little children? and shall I always have this peace?"

The Voice replied, "Your work is not yet done."

Again I fell asleep, and when I awoke, I heard music, and I wanted to sing. Then some one passed my door, and I wondered if that person saw the light. After a time the light passed away, but the peace remained.

After a while I fell asleep again. This time I seemed to be in a council meeting where our book work was being discussed. There were a number of our brethren present, leaders in our work, and Elder Haskell and his wife were there consulting together and with the brethren about the circulation of our books, tracts, and periodicals.

Elder Haskell was presenting strong reasons why the books which contain the knowledge that has been communicated to Sister White,— the books containing the special message to come to the world at this present time,— should be more freely circulated. "Why," he inquired, "do not our people appreciate and circulate more widely the books bearing the divine credentials? Why is not a specialty made of the books containing the warnings regarding Satan's work? Why do we not give greater effort to circulating the books that point out Satan's plans to counterwork the work of God, that uncover his plans and point out his deceptions? The moral evils of his deceptions are to be removed by opening the eyes of the people so that they shall discern the situation and the dangers of our times; so that they shall make diligent effort to lay hold by faith upon Christ and his righteousness."

A messenger from heaven stood in our midst, and he spoke words of warning and instruction. He made us clearly understand that the gospel of the kingdom is the message for which the world is perishing, and that this message, as contained in our publications already in print, and those yet to be issued, should be circulated among the people who are nigh and afar off.

Dangers in Speculative Study

The light of truth which God designs shall come to the people of the world at this time is not that which the world's men of learning are seeking to impart; for these men in their research often arrive at erroneous conclusions, and in their study of many authors become enthused with theories that are of satanic origin. Satan, clothed in the garb of an angel of light, presents for the study of the human mind subjects which seem very interesting, and which are full of scientific mystery. In the investigation of these subjects, men are led to accept erroneous conclusions, and to unite with seducing spirits in the work of propounding new theories which lead away from the truth.

There is danger that the false sentiments expressed in the books that they have been reading will sometimes be interwoven by our ministers, teachers, and editors with their arguments, discourses, and publications, under the belief that they are the same in principle as the teachings of the Spirit of truth. The book "Living Temple" is an illustration of this work, the writer of which declared in its support that its teachings were the same as those found in the writings of Mrs. White. Again and again we shall be called to meet the influence of men who are studying sciences of satanic origin, through which Satan is working to make a nonentity of God and of Christ.

The Father and the Son each have a personality. Christ declared, "I and my Father are one." Yet it was the Son of God who came to the world in human form. Laying aside his royal robe and kingly crown, he clothed his divinity with humanity, that humanity through his infinite sacrifice might become partakers of the divine nature, and escape the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Christ was tempted in all points as man is tempted, but at no time did he bring against the tempter a railing accusation. To every temptation he presented the Word of the Lord. "It is written" was his never-failing weapon. We, as the representatives of Christ, are to meet every thrust of the enemy with the Word of the living God. Never should we allow ourselves to follow the trail of the serpent by using his scientific arguments. Satan can never gain advantage of the child of God who relies on the Word of God as his defense.

Our Counselor impressed deeply on our minds that God's commandment-keeping people must be sanctified through the truth, and that truth must ever be given the foremost place. We must not forget that Satan still lives to exercise his deceptive power through false science.

Christ was the Majesty of heaven, the Prince of life; yet he humbled himself as a man, and became obedient to every law of God. He passed over the ground that every man must tread who takes his name, and came forth from his trial pure and untainted by sin. He was our example in all things.

The first advent of Christ and his life of ministry are not studied as they should be. His life was one of self-denial, in which truth in all its noble qualities was expressed. He lived to bless humanity by every good word and work.

Receiving Christ

E. L. CARDEY

"As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him." Col. 2:6. The walk, or life, of the Christian is determined in the way that Christ is received. Too often he is received as one whom we need only in prosperity. How many who have accepted Christ have failed to gain real enjoyment in the Christian's walk?

When the sun shines, and all goes smoothly, it is easy to be on the mountain-top; but soon clouds obscure the sun, adversity crosses our pathway,— then, behold! too often we find ourselves away down in the valley of doubt. To accept Christ aright will cause the sun to shine every day, will make every dark valley a mountain-top in our experience. A few texts will show how this may be true.

"In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." Eph. 1:11. When sickness came to you or your family, and perhaps some were laid to rest; when adversity came, and perhaps reduced you to poverty; when your friends forsook you, and spoke evil of you,— all this God had ordered in your behalf, "after the counsel of his own will."

The writer has often met with downcast and discouraged souls who have asked, "If the Lord has counseled about this trouble or misfortune that has come to me, why did he permit it, when he knew it would discourage me? I don't see that any good has come out of it." Ah! herein are manifested the beauty and depth of the wisdom of God. Better, while Jesus is in the Most Holy Place, that you should meet with that trial that has tested the weak place in your character, than to meet it and fall when the door of mercy is closed.

Yes, before that trouble came to you, your co-partner, your blessed Lord, had counseled in the matter, and decreed it for your good. True, it may not be possible for you to see how it turns to your best good: nevertheless do not spend your time in trying to find out before you accept that promise, "Who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." If we could only believe this, accept it, and make it a part of our very character, how doubts, fears, and discouragements would flee from us, as the dew scatters before the summer's sun. No chance then for the tempter to cause us to say, "The Lord is not just in his dealings with me." If you have accepted Christ Jesus the Lord thus, how easy it will be to fulfil 1 Thess. 5:16, 17, 18: "Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

"Rejoice" that you are accounted worthy to be a soldier under the leadership of him whose counsel never fails. "Pray without ceasing," that you may be victorious in the fight, and be kept in the hour of temptation that shall come upon all the world. "In everything give thanks,"— thanks for the long, hard marches, for those bitter tears you are caused to shed, for those wounds inflicted; yea, more, for the love that is shown in chastisement.

We must have a faith such as no other people have had; for "these are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." This faith will be gained through experience. In this time the just shall live by faith. Not only when there is peace and plenty, but when trouble comes, when the flour barrel is empty, when your eye can not pierce the darkness ahead,— then live by faith.

May the Lord help us, as those who expect to endure the conflict through to the end, to rejoice always in the Lord, to accept and believe his promises, to receive Christ as our counselor, our comforter, the Rock of our strength in the time of storm.

The Great Cities

ADDIE S. BOWEN

In our day many millions of people are in only a few cities, and thousands, many times over, are living in each of many smaller cities. In crowded "flats," story above story, thousands climb up above the heads of others, or are carried up by elevators, to a few rooms which they call home. No yard of green grass where the little people can play, no beautiful trees by the doors and windows, no flower garden, no soil to cultivate,— just houses, block after block, walls shutting out nearly, if not all, of the sweet, fresh air of heaven, and shutting in more or less of desolation, misery, and sorrow. This is but a little of what might be mentioned of what is deplorable in miles and miles of streets in any large city in this country and in other lands.

In the beginning it was planned by our Creator that each family should have a most beautiful garden of Eden for a home, and he started the human race on that plan,— plenty of room, an ocean of fresh air, the best of food, beautiful trees, grass, flowers, beauty, and sweet fragrance all around, with delightful, refreshing labor. Every possible need was supplied, and the all-pervading love of God filled this perfect home. God said nothing about building cities. Had he seen it best for humanity to dwell in cities, he could have made perfect ones, given Adam and Eve a lovely mansion, and told them to multiply and fill these cities; but he gave them a pattern home, and told them to multiply and fill the earth,— evidently with garden-of-Eden homes. God built no city on this earth. He plainly showed that his purpose was to have families in all the earth, not to have crowded cities while great wastes of territory were left unoccupied.

One plain instance of the will of the Lord in this matter is recorded in the eleventh chapter of Genesis. Men said, "Let us build us a city," and, "Let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth." Self-exaltation and colonization looked very desirable to them. So do they now to many. The Lord scattered those people. The very means by which they purposed to keep together, he used to scatter them abroad over the face of the whole earth. Does not this show that God disapproves of the city schemes of men?

Yet cities are found everywhere, and the great masses of city people are waiting to receive the last warning message. Therefore God is calling his true and faithful children to go quickly, and do the work he gives them, in order that all in these great centers who love righteousness may receive and obey his message, and thus escape the destruction which will soon come upon the hardened sinners, the rebellious against God. Who will obey the call, and in the love which the Lord gives, go and give the message?

Our God has built one city. All the glory and beauty of heaven center in it. When he shall place that city on this earth, as the capital of the glorious, eternal home of saved men and women, every right aspiration that humanity has had in building cities will be abundantly realized, in God's way and time, by those who now are willing to choose his way and time for honor and happiness.

The Gospel in the Sanctuary

L. A. HOOPES

"Let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them." Ex. 25:8. "Unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them." Heb. 4:2. "God, . . . at sundry times and in divers manners, spake in times past unto the fathers, by the prophets." Heb. 1:1.

Although many of the rites of the sacrificial service had been observed from the time the plan of salvation had been made known to the progenitor of the race, it was twenty-five hundred years before the definite plan of the sanctuary and its services was introduced. Why should it be introduced at that late day? The answer to this question will be the solution to a great many problems, which men have endeavored to solve independent of their true relationship to the sanctuary, and in every instance have failed. "When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me; until I went into the sanc-

I Pray for You

I KNOW not what the pain that lies —
  The hidden pain so hard to bear —
Deep in your heart, and through your eyes
  Asks me for sympathy and prayer;
But deepest sympathy I feel
In answer to its mute appeal.

It may be God has given you
  Some task that to the utmost tries
Strength, courage, patience, true love, too,
  Until your fainting spirit cries
Beneath its load, and One draws near
Who waits the feeblest prayer to hear.

Perhaps the friend that most you loved
  And trusted as a friend indeed,
In time of sorest stress has proved
  Untrue, a wind-tossed, broken reed;
And all the confidence of years
Has passed away in burning tears.

It may be Death has passed your door,
  On cruel mission bent, and left
A loneliness that evermore
  Remains with those by him bereft.
The shadow of a grave may lie
Upon your heart, across your sky.

Some living trouble, worse to bear
  Than those with dead forms laid away,
May dwell with you, and ever share
  Your sweetest hour, your brightest day;
Laying its hand on every joy,
Touching all gladness, to destroy.

Whate'er it be, this grief that lies
  Deep in your heart, its presence there
Can not be hid, but through your eyes
  It asks for sympathy and prayer;
And so this one thing, dear, I do,—
With earnest heart I pray for you.

I do not pray that God will take
  This sorrow from your life; ah, no!
I only pray that he will make
  It work for good to you, and so
Bring you rich gain in coming years
For all your losses, grief, and tears.

Circulate the Publications

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE work of book-making is a grand and good work; but it has not always stood in the high and holy position that God designed it should occupy, because self has been interwoven with the work of some who have engaged in it. The book work should be the means of quickly giving the sacred light of present truth to the world. The publications that come forth from our presses to-day are to be of such a character as to strengthen every pin and pillar of the faith that was established by the Word of God and by the revelations of his Spirit.

The truth that God has given for his people in these last days should keep them firm when there come into the church those who present false theories. The truth that has stood firm against the attacks of the enemy for more than half a century must still be the confidence and comfort of God's people.

Our evidence to non-professors that we have the truth of the Word of God will be given in a life of strict self-denial. We must not make a mockery of our faith, but ever keep before us the example of him who, though he was the Prince of heaven, stooped to a life of self-denial and sacrifice to vindicate the righteousness of his Father's word. Let us each resolve to do our best, that the light of our good works may shine forth to the world.

Unity and Progress

Perfect agreement should exist in the plans laid for the publication of our books and periodicals, that the light which they contain may be quickly carried everywhere, to the nominal churches and to the world. Much more should have been accomplished in the sale of our books than we see accomplished to-day.

Our ministers should call upon the church-members to let the truth triumph. "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." Unity and love will accomplish wonderful things for the believers. Will not our churches arouse, and give the last warning message to the world?

Our Relief Books

"Christ's Object Lessons" is a book that speaks for itself, and it has accomplished a good work. As it has been sold, and the object of its sale related, money has been received that has relieved the indebtedness of our schools. But more than this, many by reading the book have been blessed by its lessons of truth, and many more will be blessed by reading it.

The book "Ministry of Healing" may do the same work for our sanitariums and health institutions that "Christ's Object Lessons" has done for our schools. This book contains the wisdom of the Great Physician. To me it has been a great privilege to donate my work on these books to the cause of God. In the future there should be a much greater effort made to increase their sale.

Lift the Debts

(1) God designs that we shall learn lessons from the failures of the past. It is not pleasing to him to have debts rest upon his institutions. We have reached the time when we must give character to the work by refusing to erect large and costly buildings. We are not to copy the mistakes of the past, and become more and more involved in debt. We are rather to endeavor to clear off the indebtedness that still remains on our institutions. Our churches can help in this matter if they will. Those members to whom the Lord has given means can invest their money in the cause without interest or at a low rate of interest, and by their free-will offerings they can help to support the work. The Lord asks you to return cheerfully to him a portion of the goods he has lent you, and thus become his almoners. (1)

Another View of the Book Work

Afterward we were in camp-meetings and in large meetings in our churches, where the ministers presented clearly the perils of the times in which we live, and the great importance of making haste in the circulation of our literature. In response to these appeals, the brethren and sisters came forward and purchased many books. Some took a few, and some purchased large quantities. Most of the purchasers paid for the books they took. A few arranged to pay afterward.

Because books were being sold at low prices, some being specially reduced for the occasion, many were purchased, and some by persons not of our faith. They said, "It must be that these books contain a message for us. These people are willing to make sacrifices in order that we may have them, and we will secure them for ourselves and our friends."

But dissatisfaction was expressed by some of our own people. "A stop must be put to this work," one said, "or our business will be spoiled." As one brother was carrying away an armful of books, a canvasser laid his hand upon his arm, and said, "My brother, what are you doing with so many books?" Then I heard the voice of our Counselor saying, "Forbid them not." This is a work that should be done. The end is near. Already much time has been lost, when these books should have been in circulation. Sell them far and near. Scatter them like the leaves of autumn. This work is to continue without the forbiddings of any one. Souls are perishing out of Christ. Let them be warned of his soon appearing in the clouds of heaven. (2)

Some of the workers continued to appear much cast down. One was weeping, and said, "These are doing the publishing work an injustice by purchasing these books at so low a price; besides, this work is depriving us of some of the revenue by which our work is sustained." The Voice replied, "You are meeting with no loss. These workers who take the books at reduced prices could not obtain so ready sale for them except it be at this so-called sacrifice. Many are now purchasing for their friends and for themselves who otherwise would not think of buying."

A Caution

Then instruction was given to Elder Haskell that in his anxiety to supply the people with the precious truth contained in his books, in his desire that all should feel that the books are worth more than they cost, and that all should be encouraged to give them a wide circulation, he was selling his books too cheap, and

(1) Stewardship, p. 283

(2) Colporteur Ministry, p. 25

thus making his own burden too heavy.

Our Counselor said, "The books should be sold in such a way that the author will not be left bare-handed, and that the publishing-house shall have a proper margin so that it will have means to carry on its work."

A Parable for Our Study

"The kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder," Christ declared, "which went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard. And when he had agreed with the laborers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard. And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market-place, and said unto them; Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way.

"Again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise. And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive. So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the laborers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first. And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny.

"But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny. And when they had received it, they murmured against the good man of the house, saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day. But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst thou not agree with me for a penny? Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this last even as unto thee. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good? So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many be called, but few chosen."

The value of service to God is measured by the Spirit in which it is rendered, rather than by the length of time spent in labor.

I am very desirous that the light contained in my books shall come to every soul possible; for God has sent the message for all. These books contain precious lessons in Christian experience. I would not dare forbid that these books be sold on special occasions at a low price, lest I should hinder the reading of the book, and thus withhold the light from some soul who might be converted to the truth. I have no forbiddings to place on the work of circulation of our books. Let the light be placed on the candlestick, that it may give light to all that are in the house.

A Lesson in Commercialism

"And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves, and said unto them, It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves.

"And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple; and he healed them. And when the chief priests and scribes saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying, Hosanna to the Son of David; they were sore displeased, and said unto him, Hearest thou what these say? And Jesus saith unto them, Yea; have ye never read, Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?"

The Gospel in the Sanctuary

L. A. HOOPES

(Concluded)

There is a way by which all may come to the Father. That way is Christ. "By a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh." The "veil," the "door," and the "hangings of the court," were all of "fine twined linen, of blue, and purple, and scarlet." What a beautiful illustration of "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever."

The fine linen, the blue, the purple, and the scarlet, are all fit emblems of the various experiences in the triumphal march of the Man of Calvary from the cross to the throne.

In this object-lesson of the Pentateuch are wonderful revelations of the One who has undertaken our salvation.

As one meditates upon the plan, the first thing one sees in the sanctuary service, is the scarlet color. What does the crimson tide — the blood of millions of innocent creatures — signify? Only one answer can be given. The blood which has been poured out by the altar for so many centuries meets its great antitype in the One who, "with his own blood, suffered without the gate." What an unfolding of the love of God is here represented! What a depth of meaning every part of the sanctuary service has! "And I, if I be lifted up, . . . will draw all men unto me." The dreadful curse of sin, with all its direful results, is seen in its true setting as the mystery of the great sacrifice is studied. The symbols of the curse are on the four corners of the altar of sacrifice. And they indicate that the victims daily sacrificed thereon were for the whole world. "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world."

The crown of thorns, the pierced hands, and the riven side are for the world. 2 Cor. 5: 18, 19. "He had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power." Hab. 3: 4.

The next article of furniture is the laver. It stands just outside the door of the tabernacle. Just inside is the "table of the bread of his presence." "The ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper are two monumental pillars, one without and one within the church. Upon these ordinances Christ has inscribed the name of the true God. Christ has made baptism the sign of entrance to his spiritual kingdom." — "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VI, page 91.

In entering the sanctuary, we are attracted by the steady glow of the seven lamps of the seven golden candlesticks. The first thought is, "Jesus the light of the world;" then, "Ye the the light of the world;" then, "Command the children of Israel, that they bring thee pure oil olive beaten for the light, to cause the lamp to burn always." Ex. 27: 20.

How interwoven this symbol is in all the teachings of both the Old and the New Testament. We must get the oil of grace that flows from these "two olive-trees," the Old and the New Testament, else our lights will go out.

Another symbolic service aids us in this very thing. It is at the golden table of the bread of his presence. Christ, the bountiful supplier of every temporal and spiritual need, is here typified. "I am the bread of life." "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." And this word is the light of the world. Thus the table of the bread of his presence and the seven lamps have a wonderfully close application in gospel work.

But what a debt of gratitude we owe to God for making such wondrous provisions for our salvation! How shall we pay the debt we owe? We can at least tell him that we love him, and adore him for every provision of his grace. Where shall we do this? — At the golden altar. Thank God it is a golden altar. "The Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which can not be uttered." Rom. 8: 26. It is our Advocate who is represented by this altar. And while there may be a definite and a distinct altar in heaven, yet the service at the golden altar in a most peculiar sense, represents the mysterious union of Christ and his followers before the throne of God. "It was the work of the priest in the daily ministration to present before God the blood of the sin-offering, also the incense which ascended with the prayers of Israel. So did Christ plead his blood before the Father in behalf of sinners, and present before him also, with the precious fragrance of his own righteousness, the prayers of penitent believers." — "Great Controversy," page 421.

The fire on this altar was kept constantly burning. It was "gold tried in the fire," "the love of God with abiding faith." A heart purified by faith, and that works by love, will always desire to be near this altar. The secret of our power, and of our success, lies in the fact that we keep close to this altar. It is here that we learn the mysteries of his will.

Glimpses

H. I. MORSE-FARNUM

O BRIGHT the mansions building
Beyond the "dome"!
Betimes appears the gilding
Of that far home.

A hint of the gay adornings
And gates empearled,
These dewy, gorgeous mornings
Give to the world.

Shyly the blushes of flowers
And sheen of leaves,
Are telling of unseen bowers
No blighting grieves.

In gurgling brook and fountain,
And forest grand,
From plain and towering mountain
And valley land,

Rise faintly echoes, surging
With foretaste sweet
Of loveliness, bright glowing,
And life complete.

See, in the ponderous river
Another rise
Beneath the throne forever,
In paradise!

This life is full with lessons set
On every hand;
Repeated oft; can we forget
The fatherland?

Forget? while earthen vessels break?
Earth beauties die?
While for Christ's name and mercy's sake
Beyond the sky

Homes are in waiting for the few,
In every clime,
Who faithful prove, and always true
Through trial-time?

How brief the testing time —
Mortality!
But long that "sun-bright clime"—
Eternity!

A Broader View

MRS. E. G. WHITE

In carrying forward the Lord's work at home and abroad, those in positions of responsibility must plan wisely, so as to make the best possible use of men and of means. The burden of sustaining the work in many of the foreign fields must be largely borne by our conferences in the home land. These conferences should have means with which to assist in opening new fields, where the testing truths of the third angel's message have never yet penetrated. Within the past few years, doors have been thrown open as if by magic; and men and women are needed to enter these doors, and begin earnest work for the salvation of souls.

Our educational institutions can do much toward meeting the demand for trained workers for these mission fields. Wise plans should be laid to strengthen the work done in our training centers. Study should be given to the best methods for fitting consecrated young men and young women to bear responsibility and to win souls for Christ. They should be taught how to meet the people, and how to present the third angel's message in an attractive manner. And in the management of financial matters, they should be taught lessons that will help them when they are sent to isolated fields where they must suffer many privations and practise the strictest économy.

The Lord has instituted a plan whereby many of the students in our schools can learn practical lessons needful to success in after-life. He has given them the privilege of handling precious books that have been dedicated for the advancement of our educational and sanitarium work. In the very handling of these books, the youth will meet with many experiences that will teach them how to cope with problems that await them in the regions beyond. During their school life, as they canvass for these books, many may learn how to approach people courteously, and how to exercise tact in conversing with them on different points of present truth. And as they meet with a degree of success financially, some will learn lessons of thrift and economy, which will be of great advantage to them when they are sent out as missionaries.

The students who take up the work of selling "Christ's Object Lessons" and "Ministry of Healing" will need to study the book they expect to sell. As they familiarize their minds with the subject-matter of the book in hand, and endeavor to practise its teachings, they will develop in knowledge and spiritual power. The messages in these books contain the light that God has revealed to me to give to the world. The teachers in our schools should encourage the students to make a careful study of every chapter. They should teach these truths to their students, and seek to inspire the youth with a love for the precious thoughts the Lord has entrusted to us to communicate to the world.

Thus the preparation for handling these books, and the daily experiences gained while bringing them to the attention of the people, will prove an invaluable schooling to those who take part in this line of effort. Under the blessing of God, the youth will obtain a fitting-up for service in the Lord's vineyard.

There is a special work to be done for our young people by those bearing responsibility in local churches throughout the conferences. When the church officers see promising youth who are desirous of fitting themselves for usefulness in the Lord's service, but whose parents are unable to send them to school, they have a duty to perform in studying how to give help and encouragement. They should take counsel with parents and youth, and unite in planning wisely. Some youth may be best fitted to engage in home missionary work. There is a wide field of usefulness in the distribution of our literature, and in bringing the third angel's message to the attention of friends and neighbors. Other youth should be encouraged to enter the canvassing work, to sell our larger books. Some may have qualifications that would make them valuable helpers in our institutions. And in many instances, if promising youth were wisely encouraged and properly directed, they could be led to earn their own schooling by taking up the sale of "Christ's Object Lessons" or "Ministry of Healing."

In selling these books, the youth would be acting as missionaries; for they would be bringing precious light to the notice of the people of the world. At the same time they would be earning money to enable them to attend school, where they could continue their preparation for wider usefulness in the Lord's cause. In the school, they would receive encouragement and inspiration from teachers and students to continue their work of selling books; and when the time came for them to leave school, they would have received a practical training fitting them for the hard, earnest, self-sacrificing labor that has to be done in many foreign fields, where the third angel's message must be carried under difficult and trying circumstances.

How much better is this plan than for students to go through school without obtaining a practical education in field work, and, at the end of their course, leave under a burden of debt, with but little realization of the difficulties they will have to meet in new and untried fields! How hard it will be for them to meet the financial problems that are connected with pioneer work in foreign lands! And what a burden some one will have to carry until the debts incurred by the student have been paid!

On the other hand, how much might be gained, if the self-supporting plan were followed! The student would often be enabled to leave the educational institution, nearly or wholly free from personal indebtedness; the finances of the school would be in a more prosperous condition; and the lessons learned by the student while passing through these experiences in the home field would be of untold value to him in foreign fields.

Let wise plans now be laid to help worthy students to earn their own schooling by handling these books, if they so desire. Those who earn sufficient means in this way to pay their way through a course at one of our training-schools, will gain a most valuable practical experience that will help fit them for pioneer missionary work in other fields.

A great work is to be done in our world in a short time, and we must study to understand and appreciate, more than we have in past years, the providence of God in placing in our hands the precious volumes, "Christ's Object Lessons," and "Ministry of Healing," as a means of helping worthy students to meet their expenses while in training, as well as a means of liquidating the indebtedness on our educational and medical institutions.

Great blessings are in store for us, as we wisely handle these precious books given us for the advancement of the cause of present truth. And as we labor in accordance with the Lord's plan, we shall find that many consecrated youth will be fitted to enter the regions beyond as practical missionaries; and, at the same time, the conferences in the home field will have means with which to contribute liberally to the support of the work that shall be undertaken in new territory.

Judge Not

JUDGE not: the workings of his brain
And of his heart thou canst not see.
What looks to thy dim eyes a stain,
In God's pure sight may only be
A scar brought from some well-won field
Where thou wouldst only faint and yield.

The look, the air, that frets thy sight,
May be a token that below
The soul has closed in deadly fight
With some infernal, fiery foe,
Whose glance could scorn thy smiling grace,
And cast thee, shuddering, on thy face.

The fall thou darest to despise —
Mayhap the angel's slackened hand
Has suffered it, that he may rise,
And take a firmer, surer stand;
Or, trusting less to earthly things,
May henceforth learn to use his wings.

Then judge none lost, but wait and see,
With hopeful pity, not disdain;
The depth of that abyss may be
The measure of the height of pain
And love and glory that shall raise
The soul to God in after-days.

God's Plan for His Work in the Earth

(Concluded)

A. T. ROBINSON

The Second Tithe

GOD'S work in the earth is a progressive work. Whenever it ceases to be progressive, it becomes a dead formality or develops into apostasy.

The third angel's message is God's program for the finishing of his work in this world. When this message closes, God's work in behalf of mankind will be ended, the number of subjects for his kingdom will be made up. This message is an epitome of the whole gospel plan, a setting in operation of all the agencies ordained of God for the accomplishment of his work. This message is a gathering together into one harmonious system of truth of every ray of gospel light that has ever shone upon the world, and focusing that light upon the last generation of mankind.

This message is therefore a development. While this whole movement was outlined on the prophetic page thousands of years ago, when God's appointed time came for it to be given to the world, it began to unfold; and link after link has been added, first appearing in dim outlines, and as further and clearer light has shone, these links in the chain of eternal truth have resolved themselves into the harmonious, beautiful, and clear system of truth which we denominate the third angel's message.

As the truth of this message has been, and still is, developing, so the divine plan for the accomplishment of the work has been, and still is, developing. By this plan the ever-increasing needs of the work have been met.

In the early days of the message there was almost no means of support for the ministry. Light began to shine upon the Lord's plan. The people began to walk in the faint glimmerings of light which at first shone upon them, by adopting the plan of "systematic benevolence." Each member pledged, at the beginning of each quarter, to pay a certain amount each week. This was the first step toward the tithing system. Of course we can now see that it was not a tithe, but it was the best the people knew, and it met the needs of the work in those early days. As the work developed, and its needs increased, further light was given, which led to the adoption of the tithing system as now followed.

The divine plan forbids the use of the first tithe for other purposes than the support of the gospel ministry. But did the Lord ordain no plan for the support of other lines of his work in the earth? Among other lines of work which have developed in recent years is our church-school work. The support of our church-school teachers, thus far, has been about as precarious as was the support of the ministers in the early days of the message.

The spirit of prophecy bears this testimony concerning the tithing system: "God's plan in the tithing system is beautiful in its simplicity and equality. All may take hold of it in faith and courage, for it is divine in its origin. . . . If one and all would accept it, each would be made a vigilant and faithful treasurer for God; and there would be no want of means with which to carry forward the last message of warning to the world. The treasury will be full if all will adopt this system, and the contributors will not be left the poorer."

A system is here referred to. A system suggests a plan with several parts; for instance, we speak of a railroad system when we wish to refer to the main line with its branches, rolling stock, etc. The support of one branch of the Lord's work, the ministry, has been solved by the adoption of one part of God's beautiful plan, the payment of the first tithe. The testimony quoted above says that "if one and all would accept it, there would be no want of means with which to carry forward the last message of warning to the world." The church-school is to act an important part in this work, and God's beautiful plan makes provision for its support. What is the Lord's plan for the support of different parts of his work, including Christian education? —"Institutions that are God's instruments to carry forward his work on the earth must be sustained. Churches must be erected, schools established. . . . These institutions are ordained of God, and should be sustained by tithes and liberal offerings."—"Testimonies for the Church," Vol. IV, page 464.

"To promote the assembling of the people for religious service, as well as to provide for the poor, a second tithe of all the increase was required."—"Patriarchs and Prophets," page 530. The work of the priests and the Levites was to "teach Jacob thy judgments, and Israel thy law." Deut. 33:10. Their plan of teaching must have been somewhat similar to that of our church-school system. "And they taught in Judah, having the book of the law of Jehovah with them, and they went about throughout all the cities of Judah, and taught among the people." 2 Chron. 17:7-9.

"The system enjoined upon the Hebrews has never been repealed nor relaxed by the One who originated it. Instead of being of no force now, it was to be more fully carried out and more extended. . . . The contributions required of the Hebrews for religious and charitable purposes amounted to fully one fourth of their income."—"Patriarchs and Prophets," pages 392, 393, 530.

"None need fear that their liberality would bring them to want. Obedience to God's commandments would surely result in prosperity."—"Patriarchs and Prophets," page 533.

Do not these quotations suggest to us that when God's beautiful plan is fully adopted, there will be an abundant supply of means, through the second tithe, for the support of our church-school teachers, the support of worthy poor, and the keeping up of church expenses?

Jacob's Ladder and Promise

WM. COVERT

THE manner of communication between our world and the place where God dwells was illustrated to Jacob when, as a wayfaring man, he slept on the bare ground with a stone under his head for a pillow. In the dream he saw a ladder with its base on the ground where he slept, while its upper step reached up to heaven. On the ladder were angels continually bearing messages between heaven and earth. A sad, lonely sinner was sleeping at the terrestrial end of this heavenly stairway, and the Lord at the top of the ladder was telling the angel messengers to guard the troubled sinner while he slumbered. It is judged from the reading of the story that Jacob had not tithed his property at his father's house before starting on his journey, and, too, that he retired to sleep without prayer. But the Lord wanted him to learn that he was observed in all his conduct by eyes that do not slumber.

When he awoke, the impression made

Waiting

J. S. JOHNSON

Give me patience, Lord, to wait
As I journey here below;
Thou art waiting at the gate
Where eternal blessings flow.

Cheer my pathway with thy love;
Draw me to thy precious feet;
Let thy mercy from above
Fill my days with fragrance sweet.

Let thy blessings ever beam
On this lowly heart of mine;
Lead me to the healing stream,
Perfect, plenteous, divine.

Be my refuge, Lord, I plead;
Give me perfect love for thee.
With thy love my spirit feed,
Make me what I ought to be.

Let me wait until thy call,
With thy music fill my heart;
Hold my hand, I can not fall;
O, how good and pure thou art!

Camp-Meetings and Our Publications

MRS. E. G. WHITE

In connection with our camp-meetings in past years, God's servants have improved many precious opportunities for instructing our people in practical methods of presenting the saving truths of the third angel's message to their friends and acquaintances. Many have been taught how to labor as self-supporting missionaries in their home communities. Many have returned home from these annual gatherings, to labor with greater zeal and intelligence than hitherto.

It would be pleasing to God if far more of this practical instruction were given the church-members who attend our camp-meetings, than has usually been given in years past. Our general workers and our brethren and sisters in every conference should remember that one of the objects of our annual gatherings is that all may gain a knowledge of practical methods of personal missionary work. This phase of our camp-meetings is outlined in "Testimonies for the Church," Volume VI, as follows: —

"God has committed to our hands a most sacred work, and we need to meet together to receive instruction, that we may be fitted to perform this work. We need to understand what part we shall individually be called upon to act in building up the cause of God in the earth, in vindicating God's holy law, and in lifting up the Saviour as 'the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.' John 1:29. We need to meet together and receive the divine touch that we may understand our work in the home. Parents need to understand how they may send forth from the sanctuary of the home their sons and daughters so trained and educated that they will be fitted to shine as lights in the world. We need to understand in regard to the division of labor, and how each part of the work is to be carried forward. Each one should understand the part he is to act, that there may be harmony of plan and of labor in the combined work of all."— Pages 32, 33.

"Properly conducted, the camp-meeting is a school where pastors, elders, and deacons can learn to do more perfect work for the Master. It should be a school where the members of the church, old and young, are given opportunity to learn the way of the Lord more perfectly, a place where believers can receive an education that will help them to help others. . . .

"The best help that ministers can give the members of our churches is not sermonizing, but planning work for them. Give each one something to do for others. Help all to see that as receivers of the grace of Christ they are under obligation to work for him. And let all be taught how to work. Especially should those who are newly come to the faith be educated to become laborers together with God. If set to work, the despondent will soon forget their despondency; the weak will become strong, the ignorant intelligent, and all will be prepared to present the truth as it is in Jesus. They will find an unfailing helper in him who has promised to save all that come unto him."— Pages 49, 50.

In some of our conferences, the leaders have hesitated to introduce these practical methods of instruction. Some are naturally inclined to sermonize rather than to teach. But on such occasions as our annual camp-meetings, we must never lose sight of the opportunities afforded for teaching the believers how to do practical missionary work in the place where they may live. In many instances it would be well to set apart certain men to carry the burden of different lines of educational work at these meetings. Let some help the people to learn how to give Bible readings and to conduct cottage meetings. Let others bear the burden of teaching the people how to practise the principles of health and temperance, and how to give treatments to the sick. Still others may labor in the interests of our periodical and book work. And let chosen workers take a special interest in teaching many how to handle "Christ's Object Lessons" and "Ministry of Healing."

Many have never learned how to sell the books dedicated to the advancement of our institutional work. But such should not excuse themselves. They should study diligently how they may do their part faithfully in connection with the circulation of these precious books. Our schools and sanitariums must be conducted on a high plane of efficiency, and a solemn responsibility rests upon us all to help place these institutions on vantage-ground by giving the relief books a wide circulation. God will be glorified by every one who takes an active interest in the work of placing these books in the hands of the multitudes who are in need of the saving truths of the gospel.

The opportunity we have of doing good by striving to carry out the Lord's plan for the relief of our schools and sanitariums, has been presented to me over and over again in connection with the Southern California Conference. The conditions there are unusually favorable for a long-continued effort to push the sale of "Christ's Object Lessons" and "Ministry of Healing." Our brethren and sisters in Southern California should never weary of this plan for raising money to meet the debts that have accumulated. The students of the Fernando School, and the nurses of the three sanitariums that have been established, can ill afford to lose the precious experiences in missionary work that come to those who handle the relief books. And the conference can ill afford to lose the results, spiritual as well as financial, that would accompany a continued effort of this sort.

But years have passed, and students who should have been gaining rich experiences in actual missionary work, have not been encouraged to launch out heartily in the sale of "Christ's Object Lessons." Church-members in many places have daily met with strangers,— tourists, men and women of means and influence,— and yet such opportunities as these for circulating "Christ's Object Lessons" and "Ministry of Healing" have been allowed to pass by unimproved. Many honest-hearted persons who could have been reached by diligent, wholehearted effort, have not been given the light of the third angel's message. And all the while, money that was needed to found new institutions and to support laborers in mission fields, has been gathered for the benefit of one of our schools.

Had the Lord's plan been followed, his name would have been glorified, and many spiritual victories would have been won. Those having means would have been more able and willing to come up to the help of the Lord when he was leading out in an extraordinary manner in the establishment of strong medical missionary centers in the vicinity of great thoroughfares of travel. Students would have received a training that would have greatly increased their efficiency as practical missionaries at home and abroad. Churches would have been revived with spiritual blessings. Many would have been won to the truth, and these would have brought into the cause their influence and their means.

In such places as Southern California, where thousands of tourists, many of them in search of health and strength, are constantly coming and going, special and continuous efforts should be put forth to scatter the bright rays of light and truth. The books, "Ministry of Healing" and "Christ's Object Lessons," are peculiarly adapted for use in tourist centers, and everything possible should be done to place copies of these works in the hands of those who have leisure and inclination to read. Especially do those who are seeking for restoration of health, need the book, "Ministry of Healing." Every favorable opportunity for reaching this class is to be improved.

My heart has rejoiced as I have learned of a revival of the relief work in Southern California during the past few months. At Loma Linda some of the nurses have been given a special training for the work of selling "Ministry of Healing;" and as they have visited homes in the neighboring cities and villages, the blessing of heaven has rested richly upon them, and favorable impressions have been made in behalf of our people and their work.

At the Fernando School, the teachers have recently led out in reviving an interest in the sale of "Christ's Object Lessons." Bands of students, after prayerful study of the book, have visited Los Angeles in company with their teachers, and have gained a sound, solid experience which they prize above silver and gold. This kind of work is, in fact, one of the means God has ordained for giving our youth a missionary training; and those who neglect to improve such opportunities lose out of their lives a chapter of experience of the highest value. By entering heartily into this work, students can learn how to approach with tact and discretion men and women in all walks of life, how to deal with them courteously, and how to lead them to give favorable consideration to the truths contained in the books that are sold.

Our greatest burden should be, not the raising of money, but the salvation of souls; and to this end we should do all in our power to teach students how to lead souls to a knowledge of the third angel's message. When we are successful in the work of soul saving, those who are added to the faith will, in turn, use their ability in giving the truth to others. When we labor diligently for the salvation of our fellow men, God will prosper our every effort.

To the presidents of conferences, and to others in positions of leading responsibility, I would say: Let us do all in our power to impress upon the teachers connected with our educational institutions the great value of the blessings in store for those who seek diligently to make the best possible use of the gift, "Christ's Object Lessons." Let us encourage the teachers to unite with many of their students in a prayerful study of this book, preparatory to going out with them into active field work. Let us help the educators to understand their responsibility in this matter. Let us do all we can to revive the "Christ's Object Lessons" work, and to inaugurate plans for an active campaign with "Ministry of Healing."

As teachers and students engage heartily in this line of work, they will gain an experience that will fit them to do valuable service in connection with our camp-meetings. Through the instruction that they can give to the believers in attendance, and through the sale of many books in the places where such meetings are held, those who have been in the school will be able to do their part in reaching the multitudes who need to be given the third angel's message. Let teachers and students nobly bear their share of the burden of showing our own people how to communicate the message to their friends and neighbors.

When we follow plans of the Lord's devising, we are "laborers together with God." Whatever our position,— whether presidents of conferences, ministers, teachers, students, or lay-members,— we are held accountable by the Lord for making the most of our opportunities to enlighten those in need of present truth. And one of the principal agencies he has ordained for our use is the printed page. In our schools and sanitariums, in our home churches, and particularly in our annual camp-meetings, we must learn to make a wise use of this precious agency. With patient diligence, chosen workers must instruct our people how to approach unbelievers in a kindly, winning way, and how to place in their hands literature in which the truth for this time is presented with clearness and power.

My brethren and sisters, let us not become weary in well-doing. During his earthly ministry, Christ traveled on foot from place to place. Wearied, as he ofttimes was his human nature taxed to the uttermost, yet he was ever ready to heal all who came unto him, and to teach them the way of life eternal. Though often physically exhausted, he left not his work. There was a world to be saved. He made every sacrifice possible, in order that light and truth might shine forth.

The Lord God of Israel desires us to link up in holy union with himself, and exercise the living faith that works by love and purifies the soul. He desires that we shall be a working corps of laborers endowed with adaptability for his service; and to such he promises power to win a glorious victory for him.

Idle in the Market-Place

E. A. SUTHERLAND

"THIS gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." These were Christ's words only a short time before his departure from the earth. Every kindred and every nation must hear the news of salvation through Christ, that it may be either a witness against them or a means of grace to them.

By whom is the gospel to be carried to the world? The record given in Matthew quotes Christ as saying, "Go ye." If, then, we are to go, what manner of men ought we to be? Paul, writing to Timothy, when he was answering the call as a missionary, said he must be a soldier,— not a pleasure-lover, not a seeker after an easy life,— but a soldier, trained to hard service and able to endure.

Christ described by a parable the attitude of many who were called to take up this soldier life. He says they all began to make excuse. One had land that demanded attention, another had bought oxen and had to work them. A third claimed that his wife hindered him from getting into the work. All were willing to do a little if they could do it in their own way, but none wanted to give the whole-hearted service demanded of a soldier.

Now the Christians who make these excuses are said by Christ to be standing idle in the market-place. Why do they remain idle? Is there a padlock on the gate? or is the way guarded by some fierce dog, so they can not get into the field?— No, these people who are standing idle are simply waiting for some organization to set them to work, and to assure them support. We have reached the eleventh hour in this message, and yet great crowds throng the market-place, simply standing idle, waiting to be told what to do.

Why does not the man with the yoke of oxen hitch those oxen to an empty wagon, and help with the fruit of the vineyard? Why should not the man who has land turn it over to the Lord's work, and make it a means of supporting some form of mission work, such as a school or a family of Bible workers? And the man whose wife objects to his leaving home to go into the work should make his home the center of a work, and his wife his helper in some form of gospel teaching.

There are some living on the earth to-day who are going to catch the spirit of reform, and the question of salary will not exert any great influence over them. they will realize that God is calling them to work, and when he calls, he will support.

There have been men and women of this stamp in the past. Such were the Moravian missionaries; such also were the early workers in the hard places in the South; and such were the pioneers to the Indians. Here and there such workers are to be found to-day. Miss Berry and her associates, Professor Ritchie and his co-laborers, and others who are working for Highland boys and girls, belong to this class, as do hundreds of others who might be mentioned by name. It is time to swell the list of salary-independent missionaries with hundreds and thousands of Seventh-day Adventists.

The school at Madison, Tenn., has been established to train men and women to bear responsibility. The spirit of prophecy says: "In the work being done at the training-school for home and foreign missionary teachers in Madison, Tenn., and in the small schools established by the teachers who have gone forth from Madison, we have an illustration of one way in which the message should be carried in many, many places."

The school is a training station for

Confession

GOD told some one to soothe an aching heart,
To wipe somebody's tear of bitter pain,
To heal a gaping wound with love's restoring art,
To sing to weary ones a sweet refrain;
But, lo, the heart has not been soothed,
The tears have not been wiped away,
The wrinkle of pain has not been smoothed,
And no one's sung that cheering lay.

God sent some one to give a beggar bread,
To put new garments on the destitute,
To watch with those who weep their precious dead,
To visit shut-ins in their solitude;
But O! the beggar goes an-hungered yet,
The destitute are still unclothed, unshod,
And mourners weep alone in sore regret,
And sick ones yearn to rest beneath the sod.

God bade some one; but lo, that one forgot,—
Forgot the aching heart, the wretched pain,
Forgot the gaping wound, remembered not
The singing of the sweet refrain.
God sent some one; but he forgot it, too,—
Forgot the beggar and the destitute,
Forgot the quaffers of life's rue,
Forgot the sorrow-stricken multitude.

God sent — was't you or I whom he did send
Into the feverish world of deepest care?
God told some one — was't you or I, my friend,
Whom God commanded life to share?
We need not ask: God sent both you and me
To do love's kindly deed each day,
But we forgot: too occupied were we
With self, to ease the want and misery.

Provision for Our Schools

An Appeal to Ministers, Physicians, and Teachers in Southern California

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE men who stand as leaders in any part of the solemn work of the last gospel message must cultivate and cherish broad views and ideas. It is the privilege of all who bear responsibilities in the work of the gospel to be apt learners in the school of Christ. The professed follower of Christ must not be led by the dictates of his own will; his mind must be trained to think Christ's thoughts, and enlightened to comprehend the will and way of God. Such a believer will be a follower of Christ's methods of work.

Our brethren should not forget that the wisdom of God has made provision for our schools in a way that will bring blessing to all who participate in the enterprise. The book, "Christ's Object Lessons," was donated to the educational work, that the students and other friends of the schools might handle these books, and by their sale raise much of the means needed to lift the school indebtedness. But this plan has not been presented to our schools as it should have been; the teachers and students have not been educated to take hold of this book and courageously push its sale for the benefit of the educational work.

Long ago the teachers and students in our schools should have learned to take advantage of the opportunity to raise means by the sale of "Christ's Object Lessons." In selling these books the students will serve the cause of God, and, while doing this, by the dissemination of precious light, they will learn invaluable lessons in Christian experience. All our schools should now come into line, and earnestly endeavor to carry out the plan presented to us for the education of the workers, for the relief of the schools, and for the winning of souls to the cause of Christ.

In the cities of Riverside, Redlands, and San Bernardino a mission field is open to us that we have as yet only touched with the tips of our fingers. A good work has been done there as far as our workers have had encouragement to do it; but there is need of means to carry the work forward successfully. It was God's purpose that by the sale of "Ministry of Healing" and "Christ's Object Lessons" much means should be raised for the work of our sanitariums and schools, and that our people would thereby be left more free to donate of their means for the opening of the work in new missionary fields. If our people will now engage in the sale of these books as they ought, we shall have much more means to carry the work in the way the Lord designed.

Wherever the work of selling "Christ's Object Lessons" has been taken hold of in earnest, the book has done good. And the lessons that have been learned by those who have engaged in this work, have well repaid their efforts. And now our people should all be encouraged to take part in this special missionary effort. Light has been given me that in every possible way instruction should be given to our people as to the best methods of presenting these books to the people.

I have been instructed that at our large gatherings, workers should be present who will teach our people how to sow the seeds of truth. This means more than instructing them how to sell the Signs of the Times and other periodicals. It includes thorough instruction in how to handle such books as "Christ's Object Lessons" and "Ministry of Healing." These are books which contain precious truths, and from which the reader can draw lessons of highest value.

Why was not some one appointed at your camp-meeting [in 1907] to present the interests of this line of work to our people? In your failure to do this, you lost a precious opportunity to place large blessings within the reach of the people, and you also lost an opportunity of raising means for the relief of our institutions. My brethren, let us encourage our people to take up this work without further delay.

There are some who have had experience in the sale of health foods who should now interest themselves in the sale of our precious books; for in them is food unto eternal life. Los Angeles has been presented to me as a very fruitful field for the sale of "Christ's Object Lessons" and "Ministry of Healing." The thousands of transient residents and visitors would be benefited by the lessons they contain, and those who bear responsibilities in our sanitariums should act wisely in this matter, encouraging all, nurses, helpers, and students, to gather by this means as much as possible of the money required to meet the expenses of the different institutions.

Why are our people so slow to understand what the Lord would have them do? Our leading workers should prepare beforehand to use their opportunities at our large and small gatherings to present these books to our people, and call for volunteers who will engage in their sale. When this work is entered into with the earnestness which our times demand, the indebtedness which now rests upon our schools will be greatly lessened. And then the people who are now being called upon to give largely of their means to support these institutions, will be free to turn a larger part of their offerings to missionary work in other needy places, where special efforts have not yet been made.

Great good will result from bringing these books to the attention of the leaders in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. We should invite these workers to our meetings, and give them an opportunity to become acquainted with our people. Place these precious books in their hands, and tell them the story of their gift to the cause, and its results. Explain how, by the sale of "Ministry of Healing," patients may be brought to the sanitarium for healing who could never get there unaided; and how through this means assistance will be rendered in the establishment of sanitariums in places where they are greatly needed. If our sanitariums are wisely managed by men and women who have the fear of God before them, they will be a means of bringing us in connection with workers in the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and these workers will not be slow to see the advantage of the medical branch of our work. As a result of their contact with our medical work, some of them will learn truths that they need to know for the perfection of Christian character.

One point that should never be forgotten by our workers is that the Lord Jesus Christ is our chief director. He has outlined a plan by which the schools may be relieved of their indebtedness; and he will not vindicate the course of those who lay this plan aside for lack of confidence in its success. When his people will come up unitedly to the help of his cause in the earth, no good thing that God has promised will be withheld from them.

In places like Los Angeles, where the population is constantly changing, wonderful opportunities are presented for the sale of our books. A great loss has been sustained because our people have not more fully embraced this opportunity. Why should not the teachers and students from the San Fernando School make Los Angeles a special field for the sale of "Object Lessons"? If with earnestness and faith they will work out the plan that has been given us for the use of this book, angels of God will attend their steps, and the blessing of heaven will be upon their efforts.

It would have been an excellent thing if the teachers of the San Fernando School had, during the vacation, availed themselves of this opportunity to push the work with "Christ's Object Lessons." They would have found a blessing in going out with the students and teaching them how to meet the people, and how to introduce the book. The story of the gift of the book and its object would lead some to have a special interest in the book and in the school for which it is sold.

Why have not the teachers in our schools done more of this work? If our people would only realize it, there is no more acceptable work to be done in the home field than to engage in the sale of "Object Lessons;" for while they are thus helping to carry out the Lord's plan for the relief of our schools, they are also bringing the precious truths of the Word of God to the attention of the people.

The indifference that has been manifested by some toward this enterprise is displeasing to God. He desires that it shall be recognized by all our people as his method of relieving our schools from debt. It is because this plan has been neglected that we now feel so keenly our lack of means for the advancing work. Had the schools availed themselves of the provision thus made for them, there would be more money in the school treasury, and more money in the hands of his people to relieve the necessities of other needy departments of the cause, and, best of all, teachers and students would have received the very lessons that they needed to learn in the Master's service.

I send you these lines because I see that there is need of a deeper intuition, a wider perception, on the part of our medical and educational workers, if they would get all the benefit that God intends shall come to them through the use of "Object Lessons" and "Ministry of Healing." I ask you, my brethren, to read these words to our people, that they may learn to show the spirit of wisdom, and of power, and of a sound mind.

Visiting

C. MC REYNOLDS

THE great apostle to the Gentiles laid down a principle concerning visiting that should be studied and applied by gospel workers to-day. The messenger of God, the man or woman sent of the Lord to labor in his great harvest-field, has a special purpose to accomplish, a definite work to do. It is pleasant to enter a neat, well-kept home, and enjoy the hospitality there afforded by the thrift of the diligent husband and the faithfulness of the frugal wife; but these hearts are longing to be fed also. In Rom. 1:11, Paul says, "For I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established."

What was the purpose of his visit?— To "impart some spiritual gift," of such a nature as to build up the spiritual life. It is well to be acquainted with the current news of the day, and to have a general knowledge of most lines of ordinary business, so that we can converse intelligently on such topics as occupy the minds of the people. In that way we can come close to them. A social spirit breaks down the barriers that Satan has reared in their minds. But all of this is only a means of approach. The purpose of your visit is to give spiritual instruction. If you fail to impart that, you may have lost the last opportunity you will ever have to bring to those souls what God has for them. He has chosen you for a channel through which the light of the gospel is to flow to them.

You may be sure Satan will work hard to prevent the conversation from being turned into the line of spiritual things. But if our hearts are all aglow with the light of heaven, possessing the glory of Immanuel, we shall see an opportunity to turn the conversation to the things in which we are most interested.

In this same letter Paul assures the church of the purpose of his visit, of what they may expect him to bring to them (Rom. 15:29): "And I am sure that, when I come unto you, I shall come in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ." "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." If our own lives are filled, and our hearts are overflowing, with the blessings of the gospel of Christ, we shall not be able to leave a home without having made an impression for good. The soon coming of Christ will become the theme of our conversation when it becomes the one purpose of our lives.

A lighted lamp shines; and the greater the darkness, the brighter the shining. In the REVIEW of April 30 the servant of God, speaking of the provision that Christ has made for his people says: "It is his purpose that every Christian shall be surrounded with a spiritual atmosphere of light and peace."

The most important part of the work of the evangelist, the preacher, or the Bible worker is visiting,— visiting to impart spiritual life. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." "There is no limit to the usefulness of one who, putting self aside, makes room for the working of the Holy Spirit upon the heart, and lives a life wholly consecrated to God."— REVIEW, April 30. What encouragement! Let us labor and pray to become good visitors.

"If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" If we carry to the people God's truth by the power of his Spirit, the heart-strings will be touched, the purse-strings will be loosened, voluntary gifts of means will flow in to support God's work, and we shall be able to say, with Paul, "Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savor of his knowledge by us in every place."

Lessons From the History of the Levites

DAVID OSTLUND

"But who may abide the day of his coming? . . . And he shall purify the sons of Levi." Mal. 3:2, 3.

IN the history of Israel we find a special record of the tribe of Levi, and of this it is written, as of the Old Testament writings as a whole, that "whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." Rom. 15:4.

When God called his people out of Egypt, we learn that he looked on his people as a son. This we read in Ex. 4:22, 23, where the Lord says to Moses: "And thou shalt say unto Pharaoh, Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my son, even my first-born: and I say unto thee, Let my son go, that he may serve me: and if thou refuse to let him go, behold, I will slay thy son, even thy first-born." We all know that the Lord slew all the first-born, whatsoever openeth the womb born out.

The Lord instituted a holy custom among the Israelites, in order to remind them that the whole people was, or, rather, ought to be, to him the "first-born son." "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Sanctify unto me all the first-born, whatsoever openeth the womb among the children of Israel, both of man and beast: it is mine." Ex. 13:1, 2. As this was done in every family in Israel, it should remind them all of the great privileges that were given them as God's chosen people, and of the most holy responsibility that they had to meet.

In Ex. 19:4-6 the Lord speaks of his care for the "first-born son," and of the work he had appointed for him: "Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagle's wings, and brought you unto myself. Now therefore if ye will obey my voice in-

The Teacher

A Moment in the Morning

A moment in the morning, ere the cares of day begin,
Ere the heart's wide door is open for the world to enter in;
Ah, then alone with Jesus in the silence of the morn,
In heavenly sweet communion let your duty day be born.
In the quietude that blesses, in the prelude of repose,
Let your soul be soothed and softened, as the dew revives the rose.

A moment in the morning, take your Bible in your hand,
And catch a glimpse of glory from the peaceful promised land;
It will linger still before you when you seek the busy mart,
And like flowers of hope will blossom into beauty in your heart;
The precious words like jewels will glisten all the day,
With a rare, effulgent beauty that will brighten all the way.
When comes a sore temptation, and your feet are near a snare,
You may count them like a rosary, and make each one a prayer.

A moment in the morning, a moment if no more,
Is better than an hour when the trying day is o'er;
'Tis the gentle dew of heaven, the manna for the day,
If you fail to gather early, alas, it fades away;
So in the blush of morning take the proffered hand of love,
And walk in heaven's pathway and the peacefulness thereof.

Teacher, Know Thyself

To know one's self is great knowledge. True self-knowledge will lead to a humility that will allow the Lord to train the mind, and mold and discipline the character. The grace of humility is greatly needed by the workers for Christ in this period of the world's history. No teacher can do acceptable work who does not bear in mind his own deficiencies and who does not drop out from his reckoning all plans that will weaken his spiritual life. When teachers are willing to drop out from their work everything that is unessential for the life eternal, then they can be said indeed to be working out their salvation with fear and trembling, and to be building wisely for eternity.

I am instructed to say that some of our teachers are far behind in an understanding of the kind of education needed for this period of earth's history. This is not a time for students to be gathering up a mass of knowledge that they can not take with them to the school above. Let us carefully weed out from our course of study all that can be spared, that we may have room in the minds of the students in which to plant the seeds of righteousness. This instruction will bear fruit unto eternal life.

Every teacher should be a daily learner in the school of Christ, lest he lose the sense of what constitutes true physical, mental, and moral excellence. No one should place himself as a teacher of others who is not constantly working out his own salvation by receiving and imparting an all-round education. The true teacher will educate himself in moral excellence, that by precept and example he may lead souls to understand the lessons of the Great Teacher. No one should be encouraged to do the work of teaching who will be satisfied with a low standard. No one is fitted to teach the grand mysteries of godliness till Christ is formed within, the hope of glory.

Every teacher needs to receive the truth in the love of its sacred principles; then he can not fail of exerting an influence that is purifying and uplifting. The teacher whose soul is stayed upon Christ will speak and act like a Christian. Such a one will not be satisfied until the truth cleanses his life from every unessential thing. He will not be satisfied unless his mind is day by day molded by the holy influences of the Spirit of God. Then Christ can speak to the heart, and his voice, saying, "This is the way; walk ye in it," will be heard and obeyed.

The teacher who has a right understanding of the work of true education, will not think it sufficient now and then to make casual reference to Christ. With his own heart warm with the love of God, he will constantly uplift the Man of Calvary. His own soul imbued with the Spirit of God, he will seek to fasten the attention of the students upon the pattern Christ Jesus, the chiefest among ten thousand, the One altogether lovely.

The Holy Spirit is greatly needed in our schools. This divine agency comes to the world as Christ's representative. It is not only the faithful and true witness of the Word of God, but it is the searcher of the thoughts and purposes of the heart. It is the source to which we must look for efficiency in the restoration of the moral image of God in man. The Holy Spirit was eagerly sought for in the schools of the prophets; its transforming influence was to bring even the thoughts into harmony with the will of God, and establish a living connection between earth and heaven.

Teachers, if you will open your hearts to the indwelling of the Spirit of God, if you will welcome the heavenly guest, God will make you laborers together with him. In co-operation with the Master Teacher, the spirit of selfishness will be expelled, and wonderful transformations will take place.

In the night season these words were spoken to me: "Charge the teachers in our schools to prepare the students for what is coming upon the world." The Lord has been waiting long for our teachers to walk in the light he has sent them. There is need of a humbling of self, that Christ may restore the moral image of God in man. The character of the education given must be greatly changed before it can give the right mold to our institutions. It is only when intellectual and moral powers are combined for the attainment of education, that the standard of the Word of God is reached.

These words were clearly and forcibly spoken: "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. Press together; press together, and love as brethren. Pray together." The Lord has paid the price of his own blood for the salvation of the world. He suffered every indignity that men could devise and Satan could invent, in order to carry out the plan of salvation. Let not the teacher seek to exalt self, but let him see the necessity of learning of Christ daily, and making him the pattern. For teachers and students our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ should be the only example.

Bear in mind that the Lord will accept as teachers only those who will be gospel teachers. A great responsibility rests upon those who attempt to teach the last gospel message. They are to be laborers together with God in the training of human minds. The teacher who fails to keep the Bible standard always before him, misses an opportunity of being a laborer together with God in giving to the mind the mold that is essential for a place in the heavenly courts.

How to Put Questions

1. A question may be put to the whole class. The advantage in this method is that the attention of all the pupils is necessary. Various plans may be followed as to the manner of receiving the answer: —

(a) The pupils may be permitted to think for a moment, and then some particular one be called upon for an answer.

(b) When the question is put, all who are able to answer may be permitted to raise the hand; then the teacher selects some one to recite.

(c) Some one may be called upon to answer in part, and suddenly another member of the class may be directed to finish the answer.

(d) The answer may be given in concert.

2. The question may be put to a single member of the class. This plan also has its advantages, and the attention of all may be secured almost as well as by putting the question to the whole class. Several variations of this plan may be followed: —

(a) When one pupil has partially answered a question, another may be called upon to finish it.

(b) A pupil may be called upon to answer not only the first question propounded, but also such others as may naturally follow.

(c) A pupil having answered his question, as an occasional exercise may be accorded the privilege of putting a question to some other member of the class.

Cautions.— The following cautions are important: —

1. Do not question your pupils in alphabetical order.

2. Do not question your pupils in the order in which they are seated.

3. Do not fall into the habit of permitting your pupils to answer in concert.

4. Do not help your pupils to answer by suggesting an important word here and there.

5. Do not depend on the text-book for question and answer.

6. Ask your questions promiscuously.

7. Frequently call upon the inattentive to answer.

8. If some pupils remain inattentive, keep on asking them questions, even if they recite the greater part of the lesson.

9. Put your questions in proper tones of voice.

10. Do not scold a pupil for failure to answer.

Medical Missionary Work Among the Colored People in the South

MRS. E. G. WHITE

When connected with other lines of gospel effort, medical missionary work is a most effective instrument by which the ground is prepared for the sowing of the seeds of truth, and the instrument also by which the harvest is reaped. Medical missionary work is the helping hand (1) of the gospel ministry. So far as possible, it would be well for evangelical workers to learn how to minister to the necessities of the body as well as the soul; for in doing this, they are following the example of Christ. Intemperance has well-nigh filled the world with disease, and the ministers of the gospel can not spend their time and strength in relieving all in need of help. The Lord has ordained that Christian physicians and nurses shall labor in connection with those who preach the Word. The medical missionary work is to be bound up with the gospel ministry.

In no place is there greater need of genuine gospel medical missionary work than among the colored people in the South. Had such a work been done for them immediately after the proclamation of freedom, their condition to-day would have been very different. Medical missionary work must be carried forward for the colored people. Sanitariums and treatment-rooms should be established in many places. These will open doors for the entrance of Bible truth.

This work will require devoted men and means, and much wise planning. Years ago we should have been training colored men and women to care for the sick. Plans should now be made to do a quick work. Let promising colored youth — young men and young women of good Christian character — be given a thorough training for this line of service. Let them be imbued with the thought that in all their work they are to proclaim the third angel's message. Strong, intelligent, consecrated colored nurses will find a wide field of usefulness opening before them.

The Lord Jesus is our example. He came to the world as the servant of mankind. He went from city to city, from village to village, teaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing the sick. Christ spent more time in healing than in teaching.

As our example, Christ linked closely together the work of healing and teaching, and in this our day they should not be separated. In our schools and sanitariums, nurses should be trained to go out as medical missionary evangelists. They should unite the teaching of the gospel of Christ with the work of healing.

The Lord has instructed us that with our training-schools there should be connected small sanitariums, that the students may have opportunity to gain a knowledge of medical missionary work. This line of work is to be brought into our schools as part of the regular instruction. Huntsville has been especially pointed out as a school in connection with which there should be facilities for thoroughly training consecrated colored youth who desire to become competent nurses and hygienic cooks. Let us rejoice that the managers of our Huntsville school are now planning to carry out this instruction without further delay. Let us help them make Huntsville a strong training center for medical missionary workers.

The colored medical missionary worker stands on vantage ground. In the province of God, a wide field of usefulness is open to him. He is permitted to enter where others are refused admission. In his consistent daily life of self-denial and self-sacrifice, he may exert a quiet yet far-reaching influence in behalf of the truth for this time. And he will not lack opportunity for testifying of the saving grace by which his life is being constantly transformed into the likeness of the great Medical Missionary.

To many of the colored people, the difficulties against which they have to contend seem almost insurmountable. But there are those who will not give up. All who are conscientiously and in the fear of God trying to acquire an education are to be helped and encouraged. There is talent among the colored race, and this talent will be developed where least expected. Every advantage possible is to be given to the colored youth who are capable of becoming useful workers in the Lord's vineyard. There are those who with proper training can be prepared to conduct sanitariums for colored people. In all cases they will need, at times, the assistance of white workers, but their talents will tell greatly for the success of the work.

O, that we might catch a glimpse of the work God desires us to accomplish for the colored people in the South! Could the veil be removed, could we but realize the distressing condition of thousands suffering from physical and spiritual maladies, how earnestly would we plan to train suitable colored workers to go forth to minister to the needs of their own race! How gladly would we come up to the help of the Lord, by giving freely of our means for the establishment and maintenance of training centers, where colored youth could be fitted for helpful service as true medical missionary evangelists! May God enable us to discern the opportunties now afforded us to lay broad plans for carrying forward this line of work in a manner befitting its importance.

Those who are able to relieve the sick of their temporal infirmities, will often find ready access to hearts. Grateful for the loving ministry performed in their behalf, many will gladly listen to words of spiritual comfort and consolation. Their hearts will be susceptible to the influence of the Holy Spirit, as the consecrated medical missionary opens the Scriptures of truth, and brings to their attention the special warning message for this time. Many will decide to yield their all to the Lord.

Such a work as this is sadly needed in the cities of the South. Thousands of colored people have drifted into these congested centers. In many, many families, want and misery and deep spiritual poverty prevail. For such classes as these, the medical missionary evangelist is peculiarly fitted. But work of this character can not be undertaken unless the workers are first trained, and then supplied with needed facilities. Means is needed for the prosecution of such work. And in the privilege of contributing to the support of his cause in the earth, God has graciously given us opportunity to participate in the rewards of those who engage in this line of service.

Soon the work of God in the earth will close triumphantly. Soon those who have remained steadfast unto the end will be granted an abundant entrance into the kingdom of our Lord. As the opportunities for service are now presented, shall we not quickly respond, giving freely of our means for the support of the closing work? It is now our privilege to return unto the Lord his own, in free-will gifts and offerings; soon we shall receive the reward of the faithful.

Of all the joys that await the redeemed in the earth made new, one of the highest will be the privilege of mingling our voices with the voices of those whom we have helped to save, in praise and adoration to the One who put into our hearts a desire to give. As God hath prospered us, let us now do all in our power to further the interests of his kingdom. Soon "the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

The Work Among the Colored People

In Florida

FLORIDA has four organized churches, and five companies of colored believers. One of these companies will be organized into a church soon. We expect that six schools will be conducted for the colored people in our conference during the coming year. There are three church buildings, and one residence property is owned and used by one church.

In one place there is a church composed of only one brother and six sisters; but they own a nice building and lot, very well furnished and free from debt, except a little that is still owing on the organ.

Another company, two years old, composed of two brethren and six sisters, has erected a very good church building this year.

A sister began a school in a tent. It had but one pupil. When I visited the school last winter, I found a good-sized building had been erected for this sister, and there was quite a full school. But on account of lack of means with which to build a chimney, the schoolroom was heated with a kettle of charcoal.

Last spring I visited another school that was held on the porch of a private house. We appreciate very much the help that has come from our brethren in the North, but there is such a great field to cover that we try to stretch out our means as far as possible.

At present we have but one colored preacher, a licentiate. Success attends his labors, as it does that of the teachers. And when this truth gets hold of the heart, no matter what the nationality or color, it purifies the life.

R. W. PARMELE.

In Louisiana

In this conference we have two churches of colored people, one ordained and one licensed minister, and one Bible worker. Our field consists of six hundred thousand colored people, only about thirty-five per cent of whom can read or write. These people have to be taught the truth just as if they were children. Hence our greatest need is carefully trained teachers, who can and will go right among them, and instruct them in the truth in detail.

I find that the colored people are easily interested in the truth, and while many of them lack the moral courage to make the sacrifice required to live it, there are many others who develop into good Sabbath-keepers, and are willing to bear reproach and persecution for the truth's sake.

While they are easily interested, they learn the truth slowly, and this fact makes labor among them more expensive than it would otherwise be. Yet when they are fully enlightened, they are just as faithful in paying their tithes and offerings as any of the white people.

Sensationalism can have no part in work among the lowly in the South. Long, patient effort is necessary to develop workers from the raw material. These people being nearly all tenants, or unskilled day laborers, make only a bare living, and are therefore utterly unable to support their own work. Our conference is not yet able to support even our work for the whites, therefore a constant stream of means must be kept coming this way to support the work for the colored people.

The call of the world-wide field stirs a heaven-attuned chord in the heart of every loyal Seventh-day Adventist; and while we rejoice to give for those far away, let us also remember these at our own doors in the African mission field of America.

E. L. MAXWELL.

The Duty to Help

Ten million colored people in the South are waiting for the third angel's message. They must have the closing word of warning to this generation. For a number of years we have had an educational institution for them at Huntsville, Ala. This institution should be filled with the colored youth, and every effort made to give them a quick preparation to go out into the fields. These students are in the rough; but the school, the farm work, the canvassing for our books and periodicals, nursing the sick, and many other lines of work will enable them to carry the message to hundreds of thousands who are now in darkness.

Besides the financial help for this school, there is help needed to carry on the tent efforts and general evangelistic work among the colored people. "With the long pull, and the strong pull, and the pull altogether," we may see a great work done among this people. To those who have correct views of the importance of giving to advance this message, the call to help this people who have been enslaved and have had little opportunity to know God, will be esteemed a glorious privilege.

A. O. BURRILL.

"The Riches of the Gentiles"

J. E. WHITE

IN the REVIEW AND HERALD for August 20, we were glad to read the article from Elder I. H. Evans answering the question, "Shall we solicit donations from those who do not believe this message?" The article quotes from the Testimonies as follows: —

"Several years ago it was presented to me that the Gentile world should be called upon to make donations to our work in the Southern field. Let discreet, God-fearing men go to worldly men that have means, and lay before them a plan of what they desire to do for the colored people. . . . Many of these men, if approached in the right way, will make gifts to the work."

This is a subject that has been on my mind and heart for years. We have been instructed to approach men of wealth, but how shall we reach them? Such men are usually practical, hard-headed business men, who know the value of the dollars they have accumulated. They seldom respond to appeals of enthusiasts as to some great work they "want to do." They are busy men, and have little time to devote to the study of new philanthropic enterprises. "What have you done?" and, "What tangible showing of work being done can you present?" These are about the first questions the solicitor will be called upon to answer.

Booker T. Washington points to the great showing of buildings and facilities at Tuskegee. He tells of the many hundreds who assemble in these buildings, and employ the facilities of that institution to train head and hands for the battle of life before them. He tells of the great uplift to his people which results from sending out among them each year this small army of trained men and women. His appeal is practical, and philanthropists are glad to endow his school with hundreds of thousands of dollars each year.

The Fisk University, the Walden, the Meharry, and other large schools for the colored people in Nashville and other places, all appeal to the material side of men of wealth. They have something definite and tangible to present, they can point to what they have done and are doing; and they have received millions for their work.

But what can we present to clear-headed, practical men of wealth? This has been the puzzle for years, and has heretofore barred any real, practical work along these lines. Yet all the time, for more than twelve years, there has been quietly growing and developing a practical line of work which now places us upon vantage-ground with any and all of the great colored educational institutions of the South. I refer to the development of the mission school work among the colored people in their homes, right where they live.

The beginning of this work was small, but each effort was successful. It meets the needs of this people where they are. Slowly and steadily through the years has the work broadened, until from the first small school in Vicksburg, Miss., it has increased to thirty, which is the number reported for the present year, distributed among the several States in the South, conducted under the auspices of the Southern Missionary Society.

But how can such a simple work be compared with, and placed by the side of, the great and successful colleges? — Not by outward show, but by real, practical achievement. It will be well to remember that more than one thousand students will this year be enrolled on the registers of the thirty mission schools mentioned. Yet the expense of this wide-reaching work is only a fraction of that of one of the large colleges with a much smaller attendance.

Lamps Without Oil

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE necessities of the times demand that most earnest efforts be put forth for the advancement of the third angel's message. Evil angels are endeavoring by every ingenious method to counterwork the work of God. Heavenly agencies are laboring to make effective the message of light and truth. Yet at such a time a lack of consecration and faith is manifest among God's people that is grieving the Holy Spirit. Many of our workers seem to be sleeping.

To many the Bible is as a lamp without oil, because the knowledge of the Word is turned into channels of speculation that bring misunderstanding and confusion to minds. This has been done by some to such a degree as to give occasion for those who are watching us to make of none effect the message of truth. I am instructed to ask our leading men and ministers, Are you laborers together with God? or do you place your own interpretation upon the Word? It is the duty of every worker to ask himself the question, Whom am I serving? Beware, brethren, lest self be interwoven with your exposition of the Word. Beware lest you lead any soul to a misunderstanding of the Word. The Lord now calls for the truth to be presented in its simplicity, that all, even the most ignorant, may understand its requirements.

The psalmist writes: "Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord. Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart. They also do no iniquity: they walk in his ways. Thou hast commanded us to keep thy precepts diligently. O that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes! Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all thy commandments. I will praise thee with uprightness of heart, when I shall have learned thy righteous judgments. I will keep thy statutes: O forsake me not utterly.

"Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word. With my whole heart have I sought thee: O let me not wander from thy commandments. Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee. Blessed art thou, O Lord: teach me thy statutes. With my lips have I declared all the judgments of thy mouth. I have rejoiced in the way of thy testimonies, as much as in all riches. I will meditate in thy precepts, and have respect unto thy ways. I will delight myself in thy statutes: I will not forget thy word."

Let the young men and women study these words, and encourage a spirit that will desire to heed the way of the Lord.

David continues: "Deal bountifully with thy servant, that I may live, and keep thy word. Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law. . . . Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes; and I will keep it unto the end. Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law; yea, I will observe it with my whole heart. Make me to go in the path of thy commandments; for therein do I delight. Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness. Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken thou me in thy way. Stablish thy word unto thy servant, who is devoted to thy fear. Turn away my reproach which I fear: for thy judgments are good. Behold, I have longed after thy precepts: quicken me in thy righteousness."

Such prayers as this the Lord's servants should be continually offering to him. This prayer reveals a consecration to God of heart and mind; it is the consecration that God is asking us to make.

The Word of God brings plainly to view two classes of people, the wise and the foolish. Let those who profess to know the truth for these last days take heed that they be not found among the foolish, whose lamps are going out because they have failed to supply themselves with the holy oil, the spirit and grace of Christ. Through the agency of the two anointed ones who stand by the Lord of the whole earth, provision has been made that every soul may be abundantly supplied.

Unless there is a connection with heavenly agencies, the strong, pure influence which should be exerted by every worker in the field will be lacking. They will be no more prepared to do the work which the Lord expects them to do than were the foolish virgins prepared to answer the call, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." The Holy Spirit will not be represented in their labors. They have the form of the truth; they have the lamp, but they have no oil in their vessels. The power of a godly example is lacking. There is no living experience to give power to the truth presented.

If the influence of heavenly agencies is not combined with human effort, the word of truth presented will be ineffective. Great zeal may be manifested, but if the daily example is not a living, powerful influence for good, the zeal will be worthless. Unless the Spirit of God accompanies the worker to correct every unsanctified way, his work will be superficial and weak.

Spiritual things, the apostle Paul declares, are spiritually discerned. "Therefore seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not; but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the eyes of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. But we have this treasure in earthern vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us."

I am instructed to say to many professed believers, Unless you look upon your religious experience in an altogether different light than you have, you are going to meet with keen disappointment. [The righteousness of Christ is revealed from faith to faith; that is, from your present faith to an increased understanding of that faith which works by love and purifies the soul.] (1) Those who endure trial for the truth's sake, who make sacrifices to help those in need, do so because of the presence of the love of God in the soul. When men and women give themselves unreservedly to the exercise of unselfish works, it is because the grace of Christ is in the heart, molding the life to his example. But if the heart is destitute of the Spirit of God, if it does not possess the rich grace of God, there is no oil in the vessel with the lamp, there is no treasure in the earthen vessel.

Those who are genuinely converted will not act like the worldling, but their experience will answer to the words of the apostle Paul when he declared: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith." When Christ imparts to any the blessings of his grace, he lays the recipients under special obligation to place their capabilities and powers at the service of God. They are called so to relate themselves to the work of the Master, that they will reveal in all their actions that they are converted. In their reverence and homage for the character of Christ, they will reproduce that character in their own, thus testifying to the attributes of the Father.

There is need that we study carefully

(1) Commentary, Vol. 6 p. 1067

the evidence we give in our own lives that we are Christians. On the part of some, evidence has been given of an unchristian spirit. They have revealed that they need a reconversion if they would not be disappointed in the great day of final award.

There are troublous times before us, when everything that can be shaken will be shaken. For this conflict with the powers of evil we are bidden to arm ourselves with all the armor of God, "above all," the apostle exhorts, "taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God."

We have reason for great thankfulness that we have the perfect example of the life of Christ. As he did, so day by day we are to obey the word of the Lord. Let us cultivate a grateful spirit. Let us make sure work for eternity. The humility and benevolence of Christ's life revealed in ours, is the testimony we give to the world that we are his disciples. Through a life of obedience and self-sacrifice we are to reveal the love of God for fallen man.

Those who would have the life that measures with the life of God, must be workers in this life. They must watch unto prayer. They must not fail nor be discouraged. By faith they must work out their own salvation. By faith and complete submission to the will of God, they must become partakers of God's love and doers of his will.

Our Beginners

KATHERINE B. HALE

It is September again. Among the pupils who present themselves at the school door this September morning, we find many little strangers — beginners we call them. Here they are, ready to begin — what?

"Good morning, little children dear!
How pleasant 'tis to see you here!
With faces bright and hands so white,
A very welcome, happy sight."

As we welcome these little ones into our schoolroom, a responsibility becomes ours, dear teachers,— a responsibility than which there is none greater brought within school doors. Whence come these little folks? Why are they here? Let us hope that they come from homes where parents have studied and practised faithfully the instruction given by the Teacher who loved little children, and thought it worth while to give to them his tenderest love and consideration. Let us hope that in the period of home education preceding the introduction into school life, there has been laid that foundation which Christian parents are privileged to lay. And now, as we accept a share in the responsibility of these parents, we must not forget that our work is foundation work too. It is possible to broaden and strengthen all previous work, and thus make lasting every impression already received for good. A wonderful privilege, then, is this work.

Already have these little people been introduced to at least one of our Father's great lesson-books — his creation. Doubtless, too, they have learned that there is another book,— one containing printed symbols,— his revelation. It is a letter from our Father to all his people,— a book sent to the fathers, the mothers, and to all the children in the great, wide world. These two great books are God's lesson-books for children. With some of the sweet and fascinating stories we will hope they have already become familiar; and now they have reached the time when they are eager to read for themselves more of the Father's lessons. Not only are they anxious to read from the pages of nature's great outdoor book, but they are anxious to read from the printed pages of such books as may be presented to children of proper school age.

How proud is the child of his first new book, his very own! There are pictures on nearly every page, and how eager he is to know "what the stories say." On a certain page he sees a little boy all ready for bed. The boy stands by a candle, and the candle is burning. I wonder what the little boy is saying? On another page are pretty pansies. What does the book say about the pansies? Here is a little girl watering her flowers, and the sentences below tell what the little girl thinks about as she works among her plants. Here is a picture of beautiful angels. Did you ever hear of that man to whom the angels appeared one lonely night? This is such an interesting story!

Now (we explain) we are going to be able to read all these stories. Are you not glad of that? Before this school year is past, you will probably be able to read every one. I wonder if you can find the page upon which are pictured flying blackbirds, and at the bottom of which is a row of five happy children? They are singing, and the story that the song tells is a story that I shall write upon the board for you to-day.

Let us now put away our books, and sing together this song, which I think will help us always to remember our very first Bible memory verse (Ps. 106:1):—

"Praise him! praise him! little children, praise him!
God is good! God is good!
Praise him! praise him! little children, praise him!
God is good! God is good!"

A Test of Loyalty

W. G. KNEELAND

1. WHAT portion of time has God reserved to himself?
   Ans. "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God."
2. How is the Sabbath day to be observed?
   Ans. "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy."
3. What portion of our earnings has God reserved for himself?
   Ans. "And all of the tithe of the Lord, whether of the seed of the land, or the fruit of the tree, it is the Lord's." Lev. 27:30.
4. How is the tithe to be regarded?
   Ans. "It is holy unto the Lord." "And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth is holy unto the Lord." Lev. 27:30-32.

NOTE.— One seventh of our time and one tenth of our income are holy unto the Lord. Sabbath-breaking and a refusal to pay an honest tithe are sins of the same character. Faithfulness in Sabbath-keeping honors Christ as Creator and Redeemer. Faithfulness in tithe-paying honors Christ as King of kings and Lord of lords. Gen. 14:18-20.

5. If we keep back a part of our earnings for food and clothes, and only pay tithe on the balance that is left, is what we give an honest tithe?
   Ans. Jacob asked the Lord for "bread to eat and raiment to put on," and then promised, "Of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee." Gen. 28:20-22.
6. Is it necessary to pay tithe on what we raise in our fields and gardens as well as on the money we earn?
   Ans. "The children of Israel brought in abundance the first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey, and of the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundantly." 2 Chron. 31:5. "Not only does the Lord claim the tithe as his own, but he tells us how it should be reserved for him. He says, 'Honor the Lord with thy substance and with the first-fruits of all thine increase.' This does not teach that we are to spend our means on ourselves, and bring to the Lord the remnant, even though it should be otherwise an honest tithe. Let God's portion be first set apart."— Special Testimony.
7. What was the sin of Achan?
   Ans. He took a part of the holy or devoted things, reserved for God's treasury, for himself. Joshua 7:1; 13:20, 21.
8. Why were Annanias and Sapphira punished?
   Ans. For pretending to give to God what they were in reality keeping for themselves. Acts 5:1-10.

NOTE.— From this we can see that it is very dangerous for us to take either the holy Sabbath or the holy tithe to use for ourselves. We should not claim to be tithe-payers if we are not honest with God. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse," and then the promise, I "will pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it," will be fulfilled to you. Mal. 3:3-10.

"In using my reserve fund to gratify your own desire, you have robbed souls of the light which I made provision they should receive. You have had opportunity to show loyalty to me, but you have not done so; for you have stolen my reserve fund."— Special Testimony.

The Point of View

A pessimist, we're told,
Is one who sees the cloud that lowers,
But not its fringe of gold;
Blind to the silver lining,
We hear his sad repining;
E'en through the sun's clear shining
He sees the distant showers.

An optomist, they say,
Finds rainbow tints in any sky,
Let storms beat as they may;
What if the dark cloud lowers!
He knows the cooling showers
Will bring the fruits and flowers
In God's good by and by.

Life may be gold or gray;
Aflame with light or overcast
May be our pilgrim way,
As we may choose to view it;
Trouble — well, why pursue it?
A cloud — why not look through it?
The storm will soon be past.

Build on a Sure Foundation

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The story of a crucified and risen Saviour is the great central theme of the Word of God. In the Psalms, in the prophecies, in the gospels, and in the epistles, God has by revelation made prominent the vital truths concerning the agreement between the Father and the Son in providing for the salvation of a lost race.

Christ was crucified to save the world. For his enemies, for a race in rebellion against God, our Saviour suffered the most excruciating agonies that human flesh could endure. He has made ample provision for sinners, that they need not perish. In the light of his death-agony on the cross, we may know that whosoever will truly repent and receive him as a personal Saviour will receive everlasting life.

Our highest privilege is to honor Jesus Christ. We need now, in this year 1908, a continual spirit of submission to the will and requirements of God. His Word is plain. If we will seek for a personal experience in submitting to its requirements, we may appropriate the promise, "The meek will he guide in judgment: and the meek will he teach his way." As we study the Word prayerfully, with an obedient heart, the Holy Spirit will be with us to make upon our minds the correct application.

This is a privilege that the world can not receive or understand; for they have not the "Spirit of truth, whom," Christ declared, "the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him." But to his disciples he says, "Ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." You have the mind of Christ.

In the parable of the marriage of the king's son, Jesus relates how, after earnest efforts, "the wedding was furnished with guests." He continues: "When the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding-garment: and he said unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding-garment? And he was speechless. Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. For many are called, but few are chosen."

It has been repeatedly revealed to me that many professing Christians will, in the time of the final test, be greatly disappointed. Many, many will fail to provide themselves with that righteousness of Christ represented in the parable by the wedding-garment. They have trusted in their own righteousness, and have not manifested the humility of Jesus Christ. They may be seated at the supper table with others, but Christ will recognize them, and will say to them, "How camest thou in hither not having on a wedding-garment?"

Unless those who profess to be Christians become sanctified through the truth, and learn to reveal the likeness of Christ in words, in deeds, in spirituality, in their relation to their fellow men, the great day of test and trial will find them unprepared to enter through the golden gates into the city of God. And unless they can now be made to feel their great need, they will not have a spirit to seek for the essential righteousness of Christ.

When called before King Belshazzar to explain the mysterious writing on the wall, Daniel reminded the king of matters with which he was familiar, but which had not taught him the lesson of humility that might have saved him. "O thou king," said the prophet, "the most high God gave Nebuchadnezzar thy father a kingdom, and majesty, and glory, and honor: and for the majesty that he gave him, all people, nations, and languages, trembled and feared before him: whom he would he slew; and whom he would he kept alive; and whom he would he set up; and whom he would he put down. But when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardened in pride, he was deposed from his kingly throne, and they took his glory from him: and he was driven from the sons of men; and his heart was made like the beasts, and his dwelling was with the wild asses: they fed him with grass like oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven; till he knew that the most high God ruled in the kingdom of men, and that he appointeth over it whomsoever he will."

Then the enormity of Belshazzar's guilt was thus emphasized: "And thou his son, O Belshazzar, hast not humbled thine heart, though thou knowest all this; but hast lifted up thyself against the Lord of heaven; and they have brought the vessels of his house before thee, and thou, and thy lords, thy wives, and thy concubines, have drunk wine in them; and thou hast praised the gods of silver, and gold, of brass, iron, wood, and stone, which see not, nor hear, nor know: and the God in whose hand thy breath is and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified: then was the part of the hand sent from him; and this writing was written.

"And this is the writing that was written, MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN. This is the interpretation of the thing: MENE; God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it. TEKEL; Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting. PERES; Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians."

The Lord does not suffer wicked practises to go on without sending reproof and warning. There are men in high places who know of the reproofs, of warnings, of judgment sent, who know the example of God's dealings with others who have been disobedient, yet who have not sought to correct their ways before God. They have endeavored rather to make of none effect the messages that God has sent. They have continued to exalt themselves, and to carry out their own ways in defiance of the words of God. They have not been ignorant of the right way, but they have allowed their eyes to be blinded. In pronouncing judgment upon these, God will say, as he said to the wicked king, "Thou . . . hast not humbled thine heart, though thou knewest all this."

Many have continued in a wicked course of action, until the Lord Jesus can not accept their services unless there is a genuine conversion. His people to-day have no excuse for turning away from the counsels of his Spirit. In his Word, he has given us examples that should be warnings to us, yet although we have known all this, many of God's people have not taken heed to the warnings of God.

"Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ. But with many of them God was not well pleased: for they were overthrown in the wilderness.

"Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted. Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them; as it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play. Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand. Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents. Neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer.

"Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

Among the many discordant elements, some have been unable to discern the voice of God in the messages of warning and reproof that have been sent for the guidance of the church.

Men who have refused to walk in the plain counsel of the Lord, are not the ones who should be entrusted with the care of his sheep and lambs. Those who, while professing to believe the truth, resist the Holy Spirit, making light of the message from heaven, will surely be punished for their transgressions. They will not in the future have greater evidence of the truth of these messages than has been given in the past. The Lord forbids that they should be entrusted with responsibilities that they might have borne, had they heeded the messages that the Lord in mercy sent them.

The angel of the Lord instructed me, "Go, stand before my people, and speak to them the words that I will give you for church-members and for unbelievers. I will give you tongue and utterance. You have been called from the needy field in Australia to bear a living testimony that, if heeded, will be the salvation of many souls. New agents must occupy the field you have left. I have a work for you among a people, many of whom have followed their own evil course, and refuse to come to the light."

Christ was the greatest missionary this world has ever known. The Word has been made flesh, and dwelt among us as a minister of healing to both soul and body. His work is to be carried forward in the earth to-day. The only work worthy of our attention in this world is the advancement of the kingdom of God. To those who will unite as agents of Christ in the carrying forward of his work in the earth, the promise is sure that they shall receive souls for their hire.

The salvation of fallen and sinful humanity is a grand co-operative work, in which every being from the loftiest angel to the lowliest saint has his appointed place. The innumerable company of angels are united with us, in co-operation with God and Jesus Christ, in the work of saving souls. Think of this, you who feel no burden to be united with Christ, that his church may be revealed as a body of laborers together with God.

Let all draw together in unity, their dependence placed upon Christ Jesus. "Ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." The truth is a sanctifying, unifying power. We are baptized into one body, and united through the sanctification of the Holy Spirit. In carrying forward the work of the Lord, there will not be one indifferent member. If one member suffers, all the others will suffer with him. If one member receives a rich blessing, all the members will rejoice with him.

The Lord of heaven and earth is the strength of his people. He is the light and life of every truly converted soul. His Spirit, working with its quickening power, will be recognized by its inspiration, and its abiding influence. Christ our Lord identifies himself with the members of his church. It is this union of the human and the divine that convicts the world. Through the blessed union of those who are sanctified body, soul, and spirit, the truth is magnified. All are to blend in keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace.

To the principalities and powers in heavenly places is made known by the church the manifold wisdom of God. Were all who profess to be church-members truly converted, what a power for truth and holiness would be manifested. They would be laborers together with God in leading souls to Christ. There can be no repining when Christ is formed within, the hope of glory.

The message I have to bear is that a much higher standard must be reached by God's people. I entreat all to heed this warning. I dare not cease to "cry aloud," and "spare not," and show God's people "their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins." It is time that we all understood our true position, and that we give, in righteous characters, the evidence that we possess the truth.

"The Whole Tithe"

YEARS ago we were told by the spirit of prophecy that if all would faithfully pay a full tithe into the Lord's treasury, there would be no lack of means with which to carry on the work. The writer is fully persuaded that if "the whole tithe" were brought into the "storehouse," there would be no need of funds from other sources to support the work in all parts of the world. He is also convinced from the following incident that only a few, comparatively speaking, pay a full tithe: —

Jan. 1, 1905, a worker in this cause, who has a family of four to support, began to keep an accurate account of all tithes and offerings paid by him. This man had no support other than that paid him by the conference. His wife kept a cow, some chickens, and a small garden on a city lot. The amount of tithe and donations paid by this worker up to Aug. 1, 1908, is $439.50,— an average of $10.22 a month for the whole time. The tithe alone amounts to $317.35, which equals $88.56 a year, or $7.38 a month.

Nor is this in any way an extraordinary showing. This man, before he entered the ministry, was a mechanic, earning much more than he has since. He simply did what every Seventh-day Adventist ought to do — honestly paid a tithe of his income. Not counting the two small children, the average annual tithe for each church-member in this family in $44.28, which, if equaled — as it should be — by all the people of this denomination, would every year amount to over three millions of dollars, — enough to support three times as many foreign missionaries as we now have, at the same time caring better for our home work.

Suppose we each try the plan of keeping an accurate account of our income, and find how much tithe we should pay during the next year. Such a plan would result in doubling, or even trebling, the average annual tithe as now paid, and would clear us of the charge of robbing God by not bringing in the whole tithe.

Self-Supporting Missionary Work

E. A. SUTHERLAND

"THERE is a much greater work devolving upon the individual members of the church than they realize. They are not awake to the claims of God. . . . Many of the members of our large churches are doing comparatively nothing."

Do the lay members of this denomination comprehend the full meaning of these sentences? What is the cause of the people of this denomination falling into the condition where these words must be said of them? Is it not a failure to understand the meaning of the words of the great apostle Paul to the individual Christian church-member: "Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier"? Have not many of our people lost sight of the fact that they are to prepare themselves personally to be soldiers of Jesus Christ, to go warring for him? They have fallen into the same error that many have in the past; that is, that there are two classes in the church,— one the soldier, or missionary class, and the other the lay-member, or stay-at-home class. To the latter belong the great majority of Christians. They are willing to aid with gifts and contributions the soldier class who are supposed to go out and fight the battles of the Lord. But it is fatal to spirituality to attempt to fight the battles of the Lord through a substitute. Every Christian must learn to be a good soldier of Jesus Christ, to endure hardness, not to entangle himself with the affairs of this life, and to go to war for the Master.

Let us consider the part that lay members had in the beginning of this great message. In 1844 during the midnight cry we read that the work did not stand in the wisdom and learning of men, but in the power of God. "It was not the most talented, but the most humble and devoted who were the first to hear and obey the call. Farmers left their crops standing in the field, mechanics laid down their tools, and with tears and rejoicing went out to give the warning. Those who had formerly led in the cause were among the last to join in this movement." We know that the third angel's message will close with the same manifestation of power, and also by a move-

Life's Changes and Trials

MILO D. WARFLE

Sometimes we do not understand
The many changes from God's hand;
But we may all be confident
That they for our best good are sent.

Then let us suffer and endure:
Our God intends to make us pure.
Trials will burn away the dross
Ere we sustain eternal loss.

There still are lessons we should learn,
And these should be our chief concern.
Upon our learning life depends: (1)
Christ, to our aid, the Spirit sends.

Then look away from earthly woes,
And see the grace our God bestows
To cleanse our hearts, and help us rise
To fill our place in Paradise.

To one and all our God is good:
O, let us serve him as we should,
And then we'll nevermore complain
When we but suffer for our gain.

How to Gain Spiritual Strength

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Many are spiritually weak because they look at themselves instead of at Christ. Looking at themselves, and seeing only discouragement and unworthiness, they forget that God is waiting to make them agencies for the blessing of the world, and that angels are waiting to be colaborers with them. (1)

Christ is the great storehouse from which on every occasion we may draw strength and happiness. Why, then, do we withdraw our eyes from his sufficiency to look on and bemoan our weakness? Why do we forget that he is ready to help us in every time of need? (1) We dishonor him by talking of our inefficiency. Instead of looking at ourselves, let us constantly behold Jesus, daily becoming more and more like him, more and more able to talk of him, better prepared to avail ourselves of his kindness and helpfulness, and to receive the blessings offered us. As we thus live in communion with him, we grow strong in his strength, a help and a blessing to those around us.

(2) Christ has made every provision for us to be strong. He has given us his Holy Spirit, whose office is to bring to our remembrance all the promises that Christ has made, that we may have peace and a sweet sense of forgiveness. If we will but keep our eyes fixed on the Saviour, and trust in his power, we shall be filled with a sense of security; for the righteousness of Christ will become our righteousness.

(1) If we would only do as the Lord desires us to, our hearts would become as sacred harps, every chord of which would sound forth praise and gratitude to the Redeemer sent by God to take away the sin of the world. With joy we would be able to say, "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom also we have access by faith into the grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given unto us."

When temptations assail you, as they surely will, when care and perplexity surround you, when, distressed and discouraged, you are almost ready to yield to despair, look, O look, to where with the eye of faith you last saw the light; and the darkness that encompasseth you will be dispelled by the bright shining of his glory. When sin struggles for the mastery in your soul, and burdens the conscience, when unbelief clouds the mind, go to the Saviour. His grace is sufficient to subdue sin. He will pardon us, making us joyful in God.

Looking at self, we see only weakness, and we forget God's purpose for us. We forget that he placed on us so high a value that he gave Christ to die for us. O, after all that has been done for us, how can we disappoint Christ by failing to live the life that he has made it possible for us to live? Let us no longer talk of our inefficiency and lack of power. Forgetting the things that are behind, let us press forward in the heavenward way. Let us neglect no opportunity that, if improved, will make us more useful in God's service. Then like threads of gold, holiness will run through our lives, and the angels, beholding our consecration, will repeat the promise, "I will make a man more precious than fine gold; even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir." All heaven rejoices when weak, faulty human beings give themselves to Jesus, to live his life.

What Is It to Be a Seventh-day Adventist?

GEORGE I. BUTLER

We are living in an age when things religious are getting sadly mixed, and spiritual issues are very poorly defined. Within a lifetime, great changes have occurred. Persons of a mature age can recall the time when to be accepted as a member of the Presbyterian Church it would be necessary personally to subscribe to all the doctrines of the creed. One must believe the Calvanistic theology as a whole. To be a Baptist, close-communion was insisted upon, and immersion was especially important. So of other churches.

But we have reached an age when doctrines are practically relegated to the rear. If a man is prominent, and is received in the highly respected social circle, what he believes or does not believe is not considered of great importance. The custom is common for members of one church, if moving to another place, to become members of a different denomination with a very different creed, and not much is said about particular beliefs if the candidate is a respectable citizen. Free and open communion is now generally adhered to. Little is made of doctrine. The denominational standard is lowered, and if one's life is above reproach, and if he is liberal in helping with his means, he is regarded as a very desirable candidate.

What does this change signify? — It means that doctrine is considered of small importance. Is it really immaterial what we believe? Is it a matter of no importance whether we believe what the Bible teaches or not, if we are only good citizens, and lead respectable lives in the community? The practise which leads to such conclusions virtually means that the Bible is no standard of authority after all.

The true believer takes the Bible as his book of authority, to be his guide in all matters pertaining to his eternal welfare. While the tendency of fellowshiping anything if only one is a kind, civil man, largely regardless of his belief, is proving to be very popular, a denomination is making strong headway, and rapidly advancing in strength and numbers, which makes doctrine very important. Seventh-day Adventists, whose advancement has been an increase of one hundred per cent every ten years, since the beginning of their work, doubling up each decade for some fifty or sixty years, attaches great importance to what one believes. Why? — Because what the Bible teaches is important.

The Bible is God's message to mankind. It teaches what God regards as essential to salvation. Seventh-day Adventists recognize this fact. While they wish to be kind, generous, and helpful to all, whether believers or unbelievers, they can not associate in fellowship with those who transgress or disbelieve the great truths which God has taught in his Word. They expect to be judged by that Word in the last day.

Actions speak louder than words. To associate in Christian fellowship and communion with those who disbelieve and disobey the important truths of the Word of God would justly be considered as saying by our actions that we consider those truths as matters of no importance. More than this, it would say that the very truths which have made us a peculiar people were immaterial. Why, then, should we go forth and proclaim them at so much cost of labor and sacrifice? When we get ready to imitate the course taken by other denominations, our message is gone, and our reason for existing as a denomination is virtually set aside as of no importance.

Could we accept those who had no faith in the nearness of Christ's second advent? — Not unless we said in substance that there was no good reason why we preached that doctrine, and that it was not essential. Could we accept as members those who habitually break the

Our Conflict

C. M. SNOW

I can not lift the drowsy veil
Of time that is to be,
Nor tell what wonders lie unsung
In God's eternity.
Not mine the tongue to charm the ear —
Nor yet the ear that hears
The cadence of the universe,
The music of the spheres.

In God's good time the veil will lift
That blinds the eye of sense,
And sight shall crown our stumbling faith
In God's omnipotence.
Between the muster and the crown
There lie the weary years,
Filled up with conflict and with pain,
With struggles and with tears.

With Hope's far eye made clear by Faith,
We view Time's vista long,
And step by step God's mountain scale
To meet his angel throng.
'Tis not in strength of human limb,
Nor wisdom of our own,
That we must conquer on the hills
Where hosts are overthrown.

The battle is not ours, but God's;
The strength to win is his;
Yea, his the helmet, shield, and sword,
Yet ours the victory is.
But not in pampered indolence
May we go on, if then
We would in heaven the ranson share
Of God's accepted men.

Six thousand years in battle-line,
God's hosts have struggled on
Through desert drear or fen or flood
Up toward Time's reddening dawn;
And now the Day-Star lights the east,
The final charge has come;
Through every vale the bugle calls,
On every hill the drum.

We can not camp between the lines;
We can not neutral be;
For this side or for that we choose
For all eternity.
For such a time God give us strength,
Give sight, give wisdom, grace,
That in this mighty conflict we
May fill no coward's place.

God give us men who know his power,
And to his Word conform;
God give us men who fear not man,
Nor quail before the storm.
Ah, 'tis a time to try men's souls —
The climax of a world —
Where truth and falsehood stand arrayed,
With battle-flags unfurled.

God's banner over us is love,
And his omniscient form
Will shield the cohorts of his grace
From this onrushing storm.
Stand fearless, then, whate'er the place
Our God may give you here;
'Tis only they who quit his ranks
That need to harbor fear.

In God's strength find the power you need;
For counsel seek his face;
Where'er your Leader stations you,
That is your safest place.
Thus armed and clothed with power divine,
In wisdom thus arrayed,
Go forth, go forward, valiant go,
Nor ever be dismayed.

Teacher, Know Thyself

MRS. E. G. WHITE

To know one's self is great knowledge. True self-knowledge will lead to a humility that will allow the Lord to train the mind, and mold and discipline the character. The grace of humility is greatly needed by the workers for Christ in this period of the world's history. No teacher can do acceptable work who does not bear in mind his own deficiencies, and does not drop out from his reckoning all plans that will weaken his spiritual life. When teachers are willing to drop out from their work everything that is unessential for the life eternal, then they can be said indeed to be working out their salvation with fear and trembling, and to be building wisely for eternity.

I am instructed to say that some of our teachers are far behind in an understanding of the kind of education needed for this period of earth's history. This is not a time for students to be gathering up a mass of knowledge that they can not take with them to the school above. Let us carefully weed out from our course of study all that can be spared, that we may have room in the minds of the students in which to plant the seeds of righteousness. This instruction will bear fruit unto eternal life.

Every teacher should be a daily learner in the school of Christ, lest he lose the sense of what constitutes true physical, mental, and moral excellence. No one should place himself as a teacher of others who is not constantly working out his own salvation by receiving and imparting an all-round education. The true teacher will educate himself in moral excellence, that by precept and example he may lead souls to understand the lessons of the Great Teacher. No one should be encouraged to do the work of teaching who will be satisfied with a low standard. No one is fitted to teach the grand mysteries of godliness till Christ is formed within, the hope of glory.

Every teacher needs to receive the truth in the love of its sacred principles; then he can not fail of exerting an influence that is purifying and uplifting. The teacher whose soul the truth cleanses, refines, and ennobles, whose heart is stayed upon Christ, will speak and act like a Christian. Such an one will not be satisfied until the truth cleanses his life from every unessential thing. He will not be satisfied unless his mind is day by day being molded by the holy influences of the Spirit of God. Then Christ can speak to the heart, and his voice, saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it," will be heard and obeyed.

The teacher who has a right understanding of the work of true education, will not think it sufficient now and then to make casual reference to Christ. With his own heart warm with the love of God, he will constantly uplift the man of Calvary. His own soul imbued with the Spirit of God, he will seek to fasten the attention of the students upon the pattern Christ Jesus, the chiefest among ten thousand, the One altogether lovely.

The Holy Spirit is greatly needed in our schools. This divine agency comes to the world as Christ's representative. He is not only the faithful and true witness to the Word of God, but he is the searcher of the thoughts and purposes of the heart. He is the source to which we must look for efficiency in the restoration of the moral image of God in man. The Holy Spirit was eagerly sought for in the schools of the prophets; his transforming influence was to bring even the thoughts into harmony with the will of God, and establish a living connection between earth and heaven.

Teachers, if you will open your hearts to the indwelling of the Spirit of God, if you will welcome the heavenly Guest, God will make you laborers together with him. In co-operation with the Master Teacher, the spirit of selfishness will be expelled, and wonderful transformations will take place.

Character and Work of Nehemiah

[Those who have been interested in the study of the book of Nehemiah in the Sabbath-school during the past quarter will find the last chapter of the book, "Ezra and Nehemiah, Their Lives and Times," by George Rawlinson, intensely interesting and profitable reading. A few excerpts from the chapter referred to follow.— Ed.]

The character of Nehemiah has provoked the admiration of all those who have made it their study. "Every act of his during his government bespeaks one who had no selfishness in his nature. All he did was noble, generous, high-minded, courageous, and to the highest degree upright. To stern integrity he united great humility and kindness, and a princely hospitality. . . . But in nothing was he more remarkable than for his piety, and the singleness of eye with which he walked before God. He seems to have undertaken everything in dependence upon God, with prayer for his blessing and guidance, and to have sought his reward only from God."— Harvey.

In our opinion the most striking feature in Nehemiah's character is this last-mentioned one, his piety, and especially his prayerfulness, at all times and under all circumstances.

A second main feature in Nehemiah's character is his patriotism. . . . Because his people were downtrodden; because work in this Southern field. I am willing to throw myself fully into this work, in order that the field that the Lord has spoken of so many times may be quickly worked. If the rank and file of the people would enter self-supporting missionary work, it would only be a little while before we would all be in the kingdom.

For the benefit of inquiring friends I wish to state that I have never enjoyed better health than since coming South. The climate so far has been delightful. I am impressed that Satan is anxious to make you believe that you can not stand the climate in this Southern field. If God is calling you here, you will find that your health will be better, if you obey his call, than if you stay in a country with the most desirable climatic conditions. JOSEPHINE GOTZIAN.

Field Notes

ELDER A. D. EWERT reports the baptism of two persons at Winnebago City, Minn., a short time ago.

AFTER holding some meetings with the New Hope (Tex.) church, Elder N. V. Willess baptized thirteen persons there.

AT Newport News, Va., six persons are rejoicing in a knowledge of the true Sabbath as a result of the tent-meetings at that place.

THREE persons at West Newton, Maine, have recently begun the observance of the Sabbath; others are much interested.

As a result of the tent-meetings held at Stockton, Cal., seven persons have been baptized, and two others are keeping the Sabbath.

A MOTHER and daughter from the country near Henning, Minn., were recently baptized. Others at that place expect to be baptized soon.

BROTHER C. SVENSSON, reporting from Denver, Colo., says that three were baptized there on August 15, and that others have begun to keep the Sabbath.

SUNDAY, September 13, eleven persons were baptized at Hagerstown, Md. Eight or nine more are keeping the Sabbath, and it is expected that some of these will be baptized in the near future.

THE following report comes from New Castle, Colo.: "Our hearts were made glad on Sunday, August 8, when we buried twelve with their Lord in baptism. The same day we organized a church of seventeen members. There are a few more who will be baptized soon."

As a result of the tent effort at Lascruces, N. M., four persons decided to obey the truth. These, with the two families of Seventh-day Adventists living there, were organized into a Sabbath-school of ten members.

BROTHER J. W. BEAM, reporting the work at Lynch, Neb., says: "Two gave their hearts to the Lord, and one sister, who has a family, has stepped out into the light of present truth. We have hopes that two others will begin the observance of the Sabbath soon."

SIX were added to the church at Spencer, Va., by baptism recently, and one backslider returned to the truth.

IT is stated in the West Michigan Herald that six persons were recently baptized and added to the church at Kalamazoo. The attendance at the tent-meetings there is increasing.

A REPORT from Brownville, Maine, states that there have been two baptisms since camp-meeting, one there and one at Milo. At least two others have begun to keep the Sabbath, and the interest is good.

IN the Greater New York Conference during the last year work has been carried forward among ten different nationalities, and good results have followed the work among nearly all these peoples.

As a result of the labors of Brother W. T. Ramsey, at Roseland Schoolhouse, Okla., a family of five have covenanted to keep all the commandments of God; some of these will receive baptism soon.

Personal Liberty

IT is insisted by many that prohibitory liquor laws interfere with personal liberty; but the contention is false. No man has a right to do anything that needlessly places the life or property of others in jeopardy. No man has a right to domicile even his own family in an unsafe building. If he lives in a city, he has no right to maintain defective flues or use defective stovepipes. The law takes cognizance of these things, for the reason that by occupying unsafe buildings and using defective flues one jeopardizes life and property. For a like reason, civil law may properly prohibit the sale, and even the use, of intoxicating beverages, since every intoxicated man is a menace to the peace and safety of his neighbors, and a source of danger to their property.

It is not true that whisky does not hurt those who let it alone. It lays a heavy tribute of loss of property, of happiness, and even of life, upon thousands of innocent victims every year.

Have those who are taxed to support courts, jails, hospitals, and asylums, no rights the saloon-keeper and the tippler are bound to respect? Has the sober workman no right of protection against the unsteady hand or the dizzy head of his intoxicated fellow workman? Have the men, women, and children who throng our streets or traverse our country roads no right of protection against the numerous accidents due not to their own personal indulgence but to the indulgence of others in intoxicating liquors? Have the wives and children of drinking men no right of protection against the drink demon?

Truly it is not only the right, but the bounden duty, of the state to extend protection to all these. As well claim personal liberty in justification of the reckless automobilist, the sneak thief, the thug, the murderer, as for the drunkard and the saloon-keeper.

C. P. BOLLMAN.

When to Flee

"AND when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another." You are not to expose yourself when it is not necessary for the glory of God, and have your life cut short when there is no occasion. When you are endangered because of the spirit of persecution, seek another refuge. This is what Jesus did, and there are other places besides the one in which you are, where God will manifest his power through your efforts for the salvation of souls.— Mrs. E. G. White, in Review and Herald, May 3, 1892.

Circulate the Literature

THE following from a letter recently received from a brother in the South indicates how fast the principles of religious liberty are fading from the minds of the people in this country, and how far they have drifted from the fundamental principles of our national government: —

"The religious Sunday is so enthroned in the hearts of the people here, that they look upon one as worse than an infidel when he opposes Sunday legislation. I worked for several hours one time in —— among the lawyers with a petition, and could not get even one to sign it. Nearly every one was ready to defend the Sunday and Sunday legislation. I was much surprised that this class of professional men seemed so utterly unable to see the evil of such legislation. All I could do was to leave them some literature; some refused to read, while others were indifferent.

"In some places here the circulation of petitions among all classes only arouses the most bitter prejudice, and hedges up the work for the public. We must make free use of our literature, and give it a wide circulation. We shall do all in every way we know how to stay this terrible tide of religious intolerance that is sweeping over the land."

God has made us the custodians and standard-bearers of these great principles of religious liberty for this time, as he has of his law and his Sabbath, which are so intimately bound up now, as in former ages, with the question of religious freedom, or the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience. We must not, therefore, be recreant to duty in failing to sound the great message of warning which God has commissioned us to give at this time, though it arouses enmity and opposition. But wisdom and good judgment are needed in order to know how best to present the truth. The free circulation of literature, as recommended in the foregoing letter, is of primary importance, and is a wise course to pursue. Writing of the campaign now on in California, Brother A. J. S. Bourdeau says: "We have found that it is better first to distribute the leaflets, and then call for signatures to

The Crown of Life

NOT all may share the battle's shock,
And blood-stained colors onward bear;
Not all may deadly peril mock,
Not all the victor's chaplet wear.

What man shall say that aught of these
No part hath wrought in victory won?
Could warrior's hand the laurel seize,
Were sober, homely tasks undone?

No service for the King that's wrought
Escapes his ever-watchful care:
Not all may see the battle fought,
But all a crown of life may wear.

Accepted in the Beloved

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus: Grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ."

"Grace be to you." We owe everything to God's free grace. Grace in the covenant ordained our adoption. Grace in the Saviour effected our redemption, our regeneration, and our exaltation to heirship with Christ. Not because we first loved him, did God love us; but "while we were yet sinners," Christ died for us, making full and abundant provision for our redemption. Although by our disobedience we have merited God's displeasure and condemnation, yet he has not forsaken us, leaving us to grapple with the power of the enemy. Heavenly angels fight our battles for us, and, cooperating with them, we may be victorious over the powers of evil.

We should never have learned the meaning of this word "grace," had we not fallen. God loves the sinless angels, who do his service, and are obedient to all his commands; but he does not give them grace. These heavenly beings know naught of grace; they have never needed it, for they have never sinned. Grace is an attribute of God shown to undeserving human beings. We ourselves did not seek after it, but it was sent out in search of us.

God rejoices to bestow this grace upon all who hunger for it, not because we are worthy, but because we are so utterly unworthy. Our need is the qualification which gives us the assurance that we shall receive this gift.

"And peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ." Every man's experience testifies to the truth of the words of Scripture: "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it can not rest. . . . There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." Sin has destroyed our peace. While self is unsubdued, we can find no rest. The masterful passions of the heart no human power can control. We are as helpless here as were the disciples to control the raging storm. But he who spoke peace to the billows of Galilee has spoken the word of peace for every soul. However fierce the tempest, those who turn to Jesus with the cry, "Lord, save us," will find deliverance. His grace, which reconciles the soul to God, quiets the strife of human passion, and in his love the heart is at rest. "He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still. Then are they glad because they be quiet; so he bringeth them unto their desired haven." "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." "The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever."

Whoever consents to renounce sin, and open his heart to the love of Christ, becomes a partaker of this heavenly peace. There is no other ground of peace than this. The grace of Christ, received into the heart, subdues enmity; it allays strife, and fills the soul with love. He who is at peace with God and his fellow men can not be made miserable. Envy will not be in his heart; evil surmisings will find no room there; hatred can not exist. The heart that is in harmony with God is a partaker of the peace of heaven, and will diffuse its blessed influence on all around. The spirit of peace will rest like dew upon hearts weary and troubled with worldly strife.

Christ's followers are sent to the world with the message of peace. Whoever, by the quiet, unconscious influence of a holy life, shall reveal the love of Christ; whoever, by word or deed, shall lead another to renounce sin, and yield his heart to God, is a peacemaker.

And "blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." The spirit of peace is evidence of their connection with heaven. The sweet savor of Christ surrounds them. The fragrance of the life, the loveliness of the character, reveal to the world the fact that they are children of God. Men take knowledge of them, that they have been with Jesus. "Every one that loveth is born of God." "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his;" but "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," the apostle continues, "who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." What is there left for us to ask, that is not included in this merciful, abundant provision? Through the merits of Christ we are blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ. It is our privilege to draw nigh to God, to breathe in the atmosphere of his presence. If we keep ourselves in close union with the common, cheap, sensual things of this earth, Satan will interpose his shadow, so that we shall fail to discern the blessedness of the promises and assurances of God, and so shall fail to be strengthened to attain to a high spiritual standard. Nothing short of abiding in the presence of Christ will bring peace, freedom, courage, and power.

"According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love." There can be no misunderstanding here, unless there is wilful blindness. We are to be holy and without blame before him in love. The condition on which we receive an increase of grace is that we improve upon the light we already have. If we would find, we must go on continually seeking; if we would receive, we must ask; if we would have the door opened, we must knock.

"God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." In this text the two agencies in the salvation of man are revealed,— the divine influence, the strong, living faith of those who follow Christ. It is through the sanctification of the Spirit and the belief of the truth, that we become laborers together with God. God waits for the cooperation of his church. He does not design to add a new element of efficiency to his Word; he has done his great work in giving his inspiration to the Word. The blood of Jesus, the Holy Spirit, the divine Word, are ours. The object of all this provision of heaven is before us; and it depends upon us to lay hold of the promises God has given, and become laborers together with him.

Sanctification is the work, not of a day or of a year, but of a lifetime. The struggle for conquest over self, for holiness and heaven, is a life-long struggle. Without continual effort and constant activity, there can be no advancement in the divine life, no attainment of the victor's crown.

Paul's sanctification was the result of a constant conflict with self. He said, "I die daily." His will and his desires every day conflicted with duty and the will of God. Instead of following inclination, he did God's will, however crucifying to his own nature.

God leads his people on step by step. The Christian life is a battle and a march. In this warfare there is no release; the effort must be continuous and persevering. It is by unceasing endeavor that we maintain the victory over the temptations of Satan. Christian integrity must be sought with resistless energy, and maintained with a resolute fixedness of purpose.

There is a science of Christianity to be mastered,— a science as much deeper, broader, higher, than any human science as the heavens are higher than the earth. The mind is to be disciplined, educated, trained; for we are to do service for God in ways that are not in harmony with inborn inclination. There are hereditary and cultivated tendencies to evil that must be overcome. Our hearts must be educated to become steadfast in God. We are to form habits of thought that will enable us to resist temptation. By a life of holy endeavor and firm adherence to the right, the children of God are to seal their destiny.

God has "predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved."

The word that was spoken to Jesus at the Jordan, embraces humanity. God spoke to Jesus as our representative. With all our sins and weaknesses, we are not cast aside as worthless. "He hath made us accepted in the Beloved." The glory that rested upon Christ is a pledge of the love of God for us. It tells us of the power of prayer,— how the human voice may reach the ear of God, and our petitions find acceptance in the courts of heaven. By sin, earth was cut off from heaven, and alienated from its communion; but Jesus has connected it again with the sphere of glory. His love has encircled man, and reached the highest heaven. The light which fell from the open portals upon the head of our Saviour, will fall upon us as we pray for help to resist temptation. The voice which spoke to Jesus says to every believing soul, "This is my beloved child, in whom I am well pleased."

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Our Redeemer has opened the way, so that the most sinful, the most needy, the most oppressed and despised, may find access to the Father. All may have a home in the mansions which Jesus has gone to prepare. "These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth, and shutteth, and no man openeth; . . . Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it."

The Spirit of the World Versus the Spirit of God

S. H. CARNAHAN

It is interesting to notice some of the words which show the spirit of the world in its working in contrast with those that indicate Christ's methods of doing.

In the schools of to-day it is cram; in business it is push; in political and social circles it is compete for advantage or supremacy. The multitudes on the streets crowd. It is all hurry, and the idea is enforce, compel, in short, rule or ruin.

Some say it is only competition. Satan strove to compete with the God of heaven — even to setting up a kingdom of his own. And this as well as the ways of the world is on the rush to destruction.

The Lord's ways are the opposite of this. He took six days to make the world and the things that are therein, and rested the seventh day. His work will stand through all eternity. His methods are not to drive and force; but to attract, draw, lead. Christ says, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him." It is the goodness of God that leadeth to repentance.

Greed, love of money, of fame, or of fortune now drive men mad, and incite them to do desperate things.

The apostle Paul by inspiration of God says, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." It is the spirit of the world that is making these times perilous, and it is only the Spirit of God that can enable us to pass through such times unscathed.

Individual Obligation and Personal Effort

G. A. IRWIN

(Concluded)

I copied from the Home Missionary some years ago a statement made by Arthur T. Pierson, one of the world's greatest missionaries, which I wish to insert here, since it contains a truth not infrequently overlooked in the consideration of our subject: —

"You can not absolve yourself by any personal liberality out of your purse for the personal duty of laboring for the lost. We can never bring this world to the knowledge of Christ by an ordained set of ministers of the gospel. We must do what the primitive Christians did when they 'went everywhere preaching the Word,' except the apostles, who remained at Jerusalem. They went everywhere talking about Jesus; they simply told what they knew. Theirs was no eloquent discourse, after the dialectical fashion of the schools. No, dear friends; the men that were in the apostolic succession remained at Jerusalem, while the common laity went out; and the apostles are mentioned as being excepted, in order that we may understand that the preaching that was done was not done by the apostles, because they were not scattered abroad, but it was done by the common disciples; and the reason why in the first century heathen fanes began to be forsaken of their worshipers, and heathen priests began to tremble lest their idols should have no more devotees, was because this magnificent work was taken up by the great bulk of the disciples; they were scattered abroad with the message of salvation flying from lip to ear, descending from ear to heart, coming up from heart to lip, and again going forth from the lip to the ears of others."

This statement is in perfect accord with the spirit of prophecy, as will be seen from the quotations that follow: —

"But many of our people are surfeited with the privileges they have enjoyed, and have lost the sense of the value of human souls.

"Christ has given to every man his work. He expects every man to do his work with fidelity. High and low, rich and poor, all have a work to do for the Master. Every one is called to action. But if you do not obey the voice of the Lord, if you do not do his work in firm reliance upon Christ as your sufficiency, if you do not follow his example, 'unfaithful, slothful servant,' will be registered against your name. Unless the light that has been given you is communicated to others, unless you let your light shine, it will go out in darkness, and your soul will be left in awful peril. God speaks to every one who knows the truth, 'Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.' Communicate the knowledge of the truth to others. This is God's plan to enlighten the world."

To communicate the knowledge of the truth we have received to others, means more than simply to send out tracts that contain the truth. That is a part of our work, but the giving of our means and the sending out of tracts and papers will not absolve us from our obligations in a personal way. It is the personal contact of soul with soul, heart with heart, that makes impressions upon the hearts and minds of the people. "Communicate the knowledge of the truth to others." I maintain that if we would communicate the light that God is giving us, it would not be long before the loud cry would sweep over the earth like a tidal wave, and the work of God would be finished. If only one church of any considerable size in each conference or mission field would adopt "God's plan to enlighten the world," namely to "communicate the knowledge of the truth to others," and keep perseveringly at it, it would not be long before the influence of such churches would extend and widen until it embraced the whole world. This is what the Lord would be pleased to see, and he is waiting expectantly for such a consecration on the part of individuals and churches that he may pour his Spirit upon them for service.

"Brethren and sisters, many of you excuse yourselves from labor on the plea of inability to work for others. But did God make you so incapable? Was not this inability produced by your own inactivity and perpetuated by your own deliberate choice? Did not God give you at least one talent to improve, not for your own convenience and gratification, but for him? Have you realized your obligation, as his hired servant, to bring a revenue to him by the wise and skilful use of this entrusted capital? Have you not neglected opportunities to improve your powers to this end? It is too true that few have felt any real sense of their responsibility to God. Love, judgment, memory, foresight, tact, energy, and every other faculty have been devoted to self. You have displayed greater wisdom in the service of evil than in the cause of God. You have perverted, disabled, nay, even besotted your powers, by your intense activity in worldly pursuits to the neglect of God's work."— "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. V, page 457.

"Remember that your responsibility is measured not by your present resources and capacities, but by the powers originally bestowed and the possibilities for improvement. The question which each one should ask himself is not whether he

Take my life: I give it, Lord,
Into thy dear hand,
And with humble, childlike trust,
Yield to thy command.
Not a mite would I withhold
Master, dear, from thee.
Since each blessing I enjoy
Thou hast given me.

Everything I hold is thine;
Nothing is my own;
And my life thou gavest me

Take it, Lord, for I am weak,
To use it in thy name;
But thy hand will never err,
Guide through joy or pain.

Keep my life, O Lord divine!
Every passing day;
Cleanse my heart from secret sin,
Purge its guilt away.
Hide me in thy secret place,
'Neath thy wings of love;
Let thy peace and joy be mine,
Rich gifts from above.

Take my life: I would be used
In service for my King;
Let my heart its joy proclaim,
My voice thy praises sing.
Keep my life, O guard it, Lord,
Water it each day;
Fill it with thy Spirit's power,
Be my guide and stay.

The Inestimable Gift

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: according as he hath chosen us in him, . . . that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, . . . the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace."

Such are the words in which "Paul the aged," "the prisoner of Jesus Christ," writing from his prison-house at Rome, endeavored to set before his brethren that which he found language inadequate to express in its fulness,—"the unsearchable riches of Christ,"—the treasure of grace freely offered to the fallen sons of men. The plan of redemption was laid by a sacrifice, a gift. Says the apostle: "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." Christ "gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity." And as the crowning blessing of redemption, "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

"In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will: that we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ. In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory."

Christ, by his sacrifice paying the penalty of sin, would not only redeem man, but recover the dominion which man had forfeited. All that was lost by the first Adam will be restored by the second. The prophet says, "O Tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, to thee shall it come, even the first
(1) dominion." And Paul points forward to the "redemption of the purchased possession." God created the earth to be the abode of holy, happy beings. That purpose will be fulfilled when, renewed by the power of God, and freed from sin and sorrow, it shall become the eternal home of the redeemed.

A fear of making the future inheritance seem too material has led many to spiritualize away the very truths which
(2) lead us to look upon it as our home. Christ assured his disciples that he went to prepare mansions for them in the Father's house. Those who accept the teachings of God's Word will not be wholly ignorant concerning the heavenly abode. And yet "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." Human language is inadequate to describe the reward of the righteous. It will be known only to those who behold it. No finite mind can comprehend the glory of the paradise of God.

In the Bible the inheritance of the saved is called a country. There the heavenly Shepherd leads his flock to fountains of living waters. The tree of life yields its fruit every month, and the leaves of the tree are for the service of the nations. There are ever-flowing
(2) streams, clear as crystal, and beside them waving trees cast their shadows upon the paths prepared for the ransomed of the Lord. There the widespreading plains swell into hills of beauty, and the mountains of God rear their lofty summits. On those peaceful plains, beside those living streams, God's people, so long pilgrims and wanderers, shall find a home.

"Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." What love, what matchless love, that, sinners and aliens as we are, we may be brought back to God, and adopted into his family! We may address him by the endearing name, "Our Father," which is a sign of our affection for him, and a pledge of his tender regard and relationship to us. And the Son of God, beholding the heirs of grace, "is not ashamed (3) to call them brethren." They have even a more sacred relationship to God than have the angels who have never fallen.

All the paternal love which has come down from generation to generation through the channel of human hearts, all the springs of tenderness which have opened in the souls of men, are but as a tiny rill to the boundless ocean, when compared with the infinite, exhaustless love of God. Tongue can not utter it; pen can not portray it. You may meditate upon it every day of your life; you may search the Scriptures diligently in order to understand it; you may summon every power and capability that God has given you, in the endeavor to comprehend the love and compassion of the Heavenly Father; and yet there is an infinity beyond. You may study that love for ages; yet you can never fully comprehend the length and the breadth, the depth and the height, of the love of God in giving his Son to die for the world. Eternity itself can never fully reveal it. Yet as we study the Bible, and meditate upon the life of Christ and the plan of redemption, these great themes will open to our understanding more and more. And it will be ours to realize the blessing which Paul desired for the Ephesian church, when he prayed "that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe."

Christ's redeemed ones are his jewels, his precious and peculiar treasure. "They shall be as the stones of a crown,"—"the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints." In them "he shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied." Christ looks upon his people in their purity and perfection as the (4) reward of all his sufferings, his humilia- (5)
tion, and his love, and the supplement of his glory,—Christ the great center, from whom radiates all glory.

An Added Opportunity

JASPER WAYNE

Just sixty years ago, November 18, while bowed before God, asking his blessing upon our pioneer paper, the Review, Sister White saw in vision this paper as a stream of light encircling the world. As a foundation to all our literature, the beginning of this paper was bathed in tears, and blessed through prayer, and it has borne a message of truth through all these intervening years. Sixty years ago it was sent out free to all who would receive it, and in response the money that flowed in was more than sufficient to defray all expenses.

The Joy of Service

L. D. SANTEE

THERE are hearts in their hunger pathetic,
That moan in their hunger and pain;
There are souls in their sadness ascetic,
O'erburdened in heart and in brain;
From lands where the tropic heat rages,
To mountains of ice with their glare,
'Mong the high and the low of all ages,
There are lives that go out in despair.

What joy if some heart that is bleeding
Is tenderly bound by your hand!
What joy of all joys to be leading
Some soul to the beautiful land!
To comfort the lives that are grieving,
To pray for the tempted that fall,
To teach them the joy in believing
In Jesus, the Saviour of all!

My heart with its pity is swelling
For those who "pass under the rod;"
I grow tenderly sober in telling
Of the love and the pity of God:
To the lives that are loveless and dreary,
That lonely and desolate stand,
He offers them, wayworn and weary,
A home in the beautiful land.

The burdens of sorrow are lightened
As we tell of the mansions above;
And faces all tear-washed are brightened
As they hear the sweet story of love;
In darkness they blindly were groping,
But tears from their eyes cease to fall;
They look to the skies and are hoping
In Jesus, the Saviour of all.

My experience an angel might covet,
Such joy does His service afford;
No sadness, for joy is above it,—
'Tis the wonderful "joy of my Lord."
I look with a faith sweet and tender
Across the broad reach of the years,
I shall see the blest city of splendor
When Jesus the Saviour appears.

The Danger of Fostering Pride and Vanity

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THERE are many professed Christians who know not Christ by an experimental knowledge. They are not converted; for self is the all-absorbing theme of their life. They do not sit at the feet of Jesus, as did Mary, and learn of him. They are not ready for Christ's coming. They are Christians only in name.

O, how my heart aches for these poor deceived, unprepared souls! As I stand before congregations, and see the self-sufficient, self-righteous ones, and know that they are not preparing themselves to do acceptable work for Christ, and to meet him in peace, my heart is burdened for them. What can I say to them that will arouse them to a sense of their true condition? I long to reveal Christ so plainly that they will behold him, and cease to center their attention on self.

In the night season I was in a company of people whose hearts were filled with vanity and conceit, and Christ was hid from their eyes. Suddenly, in loud, clear accents, the words were heard, "Jesus is coming to take to himself those who on this earth have loved and served him, to be with him in his kingdom forever." Many of those in the company went forth in their costly apparel to meet him. They kept looking at their dress. But when they saw his glory, and realized that their estimation of one another had been so largely measured by outward appearance, they knew that they were without the robe of Christ's righteousness, and that the blood of souls was on their garments.

When Christ took his chosen ones, they were left; for they were not ready. In their lives, self had been given the first place; and when the Saviour came, they were not prepared to meet him.

I awoke with the picture of their agonized countenances stamped on my mind. I can not efface the impression. I wish I could describe the scene as it was presented to me. O, how sad was the disappointment of those who had not learned by experience the meaning of the words, "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God"!

The treasure of the grace of Christ is of more value than gold or silver or costly array. When my sisters catch a glimpse of what Christ has suffered in their behalf, that they might become children of God by adoption, they will no longer be satisfied with worldly pride and self-love. No longer will they worship self, but God will be the object of their supreme regard.

My heart aches as I am shown how many there are who make self their idol. Christ has paid the redemption price for them. To him belongs the service of all their powers. But their hearts are filled with self-love, and with the desire for self-adorning. They give no thought to the words, "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Self-gratification is hiding God from their view. They have no desire to walk before God in meekness and lowliness. They are not looking to Jesus, not praying that they may be changed into his likeness. Their cases are represented by the man who came to the king's banquet clothed in his common citizen-dress. He had refused to make the preparation required by the king. The garment provided for him at great cost he disdained to wear. To the king's demand, "How camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment?" he could answer nothing. He was speechless; for he was self-condemned.

Among those to whom bitter disappointment will come at the day of final reckoning will be some who have been outwardly religious, who apparently have lived Christian lives, but whose lives have been marked by selfishness. They pride themselves on their morality, their influence, their ability to stand in a higher position than others, their knowledge of the truth; and they think that these will win for them the commendation of Christ. "Lord," they plead, "we have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets." "Have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name have done many wonderful works?"

But Christ says, "I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from me." "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

There is no discussion; the time for that is past. The irrevocable sentence is pronounced. They are shut out from heaven by their own unfitness for its companionship.

"Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it."

We know not what is before us, and our only safety is in walking with Christ, our hand in his, our hearts filled with perfect trust. Has he not said, "Let him take hold of my strength, that he may make peace with me; and he shall make peace with me"? Let us keep close to the Saviour. Let us walk humbly with him, filled with his meekness. Let self be hid with him in God.

The Final Warning Message to Mankind

GEORGE I. BUTLER

THE certainty that there must be a warning message given before the coming of Christ and the close of probation, has been considered. It is a leading principle in God's scheme of salvation that mankind should be warned of the consequences of sin, especially in every great crisis of human destiny.

Attention is now called to this last-day message, the most solemn and important ever given to mankind: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.

"And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that

The Word of God

MARY VALLIANT NOWLIN

THE Word of God brings holy cheer,
When sorrow broods with black wing down;
When overhead, and far and near,
We seem to feel Jehovah's frown.
When in the darkness we would give
A world to feel a friendly hand;
When life itself seems vain to live —
The why we can not understand.

Defeated and undone, we bow,
Crushed by the tempter, and alone,
With none to soothe the aching brow,
When night is come, and day has gone.
Ah! then it is Gethsemane
Has meaning all unknown before —
The bitter cry of agony,
The drops of blood His temples bore.

In such an hour God's Word reveals
A hope more dear, a joy more free,
And o'er our broken spirit steals
A balm from far-off Galilee.
It binds the trembling cords that break
From heart throbs full of weariness;
And then we hear, while hopes awake,
The rustle of His seamless dress.

O precious Word! fain would I know
More of thy meaning pure and deep,
That in Christ's likeness I may grow,
And all my ways from sinning keep.
O may that Word forever be
My lamp, my guide on life's dark way,
Until upon the crystal sea
I stand in God's eternal day.

Filled With the Fulness of God

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) THE themes of redemption are momentous themes, and only those who are spiritually minded can discern their depth and significance. It is our safety, our joy, to dwell upon the truths of the plan of salvation. Faith and prayer are necessary in order that we may behold the deep things of God.

Our minds are so bound about by narrow ideas that we catch but limited views of the experience it is our privilege to have. How little do we comprehend what is meant by the apostle Paul when he says, "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, . . . that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man." Why is it that many (2) who profess to have faith in Christ have no strength to stand against the temptations of the enemy? — It is because (1) they are not strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man. The apostle prays "that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." If we had this experience, we should know something of the cross of Calvary. We would know what it means to be partakers with Christ in his sufferings. The love of Christ would constrain us, and though (1) we would not be able to explain how the love of Christ warmed our hearts, we would manifest his love in fervent devotion to his cause.

Paul opens before the Ephesian church, in the most comprehensive language, the marvelous power and knowledge they might possess as sons and daughters of the Most High. It was theirs "to be strengthened with all might by his Spirit in the inner man," to be "rooted and grounded in love," to "comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and (1) to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge." But the prayer of the apostle reaches the climax of privilege when he prays that "ye might be filled with all the fulness of God."

(2) Here are revealed the heights of attainment that we may reach through faith in the promises of our Heavenly Father, when we fulfil his requirements. Through the merits of Christ, we have access to the throne of infinite power. "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" The Father gave his Spirit without measure to his Son, and we also may partake of its fulness. Jesus says: "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?"

The Lord appeared of old to Abraham, and said, "I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." This is (1) the reward of all who follow Christ. Jehovah Emmanuel — he in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge — to be brought into sympathy with him, to possess him, as the heart opens more and more to receive his attributes; to know his love and power, to possess the unsearchable riches of Christ; to comprehend more and more "what is the length, and breadth, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness (1) of God." — this is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and "their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord."

The heart that has once tasted of the love of Christ, cries out continually for a deeper draft; and as you impart, you will receive in richer and more abundant measure. Every revelation of God to the soul increases the capacity to know and to love. The continual cry of the heart is, More of thee, and ever the Spirit's answer is, Much more; for our God delights to do "exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." To Jesus, who emptied himself for the salvation of lost humanity, the Holy Spirit was given without measure. So it will be given to every follower of Christ when the whole heart is surrendered for his indwelling. Our Lord himself has given the command, "Be filled (3) with the Spirit," and this command is also a promise of its fulfilment. It was the good pleasure of the Father that in Christ should "all the fulness dwell;" and "in him ye are made full."

The life of Christ was a life charged with a divine message of the love of God, and he longed intensely to impart this love to others in rich measure. Compassion beamed from his countenance, and his conduct was characterized by grace and humility, love and truth. Every member of his church mil- (2) itant must manifest the same qualities, if he would join the church triumphant. The love of Christ is so broad, so full of glory, that in comparison to it, everything that man esteems so great dwindles into insignificance. When we obtain a view of it, we exclaim, O the depth of the riches of the love that God bestowed upon men in the gift of his only begotten Son!

When we seek for appropriate language in which to describe the love of God, we find words too tame, too weak, too far beneath the theme, and we lay down our pen and say, "No, it can not be described." We can only say, with the beloved disciple, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." It is the mystery of God in the flesh, God in Christ, divinity in humanity. Christ bowed down (2) in unparalleled humility, that in his exaltation to the throne of God he might also exalt those who believe in him to a seat with him upon his throne.

To all who are willing for self to be humbled are given God's promises: —

"I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and will proclaim the name of Jehovah before thee."

"Call upon me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not."

"Exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think," will be given unto us "the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him," that we may (2) be able to "comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge," that we may be "filled with all the fulness of God."

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him." Only through his Word can a knowledge of these things be gained; and even this affords but a partial revelation. But there every power will be developed, every capability increased. The grandest enterprises will be carried forward, and the highest ambitions realized. And still there will arise new heights to surmount, new wonders to admire, new truths to comprehend, fresh objects to call forth the powers of body and mind and soul. All the treasures of the universe will be open to the study of God's children. With unutterable delight we shall enter into the joys and the wisdom of unfallen beings. We shall share the treasures gained through ages and ages spent in contemplation of God's handiwork. And the years of eternity, as they roll, will continue to bring more glorious revelations. "Exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think," will be, forever and ever, the impartation of the gifts of God.

The Judgment Message

GEORGE I. BUTLER

"AND I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." Rev. 14:6, 7.

The careful reader will notice that this message announces the beginning of the great judgment period. "He [God] hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness." Acts 17:31. To appoint is defined by Webster: "To fix by a decree, order, command, resolve, decision, or mutual agreement; to prescribe; to fix the time or place of." God, then, as declared by the great apostle, has fixed the time when the judgment will begin, by a decree, a command, a decision of his omnipotent word. This appointment had already been made when the apostle spoke that wonderful discourse to the Athenians. It was, then, settled more than eighteen centuries ago at what time the great heavenly assize should begin. And the time when it should begin was to be announced to the world. This first angel's message itself is the announcement of it. The great judgment day is to settle the eternal destiny of every person, dead or alive. Paul uses the past tense, "hath appointed" the day, or period, when the judgment should begin. The judgment of mankind must occupy a period of time, a considerable period. "I said in my heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: for there is a time there for every purpose and for every work." Eccl. 3:17.

Preceding the day of Christ's second coming, and occupying a sufficient period to fulfil the pleasure of the all-wise and omnipotent One, who himself presides over the sessions of this grandest assize of the universe, the books of record kept in the archives of heaven, written by the angels of God, will be examined, and a decision, made in every case for weal or woe, will be rendered before the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to execute the decisions of the judgment. These decisions will be final, fixed to all eternity, because the Judge of all presides, whose word is ever true, and must be right. Reader, would you get a clear and comprehensive and soul-enlightening view of this greatest of supreme courts,— God the Father, the Son, and the innumerable host of heavenly angels in session? We will give it to you from the divine Word: —

"And I beheld till thrones were placed, and One that was ancient of days did sit: his raiment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like pure wool; his throne was fiery flames, and the wheels thereof burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him: thousands of thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened." Dan. 7:9, 10. It is not the purpose of this brief article to enter into a full elucidation of the subject of the judgment. Books on this subject can be obtained at any of our publishing offices or depositories. A few words will properly introduce the subject: —

This wonderful description of the last judgment scene forms a part of one of the most remarkable lines of prophecy in the Bible. In Daniel 7, four great universal kingdoms are introduced in symbol,— Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome,— successive in their work, leading us down in the history of the world from Daniel's time to the last days. Each played its part in the great drama of the world's history; but the prophecy gives more in detail the work of Rome, and especially the last division of that power, papal Rome, to the coming of Christ in glory. The great judgment scene is at the very close of this long line of prophecy. It is the last work of God and Christ preceding his coming to this earth, and preparatory to it. A careful study of this scripture will inevitably decide the question that the judgment scene going on in heaven takes place while the last generation is living on the earth. The first angel's message demonstrates this beyond doubt; for it states, in the clearest language, that a grand proclamation must go to the world by the voice of the preacher, "to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," announcing the grandest of all facts, "The hour [or period] of his judgment is come."

Eighteen centuries ago, Paul declared that God had "appointed a day" for this great assize to begin. The beloved John was instructed in holy vision to announce to the world the proclamation of a world-wide message, declaring the momentous fact that the period of his judgment had already come —"is come." If this does not demonstrate that the period of the last judgment takes place in the heavenly courts while the last generation is living on the earth, to whom God's messengers are preaching the grand truth that that judgment is actually in session, then we shall never be able to understand human language.

Another consideration must settle the question, in the minds of all candid, intelligent persons, that the judgment of the last day takes place in heaven before our Saviour appears: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4:16, 17.

Let the reader carefully note these facts: when the Lord comes, he appears in mid-heaven, with all his escort of mighty angels. All come with him. The righteous dead are raised immortal, and immediately arise to meet him in the air. All the living righteous ascend with the resurrected dead to meet him in mid-heaven. Other scriptures declare that he, with them, immediately goes up to the New Jerusalem in heaven, to reign a thousand years. Christ does not come down upon the earth at that time. The judgments of God in the seven last plagues and the glory of Christ's advent destroy all the living wicked, and they lie upon the earth unburied and unlamented, and thus our earth lies desolate till the end of the thousand years, when the wicked dead are all raised to receive their final punishment.

The one point we wish to impress upon every mind is this: at the coming of Christ, an eternal separation takes place between the righteous and the wicked. The righteous go to heaven with Christ, to inhabit those mansions which Jesus prepared for them before he came. John 14:1-3. The wicked are all left upon the earth, and are slain by the brightness of his coming. How could these indisputable facts be true unless it had been decided who were righteous, and who were wicked? This decision is the work of the great judgment day that the first angel's message brings to view: "The hour of his judgment is come." It is every way fitting, yea, absolutely necessary, when we consider the mercy and justice of God, that his intelligent creatures should be warned of this momentous event so important for every person to know; so the solemn message must be proclaimed to all mankind. Other considerations connected with this first last-day proclamation will be considered in our next article.

The Overcomer

E. C. JAEGER

THE Bible holds out the hope of a reward only to the overcomer. The man who has victoriously come off the field of battle is the one upon whom is placed the victor's crown. We admire those who through all circumstances ever battle upward and onward, and our Father looks with kindly approval upon those who, with unselfish desire and in his strength overcome "for Jesus' sake." When what we do is done for him alone, we forget to pity ourselves, and are lost in the joy of serving Jesus. This is the only kind of service Jesus can ac-

Let Us Be Kind

LET us be kind;
The way is long and lonely,
And human hearts are asking for this blessing only —
That we be kind.
We can not know the grief that men may borrow,
We can not see the souls storm-swept by sorrow,
But love can shine upon the way to-day, to-morrow:
Let us be kind.

Let us be kind;
Around the world the tears of time are falling,
And for the loved and lost these human hearts are calling —
Let us be kind.
To age and youth let gracious words be spoken,
Upon the wheel of pain so many weary lives are broken,
We live in vain who give no tender token:
Let us be kind.

Let us be kind;
The sunset tints will soon be in the west,
Too late the flowers are laid then on the quiet breast —
Let us be kind.
And when the angel guides have sought and found us,
Their hands shall link the broken ties of earth that bound us,
And heaven and home shall brighten all around us:
Let us be kind.

Till We All Come to the Unity of the Faith

MRS. E. G. WHITE

PAUL, urging the Ephesians to preserve unity and love, writes: "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."

The apostle exhorts his brethren to manifest in their lives the power of the truth which he had presented to them. By meekness and gentleness, forbearance and love, they were to exemplify the character of Christ and the blessings of his salvation. There is but one body, one Spirit, one Lord, one faith. As members of the body of Christ, all members are to be animated by the same spirit and the same hope.

Harmony and union existing among men of varied dispositions is the strongest witness that can be borne that God has sent his Son into the world to save sinners. It is our privilege to bear this witness. Our characters must be molded in harmony with his character, our wills must be surrendered to his will.

In the first disciples was presented a marked diversity. They were to be the world's teachers, and they represented widely varied types of character. There were Levi Matthew the publican, called from a life of business activity, and subservience to Rome; the zealous Simon, the uncompromising foe of the imperial authority; the impulsive, self-sufficient, warm-hearted Peter, with Andrew his brother; Judas the Judean, polished, capable, and mean-spirited; Philip and Thomas, faithful and earnest, yet slow of heart to believe; James the less and Jude, of less prominence among the brethren, but men of force, positive both in their faults and in their virtues; Nathanael, a child in sincerity and trust; and the ambitious, loving-hearted sons of Zebedee.

In order successfully to carry forward the work to which they had been called, these disciples, differing so widely in natural characteristics, in training, and in habits of life, needed to come into unity of feeling, thought, and action. This unity it was Christ's object to secure. To this end he sought to bring them into unity with himself. The burden of his labor for them is expressed in his prayer to the Father, "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: . . . that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

For these disciples the mission of Christ finally accomplished its purpose. Little by little his example and his lessons of self-abnegation molded their characters. His death destroyed their hope of worldly greatness. The fall of Peter, the apostasy of Judas, their own failure in forsaking Christ in his anguish and peril, swept away their self-sufficiency. They saw their own weakness; they saw something of the greatness of the work committed to them; they felt their need of their Master's guidance at every step.

They knew that his personal presence was no longer to be with them, and they recognized, as they had never recognized before, the value of the opportunities that had been theirs to walk and talk with the Sent of God. Many of his lessons, when spoken, they had not appreciated or understood; now they longed to recall these lessons, to hear again his words. With what joy now came back to them his assurance: —

"It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him." "All things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." And "the Comforter . . . whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to you remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." "All things that the Father hath are mine." "When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth. . . . He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you."

The disciples had seen Christ ascend from them on the Mount of Olives. And as the heavens received him, there had come back to them his parting promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." They knew that his sympathies were with them still. They knew that they had a representative, an advocate, at the throne of God. In the name of Jesus they presented their petitions, repeating his promise, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you." Higher and higher they extended the hand of faith, with the mighty argument, "It is Christ that died, yea, rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us."

Faithful to his promise, the divine One, exalted in the heavenly courts, imparted of his fulness to his followers on earth. His enthronement at God's right hand was signalized by the outpouring of the Spirit upon his disciples. By the work of Christ these disciples had been led to feel their need of the Spirit; under the Spirit's teaching they received their final preparation, and went forth to their life-work.

No longer were they ignorant and uncultured. No longer were they a collection of independent units or of discordant and conflicting elements. No longer were their hopes set on worldly greatness. They were of "one accord," of "one mind and one soul." Christ filled their thoughts. The advancement of his kingdom was their aim. In mind and character they had become like their Master; and men "took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus."

Then there was such a revelation of the glory of Christ as had never before been witnessed by mortal man. Multitudes who had reviled his name and despised his power confessed themselves disciples of the crucified. Through the co-operation of the divine Spirit the labors of the humble men whom Christ had chosen, stirred the world.

"When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. . . . And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

Here we are shown that God gives to every man his work, and in doing this work, man is fulfilling his part of God's great plan. Every faithful worker will minister for the perfecting of the saints. All who have been benefited by the labors of God's servant, should, according to their ability, unite with him in working for the salvation of souls. This is the work of all true believers, ministers, and people. They should keep the grand object ever in view, each seeking to fill his proper position in the church, and all working together in order, harmony, and love.

There is nothing selfish or narrow in the religion of Christ. Its principles are diffusive and aggressive. It is represented by Christ as the bright light, as the saving salt, as the transforming leaven. With zeal, earnestness, and devotion, the servants of God will seek to spread far and near the knowledge of the truth; yet they will not neglect to labor for the strength and unity of the church.

God's Way the Safe Way

A. N. DURRANT

"And they journeyed from Mount Hor by the way of the Red Sea, to compass the land of Edom: and the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way." Num. 21:4.

When Jehovah undertook to lead Israel "out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage," to the promised land, he knew all the trials and obstacles, as well as the blessings and sweet experiences, that awaited them; for God himself had planned their whole journey, having nothing but Israel's good at heart.

"And it came to pass, when Pharaoh had let the people go, that God led them not through the way of the land of the Philistines, although that was near; for God said, Lest peradventure the people repent when they see war, and they return to Egypt: but God led the people about, through the way of the wilderness of the Red Sea: and the children of Israel went up harnessed out of the land of Egypt." Ex. 13:17, 18.

Israel, having been long in slavery, was not able to contend with the warlike Philistines; so God intended to strengthen their faith, and give sufficient training, by the experiences of the Red Sea, and Marah (bitter water), and afterward Rephidim (no water at all), and all other similar experiences with which they met; for they were afterward to become a terror to the heathen nations. Deut. 26:19. But, alas! "the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way," even though it was God's way. Truly "it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps" (Jer. 10:23); therefore the gracious "Lord directeth his steps." Prov. 16:9. God's dealings with his children have been the same through all ages. It is "through much tribulation" that they enter the kingdom of God. Acts 14:22.

In these last days, when God again calls out the remnant of Israel to join the ranks of past ages in faithful service, and to go up and possess the land, it is none the less true that it will be "through much tribulation" that they will enter the kingdom. See Isa. 11:11; Rev. 14:6-14; 12:17; Luke 21:25-28; 2 Tim. 3:1-5; Dan. 12:1. "Upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, . . . men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Heart-strings are snapping all over the world, burdened under the weight of care and anxiety, and it may be that some poor souls that once started for the kingdom are also becoming "discouraged because of the way." If it be you who read this, then I can only say, "Look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." The journey will soon be over. Each mighty breaker drives us nearer home. While looking up, "commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass" (Ps. 37:5); for he has also said, "I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end." Jer. 29:11. And again: "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee." Isa. 43:2.

Therefore we may know by the trials we meet that "all things work together for good to them that love God" (Rom. 8:28; 2 Cor. 4:16-18); and he who said, "Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared" (Ex. 23:20), will always sweeten the waters of Marah with the sweet waters from the fountain of life, and will at last bring us to our desired haven of rest.

"The path where God leads the way may lie through the desert or the sea, but it is a safe path."

At the Time Appointed the End Shall Be

GEORGE I. BUTLER

This is the statement made by Gabriel, the angel of God, sent to explain to Daniel the meaning of the vision of the ram, the he goat, the little horn that waxed exceeding great, and the wonderful prophetic period of twenty-three hundred year-days — the longest prophetic period in the Bible. Dan. 8:19. Upon the appointment of the time of the judgment hinges the true and genuine advent proclamation now being given by our people. Is it a fact that God appointed, ages beforehand, the time when this judgment period should begin? Paul so declares, in so many words: "Because he [God] hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man [Christ Jesus] whom he hath ordained." Acts 17:31. Long before the apostle's time God made this appointment.

We would again call the attention of the reader to the definiteness, the specific nature, of the true force of this word "appoint." We are in danger of not grasping its real meaning — to appoint, "to fix by a decree . . . the time and place of." This is the leading, most important definition of the word. Another definition given is, "to fix with power or firmness, to establish." This is a strong word. Especially is it true of anything which God appoints. Man makes appointments of times to meet emergencies. If he is a sensible man, he will make very strong efforts to meet his appointment. But even the best of men sometimes fail to do what they agreed to do, because of difficulties they did not foresee, or providences which interfere. But God is the one who declares in his Word that he did appoint the time when the judgment should begin. He never makes mistakes, and his power is infinite; and he declared that a message should go forth at that particular time "to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," calling attention to that fact. This surely will be a world-wide proclamation. It will lighten the earth with its glory. It must be seen by every candid person that this will be a most important matter, the greatest and most solemn thing in all the world at the time it goes forth, involving the eternal destiny of every intelligent creature.

The question before us in this theme now under consideration is when and where this appointment was made. The very central idea of an appointment is that the persons interested shall have the facts placed before them — the data by which they may be able to know when this grandest assize of the universe begins. When God places before mankind this information, he has discharged his responsibility in the matter. If men sneer at it, declare they do not believe it, treat it with indifference, even as the antediluvians did Noah's message, and thus court a similar doom, the Lord is not responsible, for he has given them the data and the message announcing the great fact of the beginning of the judgment period.

The scripture, "At the time appointed the end shall be," used as the heading of this article, is therefore worthy of the closest consideration. These preliminaries naturally bring us to the time and place where God did announce the time when the judgment should begin in heaven. In the vision of Daniel 8, this announcement is made. Let those interested carefully read that chapter. Here the symbolic beasts — the ram, the he goat, the exceeding greatness of the horn — are introduced and explained by the angel. The ram symbolizes Media and Persia; the "two horns are the kings of Media and Persia." These kings united, conquered Babylon, and succeeded it in holding the supremacy of the world.

"The rough goat," the angel declares, "is the king of Grecia,"— Alexander the Great, as the world calls him. After his death his kingdom was divided into just four parts which were ruled by his leading generals.

From one of these horns, a little horn was seen by the prophet to make its appearance, which "waxed exceeding great." The ram was said to be "great," and manual training, morals and religion. Open air and the spur of necessity did the rest.

If people lived under such conditions to-day, the child, until he was ten or eleven years old, would be better off at home. If the child lives in a city flat or in a house with a yard as big as a pocket-handkerchief, with an irritable father, a tired, nervous mother, and an army of nurses and governesses to vex and worry him, the sooner he is sent to the kindergarten the better. He can not possibly "grow and wax strong" and develop a steady, strong nervous system under such home surroundings.

If the system of training in the lower grades of our schools were so planned that they would furnish plenty of time for play in the open air, and thus promote a healthy growth and development, the average child would be better off at school than at home after he is seven years of age. But, unfortunately, the lower grades in most of our schools hinder growth rather than promote it.

Between a home whose educational efficiency has been hampered or crippled by modern civilization and culture, and the school which will make of the child a disembodied spirit and altogether neglect his physical well-being throughout the lower grades, the children of the rising generation are badly situated.

Much depends on the individual child as well as the school and home. The "only" child will be better off at school than at home, even in early childhood. He must learn in childhood to live comfortably with his mates and to form friendships, for this art will soon become impossible for him.

The nervous child will be better off at home until nine or ten years old if the home conditions favor growth and the development of steady nerves. Otherwise, he had probably better go to school. The best place for him would be a New England hill farm, with wise and cheery grandparents.

The conclusion of the whole matter seems to be that the chief business of the child is to grow. The center of education is in his muscle and not in his brain. Pulmonary and digestive capacity is far more important than mental capacity.

Whether a child should be sent to school or remain at home depends, then, upon whether his home or the school can best promote these inestimable virtues.— Prof. John Mason Tyler, in Good Housekeeping.

The Teacher

A Method of Reviews (1)

THE review is not a pet hobby with me. It is a real, living, frantic actuality; something not to be led, but to drive rather than lead,— drive constantly, drive regularly, drive systematically, drive with a determination of winning the coveted goal. It is not for me, at this time, to discuss the subject; therefore I will present the plan only.

Your work for the first two or three weeks should be well planned. Care should be taken as to the amount of work done and the manner of doing it. After you have covered twenty or thirty pages of geography, history, physiology, etc., have each pupil of the class provide himself with a suitable book, say a composition-book. Then have him head each subject studied, and list one question under each subject each school-day. At the recitation the pupil reads the question selected, the answer to be given by some pupil of the class selected by the teacher. This may be changed, and the class as a whole be given the opportunity to answer as each question is read. No question is to be asked by any pupil who is not fully prepared to answer his own questions.

On Friday, instead of having the regular lesson assigned from the book, the teacher appoints one or two pupils of the class, we see that as a daily review from each pupil in that class, and then write them on the blackboard, using them for the recitation, by having the writer read the list, and having the questions answered in the same manner as the daily questions are. This makes a counter-review.

For example, Mary Jones has geography, history, physiology, etc.; each of these subjects should have five questions. No question is to be asked by any pupil that can not be answered by him. All questions are to be of the pupil's own grammatical construction. Each question is to be asked by the pupil writing it, and answered by the class as a whole or by some individual pupil, just as the teacher sees fit.

Miss Jones has five questions each from geography, history, and physiology. Should there be five or more pupils in the class, we see that as a daily review we get five or more research questions; as a weekly review on each subject, we get twenty-five or more questions covering the entire work that had been previously covered in the recitation, as a Friday review.

The value of reviews can not be overestimated. They should be carefully planned, carefully tested, and carefully presented.

The plan trains the pupils in the framing of questions, tests them as to the relative importance of subjects, provides a diversified list of test questions, furnishes a language lesson, incites interest, thoroughly reviews the subjects of study, and greatly helps in the mastery of the same.— Selected.

Parental Responsibility

PARENTS are in a great degree responsible for the mold given to the characters of their children. They should aim at symmetry and proportion. There are few well-balanced minds, because parents are wickedly negligent of their duty to stimulate weak traits and repress wrong ones. They do not remember that they are under the most solemn obligation to watch the tendencies of each child; that it is their duty to train their children to right habits and right ways of thinking.

Sometimes parents wait for the Lord to do the very work that he has given them to do. Instead of restraining and controlling their children as they should, they pet and indulge them, and gratify their whims and desires. When these children go out from their early homes, it is with characters deformed by selfishness, with ungoverned appetites, with strong self-will; they are destitute of courtesy or respect for their parents, and do not love religious truth or the worship of God. They have grown up with traits that are a life-long curse to themselves and to others. Home is made anything but happy if the evil weeds of dissension, selfishness, envy, passion, and sullen stubbornness are left to flourish in the neglected garden of the soul.

To many education means a knowledge of books; but "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." The true object of education is to restore the image of God in the soul. The first and most precious knowledge is the knowledge of Christ; and wise parents will keep this fact ever before the minds of their children. Should a limb be broken or fractured, parents will try every means that love or wisdom can suggest to restore the affected member to comeliness and soundness. This is right, it is their duty; but the Lord requires that still greater tact, patience, and persevering effort be employed to remedy blemishes of the soul. That father is unworthy of the name who is not to his children a Christian teacher, ruler, and friend, binding them to his heart by the strong ties of sanctified love,— a love which has its foundation in duty faithfully performed.— Mrs. E. G. White.

Not Work, But Worry

IT is not the work, but the worry,
 That wrinkles the smooth, fair face;
That blends gray hairs with the dusky,
 And robs the form of its grace;
That dims the luster and sparkle
 Of eyes that were once so bright,
But now are heavy and troubled,
 With a weary, despondent light.

It is not the work, but the worry
 That drives all sleep away,
As we toss and turn and wonder
 About the cares of the day.
Do we think of the hands' hard labor,
 Or the steps of the tired feet?
O no! but we plan and ponder
 How to make both ends meet.

It is not the work, but the worry,
 That makes us sober and sad;
That makes us narrow and sordid
 When we should be cheery and glad.
There's a shadow before the sunlight,
 And ever a cloud in the blue;
The scent of the roses is tainted;
 The notes of the song are untrue.

It is not the work, but the worry,
 That makes the world grow old;
That numbers the years of its children
 Ere half their story is told;
That weakens their faith in heaven,
 And the wisdom of God's great plan.
Ah! 'tis not the work, but the worry,
 That breaks the heart of man.

Dentistry for Children

AT the Children's Aid Society's industrial school in West Fifty-third Street, Manhattan, a dental clinic has been provided, where any school-child of Greater New York who can not afford the luxury of a dentist can go and have aching teeth attended to. Dr. H. L. Wheeler, of the committee on physical welfare of school-children, has organized a staff of twenty dentists, who have volunteered their services in this attempt to provide competent dental treatment specifically for school-children.

Preparing for Heaven

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Reading for Sabbath, December 12)

"AND he showed me Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the Lord, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him. And the Lord said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan; even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee: is not this a brand plucked out of the fire? Now Joshua was clothed with filthy garments, and stood before the angel." Zech. 3: 1-3.

Here we find a representation of the people of God of to-day. As Joshua stood before the angel, "clothed with filthy garments," so we stand in the presence of Christ, clothed in garments of unrighteousness. Christ, the angel before whom Joshua stood, is now interceding for us before his Father, as he is here represented as interceding for Joshua and his people who were in deep affliction; and Satan now, as then, stands by to resist his efforts.

Ever since his fall, it has been the work of Satan to oppose Christ's efforts to redeem the race. In the Bible he is called an accuser of the brethren. It is said that he accuses them before God day and night. Pointing to their sins, as he did to the filthy garments of Joshua, he says: "They profess to be thy children; but they do not obey thee. See the traces of sin upon them. They are my property."

This is the argument that he employs concerning God's people in all ages. He pleads their sinfulness as the reason why Christ's restraining power should not hold him back from exercising his cruelty upon them to its fullest extent. But to the accuser of his people the Saviour says, "The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan; . . . is not this a brand plucked out of the fire? Have I not thrust my own hand into the fire to gather this brand from the burning?"

So long as the people of God preserve their fidelity to him, so long as they cling by living faith to Jesus, they are under the protection of heavenly angels, and Satan will not be permitted to exercise his hellish arts upon them to their destruction. (1) But those who separate themselves from Christ by sin are in great peril. If they continue to disregard the requirements of God, they know not how soon he may give them over to Satan, and permit him to do to them according to his will. There is, therefore, the greatest necessity of keeping the soul free from defilement, and the eye single to the glory of God; of thinking soberly and watching unto prayer continually.

(2) Satan is now more earnestly engaged in playing the game of life for souls than at any previous time; and unless we are constantly on our guard, he will establish in our hearts, pride, love of self, love of the world, and many other evil traits. He will also use every possible device to unsettle our faith in God and in the truths of his Word. If we have not a deep experience in the things of God, if we have not a thorough knowledge of his Word, we shall be beguiled to our ruin by the errors and sophistries of the enemy. False doctrines will sap the foundations of many, because they have not learned to discern truth from error. Our only safeguard against the wiles of Satan is to study the Scriptures diligently, to have an intelligent understanding of the reasons of our faith, and faithfully to perform every known duty. The indulgence of one known sin will cause weakness and darkness, and subject us to fierce temptation.

(3) Joshua is represented as pleading with the Angel. Are we engaged in the same work? Are our supplications ascending to God in living faith? Are we opening the door of the heart to Jesus, and closing every means of entrance to Satan? Are we daily obtaining clearer light, and greater strength, that we may stand in Christ's righteousness? Are we emptying our hearts of all selfishness, and cleansing them, preparatory to receiving the latter rain from heaven?

Now is the time when we are to confess and forsake our sins, that they may go beforehand to judgment and be blotted out. Now is the time to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." It is dangerous to delay this work. Satan is even now seeking by disasters upon sea and land to seal the fate of as many as possible. What is the defense of the people of God at this time? — It is a living connection with heaven. If we would dwell in safety from the noisome pestilence, if we would be preserved from dangers seen and unseen, we must hide in God; we must secure the protecting care of Jesus and holy angels. In these days of peril, the Lord would have us walk before him in humility. Instead of trying to cover our sins, he would have us confess them, as Joshua confessed the sins of ancient Israel. We profess to be the depositaries of God's law. We profess to be building up "the old waste places," and to be raising up "the foundations of many generations." If this great and solemn work has indeed been committed to us, how important that we depart from all iniquity!

The third angel's message is to lighten the earth with its glory; but only those who have withstood temptation in the strength of the Mighty One will be permitted to act a part in proclaiming it when it shall have swelled into the loud cry.

As the intercession of Joshua was accepted, the command was given to those that stood by, "Take away the filthy garments from him." And unto Joshua the Angel said, "Behold, I have caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee with change of raiment. . . . So they set a fair miter upon his head, and clothed him with garments." Even so will all those who come to Jesus in penitence and faith receive the robe of Christ's righteousness.

As we approach the perils of the last days, the temptations of the enemy become stronger and more determined. Satan has come down in great power, knowing that his time is short; and he is working "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish." The warning comes to us through God's Word that, if it were possible, he would deceive the very elect.

Wonderful events are soon to open before the world. The end of all things is at hand. The time of trouble is about to come upon the people of God. Then it is that the decree will go forth forbidding those who keep the Sabbath of the Lord to buy or sell, and threatening them with punishment, and even death, if they do not observe the first day of the week as the Sabbath.

"And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." By this we see the importance of having our names written in the book of life. All whose names are registered there will be delivered from Satan's power, and Christ will command that their filthy garments be removed, and that they be clothed with his righteousness. "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

In the time of trouble, Satan stirs up the wicked, and they encircle the people of God to destroy them. But he does not know that "pardon" has been written opposite their names in the books of heaven. He does not know that the command has been given, "Take away the filthy garments" from them, clothe them with "change of raiment," and set "a fair miter" upon their heads.

If we could only see the many dangers from which we are daily preserved by the holy angels, instead of complaining of our trials and misfortunes, we would talk continually of the mercies of God. (4) How precious in the sight of God are his people!

Sons and Daughters of God, p. 116 (4)

The exhortation of the prophet is, "Gather yourselves together, yea, gather together, O nation not desired; before the decree bring forth, before the day pass as the chaff, before the fierce anger of the Lord come upon you." "Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger."

In view of what is soon to come upon the earth, I entreat you, brethren and sisters, to walk before God in all meekness and lowliness of mind, remembering the care that Jesus has for you. All the meek of the earth are exhorted to seek him. Those who have wrought his judgments are to seek him. Let self break in pieces before God. It is hard to do this; but we are warned to fall upon the rock and be broken, else it will fall upon us, and grind us to powder. It is to the humble in heart that Jesus speaks; his everlasting arms encircle them, and he will not leave them to perish by the hands of the wicked.

A GERMAN-SAXON SABBATH-KEEPING FAMILY IN TRANSYLVANIA, HUNGARY

What is it to be a Christian? — It is to be Christlike; it is to do the works of Christ. Some fail on one point, some on another. Some are naturally impatient. Satan understands their weakness, and manages to overcome them again and again. But let none be discouraged by this. Whenever little annoyances and trials arise, ask God in silent prayer to give you strength and grace to bear them patiently. There is a power in silence; do not speak a word until you have sent up your petition to the God of heaven. If you will always do this, you will soon overcome your hasty temper, and you will have a little heaven here to go to heaven in.

God wants his people to cleanse their hands and purify their hearts. Will it make them unhappy to do this? Will it bring unhappiness into their families if they are kind and patient, courteous and forbearing? — Far from it. The kindness they manifest toward their families will be reflected upon themselves. This is the work that should be carried forward in the home. If the members of a family are not prepared to dwell in peace here, they are not prepared to dwell in the family that shall gather around the great white throne. (1) Sin always brings darkness and bondage; but right-doing will bring peace and holy joy.

The work of overcoming is a great work. Shall we take hold of it with energy and perseverance? Unless we do, our "filthy garments" will not be taken from us. We need never expect that these will be torn from us violently; we must first show a desire to rid ourselves of them. We must seek to separate sin from us, relying upon the merits of the blood of Christ; and then in the day of affliction, when the enemy presses us, we shall walk among the angels. They will be like a wall of fire about us; and we shall one day walk with them in the city of God.

(2) When tempted to sin, let us remember that Jesus is pleading for us in the heavenly sanctuary. When we put away our sins and come to him in faith, he takes our names on his lips, and presents them to his Father, saying, "I have graven them upon the palms of my hands; I know them by name." And the command goes forth to the angels to protect them. Then in the day of fierce trial he will say, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." What are the chambers in which they are to hide? — They are the protection of Christ and holy angels. The people of God are not at this time all in one place. They are in different companies, and in all parts of the earth; and they will be tried singly, not in groups. Every one must stand the test for himself.

There has never been a time when the people of God have had greater need to claim his promises than now. Let the hand of faith pass through the darkness, and grasp the arm of infinite power. While we speak of the necessity of separating from sin, remember that Christ came to our world to save sinners, and that "he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him." It is our privilege to believe that his blood is able to cleanse us from every spot and stain of sin. We must not limit the power of the Holy One of Israel. He wants us to come to him just as we are, sinful and polluted. His blood is efficacious. I entreat you not to grieve his Spirit by continuing in sin. If you fall under temptation, do not become discouraged. This promise comes ringing down along the line to our time: "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." I feel that for this one promise a continual song of thanksgiving ought to go forth from the lips of mortals. Let us gather up these precious jewels of promise, and when Satan accuses us of our great sinfulness, and tempts us to doubt the power of God to save, let us repeat the words of Christ, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

The Great Missionary

Memory Verse: John 3:16.

Define "missionary."

Jesus was the greatest of all missionaries.

Sent by the Father. 1 John 4:9; John 5:36, 37.

His home. John 6:38.

His field.— A world in the darkness of sin, with every person doomed to death.

Jesus in coming to this earth as a missionary —
  "Pleased not himself." Rom. 15:3.
  "For your sakes he became poor." 2 Cor. 8:9.
  Came "to save that which was lost." Matt. 18:11.
  "Went about doing good." Acts 10:38.

A Child Missionary. Luke 2:40-52. (Read appropriate portions of the chapter, "As a Child," in "Desire of Ages.")

How was this missionary received by the people he came to save? —
  His life sought when an infant. Matt. 2:13-16.
  Homeless. Matt. 8:20.
  Despised and rejected. John 1:11; Isa. 53:3.
  Crucified. Matt. 27:35.

What he did for the people —
  Preached to the multitude. Matt. 13:1-3.
  Personal work with individuals. John 3:1-12; 4:4-26.
  Visited homes. Luke 19:5; 7:36.
  Sympathized with those in trouble. John 11:32, 35.
  Fed the hungry. Matt. 14:15-21.
  Healed the sick. Matt. 14:14.
  Reproved sin. Matt. 23:13, 14.
  Blessed the children. Mark 10:13-16.
  Prayed for the people. John 17.

His message to the world. Matt. 11:28.

(2) Commentary, Vol. 4 p. 1143

deem us from sin and its awful curse, is entitled to the best that we can give. One dear believer writes, in a letter received while this reading is being prepared: "I do believe if I owned the wealth of all this, God's footstool, I could, and would, really give it all, just as fast as it could be used, and then feel as if I had done nothing more than I ought to do." This is the spirit of every true steward of Christ. He not only is willing, but anxious, to render to the Master everything that it is possible for him to give, to be used to the Master's glory.

While we are blessed with health and life, it is well for us to think of the day of final settlement. We shall have to give an account to the Lord of our stewardship. Each of us must stand before Almighty God, and render to him an account of our use of the means and the time which he entrusted to us in this life. Christ said: "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? and if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?"

The rewards which God has promised to his faithful children are beyond all calculation. They are infinite in value. They are eternal in time. Nothing of earth can compare with what we shall have in eternity with the Lord. Neither will our reward be all of a material nature; for we shall find spiritual blessings of which we have only had a foretaste here. To live and reign with Christ through all eternity, to share with him his throne, to walk upon the sea of glass, to stand before the throne of God,— these are rewards which ought to encourage us to earnest Christian effort, to faithful stewardship, to holy living, in this present life.

Moreover, God takes the means which we put into his cause, and uses it in bringing souls to his kingdom. The results of the use of this means he credits to the steward who paid the tithes or offerings, though the amounts given were already the Lord's. Thus the giver is doubly blessed,— blessed in giving to the Lord his own, and rewarded with what his gifts have accomplished in the work of saving souls. These ransomed, redeemed ones are reckoned to the account of the stewardship of God's people; and they will shine as stars in the crowns of God's children throughout endless ages.

On that glad day when the Master comes to call to himself the purchase of his blood, and to reward his faithful children, there will stand before him a countless throng who have come from "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." We shall meet all the faithful stewards of God's household around his throne. The touch of immortality will be in every face; the life of God will be stamped on every brow. Then with his own hand the Master will crown with glory and honor those who have been true to him.

It will not be the honors which men have given us, nor the treasures of earth which we have heaped together here, that will be our pride and joy in that day. No, no! Our joy will be to have done what we could to save our fellows from sin and ruin. In that glad day there will be some in glory, clothed in the white robes of Christ's righteousness, who have been saved, by God's grace, through our stewardship.

To-day is a good day for us to redeem the past. Let not the enemy deceive your soul. What God requires of one he requires of all,— faithfulness in stewardship. If God has been wronged by us in tithes and offerings, let us restore this day that which is the Lord's, and make a covenant of peace with God. Forget not the standard of acceptable stewardship: "It is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful;" remember also the words of the Master: "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much."

To-day is the accepted time. To-day bring your tithes and offerings to God, and prove him now, if he will not pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it. May all here to-day heed this call, and be among those faithful stewards to whom our Lord will say, on his return: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The Field Is the World

Memory Verse: Matt. 24:14.

Apostles were to witness of Jesus. Acts 1:8.

Beginning at home, every one who loves the Lord should seek to make him known to all the world.

Jesus bids us go "into all the world." Mark 16:15.

The isles shall wait. Isa. 42:4.

The people of God gathered. Isa. 43:5-7.

The missionary ladder. Rom. 10:13-15.

This ladder has five rounds — five "shalls." The first is a statement; the other four are questions we are to answer, keeping the first one in mind.

First round. "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Nobody is left out. Anybody and everybody may call. A child may call, a poor man may call, a heathen may call.

Second round. "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed?" Nobody sends for a doctor in whom he has no confidence. The heathen do not believe in Christ, because they have no chance to believe.

Third round. "How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard?" No one will wish to try a remedy of which he has not heard. Millions have never heard of Christ, and so can not believe.

Fourth round. "How shall they hear without a preacher?" Where there are ears to hear, there must be voices to speak. In some places there are many, many ears, and only one or two voices. Many are telling those who have already heard again and again, while millions have not heard once. Some are looking at these heathen countries, and saying, "Here am I; send me."

Fifth round. "How shall they preach, except they be sent?" It is Jesus who puts in men's hearts a desire to go to the dark places of earth, and "preach the gospel." Jesus sends them; he gives them a message of joy and peace to carry to those in darkness; and he allows us to have a part in their work.

What can we do? (Let the children themselves answer. Emphasize the need of self-denial.)

"Children and youth have given their pennies, that, like little rivulets, have supplied a stream of beneficence. Children should be educated in such a way that they may perform unselfish acts which heaven will rejoice to see. When the dew of youth is upon them, children should be trained how to do service for Christ. They should be taught self-denial." — "Testimonies on Sabbath-school Work," page 113.

Christ's Most Essential Gift to His Church

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Reading for Thursday, December 17)

Before offering himself as the sacrificial victim, Christ sought for the most essential and complete gift to bestow upon his followers, a gift that would bring within their reach the boundless resources of grace. "I will pray the Father," he said, "and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you orphans: I will come to you."

Before this the Spirit had been in the world; from the very beginning of the work of redemption he had been moving upon men's hearts. But while Christ was on earth, the disciples had desired no other helper. Not until they were deprived of his presence would they feel the need of the Spirit, and then he would come.

The Holy Spirit is Christ's representative, but divested of the personality of humanity, and independent thereof. Cumbered with humanity, Christ could not be in every place personally. Therefore it was for their interest that he should go to the Father, and send the Spirit to be his successor on earth. No one could then have any advantage because of his location or his personal contact with Christ. By the Spirit the Saviour would be accessible to all. In this sense he would be nearer to them than if he had not ascended on high. (1)

The Comforter is called "the Spirit of truth." His work is to define and maintain the truth. He first dwells in the heart as the Spirit of truth, and thus he becomes the Comforter. There is comfort and peace in the truth, but no real peace or comfort can be found in falsehood. It is through false theories and traditions that Satan gains his power over the mind. By directing men to false standards, he misshapes the character. Through the Scriptures the Holy Spirit speaks to the mind, and impresses truth upon the heart. Thus he exposes error, and expels it from the soul. It is by the Spirit of truth, working through the Word of God, that Christ subdues his chosen people to himself.

(1) In describing to his disciples the office work of the Holy Spirit, Jesus sought to inspire them with the joy and hope that inspired his own heart. He rejoiced because of the abundant help he had provided for his church. The Holy Spirit was the highest of all gifts that he could solicit from his Father for the exaltation of his people. The Spirit was to be given as a regenerating agent, and without this the sacrifice of Christ would have been of no avail. The power of evil had been strengthening for centuries, and the submission of men to this satanic captivity was amazing. Sin could be resisted and overcome only through the mighty agency of the third person of the Godhead, who would come with no modified energy, but in the fulness of divine power. It is the Spirit that makes effectual what has been wrought out by the world's Redeemer. (3) It is by the Spirit that the heart is made pure. Through the Spirit the believer becomes a partaker of the divine nature. Christ has given his Spirit as a divine power to overcome all hereditary and cultivated tendencies to evil, and to impress his own character on his church.

Of the Spirit, Jesus said, "He shall glorify me." The Saviour came to glorify the Father by the demonstration of his love; so the Spirit was to glorify Christ by revealing his grace to the world. The very image of God is to be reproduced in humanity. The honor of God, the honor of Christ, is involved in the perfection of the character of his people.

"When he [the Spirit of truth] is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." The preaching of the Word will be of no avail without the continual presence and aid of the Holy Spirit. This is the only effectual teacher of divine truth. Only when the truth is accompanied to the heart by the Spirit, will it quicken the conscience or transform the life. One might be able to present the letter of the Word of God, he might be familiar with all its commands and promises; but unless the Holy Spirit sets home the truth, no souls will fall on the Rock and be broken. No amount of education, no advantages, however great, can make one a channel of light without the co-operation of the Spirit of God. The sowing of the gospel seed will not be a success unless the seed is quickened into life by the dew of heaven.

THE DARLING RANGE SCHOOL, WEST AUSTRALIA, RECENTLY ESTABLISHED

Before one book of the New Testament was written, before one gospel sermon had been preached after Christ's ascension, the Holy Spirit came upon the praying apostles. Then the testimony of their enemies was, "Ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine."

(1) Christ has promised the gift of the Holy Spirit to his church, and the promise belongs to us as much as to the first disciples. But like every other promise, it is given on conditions. There are many who believe and profess to claim the Lord's promise; they talk about Christ and the Holy Spirit, yet receive no benefit. They do not surrender the soul to be guided and controlled by divine agencies. We can not use the Holy Spirit. The Spirit is to use us. Through the Spirit God works in his people "to will and to do of his good pleasure." But many will not submit to this. They want to manage themselves. This is why they do not receive the heavenly gift. Only to those who wait humbly upon God, who watch for his guidance and grace, is the Spirit given. The power of God awaits their demand and reception. This promised blessing, claimed by faith, brings all other blessings in its train. It is given according to the riches of the grace of Christ, and he is ready to supply every soul according to the capacity to receive.

When the Spirit of God takes possession of the heart, it transforms the life. Sinful thoughts are put away, evil deeds are renounced; love, humility, and peace take the place of anger, envy, and strife. Joy takes the place of sadness, and the countenance reflects the joy of heaven. No one sees the hand that lifts the burden, or beholds the light descend from the courts above. The blessing comes (2) when by faith the soul surrenders itself to God. Then that power which no human eye can see, creates a new being in the image of God.

The Holy Spirit is the breath of spiritual life in the soul. The impartation of the Spirit is the impartation of the life of Christ. It imbues the receiver with the attributes of Christ. Only those who are thus taught of God, those who possess the inward working of the Spirit, and in whose life the Christ-life is manifested, are to stand as representative men, to minister in behalf of the church.

The religion that comes from God is the only religion that will lead to God. In order to serve him aright, we must be born of the divine Spirit. This will purify the heart and renew the mind, giving us a new capacity for knowing and loving God. It will give us a will- (2) ing obedience to all his requirements. This is true worship. It is the fruit of the working of the Holy Spirit. By the Spirit every sincere prayer is indited, and such prayer is acceptable to God. Wherever a soul reaches out after God, there the Spirit's working is manifest, and God will reveal himself to that soul. For such worshipers he is seeking. He waits to receive them, and to make them his sons and daughters.

God takes men as they are, and educates them for his service, if they will yield themselves to him. The Spirit of God, received into the soul, will quicken all its faculties. Under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, the mind that is devoted unreservedly to God, develops harmoniously, and is strengthened to comprehend and fulfil the requirements of God. The weak, vacillating character becomes changed to one of strength and steadfastness. Continual devotion establishes so close a relation between Jesus and his disciple that the Christian becomes like him in mind and character. Through a connection with Christ he will have clearer and broader views. His discernment will be more penetrative, his judgment better balanced. He who longs to be of service to Christ is so quickened by the life-giving power of the Sun of Righteousness that he is enabled to bear much fruit to the glory of God.

(3) The first disciples went forth preaching the Word. They revealed Christ in their lives. And the Lord worked with them, "confirming the word with signs following." These disciples prepared themselves for their work. Before the day of Pentecost they met together, and put away all differences. They were of one accord. They believed

(2) (3)

D.A. p. 671-672 (1); My Life Today, p. 46, 47

Christ's promise that the blessing would be given, and they prayed in faith. They did not ask for a blessing for themselves merely; they were weighted with the burden for the salvation of souls. The gospel was to be carried to the uttermost parts of the earth, and they claimed the endowment of power that Christ had promised. Then it was that the Holy Spirit was poured out, and thousands were converted in a day.

So it may be now. Instead of man's speculations, let the Word of God be preached. Let Christians put away their dissensions, and give themselves to God for the saving of the lost. Let them in faith ask for the blessing, and it will come. The outpouring of the Spirit in apostolic days was the "former rain," and glorious was the result. But the latter rain will be more abundant.

All who consecrate soul, body, and spirit to God, will be constantly receiving a new endowment of physical and mental power. The inexhaustible supplies of heaven are at their command. Christ gives them the breath of his own spirit, the life of his own life. The Holy Spirit puts forth its highest energies to work in heart and mind. The grace of God enlarges and multiplies their faculties, and every perfection of the divine nature comes to their assistance in the work of saving souls. Through co-operation with Christ they are complete in him, and in their human weakness they are enabled to do the deeds of Omnipotence.

Our Message to the World

Memory Verse: "Prepare to meet thy God." Amos 4:12.

- Jesus is coming again. John 14:1-3.
  - To reward his people. Matt. 16:27.
  - Coming with clouds. Acts 1:9-11.
  - With all the angels. Matt. 16:27; 25:31.
  - We know not the hour. Matt. 24:36.
  - May know when it is near. Matt. 24:33.
  - Signs of his coming. Matt. 24:29; Luke 21:25, 26; 2 Tim. 3:1-5.

Those whom Jesus will save when he comes will be keeping the commandments. Rev. 14:12; 22:12, 14.

Which one of the ten is not generally kept?

Repeat the fourth commandment.

How was the Sabbath made? Gen. 2:2, 3.

Jesus kept the Sabbath. Luke 4:16.

Paul and the other apostles kept the Sabbath. Acts 13:14-16.

The Bible nowhere says that Sunday is the Sabbath.

How to keep the Sabbath. Matt. 12:12; Isa. 58:13.

Our special work is to let the world know that Jesus is soon coming, and to point out the true Sabbath, asking every one to give his heart to the Lord and be ready when he shall appear.

A waiting company. Isa. 25:9.

An unprepared company. Rev. 6:15-17.

A Round-the-World Social Meeting

W. A. SPICER

(Reading for Friday, December 18)

God has given us a wonderful missionary facility in the universal postal system, by which we may keep in touch with one another in all this wide-spread work. Here are brethren, superintendents of great divisions of our field, waiting to speak to us to-night from across the seas. We seem almost to hear the tone of the voice, as the testimonies are borne. The hearts of the missionaries are with us in this annual season of praying and giving that means an uplift to the missionary cause in all the world.

First, we call on Scandinavia to speak, from out the regions of the far North. Elder J. C. Raft, the union conference president, responds:—

"'O give thanks unto Jehovah; for he is good; for his loving-kindness endureth forever.' For a time heavy clouds rested over Scandinavia. Then came the year 1901, when we organized the union conference. This proved a turning-point in our history. This field, once seemingly almost defeated by the enemy, has shaken off all the difficulties, taken new strongholds by storm, and is going on from victory to victory. All hearts are full of confidence and courage. But now we lack workers. As we look over Scandinavia, and hear the many Macedonian calls, our hearts ache. What we desire you to remember in prayer is this need of young, consecrated workers. We intend to go forward to eternal victory."

A VIEW INSIDE THE COURT OF THE HOUSE OF ONE OF THE TAMIL SABBATH-KEEPERS, SOUTHERN INDIA

Next, Elder J. W. Westphal, of the far South, speaks:—

"To our brethren and sisters throughout the world assembled in the annual week of prayer: Greeting. We are glad to report the onward march of the third angel's message in South America. We meet difficulties, and are sometimes saddened by apostasies; but ever our numbers increase, and the work spreads. Even persecution is creating new courage and hope. After many hard experiences, even to the threat of execution, because of his loyalty to the Sabbath of the Lord while in military service, our Brother Pedro Kalbermatten has, like Joseph of old, obtained favor from his superiors. He has been enabled to testify to the truth before many, both high and low. We are greatly cheered over the additional workers that have been sent us this year by the General Conference, and thank God for the liberal gifts of our brethren, which make such moves possible. Our brethren in South America are united heart and soul with our people of other lands, in their purpose and efforts to finish the work. Pray for us in the 'Neglected Continent.'"

After this word from Catholic lands, Elder W. S. Hyatt speaks of progress among heathen peoples:—

"We have an encouraging testimony to bear about the work in South African mission fields. The light of the third angel's message is spreading far and near. In Nyassaland the natives come long distances to our mission, many from the closed Portuguese territory. They learn something of the truth, and then return home, and tell it to their people. Our other missions are having similar experiences. Brother Moko writes that in Kafirland many are decidedly in favor of the truth. The Lord has also opened the way for our work among the great Zulu tribe in Natal and Zululand. Truly it is high time that the message be sent to this, the leading tribe in South Africa. Brethren, pray that God will send us a strong man to lead out among this great people, and that he will also give his servants power to reach the hearts of those in the deepest darkness of heathenism."

Elder J. L. Shaw will speak for another great heathen land:—

"Greetings from the workers in India. Our lives have all been spared the past year, and new ground has been gained. We have made a start in western India, Elder Geo. F. Enoch having located among the Marathi people. An entrance has been made among the Tamil Sabbath-keepers of South India, by Brother J. S. James and family. In their poverty, these Tamil people have given us land, and plead with us to begin school work. In the north, Elder W. W. Miller has entered Lucknow, the fourth

Jesus All the Way

MILO D. WARFLE

ARE you sometimes sore afflicted?
Jesus was afflicted too.
Are you to some sin addicted?
Jesus can deliver you.

Are you heavy burdens bearing?
Cast your burdens on the Lord.
Are you very near despairing?
Be encouraged by his Word.

Do your sins seem black as midnight?
Christ invites you to his side.
Do you want a life that's upright?
You with Jesus must abide.

Are you now your sins confessing?
Jesus bends a listening ear.
Are you pleading for his blessing?
He will your petition hear.

Then, dear one, look to your Saviour!
He's the one you need to-day.
He will save from misbehavior;
He will keep you all the way.

The Privileges and Duties of the Followers of Christ

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"BE ye therefore followers of God, as dear children; and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savor."

Christ gave his life that all who would might be freed from sin, and reinstated in the favor of the Creator. It was the anticipation of the redeemed, holy universe that prompted Christ to make this great sacrifice. Are we followers of God as dear children? or are we servants of the prince of darkness? [Are we worshipers of Jehovah, or of Baal? of the living God, or of idols? No outward shrines may be visible, there may be no (1) image for the eye to rest upon; yet we may be practising idolatry. It is as easy to make an idol of cherished ideas or objects as to fashion gods of wood or stone. Thousands have a false conception of God and his attributes. They are as verily serving a false god as were the servants of Baal.] God is a God of truth. Justice and mercy are the attributes of his throne. He is a God of love, of pity, and tender compassion. Thus he is represented in his Son, our Saviour. He is a God of patience and long-suffering. If such is the being whom we adore, and whose character we are seeking to imitate, we are worshiping the true God.

If we are following Christ, his merits, imputed to us, come up before the Father as sweet odor. And the graces of our Saviour's character, implanted in our hearts, will shed around us (1) a precious fragrance. The spirit of love, meekness, and forbearance, pervading our life, will have power to soften and subdue hard hearts, and win to Christ bitter opposers of the faith.

"God so loved . . . that he gave,"—"gave his only begotten Son,"—that we should not perish, but have everlasting life. "Christ . . . hath loved us, and hath given himself for us." If we love, we shall give. "Not to be ministered unto, but to minister," is the great lesson which we are to learn and to teach. Next to the angelic beings, the human family, formed in the image of God, are the noblest of his created works. God desires them to become all that he has made it possible for them to be, and to do their very best with the powers he has given them. Life is mysterious and sacred. It is the manifestation of God himself, the source of all life. Precious are its opportunities, and earnestly should they be improved.

"Ye were sometimes darkness," the apostle continues: "but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light (for the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth); proving what is acceptable unto the Lord. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Those who have learned of Christ will have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. In speech, as in life, they will be simple, straightforward, and true; for they are preparing for the fellowship of those holy ones in whose mouth "was found no guile."

Many are deceived as to their true condition before God. They congratulate themselves upon the wrong acts that they do not commit, and forget to enumerate the good and noble deeds which God requires of them, but which they have neglected to perform. It is not enough that they are trees in the garden of God. They are to answer his expectations by bearing fruit. He holds them accountable for their failure to accomplish all the good which they could have done, through his grace strengthening them. In the books of heaven they are registered as cumberers of the ground. Yet the case of this class is not utterly hopeless. With those who have slighted God's mercy and abused his grace, the heart of long-suffering love yet pleads. "Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. See then that ye walk circumspectly, . . . redeeming the time, because the days are evil."

The followers of Christ are to be coworkers with their Master; they must be "blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom," says Paul, "ye shine as lights in the world." We are to receive the bright beams from the Sun of Righteousness, and by our good works let them shine forth to others in clear, steady rays, never fitful, never growing dim. We can not be sure that we are doing no harm to those about us, unless we are exerting a positive influence to lead them heavenward.

This is a time when every member of the church should be waiting, watching, and working. Through faith in Christ we should be alive to God; and every man, woman, and child who has a knowledge of the truth should be able to discern the signs of the times. The weakness and inefficiency of the church must pass away. Creative power from above must impart life to the human agents whom God would use, that they may be able to co-operate with divine intelligences. The church to whom God has imparted this endowment of heavenly truth must not remain dead in trespasses and sins.

The True Witness, the Spirit of the living God, is inspecting the assembly of those who have had great spiritual light and advantages, and the testimony is that in the church of God there is great waste in energy misapplied, in talents perverted to wrong uses, in strength unemployed; and the abilities that God has bestowed upon his people are degenerating because they are not used for seeking and saving those who are lost. The world around us is stirred from beneath with earnest activity in evil works, but is apparently dead to all that pertains to their eternal interests. But although this seems to be the condition of those around us, and there is little to encourage us to hope for the conversion of souls, God requires those to whom he has committed his truth for these last days, to present the Word to the fallen children of Adam, both in the world and among the churches. We are to be waiting, watching, working. It is most inconsistent for the church, to whom has been opened the treasure of truth, to be dull, worldly, and indifferent. Casting away all unbelief, we should by faith put every capability and every power into exercise.

The command of God is addressed to all the members of the church to use their powers in his service. Though the instrument may be weak, it is the power of God that will accomplish the work. Paul may plant, and Apollos may water, but it is God who gives the increase. There is a great work to do; and the Spirit of the living God must enter into the living messenger, that the truth may go with power. Without the Holy Spirit, without the breath of God, there is torpidity of conscience, loss of spiritual life. Unless there is genuine conversion of the soul to God; unless the vital breath of God quickens the soul to spiritual life; unless the professors of truth are actuated by heaven-born principles, they are not born of the incorruptible seed, which liveth and abideth forever. Unless they trust in the righteousness of Christ as their only security; unless they copy his character, labor in his spirit, they are naked; they have not on the robe of righteousness. The dead are often made to pass for the living; for those who are working out what they term salvation after their own ideas, have not God working in them to will and to do of his good pleasure.

Commentary, Vol. 1 p. 1105

It is an eternal law of Jehovah that he who accepts the truth is to make it his first work to proclaim the truth. But who is it that makes the burden of perishing sinners his own? Among God's people to-day there is a fearful lack of the sympathy that should be felt for souls unsaved. We talk of Christian missions, the sound of our voice is heard; but do we feel Christ's tender heart-longing for those outside the fold? Unless our hearts beat in unison with the heart of Christ, how can we understand the sacredness and importance of the work to which we are called by the words, "Watch for . . . souls, as they that must give account"?

God is waiting for men and women to awake to their responsibilities. He is waiting for them to link themselves with him. Let them mark the signal of advance, and no longer be laggards in working out the will of the Lord.

Let the gospel message ring through our churches, summoning them to universal action. Let the members of the church have increased faith, gaining zeal from their unseen, heavenly allies, from a knowledge of their exhaustless resources, from the greatness of the enterprise in which they are engaged, and from the power of their Leader. Those who place themselves under God's control, to be led and guided by him, will catch the steady trend of the events ordained by him to take place. Inspired by the Spirit of him who gave his life for the life of the world, they will no longer stand still in impotency, pointing to what they can not do. Putting on the armor of heaven, they will go forth to the warfare, willing to do and dare for God, knowing that his omnipotence will supply their need.

At the Time Appointed the End Shall Be—No. 2

GEORGE I. BUTLER

In the preceding article, we reached the explanation of the vision of Daniel 8, of which the Lord had said, "Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision." Gabriel had explained concerning the symbol-beasts representing Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome, but had not explained to Daniel the period of twenty-three hundred prophetic days, or years. He had now come fully to explain the meaning of that period and its subdivisions. He begins where he left off in the eighth chapter. He says no more about the beast-symbols, which he had explained, but takes up the time-period at once. "Seventy weeks are determined ["decreed," A. R. V.] upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy. Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate ["upon the desolator," margin]." Dan. 9: 24-27.

These words fully complete all the explanation ever given to Daniel. If they do not fully explain the prophetic period of twenty-three hundred days, then it never has been explained, and Gabriel did not do what he was commanded to do. This, of course, we can not believe. Therefore, we conclude that the explanation here given contains all the information necessary for an understanding of this prophetic period.

The explanation starts out with a very important statement: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people," "the holy city," etc. Here we learn that Daniel's people have appointed to them seventy weeks of this period. The expression being symbolic, it really means that four hundred ninety years of this period was allotted to the Jewish nation, after which the Gentiles were to have the same blessings as they.

The Hebrew word nehhtak, here rendered determined in the Authorized Version, is defined by Gesenius, in his Hebrew Lexicon, "properly, to cut off." In other words the text would literally read, "Seventy weeks are cut off upon thy people and upon the holy city," etc. This is the literal meaning. Cut off from what? — From the long prophetic period of twenty-three hundred prophetic days, which Gabriel was explaining to Daniel. There was nothing else mentioned from which this period could be "cut off." In other words, four hundred ninety years of the twenty-three hundred years were devoted to Daniel's people, the Jews, and their holy city. Eighteen hundred ten years would remain in the Christian dispensation, till the cleansing, or justifying, of the sanctuary began, as mentioned in Dan. 8: 14, margin, the scripture Gabriel was explaining to the prophet.

Then the angel explains especially that portion of the twenty-three hundred years allotted to the Jews: "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the decree to restore [or "build again Jerusalem," margin] and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times." Verse 25. Here Gabriel divides the four hundred ninety years allotted to the Jews and the holy city: the seven weeks, or forty-nine years, and the sixty-two weeks, or four hundred thirty-four years, making four hundred eighty-three years of the four hundred ninety, reaching to the Messiah's announcement, one week of years being unappropriated till later. We wish, then, to ascertain when the decree went forth; or rather, when it went into effect. There is only one date to which this must apply. The record is found in Ezra 7: 13. Here Artaxerxes, king of Persia, gave such a decree for the restoration of Jerusalem, the temple, and the whole Jewish polity. "I make a decree," announces the great king. Let the reader study this decree, and he will see that it authorizes all these steps. Let him notice also the chronology of this chapter, 457 B. C., in the fall of the year, when Ezra and his company reached Jerusalem, and the work of restoration began. The whole period of twenty-three hundred prophetic days would, therefore, reach to the fall of the year 1844, A. D.

But let us notice Gabriel's explanation of the first four hundred ninety years of this period allotted to the Jewish church. The first seven weeks, or forty-nine years, was allotted to the building of the city and the temple, and to the restoration of the Jewish polity. Dean Prideaux, in his "Historical Connection," states that this period was exactly forty-nine years. This authority is perfectly reliable. This forty-nine years, added to the sixty-two weeks (four hundred thirty-four years), making in all four hundred eighty-three years, was to reach to the Messiah the Prince. From the going forth of the decree in the fall of the year 457 B. C., it is exactly four hundred eighty-three years to the fall of A. D. 27. Christ was then baptized by John the Baptist in the river Jordan. The Spirit of God there came down upon him in the form of a dove, and God's voice was heard saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Matt. 3: 17.

In the first sermon Christ preached after this event, he said, "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel." Thus God fulfils his prophetic word. What time was this which was fulfilled? — It can be none other than this one given by Gabriel to Daniel. The word Messiah in the Hebrew (Christos in the Greek) means the Anointed One. He became the Anointed One when the Holy Spirit came down upon him at his baptism. Then he began his work of preaching the gospel. He had not preached to the people before, but had led a quiet life at Nazareth, working at the carpenter's trade. He was thus anointed for his special work, as he was then thirty years old, the age fixed by the law for officials to enter upon their work. "That word . . . was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached; how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him." Acts 10: 37, 38.

Christian Work

J. F. OLMSTED

THE blessed hope of Christ's return
To this dark world of woe
Should give us hope and joy and peace
To labor here below,
That souls may hear and ready be
For that momentous day,
When earth shall yield God's chosen few
Whose sins are washed away.

What nobler aim or greater work
Could man devise to do,
Than warn the world of coming doom,
And help the faithful, too?
Like Jonah bold in Nineveh
Proclaiming truth with power,
Let us awake to speak the truth,
And not in weakness cower.

The autumn days of earthly life
Can not mistaken be:
The time is short for you to work,
And short it is for me.
So we should work as ne'er before,
While it is called To-day;
O labor now for souls in sin,
And garner sheaves away!

The Mutual Obligations of Husband and Wife

MRS. E. G. WHITE

CONCERNING the obligations resting upon husbands and wives, and the attitude they should sustain to each other, the apostle Paul writes: “Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is head of the church: and he is the savior of the body. Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. So ought men to love their wives.”

(1) Like every other one of God's good gifts entrusted to the keeping of humanity, marriage has been perverted by sin; but it is the purpose of the gospel to restore its purity and beauty. In both the Old and the New Testament the marriage relation is employed to represent the tender and sacred union that exists between Christ and his people, the redeemed ones whom he has purchased at the cost of Calvary. “Fear not,” he says; “thy Maker is thine husband; the Lord of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel.” “Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you.”

Paul, writing to the Ephesian Christians, declares that the Lord has constituted the husband the head of the wife, to be her protector, the house-band, binding the members of the family together, even as Christ is the head of the church, and the savior of the mystical body. Therefore he says: “As the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church.”

(1) The grace of Christ, and this alone, can make this institution what God designed it should be,— an agent for the blessing and uplifting of humanity. And thus the families of earth, in their unity and peace and love, may represent the family of heaven. The condition of society presents a sad comment upon heaven's ideal of this sacred relation. Yet even for those who have found bitterness and disappointment where they had hoped for companionship and joy, the gospel of Christ offers a solace. The patience and gentleness which his Spirit can impart, will sweeten the bitter lot. The heart in which Christ dwells will be so filled, so satisfied, with his love that it will not be consumed with longing to attract sympathy and attention to itself. And through the surrender of the soul to God, his wisdom can accomplish what human wisdom fails to do. Through the revelation of his grace, hearts that were once indifferent or estranged may be united in bonds that are firmer and more enduring than those of earth,— the golden bonds of a love that will bear the test of trial.

However carefully and wisely marriage may have been entered into, few couples are completely united when the marriage ceremony is performed. The real union of the two in wedlock is the work of the after-years.

As life, with its burden of perplexity and care, meets the newly wedded pair, the romance with which imagination so often invests marriage disappears. Husband and wife learn each other's character as it was impossible to learn it in their previous association. This is a most critical period in their experience. The happiness and usefulness of their whole future life depend upon their taking a right course now. Often they discover in each other unsuspected weaknesses and defects; but the hearts that love has united will discern excellences also heretofore unknown. Let all seek to discover the excellences rather than the defects. Often it is our own attitude, the atmosphere that surrounds ourselves, which determines what will be revealed to us in another. There are many who regard the expression of love as a weakness, and they maintain a reserve that repels others. This spirit checks the current of sympathy. As the social and generous impulses are repressed, they wither, and the heart becomes desolate and cold. We should beware of this error. Love can not long exist without expression. Let not the heart of one connected with you starve for the want of kindness and sympathy.

Though difficulties, perplexities, and discouragements may arise, let neither husband nor wife harbor the thought that their union is a mistake or a disappointment. Determine to be all that it is possible to be to each other. Continue the early attentions. In every way encourage each other in fighting the battles of life. Study to advance the happiness of each other. Let there be mutual love, mutual forbearance. Then marriage, instead of being the end of love, will be as it were the very beginning of love. The warmth of true friendship, the love that binds heart to heart, is a foretaste of the joys of heaven.

Let each give love, rather than exact it. Cultivate that which is noblest in yourselves, and be quick to recognize the good qualities in each other. The consciousness of being appreciated is a wonderful stimulus and satisfaction. Sympathy and respect encourage the striving after excellence, and love itself increases as it stimulates to nobler aims.

Neither the husband nor the wife should merge his or her individuality in that of the other. Each has a personal relation to God. Of him each is to ask, “What is right?” “What is wrong?” “How may I best fulfil life's purpose?” Let the wealth of your affection flow forth to him who gave his life for you. Make Christ first and last and best in everything. As your love for him becomes deeper and stronger, your love for each other will be purified and strengthened.

The spirit that Christ manifests toward us is the spirit that husband and wife are to manifest toward each other. “As Christ also hath loved us,” “walk in love.” “As the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it.”

Neither the husband nor the wife should attempt to exercise over the other an arbitrary control. Do not try to compel each other to yield to your wishes. You can not do this and retain each other's love. Be kind, patient and forbearing, considerate and courteous. By the grace of God you can succeed in making each other happy, as in your marriage vow you promised to do.

Forbearance and unselfishness mark the words and acts of all who live the new life in Christ. As you seek to live his life, striving to conquer self and selfishness, and to minister to the needs of others, you will gain victory after victory. Thus your influence will bless the world.

Men and women can reach God's ideal for them if they will take Christ as their helper. What human wisdom can not do, his grace will accomplish for those who give themselves to him in loving trust. His providence can unite hearts in bonds that are of heavenly origin. Love will not be a mere exchange of soft and flattering words. The loom of heaven weaves with warp and woof finer, yet more firm, than can be woven by the looms of earth. The result is not a tissue fabric, but a texture that will bear wear and test and trial. Heart will be bound to heart in the golden bonds of a love that is enduring.

Beyond the Border-Line of Life —No. 1

G. B. THOMPSON

"Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth as a flower, and is cut down." A few brief years constitute the span of the longest life, and man is gathered in by the grim reaper. What lies beyond the grave has always been of interest to man.

Beyond the portals of the tomb, no footsteps have ever passed to explore its dark and mysterious regions. The veil of the future never swings outward, to permit even a glance into this unknown realm. No traveler has ever returned from the regions of this mysterious bourne to unfold to curious ears its secrets.

It is quite true that the Deity, before whom the present and the future are outspread, has made a revelation concerning the future of man. He has pulled aside, as it were, the veil which separates between the present and the future, and which has thus far effectually repelled the most persistent scrutiny of man, and opened, to the gaze of those who believe, what is beyond the border-line, not only for the righteous, but for the wicked as well. One would suppose that a revelation of such absorbing interest would have been welcomed, and the knowledge imparted gladly received. But, no; blinded through unbelief, men have set aside the knowledge of the most high God, closed their eyes, and continued to grope in darkness. And, strange to say, while seeking through worldly wisdom to find the door, they boast of their ignorance.

But for years science has been seeking in various ways to fathom the depths of the unknowable, and of late has sought to drop the plummet into the dark abyss of futurity, and find, if possible, the bottom. Under the title of "Beyond the Border-Line of Life," in the September and October issues of Van Norden's Magazine, Mr. Gustavus Myers gives to the world what he claims to be the latest explorations and conclusive deductions of science. The articles are intended to show that science has established, by a "mass of absolutely verified facts," the claims of modern Spiritualism that the dead are conscious, and have been materialized, handled, talked with, and even photographed.

The editor prefaces these articles with the information that "while science has reversed itself as regards its attitude toward metaphysical phenomena, its new position is taken as the most reasonable hypothesis — which subsequent empirical knowledge must substantiate — by which to explain certain happenings not explainable on natural grounds."

Many eminent scientific luminaries are mentioned, who have been making research upon this question. Among these are Professor Schiaparelli, who discovered canals on Mars; Prof. Pierre Janet, a French writer on criminology; Gaelotti, professor of pathology in the University of Naples; and numerous other writers of note. "This," the author of these articles says, "is a scientific age, when none but absolutely authentic facts are held worthy of consideration. That science has been able by infinite patience to explore into a domain far removed from our customary senses, is its greatest triumph so far." He further states, however, that "all these men do not agree as to absolute conclusions," but that "they are a unit on one point, which is that they no longer believe, as they had thought and taught for years, that physical death ends our life."

From this we learn that science has reversed its former conclusions, and taken an entirely new position. Then who knows that this new position is correct, and that further scientific investigation may not lead to other "absolute conclusions," and the position of science again be shifted? But upon this movable and sandy foundation we are asked to build our hopes and plans concerning our eternal future. Their positions remind us of the story of the Irish barrister who soberly told his lordship that if he was wrong in this hypothesis, he had another equally conclusive. For centuries science has guessed its way in this matter, and now, in the light of more recent research, reverses its verdict of the past. Scientists have arrived through experiments and investigations to the conclusion that "physical death" does not end life. Formerly "no scientific proof was adduced that the spirit, which guides the body, did not die with the body; to all appearance it flickered out with the passing of physical life. Since no evidence to the contrary was presented, science regarded this religious belief as a superstition."

By "physical death" not ending life, science means "a continuation of consciousness, a survival of that mysterious thing which we call intelligence, spirit, or soul." Through what they call a "mass of absolutely verified facts" of "occult phenomena," proof has been furnished concerning "corporeal persons" and "disembodied beings" who communicate with the living, and thus demonstrate the uninterrupted consciousness of man beyond the border-line.

But the fact that there are "disembodied beings" is the point at issue, for which we desire some other evidence than the "facts" of what is called "occult phenomena." This is a vague and undefined term. To the savage, thunder and lightning may be "occult phenomena," while to the more enlightened they may be perfectly understood. The Bible says, "The dead know not anything." Eccl. 9:5, 6. We prefer to believe this statement from the infallible Word, which will "stand fast forever and ever," rather than the "facts" of a science which "has reversed itself" after more careful investigation.

It is by such teaching that modern Spiritualism will be able to ensnare the world in its terrible web of deception, and lead men to perdition at last. That there is life beyond the tomb by means of the resurrection, we firmly believe; but that "physical death" does not interrupt consciousness, in the face of all the so-called facts of scientific investigation, we most positively deny.

Events at the Close of the 2300 Year-Days

GEORGE I. BUTLER

This prophetic period is not only much the longest period of the Bible, but by far the most important and all-embracing. It covers the years between the height of the world-empire of the Medo-Persians, embracing the world-wide Grecian and Roman empires, till the beginning of the investigative judgment in heaven, preceding the second advent of our Lord Jesus Christ.

It gives us, as explained by Gabriel, the exact time when the city of Jerusalem and the civil polity of the Jewish nation would be restored; and the year when Jesus would go forth in his work as the Messiah, proclaiming the gospel; the time when he would be put to death by the Jews and Romans; the time when the Jews would lose their special privileges as a nation, which they had enjoyed for fifteen centuries, and the Gentiles would be offered the gospel on terms of perfect equality with that favored nation. The period closes with the announcement, "The hour of his judgment is come." Who can contemplate the importance of such a prophetic prediction without wonder and astonishment?

At the risk of being accused of repetition, the writer will briefly rehearse the angel's explanation to Daniel of the meaning of this great prophetic period, because of the importance of an understanding of this subject. The beginning of this prophetic chain was the "going forth" of the decree to restore and build Jerusalem. It was the well-established historical date of 457 B. C., in the autumn of the year, when Ezra the prophet, and his large company, reached Jerusalem to carry forward the work of repairing the temple and city. From this point, it was to be seven weeks of years — that is, forty-nine years — till the city, wall, temple, and Jewish polity should be fully restored. The reliable historian, Dean Prideaux, in his important historical record of the events between the close of the canon of the Old Testament and the beginning of the New Testament, clearly states that it was precisely forty-nine years till these were fully restored. The angel declared that seven weeks and threescore and two weeks, that is, sixty-nine weeks (or four

Divide the loaf in portions with the knife,
For who but God can tell what may befall?
Ere night it may be thou who needs must call
Upon thy neighbor for sustaining life.
A good deed done is never, never lost;
Though it be spent, it still doth truly earn.
Bread cast upon the waters will return,
Though many days upon the billows tossed.
But that which, scattered, doth the most increase
Is God's own Word of life, which, in the heart,
Is planted, grows, and yields its hundredfold,
And unto hungry souls it brings such peace
As only God's own Spirit can impart,
A blessing of more worth than mines of gold.

The Conflict and the Victory

MRS. E. G. WHITE

There are many who do not understand the conflict that is going on between Christ and Satan over the souls of men. They do not realize that if they would stand under the blood-stained banner of Prince Emmanuel, they must be willing to be partakers of his conflicts, and wage a determined war against the powers of darkness. (1)

When thinking on the conflict, Paul writes to his Ephesian brethren exhorting them to "be strong," not feeble, not wavering, tossed to and fro like the waves of the sea. But in what are they to be strong? In their own might? — No. "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." He says, "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

The gaining of eternal life will ever involve a struggle, a conflict. We are continually to be found fighting the good fight of faith. We are soldiers of Christ; and those who enlist in his army are expected to do difficult work, work which will tax their energies to the utmost. We must understand that a soldier's life is one of aggressive warfare, of perseverance and endurance. For Christ's sake we are to endure trials.

Victories are not gained by ceremonies or display, but by simple obedience to the highest General, the Lord God of heaven. He who trusts in this Leader will never know defeat. Obedience to God is liberty from the thraldom of sin, deliverance from human passion and impulse. Man may stand conqueror of himself, conqueror of his own inclinations, conqueror of principalities and powers, and of the "rulers of the darkness of this world," and of "spiritual wickedness in high places."

From the days of Adam to our own time, our great enemy has been exercising his power to oppress and destroy. He is now preparing for his last campaign against the church. All who seek to follow Jesus will be brought into conflict with this relentless foe. The more nearly the Christian imitates the divine Pattern, the more surely will he make himself a mark for the attacks of Satan. All who are actively engaged in the cause of God, seeking to unveil the deceptions of the evil one, and to present Christ before the people, will be able to join in the testimony of Paul, in which he speaks of serving the Lord with all humility of mind, with many tears and temptations.

Satan assailed Christ with the fiercest and most subtle temptations; but he was repulsed in every conflict. Those battles were fought in our behalf; those victories made it possible for us to conquer. Christ will give strength to all who seek it. No man without his own consent can be overcome by Satan. The tempter has no power to control the will or force the soul to sin. He may distress, but he can not contaminate. He can cause agony, but not defilement. The fact that Christ has conquered should inspire his followers with courage to fight manfully the battle against sin and Satan.

[Now the church is militant, now we are confronted with a world in midnight darkness, almost wholly given over to idolatry. But the day is coming in which the battle will have been fought, the victory won. The will of God is to be done on earth, as it is done in heaven. Then the nations will own no other law than the law of heaven. All will be a happy, united family, clothed with the garments of praise and thanksgiving,— the robe of Christ's righteousness. All nature in its surpassing loveliness will offer to God a constant tribute of praise and adoration. The world will be bathed in the light of heaven. The years will move on in gladness. The light of the moon will be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun will be sevenfold greater than it is now. Over the scene the morning stars will sing together, and the sons of God will shout for joy, while Christ and God will unite in proclaiming, "There shall be no more sin, neither shall there be any more death."]

This is the scene that is presented to me. But the church must and will fight against seen and unseen foes. Satanic agencies in human form are on the ground. Men have confederated to oppose the Lord of hosts. These confederacies will continue until Christ shall leave his place of intercession before the mercy-seat, and shall put on the garments of vengeance. Satanic agencies are in every city, busily organizing into parties those opposed to the law of God. Professed saints and avowed unbelievers take their stand with these parties. This is no time for the people of God to be weaklings. We can not afford to be off our guard for one moment.

"Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God."

"This I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offense till the day of Christ; being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God."

"Let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ: . . . stand fast in one spirit, . . . striving together for the faith of the gospel; and in nothing terrified by your adversaries: which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God. For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake."

There are revealed in these last days visions of future glory, scenes pictured by the hand of God, and these should be dear to his church. What sustained the Son of God in his betrayal and trial? — He saw of the travail of his soul, and was satisfied. He caught a view of the expanse of eternity, and saw the happiness of those who through his humiliation should receive pardon and everlasting life. He was wounded for their transgressions, bruised for their iniquities. The chastisement of their peace was upon him, and with his stripes they were healed. His ear caught the shout of the redeemed. He heard the ransomed ones singing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

We must have a view of the future, and of the blessedness of heaven. Stand on the threshold of eternity, and hear the gracious welcome given to those who in this life have co-operated with Christ, regarding it as a privilege and an honor to suffer for his sake. As they unite with the angels, they cast their crowns at the feet of their Redeemer, exclaiming, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. . . . Honor and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."

Commentary, Vol. 7 p. 988 (1)

There the redeemed ones greet those who directed them to the uplifted Saviour. They unite in praising him who died that human beings might have the life that measures with the life of God. The conflict is over. All tribulation and strife are at an end. Songs of victory fill all the heaven as the redeemed stand around the throne of God. All take up the joyful strain, "Worthy, worthy is the Lamb that was slain, and lives again, a triumphant conqueror."

"I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb."

"These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth upon the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." "And there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

Will you catch the inspiration of the vision? Will you let your mind dwell upon the picture?

Beyond the Border-Line of Life— No. 2

G. B. THOMPSON

For ages the voice of Jehovah has given instruction concerning the life of man beyond the portals of the tomb. The Bible knows nothing of a "continuation of consciousness" or the "survival of that mysterious thing which we call intelligence" between death and the resurrection. But to death-stricken humanity the Lord proclaims hope in the following words: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. 26:19. Death is an enemy; the grave is its prison-house. But since reaching the throne of glory and being seated by the right hand of the Father, the Saviour has sent back to those who walk in the valley of the shadow of death the cheering message, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death."

But the truth upon this great question has not been discovered by science. Divine truth is not found through scientific research. Recent investigation has caused scientists to take a "new position," in which "certain happenings not explainable on natural grounds," are taken to prove that man is conscious in death. There is still a "new position" for science to take before it will be on the platform of truth.

Mr. Gustavus Myers, in the September issue of Van Norden's Magazine, classifies the "occult phenomena" seen in spiritualistic seances, which have caused science to take a "new position," as follows: "What is the nature of the phenomena the substantiation of which has compelled science to throw away much of its old teachings as so much rubbish? — They are of various kinds, apparently dissociated, but fundamentally all manifestations of the same invisible power. They come under two general classes — intellectual and physical phenomena. In turn, these two classes embrace seven orders — telepathy, clairvoyance, materialization, levitation, automatic or trance writing and talking, clairaudience, and possession. Again, in turn, each of these groups has a number of subdivisions. All these phenomena are strictly beyond the range of the normal senses, and are not subject to the operation of any known law. In fact, they contravene and overthrow all hitherto known so-called cosmic laws. They seem to be subject to the law of another cosmos."

Some of these terms may be slightly bewildering to the average reader; but under whatever name the medium may choose to operate, there are the same phenomena, and the same power is at work.

Concerning these "psychic manifestations" he says: "Under certain favorable, but thoroughly tested circumstances, they [certain disembodied personalities] have been seen, touched, heard, or felt, and some of them frequently photographed."

Again, he says: "Assuming that many of the great scientists are correct in their hypothesis of a spirit life beyond the mundane, and that when we die, we become instantly metamorphosed into spirits, we do not know why it is that these discarnate beings select certain embodied persons as a means of transmitting messages or giving other manifestations."

It seems quite correct to assume that if we are alive after we die, it is reasonable that we should communicate with the living. But whether or not those who have died are still living as "discarnate beings" is the point at issue, and this can not be assumed. That this assumption is not correct, we have the sure Word of the Lord, which says: "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 3, 4. With us this is a more certain foundation than all the speculations of science since the world began. If these renowned scientists would lay aside their wisdom, and investigate the origin of sin and the fall of man from the standpoint of the Bible, believing what Jehovah has revealed, a light would be shed upon these mysterious phenomena which would dispel the darkness, and would show that the power which is operating is not that of "disembodied intelligences," but of fallen angels, who, because of sin, lost their abode in the realms of light, and are now engaged in their last effort to deceive souls. But the Scriptures speak of some who are "willingly ignorant."

That the greatest scholars of the world are being deceived by the manifestations of Spiritualism in its various forms, shows the power of this great deception, and how it is preparing speedily to sweep the world into the vortex of ruin. Concerning the rise of modern Spiritualism Mr. Myers says: —

"Not until 1847 did the modern psychical movement begin. It had its origin in the manifestations displayed in the presence of two American girls, the Fox sisters, Margaret and Katherine, then living in the town of Arcadia, N. Y. In that year, they began to hear strange noises and see strange forms. These phenomena, it became certain, were not produced by human causes. The Fox sisters asserted that they soon learned by raps to communicate with invisible intelligences whom they called spirits. The age was a severely incredulous one; the wave of materialism was at its height; and the claim of the Fox sisters met with general derision."

Some of the manifestations as seen in the seance will be described next week.

Deception

July 12, 1843, Joseph Smith claimed that he received a revelation authorizing polygamy. But before this date a few members of the Mormon Church had been guilty of the practise. This fact being whispered about, much scandal was created, but the imputation was strenuously denied in public. And in an address delivered in England (as reported in 6 Mil. Star. 22), Mr. Pratt, one of the "twelve apostles," said: —

"Beware of seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, as first introduced by John C. Bennett, under the name of 'spiritual wife' doctrine. . . . It is but another name for whoredom, wicked and unlawful connection, and every kind of confusion and abomination. Should any elder or member come unto you professing to hold any such doctrine or practise, either secretly or publicly, you may be sure that he is not of God; . . . for know assuredly that no one has been authorized to teach, practise, or introduce any such doctrine in any branches of the church, neither is there any such doctrine known, held, or practised as a principle of the Latter-day Saints."

This official and "apostolic" denial was published in England two years after the revelation authorizing polygamy; but they now confess on oath that

The Spirit of God

L. D. SANTEE

"In the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh." Acts 2: 17.

In vain do ye seek to behold him,
When ye dwell from his Spirit apart;
The heights of the heavens can not hold him,
Yet he dwells with the lowly in heart —
Whose hope is the brightest in trial,
Whose zeal to the end will endure,
With a faith that will take no denial,
A love that is changeless and pure.

All those who are "led by the Spirit,"
Obeying his infinite word,
Shall the riches of heaven inherit,
And "enter the joy of their Lord."
Their lives have been faithful to duty;
Soon they'll sit with their Lord on his throne;
They will see the fair King in his beauty,
When the portals wide open are thrown.

Like the song of a bird that yet lingers
When in distance the singer has flown,
Or a harp, 'neath the zephyr's light fingers,
My heart claims that promise its own;
And I plead, looking up to the splendor
That circles the infinite throne,
"In the name of Christ, holy and tender,
O make thy sweet spirit my own!"

He hears, and regards my petition,
His Spirit is sent from above;
Faith looks to a happy fruition,
My soul thrills with holiest love;
And a peace that is pure as a river,
That the Master in love will impart,
Enters into my being, forever
To make its abode in my heart.

Grace and Faith the Gifts of God

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The grace of Christ and his righteousness are offered to men as a free gift. The apostle Paul, writing by the Holy Spirit, says: "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ (by grace ye are saved), and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God."

The thought that the righteousness of Christ is imputed to us, not because of any merit on our part, but as a free gift from God, is a precious thought. The enemy of God and man is not willing that this truth should be clearly presented; for he knows that if the people receive it fully, his power will be broken. If he can control minds, so that doubt and unbelief and darkness shall compose the experience of those who claim to be the children of God, he can overcome them with temptation. The simple faith that takes God at his word should be encouraged. God's people must have that faith which will lay hold of divine power; "for by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." Those who believe that God for Christ's sake has forgiven their sins should not, through temptation, fail to press on to fight the good fight of faith. Their faith should grow stronger until their Christian life, as well as their words, shall declare, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

Faith is trusting God,— believing that he loves us, and knows best what is for our good. Thus instead of our own way, it leads us to choose his way. In place of our ignorance, it accepts his wisdom; in place of our weakness, his strength; in place of our sinfulness, his righteousness. Our lives, ourselves, are already his; faith acknowledges his ownership and accepts its blessing. Truth, uprightness, purity, have been pointed out as secrets of life's success. It is faith that puts us in possession of these principles. Every good impulse or aspiration is the gift of God; faith receives from God the life that alone can produce true growth and efficiency.

How to exercise faith should be made very plain. To every promise of God there are conditions. If we are willing to do his will, all his strength is ours. Whatever gift he promises is in the promise itself. "The seed is the word of God." As surely as the oak is in the acorn, so surely is the gift of God in his promise. If we receive the promise, we have the gift.

Faith that enables us to receive God's gifts, is itself a gift, of which some measure is imparted to every human being. It grows as it is exercised in appropriating the Word of God. In order to strengthen faith, we must often bring it in contact with the Word.

How often those who trusted the Word of God, though in themselves utterly helpless, have withstood the power of the whole world,— Enoch, pure in heart, holy in life, holding fast his faith in the triumph of righteousness, against a corrupt and scoffing generation; Noah and his household against the men of his time, men of the greatest physical and mental strength and the most debased in morals; the children of Israel at the Red Sea, a helpless, terrified multitude of slaves, against the mightiest army of the mightiest nation on the globe; David, a shepherd lad, having God's promise of the throne, against Saul, the established monarch, bent on holding fast his power; Shadrach and his companions in the fire, against Nebuchadnezzar on the throne; Daniel among the lions, against his enemies in the high places of the kingdom; Jesus on the cross, against the Jewish priests and rulers forcing even the Roman governor to work their will; Paul in chains, led to a criminal's death, against Nero, the despot of the world's empire.

Such examples are not found in the Bible alone. They abound in every record of human progress. The Vaudois and the Hugenots, Wyclif and Huss, Jerome and Luther, Tyndale and Knox, Zinzendorf and Wesley, with multitudes of others, have witnessed to the power of God's Word against human power and policy in support of evil. These are the world's true noblemen. They are its royal line.

As the plan of redemption begins and ends with a gift, so it is to be carried forward. The same spirit of sacrifice which purchased salvation for us, will dwell in the hearts of all who become partakers of the heavenly gift. Says the apostle Peter: "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." Said Jesus to his disciples as he sent them forth, "Freely ye have received, freely give." In him who is fully in sympathy with Christ, there can be nothing selfish or exclusive. He who drinks of the living water will find that it is "in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." The Spirit of Christ within him is like a spring welling up in the desert, flowing to refresh all, and making those who are ready to perish eager to drink of the water of life. It was the same spirit of love and self-sacrifice which dwelt in Christ that impelled the apostle Paul to his manifold labors. "I am debtor," he says, "both to the Greeks, and to the barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise." "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ."

Our Lord designed that his church should reflect to the world the fulness and sufficiency that we find in him. We are constantly receiving of God's bounty, and by imparting of the same we are to represent to the world the love and beneficence of Christ. While all heaven is astir, dispatching messengers to all parts of the earth to carry forward the work of redemption, the church of the living God are also to be colaborers with Jesus Christ. We are members of his mystical body. He is the head, controlling all the members of the body. Jesus himself, in his infinite mercy, is working on human hearts, effecting spiritual transformations so amazing that angels look on with astonishment and joy. The same unselfish love that characterizes the Master is seen in the character and life of his true followers. Christ expects that men will become partakers of his divine nature while in this world, thus not only reflecting his glory, to the praise of God, but illuminating the darkness of earth with the radiance of heaven. Thus will be fulfilled the words of Christ, "Ye are the light of the world."

"We are laborers together with God."

—"stewards of the manifold grace of God." The knowledge of God's grace, the truths of his Word, and temporal gifts as well,—time and means, talent and influence,—are all a trust from God to be employed to his glory and for the salvation of men.

Wherever there is an impulse of love and sympathy, wherever the heart reaches out to uplift and bless others, there is revealed the working of God's Holy Spirit. In the depths of heathenism, men who have no knowledge of the written law of God, who have never even heard the name of Christ, have been kind to his servants, protecting them at the risk of their own lives. Their acts show the working of a divine power. The Holy Spirit has implanted the grace of Christ in the heart of the savage, quickening his sympathies contrary to his nature, contrary to his education. The "Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world," is shining in his soul; and this light, if heeded, will guide his feet to the kingdom of God.

No distinction on account of nationality, race, or caste, is recognized by God. He is the Maker of all mankind. All men are of one family by creation, and all are one through redemption. Christ came to demolish every wall of partition, to throw open every compartment of the temple, that every soul may have free access to God. His love is so broad, so deep, so full, that it penetrates everywhere. It lifts out of Satan's circle the poor souls who have been deluded by his deceptions. It places them within reach of the throne of God, the throne encircled by the rainbow of promise. In Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free. All are brought nigh by his precious blood.

Mormonism — No. 3

D. A. PARSONS

Modern Molochism

The first recorded case of polygamy is that of Lamech, who "took unto him two wives. . . . And Lamech said unto his wives . . . I have slain a man." Tracing his line back to Cain, we find it said of him, "Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him." This same murderous spirit that controlled the first polygamists has been and is still associated with modern polygamy. Astonishing as it may seem to some, yet it is true that the Mormon prophets and leaders who have made the Latter-day Saints what they are now, urge with all their "divine authority" and "priesthood power" that "all mankind love themselves, and let these principles be known by an individual, and he would be glad to have his blood shed. That would be loving themselves even unto an eternal exaltation. Will you love your brothers and sisters likewise when they have committed a sin that can not be atoned for without the shedding of blood? Will you love that man or woman well enough to shed their blood? That is what Jesus meant."

These words were spoken by Brigham Young to thousands, on Feb. 8, 1857, and the sermon was published with his sanction in the official organ of the Mormon Church, and also in their "Journal of Discourses," Vol. IV, page 219. In the publishers' preface of this volume, Young's words, and those of other leaders, are spoken of thus: "To the saints their words are as the words of God." On page 53 are some more of these "words." He says:—

"I know there are transgressors who, if they knew themselves, and the only condition upon which they can obtain forgiveness, would beg of their brethren to shed their blood, that the smoke thereof might ascend to God as an offering to appease the wrath that is kindled against them, and that the law might have its course. I will say, further, that I have had men come to me and offer their lives to atone for their sins."

Every student of ancient history will recognize in these statements the teachings of ancient Moloch. Men were urged to offer themselves as human sacrifices to appease an offended and angry god. The prophets of Mormonism urge the same thing. That the "law" referred to was the law of Jehovah is clearly seen by another statement from Brigham Young. We now quote from page 220:—

"I have known a great many men who have left this church for whom there is no chance whatever for exaltation, but if their blood had been spilled, it would have been better for them: the wickedness and ignorance of the nations forbid these principles being in full force, but the time will come when the law of God will be in full force.

"This is loving our neighbor as ourselves: if he needs help, help him; and if he wants salvation, and it is necessary to spill his blood on the earth in order that he may be saved, spill it. Any of you who understand the principles of eternity, if you have sinned a sin requiring the shedding of blood, except the sin unto death, would not be satisfied nor rest until your blood should be spilled, that you might gain that salvation you desire; that is the way to love mankind."

A few lines further on, as a closing exhortation to these remarks, Mr. Young says: "Now, brethren and sisters, will you live your religion?" We feel impelled to ask, Did this Latter-day Saint live up to his religion? Did this Mormon prophet, invested with "divine authority," ever take the life of a sinner in Zion City? He unhesitatingly replies, "I have had men come to me and offer their lives to atone for their sins." He does not say whether he complied with these requests, but if he did not do so, it was because he did not live up to his own teachings. Do not forget that when this fidei defensor taught these "principles of eternity," he was the channel through which they believed God spoke to them; and every loyal Mormon to-day will tell you that he was a true prophet.

He was not the only leader to advocate human sacrifice. In a sermon delivered before a great gathering on Sept. 21, 1856, the following statement was made by Pres. J. M. Grant, counselor to Young:—

"I say that there are men and women that I would advise to go to the president immediately, and ask him to appoint a committee to attend to their case; and then let a place be selected, and let that committee shed their blood. . . . I would ask how many covenant breakers there are in this city and in this kingdom. I believe there are a great many; and if they are covenant breakers, we need a place designated, where we can shed their blood. . . . I am speaking to you in the name of Israel's God."—"Journal of Discourses," Vol. IV, page 50.

It is not necessary for us to comment at length on these statements made by their prophets, seers, and revelators. Their blood-thirsty doctrines stand out too clear to be misunderstood. They teach a human blood atonement. They assert that the spilled blood of a poor wretch groveling in his sins can do for him that which the blood of Christ can not do, and they urge their members to murder their transgressing neighbors, asserting that "that is what Jesus meant;" "that is the way to love mankind."

It was not persecution that moved the Mormons to advocate murder. It was not done to protect homes, wives, or children. "Will you live up to your religion?" exclaimed Brigham Young as a fitting climax to one of his most blood-thirsty sermons. It was a part of their religion then, and it is certainly a part of it yet. The church can not truthfully deny her own statements, for in doing so she would repudiate her own prophets. Nothing could hinder the Mormon Church from carrying into effect these doctrines; for their human sacrifices were not slain in public. The victims were urged to report themselves quietly and voluntarily to some brother or sister, or to the president of the church, and, if to the latter, it was recommended that a committee be appointed to "shed their blood" in some quiet and selected place.

Not Legal Executions

Nor does that man keep truth on his side who says, as some have said, that these were legal executions for murder. Such an unscrupulous quibble seems almost too transparent to justify further exposure.

The president of the Mormon Church, speaking in 1905 of human sacrifice, said it was, and is still, made necessary by "certain grievous sins." Now if murder is one of these sins, what are the others? Even the president himself exposes the quibble without mercy when he attempts to justify the doctrine by calling attention to five men "whom the Lord slew," not one of whom was guilty of murder.

Doctrine of Human Sacrifice Confirmed in 1905

Mormonism has not changed. As recently as 1905 the Mormon Church published a work advocating this very doc-

Perfect Through Suffering

God never would send you the darkness,
If he thought you could bear the light;
But you would not cling to his guiding hand,
If the way were always bright;
And you would not care to walk by faith,
Could you always walk by sight.

'Tis true he has many an anguish
For the sorrowful hearts to bear,
And many a cruel thorn-crown
For your tired head to wear;
He knows how few would reach heaven at all,
If pain did not guide them there.

So he sends you blinding darkness,
And the furnace of sevenfold heat;
'Tis the only way, believe me,
To keep you close to his feet —
For 'tis always so easy to wander,
When our lives are glad and sweet.

Then nestle your hand in your Father's,
And sing, if you can, as you go;
Your song may cheer some one behind you,
Whose courage is sinking low.
And — well, if your lips do quiver —
God will love you better so.

A Habitation for the Spirit

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Christ is represented as dwelling by his Spirit in his people; and believers as "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord," Paul says, "beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."

From eternal ages it was God's purpose that every created being, from the bright and holy seraph to man, should be a temple for the indwelling of the Creator. Because of sin, humanity ceased to be a temple for God. Darkened and defiled by evil, the heart of man no longer revealed the glory of the divine One. But by the incarnation of the Son of God, the purpose of heaven is fulfilled. God dwells in humanity, and through saving grace the heart of man becomes again his temple.

God designed that the temple at Jerusalem should be a continual witness to the high destiny open to every soul. But the Jews had not understood the significance of the building they regarded with so much pride. They did not yield themselves as temples for the divine Spirit. The courts of the temple at Jerusalem, filled with the tumult of unholy traffic, represented all too truly the temple of the heart, defiled by the presence of sensual passion and unholy thoughts. In cleansing the temple from the world's buyers and sellers, Jesus announced his mission to cleanse the heart from the defilement of sin,— from the earthly desires, the selfish lusts, the evil habits that corrupt the soul. "The Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver."

"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." No man can of himself cast out the evil throng that have taken possession of the heart. Only Christ can cleanse the soul-temple. But he will not force an entrance. He comes not into the heart as to the temple of old; but he says, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him." He will come, not for one day merely; for he says, "I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and . . . they shall be my people." "He will subdue our iniquities; and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea." His presence will cleanse and sanctify the soul, so that it may be a holy temple unto the Lord, and "an habitation of God through the Spirit."

By this beautiful and impressive figure, God's Word shows the regard he places on our physical organism, and the responsibility resting upon us to preserve it in the best condition. Our bodies are Christ's purchased possession, and we are not at liberty to do with them as we please. Man has done this. He has treated his body as if its laws had no penalty. Through perverted appetite its organs and powers have become enfeebled, diseased, crippled. And these results which Satan has brought about by his own specious temptations, he uses to taunt God with. He presents before God the human body that Christ has purchased as his property; and what an unsightly representation of his Maker man is! Because man has sinned against his body, and corrupted his ways, God is dishonored.

When men and women are truly converted, they will conscientiously regard the laws of life that God has established in their being, thus seeking to avoid physical, mental, and moral feebleness. Obedience to these laws must be made a matter of personal duty. We ourselves must suffer the ills of violated law. We must answer to God for our habits and practises. Therefore the question for us is not, "What will the world say?" but, "How shall I, claiming to be a Christian, treat the habitation God has given me? Shall I work for my highest temporal and spiritual good by keeping my body as a temple for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, or shall I sacrifice myself to the world's ideas and practises?"

"Know ye not . . . that ye are not your own? for ye are bought with a price." What a price has been paid for us! Behold the cross and the victim uplifted upon it. Look at those hands, pierced with cruel nails. Look at his feet, fastened with spikes to the tree. Christ bore our sins in his own body. That suffering, that agony, is the price of your redemption. Know you not that he loved us, and gave himself for us, that we in return should give ourselves to him? Why should not love to Christ be expressed by all who receive him by faith, as verily as his love has been expressed for us for whom he died?

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Christ the Word, the revelation of God,— the manifestation of his character, his law, his love, his life, — is the only foundation upon which we can build a character that will endure.

We build on Christ by obeying his word. It is not he who merely enjoys righteousness, that is righteous, but he who does righteousness. Holiness is not rapture; it is the result of surrendering all to God; it is doing the will of our Heavenly Father. Religion consists in doing the words of Christ; not doing to earn God's favor, but because, all undeserving, we have received the gift of his love. Christ places the salvation of man, not upon profession merely, but upon faith that is made manifest in works of righteousness. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Not those whose hearts are touched by the Spirit, not those who now and then yield to its power, but they that are led by the Spirit, are the sons of God.

To live by the word of God means the surrender to him of the whole life. There will be felt a continual sense of need and dependence, a drawing out of the heart after God. Prayer is a necessity; for it is the life of the soul. Family prayer, public prayer, have their place; but it is secret communion with God that sustains the soul-life. It was in the mount with God that Moses beheld the pattern of that wonderful building that was to be the abiding-place of God's glory. It is in the mount with God,— in the secret place of communion,— that we are to contemplate his glorious ideal for humanity. Thus we shall be able so to fashion our character building that to us may be fulfilled his promise, "I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people."

Sabbath Evening

A WORKER

WHAT a calm, restful feeling is conveyed to one in the two words, "Sabbath evening." Never shall I forget one Sabbath evening spent in the home of one of the elders of our church. I was taking a journey from one town to another, and paid him an unexpected visit. This did not seem to give the family any inconvenience. Everything was in readiness for the coming Sabbath.

As the sun was going down, the family settled around the table for worship. The children did not need to be called, as they had been taught that the beginning of the Sabbath is just as holy as any other part of it. Several hymns were sung, different ones calling for their favorites, and a holy calmness pervaded the place. The father then read an encouraging chapter from the Bible, after which all took part in prayer. I shall never forget the simple but beautiful prayer offered by the youngest child. Though she was only seven years old, her prayer gave me fresh courage, and inspired me to be more diligent in my work, as she prayed for me. And again, as the sun was going down, we gathered around the family altar, and felt encouraged and strengthened to begin another week, with its trials, conflicts, and victories.

How different was this from an experience I had several months later. This time I was away in the country, and felt a longing for Christian fellowship; so, knowing of a Sabbath-keeping family in the district, I hastened my footsteps that way. The days were short, and it was almost dark before I reached my friend's house. Here everybody seemed unready. The father had just returned from work, and was having a bath. Some of the children were rushing about looking for articles of clothing; others were drying or combing their hair. Then the evening meal was to be prepared and eaten, and when that was over, it was time for the youngest children to go to bed; and so holy time was entered, and no difference made between it and ordinary time. The same state of confusion existed at the close of the Sabbath; some were in one place and some in another; and the father hurried away to look after his business. Profane time was entered upon, and holy time left, without thanks to God for his blessing through the day.

The band of united prayer that gives strength and oneness to a family was wanting. With a little effort on the part of the father and mother, that need not have been, and need not be with other parents. Habits formed in early childhood are binding. Young minds respond readily to the sweet influence of prayer and music; the love of Jesus draws them to himself; and, if converted when young, armed with the sword of the Spirit, they grow up strong in his service.

The following is from "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VI, pages 355, 356: —

"On Friday let the preparation for the Sabbath be completed. See that all the clothing is in readiness, and that all the cooking is done. Let the boots be blacked, and the baths be taken. It is possible to do this. If you make it a rule, you can do it. The Sabbath is not to be given to the repairing of garments, to the cooking of food, to pleasure-seeking, or to any other worldly employment. Before the setting of the sun, let all secular work be laid aside, and all secular papers be put out of sight. Parents, explain your work and its purpose to your children, and let them share in your preparation to keep the Sabbath according to the commandment.

"We should jealously guard the edges of the Sabbath. Remember that every moment is consecrated, holy time. Whenever it is possible, employers should give their workers the hours from Friday noon until the beginning of the Sabbath. Give them time for preparation, that they may welcome the Lord's day with quietness of mind. By such a course you will suffer no loss, even in temporal things."

The Judgment

GEORGE I. BUTLER

THE first message of a series of three proclaims, "The hour [period] of his judgment is come." Rev. 14:6-12. This threefold message goes "to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," "with a loud voice." It terminates with the appearing of the Son of man in mid-heaven, crowned with a golden crown, and having a sharp sickle in his hand, to reap the ripened "harvest of the earth." Christ himself says, "The harvest is the end of the world." Matt. 13:39.

The hour of his judgment come is the great, the leading point in the first of these three heavenly messages. It becomes, therefore, a very important factor in this proclamation to ascertain what is the nature of this judgment proclaimed with such authority, power, and grandeur. It certainly is an event of vast magnitude and most solemn interest, or it would not be proclaimed to "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," really including every person living at the time it goes forth. It must take time to give this message to a world of about fifteen hundred million people. Nothing short of the time of a whole generation could answer for such a work. From the time it was first announced to the world, in the great advent movement of 1836-44, its proclamation must continue till Christ is seen coming in his glory. In previous articles we have seen that the great prophetic period of twenty-three hundred year-days brings us to this proclamation. That period began in 457 B. C., the time of the going forth of the decree of Artaxerxes to restore and build Jerusalem, and therefore must terminate in 1844 A. D.

What, then, is the judgment here brought to view? "Because he [God] hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained," that is, Jesus Christ. Acts 17:31. To appoint is to fix the time and place of by a decree, command, or order of some competent authority. This statement, therefore, demonstrates that, before the time of the apostle Paul, God had already fixed the time of that judgment period; for Paul speaks of that appointment in the past tense. This appointed time for the beginning of the judgment must be at the close of the twenty-three year-day period. There is no other judgment period designated in the Bible. "I said in mine heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: for there is a time there for every purpose and for every work." Eccl. 3:17. This scripture clearly states that the judgment occupies a period of time. It is not a momentary affair, and it must cover considerable time if it is to take into consideration "every purpose" and "every work," as the wise man declares.

Would you desire to take a glimpse of that grand scene, the supreme court of the universe in session? "I beheld till the thrones were cast down ["were placed," A. R. V.], and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool: his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him: thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened." Dan. 7:9, 10.

Ten thousand times ten thousand are one hundred million. In Heb. 12:22, Paul calls them an "innumerable company of angels," that is, so many that it is impossible to number them. These are God's messengers, engaged with him in the grand work of salvation. In the scripture quoted above, concerning the judgment, the prophet declares that thrones of judgment were placed, and "the books were opened;" that is, the record of men's lives which have been preserved for this grand assize, are now brought forth from heaven's archives for their final examination. They have all been kept in the temple of God in heaven. It is in this critical, skeptical age, when vast multitudes are trying to make themselves believe there is no personal God anywhere in the universe, that this grand scene of the final judgment is taking place in the glorious heavenly temple above. "And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail." Rev. 11:19. This is the second apartment of "the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." Heb. 8:1, 2. The ark of God is seen in it. In that

Our Strength and Stay

MINNIE EMBREE-PARKER

O WHAT can we have to lean on
When everything else gives way?
O where can we go in trial,
In the dark and gloomy day?

Some friends of our sunny weather
Forsake us when days are drear;
Then what shall we have to lean on,
O what can our spirits cheer?

There's a Friend that has proved dearer
Than ever a brother can,
The hope of a race of sinners —
'Tis Jesus, the Son of man.

With one hand on the throne of heaven,
With the other he reacheth down
To strengthen and cheer the fainting,
And help them to win a crown.

Parting Words of Instruction[1]

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"LET not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me."

These words were spoken by Christ just before his crucifixion, and were among his last to the disciples. He is not at this time thinking of the sufferings that lie before him, but of his disciples. How will they stand when they have not his personal presence with them? He comforts them with the assurance of his return: "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you."

Very simple are the words of the Saviour. They can not be misunderstood or misinterpreted. "And if I go and prepare a place for you," he continues, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know." For three years Christ had been educating his disciples in that way; yet Thomas said to him: "Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way? Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."

O that we all might understand these words for ourselves, and know that Christ is for us the way, the truth, and the life! Only through the Son of God can any soul make his way to the Father. Only he can remedy the injury that was wrought for man by the fall. "If ye had known me," he declared, "ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him."

"Philip saith unto him, Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us. Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Show us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very works' sake."

Christ came as the representative of the Father, and the works of the Father he was constantly doing. Had not the disciples for three years been beholding these works? Had they not seen the sick brought to him to receive healing, and had he not restored them to health? The needy of all classes had flocked to him in crowds, and he had ministered to all. They had seen him feed a multitude with a few small loaves and fishes, and as the food was passed from hand to hand, they had watched it multiply until there was more than enough for all. After five thousand men, besides women and children, had been fed, the Saviour gave the command, "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost;" and they gathered up of that which was left twelve baskets full.

This is an object-lesson of the work that the Saviour desires to do through his followers. He wants us to take the blessed Word, to study it, and then to teach it in its simplicity. How simple Christ's lessons were! Even the children could understand them. The people of his own nation, those who professed to believe in God, were greatly incensed against him because by the simplicity of his daily teachings he was removing the rubbish that was hiding the truth from the comprehension of the people. Even the most ignorant could take in the truths he taught, and be comforted and blessed thereby.

Mothers, hearing and seeing his words and works, desired that their children might come to him to be blessed. On one occasion one mother with her children left their home to find the Saviour. On the way they told others of their desire; and as they pursued their journey, mother after mother, with their little ones, joined the company, until, when they reached the place where the Saviour was, there was a little army of women and children who sought to reach his side. He was ministering the word to the people, and healing the sick; and when the women made known their errand, the disciples told them that the Master must not be disturbed. But Christ had heard the petition of the mothers, and at once his heart responded to their desire. He said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

I am so thankful that the message of salvation was brought in such simplicity to us. The Son of God laid aside his royal robe and crown and his high command, and came to earth to take his place among humanity as a little child, to bear the test of temptation and trial from childhood to manhood. Greater than that of any other were the sufferings and trials he endured. Satan and his host were determined that Christ should not carry out his plan of sacrifice. If they could discourage Christ, and cause him to sin, the world would perish in its iniquity, and the cause of righteousness be lost. But Christ was working out the salvation of the human race, and he would not fail on a single point. He would make it possible for humanity to lay hold upon his divinity, and escape the corruption that is in the world through lust. Man does not need to be corrupted. May God help us to accept by faith the victory that has been won in our behalf, and make it ours.

The Saviour continued: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." It was a path of suffering and temptation by which the Saviour went to his Father, and we may rejoice that he consented to travel such a path. Had he not, how could the world have been saved? By this he made it possible for us to be accepted with God. When we are in doubt and perplexity and difficulty, let us consider what the Son of God passed through that he might prepare for us a home in the kingdom of heaven. And to-day he stands by his Father's throne to minister help to every soul who seeks him in sincerity for strength to overcome. He waits to bestow on all the power to do his will.

He will accept the little children, blessing them as he blessed the children in the days of his earthly ministry. Shall we not bring them to him? These little ones are to learn the lessons of God's Word, and be captivated by the simplicity of his truth. Let the labors of those who work for Christ's little ones be marked with the simplicity that was revealed in the words that fell from the Saviour's lips.

"If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever." Here is the test of our love for God. Parents are to teach their children what these commandments are. We need missionary fervor in our homes, that we may bring the word of life before the members of our families, and lead them to seek a home in the kingdom of God. There will be no sickness there, no sorrow, no death. A life that measures with the life of God will be the reward of all who win that eternal home.

In view of all that lies before the believer, his piety should be "always abounding." He should labor for souls with all his intelligence and powers. Not for eloquence and honor is he to strive, but for simplicity of life and simplicity of speech. Christ had no need to explain any word that he made use of. All were simple, and all were understood by the most simple. We need to let our faith take hold of Christ; we need to listen to his words, to seek to do his works. We need to take hold of the hope of immortality that will give us life everlasting in the kingdom of glory. To us the promise is, "The works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father."

[1] Sermon to the patients and helpers at the Paradise Valley Sanitarium, National City, Cal., Aug. 26, 1908.

"I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." To the worldling the truth is too simple; he deems it unworthy of his attention. He does not see Christ in it. But how thankful should the believer be for these promises! I am thankful for the faith I have in God's Word. I claim his promises, saying, "You said it, Lord. You asked me to come to you. I come expecting you to help me and bless me." And he proves the truth and the preciousness of his words: "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you. Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me: because I live, ye shall live also. . . . He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him."

"If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." Consider the familiar relation Christ here brings to view as existing between the Father and his children. His presence and guardianship is an abiding thing. While we trust in Christ's saving power, all the arts and wiles of the fallen host can do nothing to harm us. Heavenly angels are constantly with us, guiding and protecting. God has ordained that we shall have his saving power with us, to enable us to do all his will.

Let us grasp the promises, and cherish them moment by moment. Let us believe that God means just what he says. If we will accept his word with the simplicity of little children, believing that he has given his life that we might have everlasting life, we shall receive power to overcome.

"He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings: and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me. . . . Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I. And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe. Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for the prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me. But that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do."

I am very thankful for the privilege of speaking these words to you. I was present at the establishment of this institution. At that time I spoke to the workers here, presenting before them the way in which they might carry on their work intelligently. I spoke also to the patients, and I know that Jesus was present on these occasions. His blessing rested upon those assembled. I want to say to you to-day, There is a battle before each one of us; but as long as we hide self in Christ, we shall not be defeated. When you are provoked, and tempted to make a sharp reply, keep silent. At such times, silence is eloquence. Remember that you are God's property. When circumstances arise that irritate and annoy, conquer your feelings. We need to look constantly to Jesus. If we will walk in the fear of God, he will not fail us.

If we will seek to teach the truth in its simplicity, the Lord will let his blessing rest upon us. He will impart his Spirit to us, giving us comfort and strength and hope. I appeal to you to do all you possibly can for the help and comfort of others. Show to men and women who is the mighty Healer. He will bless the means you use. If you will do his work, you may expect his blessing. In your efforts for the sick, show them how they may improve their health by forming right habits.

I have said that if we seek to help and bless others, the Lord will let his blessing rest upon us, and I know that what I say is truth; for I have proved the Lord for many, many years. How long the Lord will permit me to speak and to labor for him I can not tell; but I have given my life to do his work, to study the blessed Word of God, and to pass it on to the people as the bread of life. It is possible that we shall never meet again on this earth; but let us remember that there is a grand meeting to take place erelong. Everlasting life is before us, and the city of God. Angels of God will be there. They will bid us welcome to the joys of heaven because we have kept the commandments of God. There there will be no more death, no sorrow, no sin. Let us do all we can to help one another to gain the eternal joys that are awaiting the redeemed. May God's blessing rest upon his people in large measure, is my prayer.

Catholic Extension in America

ALLEN MOON

About three years ago there was organized by the Catholic clergy of the United States what is known as the Catholic Church Extension Society of the United States. This society has grown in membership and influence with great rapidity. Early in the year 1908 the board of governors of the society sent out a call for the First American Catholic Missionary Congress of America, to be held in Chicago, Nov. 15-18, 1908.

Archbishop Quigley, of Chicago, in speaking at the opening of the congress, stated that "the holy father has taken the church in America from its position of dependency, and given it its full canonical rights," giving this as a reason for the organization and work of the society. He then proceeded to outline the work of the Catholic Extension Society as follows: —

"The Church Extension Society devotes its attention primarily to the neglected Catholics of our own land. It aims to supply churches and priests to those who need them; it aims to stop the leakage which we have been powerless to prevent in the past; it aims, also, to develop that true missionary spirit which reaches out to the ends of the earth.

"It is the hope of many earnest Christians that some day the church in this country will have reached that stage of growth when it will do more than any other country in the world, in the foreign mission field. We are God's favorite nation, in many ways. We have the wealth, the initiative, the energy, and we believe that the time is here when this wealth, this initiative, and this energy can be turned to good account in the solving of all those problems to which reference has been made. This congress will, at least, be a beginning; and beginnings are always important. The cause is certainly a holy one.

"We deem it an honor to have had a share in promoting this great undertaking, and we cordially welcome the hierarchy, the clergy, and the laity to its deliberations."

Information regarding this work had been laid before Pope Pius X, and a letter from the pope to Cardinal Gibbons was introduced to the congress in the following language: —

"The following apostolic letter has been received by Cardinal Gibbons from His Holiness Pius X, and it carries more than ordinary interest because it is the seal of Rome's approbation on a new and specially vigorous work that is reaping great results for the church in the United States."

Following is an extract from the letter referred to: —

"Beloved Son: Health and the Apostolic Benediction.

"Truly solicitous as we are concerning all measures which may contribute to the progress of the church among the nations, we have received with joy the information that, in the United States of America, there are very many who are every day more powerfully drawn to the study of the doctrines of the Catholic Church by the labors of zealous missionaries, especially of those who have been trained at the Apostolic Mission House at the University in Washington.

"Accordingly, let these devoted missionaries know that their work and method correspond entirely to the desire and the hope of the Apostolic See, and strengthened by the testimony of discouraging remarks about a pupil's work. If he has, through carelessness, failed to do as well as you think he is capable of doing, never make sport of his work or scold, but say: "That is very good, but I think you can do better if you try." Always make favorable comments whenever you can conscientiously, but never compare one pupil's work with another's. In the work of the best pupils you can point out some defects; and in the work of the poorest, you may find something upon which you can comment favorably. By thus taking an interest in, and showing a sympathy for, their efforts, you will encourage greater effort, and secure the good-will of all your pupils.— Selected.

Objects of Questioning

THE first important object of questioning is to give proper direction to the efforts of the learner. Few pupils know how to pursue a study to the best advantage. A few judicious questions from the teacher will give his pupils the key, and thus enable them to gain knowledge by their own independent effort. This is the valuable feature of the Socratic method of imparting knowledge,— it induces the pupil, under the guidance of the teacher, to search for truth for himself.

An important object of questioning is to detect and correct error. Pupils do not always study understandingly. Frequently they commit words, but fail to acquire ideas. Often their comprehension is not clear, or their view is but a partial one. To many a pupil a circle means a curved line, and not the space enclosed within. All these errors can be best reached by judicious questions. The teacher should never rest satisfied when the pupil gives the mere text-book answer, but he should see that the child's comprehension of that answer is clear and correct.

An important object of questioning is to test the preparation of the lesson. There is danger that a pupil may prepare his lesson only when he expects to be called upon to recite; but when he feels that the teacher is liable to call on him at any time, or any number of times, during a recitation, the danger is obviated, because he makes preparation for every recitation.

One important object of questioning is to bring out the essentials of a lesson. Often that which is of least importance in a topic, as the illustrations and anecdotes, will be found to be that which is most readily remembered by the pupil. Judicious questioning will show the pupil the application of these, and impress the principle on the child's mind.

It is an object of questioning to cultivate attention. Next to the interest aroused by apt oral instruction, nothing is so well calculated to keep awake the attention of a class as judicious questioning. The thoughtful teacher will of course see that all pupils are questioned, not in consecutive order, but promiscuously, and particularly when least attentive.

It is an object of questioning to train pupils to think. The teacher who does not arouse thought in the minds of his pupils fails in an important part of his work. This is indeed one of the chief objects of all education — to make thinkers. Questions should be so put as to lead pupils to think for themselves. Having once been trained to think and reflect, the pupil learns for himself, and the truths he discovers become his own. — Selected.

Winning Souls

IF you can obtain the confidence of the youth (a troublesome pupil), and bind him to your heart by cords of sympathy and love, you may win a soul to Christ. The wayward, self-willed, independent boy may become transformed in character.

But while it is necessary to manifest love and sympathy for your pupils, it is a manifest weakness to show partiality, and thus arouse suspicion and jealousy. Children are quick to discern the preferences of the teacher, and the favored student often measures his strength, his aptness and skill with that of the teacher in the management of the class. He may decide to be master, and unless the teacher has the grace of Christ, he will manifest weakness, become impatient, exacting, and severe. The leading spirit of the class will generally impart his purpose to other students, and there will be a combined effort to obtain the mastery. If the teacher, through the grace of Christ, is self-controlled, and holds the lines with a steady, patient hand, he will quell the boisterous element, keep his self-respect, and command the respect of his students. When once order is restored, let kindness, gentleness, and affection be manifested. It may be that rebellion will rise again and again, but let not the hasty temper appear. Do not speak sharply to the evil-doer, and discourage a soul who is struggling with the powers of darkness. Be still, and let your heart ascend in prayer to God for help. Angels will come close to your side, and help you to lift up the standard against the enemy, and instead of cutting off the erring one, you may be enabled to gain a soul for Christ.

Teach the Children

NOT to spit; it is rarely necessary. To spit on a slate, floor, or sidewalk is an abomination.

Not to put the fingers into the mouth.

Not to pick the nose.

Not to wet the finger with saliva in turning the leaves of books.

Not to put pencils into the mouth, or moisten them with the lips.

Not to put money into the mouth.

Not to put anything into the mouth except food and drink and the toothbrush.

Not to swap apple-cores, candy, chewing-gum, "all-day suckers," half-eaten food, whistles, or bean-blowers, or anything similar that is habitually put into the mouth.

Teach the children to wash the hands and face often. See that they keep them clean. If a child is coming down with a communicable disease, it is reasonable to believe that there is less chance of infecting persons and things if the hands and face are washed clean, and not daubed with the secretions of the nose and mouth.

Teach the children to turn the face aside when coughing and sneezing, especially if they are facing another person or are at the table.— Life and Health.

John of Patmos

JOHN of Patmos, ere he died,
By the friends who stood beside,
Thus was questioned, thus replied: —

"Master, while thou yet hast speech,
Thy disciples thee beseech
Wisdom's highest law to teach."

Straightway spake the master then:
"Little children" (they were men),
"Love each other." But again,

From his friends: "Ah! master dear,
This we've practised many a year;
Wisdom's law we wish to hear."

Clearer shone the master's eyes.
"Little children," he replies,
"Love each other; that is wise."

But the boldest, speaking low:
"Master, if it please thee so,
Deepest wisdom we would know."

Raised the master on his bed,
"Little children,"— sank his head,—
"Love each other." He was dead.

THIS is another card tray. Before beginning it, emphasize the importance of exact measurements, as this model can not be successfully made without them. In the exact center of the paper draw a circle with a radius of three inches. Place the ruler across each diagonal, just as in finding the center, and make a point in the circle at each place where the ruler crosses it. This exactly quarters the circle. With the three-inch radius place the point of the compasses in turn at each of these four points, and make a point each side of each one. You now have twelve points, and they should be equal distances apart. (Fig. 1.) Test them before proceeding further. Then with a radius of one inch use in turn each of the twelve points for a center, and draw a circle around it. These circles will overlap. Call attention to the boat-shaped parts formed by the overlapping, and see if they are the same size. Make distinct points when the circles cross each other on the inner side, and connect these points with straight lines. (Fig. 2.) Mark the places for tying. Cut the curved outline, and cut out the boat-shaped pieces. Fold the straight lines. The overlapping of the sides in tying gives a sufficient slant for the tray.

A safe lantern for school or Christmas decoration. One-half sheet of paper is sufficient for this model. After the paper is cut in half, place a point one-half inch from the upper corner on each end. Connect these points, and cut off the strip thus formed for a handle. Again place a point one-half inch from the upper corner on each end, and connect. In the center of each end, which will be one and three-fourths inches from the upper corners, place a point, and connect the two with a dotted line. On this dotted line, and also on the line near the top, place points one-half inch apart all the way across. Connect these points, as in Figure 3. Prick the dotted line near each end, and fold by the perforations thus made, so that the line will be on the outside. The upper and lower edges should just meet. With the paper folded, begin at the dotted line, and cut each of the short, upright lines. Stop exactly on the upper line. Unfold the paper, bring the two ends together with the folded edge outward. Let the ends overlap one-half inch, and either paste or tie. The handle also may be either pasted or tied (on the inside) to opposite sides of the lantern.

This may be used for either flowers or popcorn. For the drawing make a point in the center of each side of the paper. Place the ruler across opposite points, and draw a line two inches long, measuring from each point toward the center. Repeat in the opposite direction. Connect the inner end of these four lines. The square thus formed is the bottom of the basket. Connect each corner of the square with the two nearest corners of the paper. (Fig. 4.) Cut the four two-inch lines. Fold all other lines. To shape the basket, let any two edges made by one cut pass by each other, and on until each rests against the nearest fold. Either paste or tie them in this position. Treat all cut edges in the same way. A handle of ribbon is preferable.

A canoe. This is not a difficult model, but the measurements must be exact. Make a point in the center of two opposite edges of the paper. Make a point one and one-half inches above and below each of those central points. (Fig. 5.) Place the ruler across the two upper points, begin one inch from the left edge of the paper, and draw a line which will end one inch from the right edge. This makes the line six inches long. Repeat across the lower points. Connect the two lines at the ends. This forms a rectangle. The connecting lines should be just three inches long. Place a point one-half inch from each corner of the rectangle on the ends. With a radius of one inch, place the point of the compasses in turn at each of the four points just made, and draw parts of circles, as shown. These should just meet in the center of the ends. Cut away the parts marked X. Do not fold. Bring the circular parts together at the ends, and paste. The canoe may be suspended by a cord or ribbon tied through the pasted edges near the ends. It may be used for hairpins, button-hooks, pencils, etc.

The canoe shown above was made from birch-bark. If dry, dip the bark in water to prevent cracking when bent. A weight should be placed on the ends when pasted, and sufficient time given for thorough drying.

This is a coin purse. With a two-inch radius, draw a circle in the center, and divide it into six equal parts. (Fig. 6.) With a radius a trifle less than three and one-half inches (three and seven-sixteenths) draw another circle, using the same center. Place the ruler across two adjoining points in the small circle, and connect with a straight line; continue the line on to the right until it touches the outer circle. Repeat at each point around the circle.

Leave It With Him

YES, leave it with him,
The lilies all do,
And they grow.
They grow in the rain,
And they grow in the dew —
Yes, they grow.
They grow in the darkness, all hid in the night,
They grow in the sunshine, revealed by the light;
Still they grow.

They ask not your planting,
They need not your care,
As they grow.
Dropped down in the valley,
The field, anywhere —
Therefore they grow.
They grow in their beauty, arrayed in pure white;
They grow, clothed in glory, by heaven's own light;
Sweetly grow.

The grasses are clothed,
And the ravens are fed
From his store;
But you who are loved,
And guarded, and led,
How much more
Will he clothe you and feed you and give you his care?
Then leave it with him; he has everywhere
Ample store.

Yes, leave it with him,
'Tis more dear to his heart,
You will know,
Than the lilies that bloom
Or the flowers that start
'Neath the snow.
Whatever you need, if you ask it in prayer,
You can leave it with him, for you are his care,
You, you know.

Called to Glory and Virtue[1]

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"SIMON PETER, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ: grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."

There is a possibility of the believer in Christ obtaining an experience that will be wholly sufficient to place him in right relation to God. Every promise that is in God's Book holds out to us the encouragement that we may be partakers of the divine nature. This is the possibility — to rely upon God, to believe his Word, to work his works; and this we can do when we lay hold of the divinity of Christ. This possibility is worth more to us than all the riches in the world. There is nothing on earth that can compare with it. As we lay hold of the power thus placed within our reach, we receive a hope so strong that we can rely wholly upon God's promises; and laying hold of the possibilities there are in Christ, we become the sons and daughters of God.

"Grace and peace be multiplied unto you," the apostle says, "'through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue."

We are to be partakers of knowledge. As I have seen pictures representing Satan coming to Christ in the wilderness of temptation in the form of a hideous monster, I have thought, How little the artists knew of the Bible! Before his fall, Satan was, next to Christ, the highest angel in heaven. How foolish, then, to suppose that he approached Christ in the wilderness in any such form as is given him in the illustration "The Game of Life." Some here have seen that picture. After the Saviour had fasted forty days and forty nights, "he was afterward an hungered." Then it was that Satan appeared to him. He came as a beautiful angel from heaven, claiming that he had a commission from God to declare the Saviour's fast at an end. "If thou be the Son of God," he said, "command that these stones be made bread." But in Satan's insinuation of distrust, Christ recognized the enemy whose power he had come to the earth to resist. He would not accept the challenge, nor be moved by the temptation. He stood firmly to the affirmative. "Man shall not live by bread alone," he said, "but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Christ stood by every word of God, and he prevailed. If we would always take such a position as this when tempted, refusing to dally with temptation or argue with the enemy, the same experience would be ours. It is when we stop to reason with the devil, that we are overcome. It is for us to know individually that we are right in the warfare, to take the affirmative in the sight of God, and there to stand. It is thus that we obtain the divine power promised, through which we obtain "all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue."

There is such a thing as being partakers of the divine nature. We shall all be tempted in a variety of ways; but when we are tempted, we need to remember that provision has been made whereby we may overcome. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." He who truly believes in Christ is made a partaker of the divine nature, and has power that he can appropriate under every temptation. (1) He will not fall under temptation, and be left to defeat. In time of trial he will claim the promises, and by these escape the corruptions that are in the world through lust.

We think it costs us something to stand in this position before the world; and so it does. But what has our salvation cost the heavenly universe? To make us partakers of the divine nature, heaven gave its most costly treasure. The Son of God laid aside his royal robe and kingly crown, and came to our earth as a little child. He pledged himself to live from infancy to manhood a perfect life. He engaged to stand in a fallen world as the representative of the Father. And he would die in behalf of a lost race. What a work was this! If he should fail, if he should be overcome by temptation, a world would be lost.

I hardly know how to present these points; they are so wonderful, wonderful! Behold him in the cities, and traveling from place to place, the crowds pressing him on every side. He gave comfort and power to all who came to him. None were sent away unhelped. He had brought this power from heaven for these very souls. And Christ was overcoming by his very deeds in behalf of men. So absorbed was he in the carrying out of his mission, that his own family could not draw him away from his work.

It was the work of Christ to rebuke the power of Satan. When he was taken by his enemies and hung upon the cross, there stood the priests and rulers taunting him, and doing all in their power to afflict him. Others were heaping reproach upon him. But there hung by his side a tempted sinner, who, while his companion railed on the Son of God, turned to the Saviour, saying, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." And Christ replied, "Verily I say unto thee to-day, Thou shalt be with me in paradise. To-day while I hang upon the cross, the nails driven through my hands and feet, my body bruised, to-day, I say, Thou shalt be with me in paradise."

Satan heard the words of Christ, and as he heard, he knew that his case was a lost one. There was no longer hope that he would obtain the victory. He had wrestled with the Son of God to cause him to sin, and had failed.

The priests and rulers heard Christ's words, and they did not then feel as they had when they declared, "Let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him." What if Christ had come down from the cross! What if he had refused to drink the bitter cup that was given him!

[1] Sermon preached at Loma Linda, Cal., Sabbath morning, Aug. 29, 1908.

(1) Temperance p. 121

They laid the body of the Saviour in Joseph's sepulcher, and set a watch that none should steal him away. Christ rested on the Sabbath day in the tomb. But on the morning of the third day the Roman watch behold a light stream from heaven, and the angel of God descend. The mighty angel comes to the tomb of the Son of God, and rolling away the stone, bids Jesus come forth. The Roman guard see him come forth to life, and hear him proclaim over the rent sepulcher of Joseph, "I am the resurrection, and the life."

Christ suffered all this that he might obtain your salvation, and mine. By his life of sacrifice and death of shame, he has made it possible for us to take hold of divinity, and to escape the corruption that is in the world through lust. There is a battle going on between the powers of darkness and the children of light,— a battle that means humiliation of self at every step. Where are those who will stand? There are some who will. Where are those who understand what it means to be partakers of the divine nature, and to escape the corruption that is in the world through lust? If you are partakers of the divine nature, you will day by day be obtaining a fitting for the life that measures with the life of God. Day by day you will purify your trust in Jesus and follow his example, growing into his likeness until you shall stand before him perfected.

"Beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance." Here the importance of temperance is brought to our notice. Consider how the evil of intemperance is at work in our cities. Do we not know that the liquor sold in the saloons of our land is drugged with the most poisonous substances? We read of one and another who has taken life while under the influence of liquor — liquor that has robbed them of their reason. We need to have a knowledge of these things that we may work intelligently to help others. (1) The temperance cause needs to be revived as it has not yet been. We need to preach the gospel, that men and women may understand how to obey the word of God. It is the word of the living God that will bring men and women into right relation to him; it will make impressions on heart and mind and character. Let every one of us be aroused to do the work that is waiting to be done,— the work that Christ did when he was in the world. By beholding the works of Christ, humanity will take hold upon divinity. There the appeal to souls is made, and he never turns one away. Whatever may be the position in life, whatever the past may have been, he will still receive.

(2) Here is a work opened before the young, the middle-aged, and the aged. When the temperance pledge is presented to you, sign it. More than this, resolve to put all your powers against the evil of intemperance, and encourage others who are trying to do a work of reform in the world. There are some who will work with all their powers, not only upon the point of intemperance in the use of liquor, but in the matter of eating, and of drinking those things that are not intoxicants, but that work injury to the system. I refer to the tea and coffee that many place upon their tables. We can not afford to use these things. We have a keen enemy, who is determined to have the victory if it is possible, and we must guard ourselves most carefully that we may be strong to meet his attacks.

"And to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity." We need every one of these heavenly, blood-bought virtues brought into our lives and characters; for then, and then only, shall we be safe. "For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins."

I am urged to say to young and old, You may have a hope that is immortal. Here is the invitation to you to take hold of the hope set before you in the gospel.

"Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall. For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Here a life insurance policy is offered us which insures for us eternal life in the kingdom of God. I ask you to study these words of the apostle Peter. There is understanding and intelligence in every sentence. By taking hold upon the Life-giver who gave his life for us, we receive eternal life. It is a wonderful offer. Shall we not strive to obtain it?

There is a responsibility resting upon parents in this matter that is scarcely discerned by them. Christ gave his life for our children, and parents are to be overcomers, that they may lead the children step by step up the ladder that leads heavenward. Make it your business to teach them the Word as it is. This is the knowledge the children and youth must have if they are to overcome as Christ overcame. They need the simplicity of true godliness. I rejoice that we have Loma Linda, where we can educate our youth for missionary work for Christ. Here they can have opportunities to learn the simplicity of true godliness. They need not reach up for high attainments in worldly knowledge, but they can have the language of Christ by studying his teachings. This is the power of godliness to them that believe.

My brethren and sisters, I urge you to bring up your children in simplicity. Don't scold them when they do wrong, but take them to the Lord, and tell him all about it. When you kneel before God with your children, Christ is by your side, and angels of God are all around you. Teach them to ask God to forgive them for being cross and impatient. Bring up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Let us be men and women of prayer. Let us take hold of the divine nature, and escape the corruption that is in the world through lust. Then we shall have the eternal life insurance policy, a life that measures with the life of God. Then when the ransomed are redeemed from the earth, the city of God will be opened to you, and you can present yourselves before the Lord, saying, Here am I and the children whom thou hast given me. Then the harp will be placed in your hand, and your voice will be raised in songs of praise to God, and to the Lamb, by whose great sacrifice you are made partakers of his nature, and given an immortal inheritance in the kingdom of God.

The Family Altar

T. E. BOWEN

NEXT to the secret place of prayer stands that of the season of prayer about the family altar. Surely there can be no more joyful sight for the angels than to behold the father and mother bowed together with their children about the home altar each morning and evening, mingling their petitions in fervent request for one another and for the success of God's work in the earth.

This is family worship. Hence, all should take part. Better let the prayers of father and mother be shortened a little, rather than shut out altogether the prayers of the children. Several short, earnest petitions are much more interesting than one long one. And here it might be mentioned that all should pray loud enough to be heard by those engaged in worship. I remember visiting in one home for several days, where I was unable to hear the prayers of some of the members of the family, because they prayed in such an undertone that it was impossible to catch what they said. This is something that should be avoided. The children should be taught to pray distinctly.

The family altar is the appropriate place for praying one for another. The mention of the names of the children in fervent prayer by father or mother touches a very tender chord, and may be the very band to hold them in some hour of temptation. O, we get so cold, so formal, so far apart, right in the home circle! Why do we do it? Those we love most we often treat more coldly than some distant acquaintance. Often young feet begin to stray right at this point.

A conference worker, on visiting one church, seems to have been touched by a scene at the home of one of the brethren; for in reporting his visit, he writes: "It did my heart much good to hear the prayers of Brother ——'s children. There were five, and each one prayed in his own childish way. The angels of heaven are pleased to listen to such prayers. The question came to me, What makes all these children so anxious and willing to take part in family wor-

In God's Care

I KNOW not what beyond may lie,
When sunset tints illume the sky;
To-morrow, be it dark or bright,
Is sealed and hidden from my sight;
When flowers fold, and shadows creep,
I lay me down in peace to sleep.

I know not what the day will bring
What lesson hold, what new, strange thing
In life's deep meaning I may trace,
Where light and shadow interlace:
My Father's hand the way doth keep;
I lay me down in peace to sleep.

I know not what the day will bring
Of joy or pain, what changes ring
Ere day and night complete the year:
I trust in God and have no fear;
For his great love is strong and deep:
I lay me down in peace to sleep.

Lessons From Christ's Labors

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"Now when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee; and leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the seacoast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim: that it might be fulfilled that was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles; the people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up."

At the time of Christ's first advent the world was in a terrible condition. Men were being controlled by satanic agencies. The Majesty of heaven looked with pity on the human race. He saw that Satan was gaining control of the bodies and minds of men, and Christ knew that he alone could break the enemy's power. It was because of this that he laid off his kingly crown and royal robe, and clothing his divinity with humanity, came to our world to meet the powers of darkness, and to hold in check the forces of Satan. This was his work. A counterworking influence, coming from the highest authority, was to hold the enemy in check, and resist his power.

"From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. And Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers. And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left their nets, and followed him."

Here were some whose minds were under the influence of Christ. At his call they came right to his side. "And going on from thence, he saw other two brethren, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ship with Zebedee their father, mending their nets; and he called them. And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed him."

Just such a work as this is to be carried on in our time. Those who will work in harmony with Christ, God will use to accomplish a good work. If those who claim to be children of God will make an entire consecration of themselves to Christ, the mighty influence of the power of God will be with them.

The Saviour saw a great work to be accomplished, and he clothed his divinity with humanity that he might impart his healing power to mankind. He was the Great Physician. As those who have consecrated themselves to the work of God go into foreign countries to labor, they will meet the sick and suffering. Know that the best way to reach the hearts of such is to come close to them, to kneel down and pray with them and for them. The time has come when we must carry in our lives the influence that the Saviour carried in his life. We are to instruct and educate the suffering ones how to resist disease, by teaching them how to eat and drink and live healthfully, and how to love and fear God. By reading and studying the Word of God, those who in their hearts desire to serve God will learn to discard the habits that are ruining the health of body and soul.

The light has come that there are to be sanitariums provided for the sick, and we have been trying to provide these institutions for the carrying on of the work of God. As a result of our sanitarium work we have seen wonderful conversions. The salvation of God has been revealed. Through this instrumentality souls have become intelligent in regard to the faith, and many have been converted to the present truth. The work is extending, and we have had to establish sanitariums in many places.

Our schools and sanitariums should be in close co-operation, that our youth may be educated in a knowledge of the truth, and at the same time be enlightened in regard to the care of the sick. Wherever there is an important training-school, there, if possible, should be a sanitarium. The students are to be educated in right habits of living. It means a great deal to establish a school and conduct it in such a way that it will meet with God's approval.

We are to understand the importance of this work, and to reason from cause to effect. We are to work as Christ worked. We are to learn to talk to the people intelligently and with power. Then they will call upon Christ, recognizing in him the One who came to our world to do the work of healing for soul and body. Those who are suffering with disease will be aroused to take hold of the light of health reform. They will leave off their wrong habits, and will stand in a position where they can reach others.

The disciples who were called from their nets to follow Christ did not have a college education. Christ did not have it. He lived his human life in simplicity, — living and preaching the truth. The light of the gospel was shining upon the pathway of those who heard him. We are to teach our children and youth the importance of simplicity. The straining that is often done to reach a wonderful height of learning,— let it not be encouraged. I have seen many a youth destroyed before his education was completed because of this desire for knowledge.

If we would keep well, we must let reason guide us in our manner of living. If we will place ourselves in right relation to God, our beings will respond to his instruction. God would have us connected at all times with the Great Physician; then his salvation will be revealed to us, and we shall know that there is a God in Israel.

We have a living Healer to-day. We need not depend upon drugs, but upon the Great Physician. If every sanitarium in our land were in living connection with God, the truth would go forth from our institutions as a lamp that burneth. They would carry mercy and light and compassion to the people, until men and women would realize that this is the religion of Christ, and that it reaches to suffering humanity.

It is time that we were putting on the armor of light. It is time that we were comprehending our duty to the world at this stage of its history. O, such wickedness exists in our cities, and yet many of the people are asleep! Professed Christians are asleep. They do not understand that there is a work for them to do.

The Saviour's work of ministering to the suffering was always combined with his ministry of the Word. He preached the gospel and healed infirmity both by the same mighty power. He will do the same to-day; but we must do our part by bringing the sick in touch with the mighty Healer. The Saviour left the courts of glory and came to our world to bear temptation and resist evil, that men might have power to take hold of his strength. The soul that comes to Christ by living faith receives his power, and is healed of his disease.

Christ would not take a position in life where he could not associate closely with the people. During the days of his ministry all classes of people flocked about him to hear his words. We read of one occasion when five thousand men, besides women and children, formed the company about him. The time came when the people should have something to eat, and where was food to supply so many? In reply to his question, "Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?" one of the disciples replied, "There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many?" And Jesus said, "Make the men sit down." Then Christ imparted the food by his miraculous power to the hungry multitude.

When all had sufficient, he commanded, "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost. Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten."

We stop short of exercising faith. We need the simplicity of godliness that will take hold of the work and come right down to Christlike practises with a spirit willing to help where help is needed. The Majesty of heaven, the King of glory, came to our world to preach the gospel of salvation. He invites you to listen to his words. He was so filled with his mission to men that his own mother could not draw him from his work. The sick and suffering were before him, and he must labor for them.

This is the work we are trying to do. It has been a hard work sometimes, but the need of this kind of labor has been presented to me in clear lines, and we are determined to do it wherever it is possible. We have sought to labor in every place where we could preach the Word of God.

Wherever we have a school, there we should also have a sanitarium. We must work the works of God in these institutions. The youth are to be instructed regarding what God requires of them in the work of leading souls to the light. The blessing of God will come upon every true worker.

Letters come to us from many parts of the world telling what the truth is doing in other lands. I am so thankful that we can have a part in this work, that we can be laborers together with Christ in the upbuilding of the kingdom of God in the earth. I am so thankful that the light of truth is shining. The light is to continue to shine. Do not let it go out. Do not shut it up, but let it shine to all that are in the house.

Study how you can speak the truth to those with whom you are brought in contact. Take hold of God by living faith. Do your duty simply day by day, and you will constantly advance until you are qualified to hold a position of trust in the work. We need to carry pure religion into our lives. Let us show an interest in the sick. Christ gave his life for these souls. It is our privilege to bring them to him and teach them how to take hold of his divine nature. Then the afflictions with which Satan has beset them, will be overcome.

We need helpers. Souls should be coming to take the places made vacant by those who are sent to labor in foreign fields. They are going all the time, and the blessing of God is coming upon his people. Some are departing from the faith and giving heed to seducing spirits, but let us not weaken our efforts. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth let us lay hold of divine power. God will work with us mightily if we will do this.

My brethren and sisters, we need the truth as it is in Jesus. We need to teach the people how they may become partakers of the divine nature, that they may escape the corruptions that are in the world through lust. We need the manifestation of true godliness in every line of service.

Let us follow all the light. Let us resist temptation as Christ resisted it. In the day when every case will be forever decided, there will be many who will wish that they had studied their Bibles more, and more fully met its requirements. Will you not lay aside the story magazines, and study the Word of God? At such times angels of heaven are right around you to strengthen your understanding. We need to have God come into our families; we want our children to be saved. Our schools that are established should be giving an education in the things of God. The students should be learning how to escape the corruption that is in the world through lust.

My brethren and sisters, I want you to reach up to God by living faith. Christ wants you to be living workers, communicating light to the souls who are perishing around you. Keep your eyes on God until you reach the kingdom of heaven. Then the pearly gates will be thrown open for you, and you will receive the welcome given to those who have been laborers together with God.

Victory is before the faithful worker. I can not lay down the armor. I trust in the Lord to be my strength. I want to see Jesus. I want you to see him. I want to see the One who endured temptation in my behalf, and who wore the crown of thorns for sinners. Then he will be crowned with glory, and we shall see him as he is. We shall fall at his feet in worship. He will place the harp in our hands, and our voices will be raised in such music as we have never heard on earth.

I am so thankful for the privilege of saying these words to you. I invite each one of you to take hold by living faith of the divinity of Christ. This is the gift that Christ came to the world to bestow. In him humanity may take hold of divinity and share in the joy of the Lord.

The Sacredness of Church Services

E. K. SLADE

OUR church services should be characterized by a sacredness far above anything of an earthly nature. The distinction between the sacred and the common should ever be borne in mind. The exact manner in which the services are conducted is of less importance than a keen sense of the sacredness of the worship and the place of worship. "There should be rules in regard to the time, the place, and the manner of worshiping. Nothing that is sacred, nothing that pertains to the worship of God, should be treated with carelessness or indifference."—"Testimonies for the Church," Vol. V, page 491.

"From the sacredness which was attached to the earthly sanctuary, Christians may learn how they should regard the place where the Lord meets with his people. There has been a great change, not for the better, but for the worse, in the habits and customs of the people in reference to religious worship. The precious, the sacred things which connect us with God, are fast losing their hold upon our minds and hearts, and are being brought down to the level of common things. The reverence which the people had anciently for the sanctuary, where they met with God in sacred service, has largely passed away. Nevertheless, God himself gave the order of his service, exalting it high above everything of a temporal nature." —Ibid.

Those who have charge of the work in our local churches will, on reading the words just quoted, fully sense the fact that there is much in connection with our church services that is not pleasing to God, and that is not conducive to the uplifting influence that should prevail. The fact that services are many times held in private houses, schoolrooms, or other places not dedicated to the worship of God, may in some measure account for our shortcomings in these things; but the lack of reverence is not wholly chargeable to that fact. It will be freely admitted by all, we believe, that we are deplorably at fault in these matters, and that a decided reform should take place. There are to be rules in regard to the time, place, and manner of worship, and it is of great importance that they should be observed; but evidently the thing most needed is a keener sense of the sacredness that attaches to all connected with the services of the house of God.

"When the worshipers enter the place of meeting, they should do so with decorum, passing quietly to their seats. If there is a stove in the room, it is not proper to crowd about it in an indolent, careless attitude. Common talking, whispering, and laughing should not be permitted in the house of worship, either before or after the service. Ardent, active piety should characterize the worshipers."—Ibid., page 492.

"In the minds of many, there are no more sacred thoughts connected with the house of God than with the most common place. . . . There should be a radical change in this matter all through our churches. Ministers themselves need to elevate their ideas, to have finer susceptibilities in regard to it. It is a feature of the work that has been sadly neglected. Because of the irreverence in attitude, dress, and deportment, and lack of a worshipful frame of mind, God has often turned his face away from those assembled for his worship." —Ibid., page 499.

We are nearing the end, and we shall

The Rest Beyond

MARY V. NOWLIN

Beneath the shades of Elim I am resting,
And drinking of its many waters sweet;
Not thinking of the burning dread to-morrows,
Nor of the desert sands that wait my feet.

What though the desert stretches far before me,
As pathless as the ocean, and as wide!
I rise to follow on where'er He leadeth,
O'er trackless waste or on the silver tide.

What though to Rephidim I come all thirsty,
And find no water in that barren land?
My parchèd tongue shall only ever praise him,
While I recline or march at his command.

When Rephidim and Elim and the desert
Shall all be past, with all my wanderings,
And Jordan's dark and turbid waters holden,
I'll cross and drink from Canaan's crystal springs.

There will I rest my feet, and quench my thirsting,
And sing the praise that all my being fills,
That always I shall be with my Beloved,
When I have reached "the everlasting hills."

With this hope set before, what matters Marah,
Or Rephidim, or burning desert sand,
Or a brief journey through a land of sorrow,
That brings us over to the promised land?

A Message to Our Churches

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I awoke from my sleep last night with a great burden upon my mind. I was delivering a message to our brethren and sisters, and it was a message of warning and instruction concerning the work of some who are advocating erroneous theories as to the reception of the Holy Spirit, and its operation through human agencies.

I was instructed that fanaticism similar to that which we were called to meet after the passing of the time in 1844 would come in among us again in the closing days of the message, and that we must meet this evil just as decidedly now as we met it in our early experiences.

We are standing on the threshold of great and solemn events. Prophecies are fulfilling. Strange and eventful history is being recorded in the books of heaven, — events which it was declared should shortly precede the great day of God. Everything in the world is in an unsettled state. The nations are angry, and great preparations for war are being made. Nation is plotting against nation, and kingdom against kingdom. The (1) great day of God is hasting greatly. But although the nations are mustering their forces for war and bloodshed, the command to the angels is still in force, that they hold the four winds until the servants of God are sealed in their foreheads.

The world is now realizing the sure results of transgression of the law of God. His work of creation completed, the Lord rested on the seventh day, and sanctified the day of his rest, setting it apart as the day which man should devote to his worship. But to-day the world at large is utterly disregarding the law of Jehovah. Another day has been instituted in the place of God's day of rest. The human agent has set his way and his will against the positive teachings of the Word, and the world is plunged in rebellion and sin. (2)

This work of opposition to the law of God had its beginning in the courts of heaven, with Lucifer, the covering (3) cherub. Satan determined to be first in the councils of heaven, and equal with God. He began his work of rebellion with the angels under his command, seeking to diffuse among them the spirit of discontent. And he worked in so deceptive a way that many of the angels were won to his allegiance before his purposes were fully known. Even the loyal angels could not fully discern his character, nor see to what his work was leading. When Satan had succeeded in winning many angels to his side, he took his cause to God, representing that it was the desire of the angels that he occupy the position that Christ held.

The evil continued to work until the spirit of disaffection ripened into active revolt. Then there was war in heaven, and Satan, with all who sympathized with him, was cast out. Satan had warred for the mastery in heaven, and had lost the battle. God could no longer trust him with honor and supremacy, and these, with the part he had taken in the government of heaven, were taken from him. (4)

Since that time Satan and his army of confederates have been the avowed enemies of God in our world, continually warring against the cause of truth and righteousness. Satan has continued to present to men, as he presented to the angels, his false representations of Christ and of God, and he has won the world to his side. Even the professedly Christian churches have taken sides with the first great apostate.

Satan represents himself as the prince of the kingdom of this world, and it was in this character that he approached Christ in the last of his three great temptations in the wilderness. "If thou wilt fall down and worship me," he said to the Saviour, "all these"— pointing to the kingdoms of the world which Satan had caused to pass before Jesus —"will I give thee."

Christ in the courts of heaven had known that the time would come when the power of Satan must be met and conquered if the human race was ever to be saved from his dominion. And when that time came, the Son of God laid off his kingly crown and royal robe, and clothing his divinity with humanity, came to the earth to meet the prince of evil, and to conquer him. In order to become the advocate of man before the Father, the Saviour would live his life on earth as every human being must, accepting its adversities and sorrows and temptations. As the Babe of Bethlehem, he would become one with the race, and by a spotless life from the manger to the cross he would show that man, by a life of repentance and faith in him, might be restored to the favor of God. He would bring to man redeeming grace, forgiveness of sins. If men would return to their loyalty, and no longer transgress, they would receive pardon.

Christ in the weakness of humanity was to meet the temptations of one possessing the powers of the higher nature that God had bestowed on the angelic family. But Christ's humanity was united with divinity, and in this strength he would bear all the temptations that Satan could bring against him, and yet keep his soul untainted by sin. And this power to overcome he would give to every son and daughter of Adam who would accept by faith the righteous attributes of his character.

God loved the world so dearly that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever would accept him might have power to live his righteous life. Christ proved that it is possible for man to lay hold by faith on the power of God. He showed that the sinner, by repentance and the exercise of faith in the righteousness of Christ, can be reconciled to God, and become a partaker of the divine nature, overcoming the corruption that is in the world through lust.

To-day Satan presents the same temptations that he presented to Christ, offering us the kingdoms of the world in return for our allegiance. But upon him who looks to Jesus as the author and finisher of his faith, Satan's temptations have no power. He can not cause to sin the one who will accept by faith the virtues of him who was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." He who repents of his sin and accepts the gift of the life of the Son of God, can not be overcome. Laying hold by faith of the divine nature, he becomes a child of God. He prays, he believes. When tempted and tried, he claims the power that Christ died to give, and overcomes through his grace. This every sinner needs to understand. He must repent of his sin, he must believe in the power of Christ, and accept that power to save and to keep him from sin. How thankful ought we

to be for the gift of Christ's example!

Profound theories and speculations of human creation may abound, but he who would come off conqueror in the end, must be humble enough to depend upon divine power. When we thus grasp the power of Infinity, and come to Christ, saying, "In my hand no price I bring; simply to thy cross I cling," then divine agencies can co-operate with us to sanctify and purify the life.

Let no one seek to evade the cross. It is through the cross that we are enabled to overcome. It is through affliction and trial that divine agencies can carry on a work in our lives that will result in the love and peace and kindness of Christ.

A great work is to be accomplished daily in the human heart by the study of the Word. We need to learn the simplicity of true faith. This will bring its returns. Let us seek for decided advancement in spiritual understanding. Let us make the precious Word the man of our counsel. We need to walk carefully every moment, keeping close to the side of Christ. The spirit and grace of Christ are needed in the life, and the faith that works by love and purifies the soul.

We need to understand clearly the divine requirements that God makes of his people. The law, which is the transcript of his character, no one need fail to understand. The words written by the finger of God on tables of stone so perfectly reveal his will concerning his people that none need make any mistake. The laws of his kingdom were definitely made known, to be afterward revealed to the people of all nations and tongues as the principles of his government. We would do well to study those laws recorded in Exodus 20 and in the thirty-first chapter, verses 12-18.

(1) When the judgment shall sit, and the books shall be opened, and every man shall be judged according to the things written in the books, then the tables of stone, hidden by God until that day, will be presented before the world as the standard of righteousness. Then men and women will see that the prerequisite of their salvation is obedience to the perfect law of God. None will find excuse for sin. By the righteous principles of that law, men will receive their sentence of life or of death.

Shall We Colonize?

C. H. BLISS

I RECEIVED a letter a few days ago from a good brother, saying that he thinks of joining the Seventh-day Adventist colony now locating in ——. He speaks of others who think of going. Many have already gone. Now, is this right? Shall a large number of Seventh-day Adventists select a location and form a colony, and isolate themselves from the world? Are we not told to come out from the world and be separate? — True; but are we not also told to go into all the world and preach the gospel? and is not the third angel's message the gospel that is to go to every kindred, nation, tongue, and people? And how shall this be done without the help of our lay brethren? God has given us a special message to this generation — to the world; and all, both old and young, are to take part in some branch of this work. God has placed this burden upon us. Now shall we, like Jonah, flee away from the very place where God wants us? or, like ancient Israel, hide our lamp under a bushel, and get away in some lonely place where we have no opportunity to work for God?

As many as twelve or fourteen of our churches have been broken up in the last few years in one of our smallest conferences by removals. If these brethren have been led by the Spirit of God into new fields to work for the advancement of this message, we can not complain. But now several of our conferences are being weakened by removals brought about by the circulation of literature presenting in glowing colors the advantages of "securing homes in a Seventh-day Adventist community, in the Southwest, where all can have church and school privileges, and worship God unmolested."

Now, my brethren, in all candor, let me ask, Is this the call of God? Shall we retreat to some lonely place where our opportunities for work are very limited? Shall we sell our homes and lands, and at high prices purchase land in sections where there is no rain, and thus put money into the hands of land speculators, with no certainty of any material returns? The writer knows several who have tried this, and repented too late.

Does a Disappointment in Connection With a Work Prove It to Be an Error?

GEORGE I. BUTLER

THE fact that the advent believers expected the Lord to come in 1844, and that he did not come, settles the question in the minds of multitudes that the whole movement was fanaticism and a humbug; that God had nothing to do with it; and that all the believers in it were a set of dupes. Learned doctors of divinity, and the great masses of the popular churches, have so regarded it since the passing of the time. Are they right in such conclusions? The coming of the Lord Jesus Christ the second time is certainly taught in many places in the Bible. It will be an event of the greatest possible importance to the whole human family. Nothing can exceed it in interest. The message telling the world of the coming of this event must evidently be a matter requiring time. A whole generation would be none too long for this message to do its work.

The mistake of the Adventists in 1844 is very easy of explanation. As we have seen, the termination of the twenty-three hundred year-day period is fixed to the year 1844. There can be no mistake about that; for the good reason that to change the date of the beginning of that period from the going forth of the decree to restore and build Jerusalem by Artaxerxes, 457 B. C., to some other date, would literally disarrange all the other events included in the prophecy; but with that date, there is perfect harmony throughout.

The prophecy did not say that Christ would come at the close of that prophetic period. It did say that the sanctuary would be cleansed (or "justified," margin). The Adventists then believed the earth to be the sanctuary,— a belief without the support of a single text of Scripture. Supposing the earth to be the sanctuary, they expected it would be cleansed by fire, and so supposed that Christ would come at that time. This was their mistake. Yet not one of their learned opponents ever discovered the mistake. After the time passed, and the great disappointment came, in the careful, prayerful study of the Scriptures the whole glorious subject of the sanctuary opened up to their minds. They learned that the true sanctuary is in heaven, that God himself has made it, and that Christ has ministered in its first apartment about eighteen hundred years, as our High Priest after the order of Melchizedek. But in 1844 his place of ministry changed to the most holy place, to close up the final period of man's probation. Then a flood of light illuminated the whole subject of God's plan of redemption, and the final work of its closing scenes. They saw clearly that the first angel's message, proclaiming the hour of his judgment, had been given, and that Christ's last work in the heavenly temple is now in progress,— the final investigative judgment preceding his coming to execute the decisions of that judgment; and that a great work is to be wrought in fulfilment of the third message, the last of the most solemn series of the three angels' messages of Rev. 14:6-12. Then the great movement was clearly before them, which has already extended to the ends of the earth, and numbers a hundred thousand believers.

We now wish to consider briefly the idea that a disappointment necessarily demonstrates that any important work connected with it is a failure. Let us illustrate, first, by a great engineering project,— the building of the ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama. For ages the desirability of such a canal was most evident. It was a great undertaking, necessarily costing hundreds of millions. First the French under De Lesseps, the great man of the Suez Canal opening, undertook the task. Millions were spent. A terrible disappointment occurred. The undertaking was an ignominious failure. The great man died with a sad heart, and the work stopped. The French gave it up. Was the whole scheme a failure? — By no means. The United States of America took it up, and now everybody expects it will be a success.

Let us notice Bible illustrations. To carry out his great designs and educate and discipline a people to uphold his

Waiting

ELLA M. ROBINSON

ARE you waiting, idly waiting
For your Master to return,
While in indolence and pleasure
His unfinished work you spurn?

Waiting, only idly waiting,
While vast millions grope in night,
And your candle burns but dimly
In a land of gospel light?

Waiting with your golden treasure
Stored so carefully away?
Can it buy one soul's salvation
In God's awful judgment-day?

For the “latter rain” art waiting?
See, the showers are falling fast,
And the gospel fields are ripening —
Soon the harvest will be past.

Will you stand before your Master
With no sheaves your arms to fill?
When he comes, O, will he find you
Waiting, idly waiting still?

He alone who sows in sorrow,
He alone who sows in tears,
To the harvest feast is welcomed
When our coming Lord appears.

Lessons From the Apostasy at Sinai — No. 1

MRS. E. G. WHITE

SATAN is the leader of every species of rebellion to-day, as he was the originator of rebellion in the courts of heaven. Standing next to Christ in power and glory, yet he coveted the honor that belonged to the Son. He desired to be equal with God. To carry out his purpose, he concealed his true designs from the angels, and worked deceptively to secure their allegiance and honor to himself. By sly insinuations, by which he made it appear that Christ had assumed the place that belonged to him, Lucifer sowed the seeds of doubt in the minds of many of the angels; and when he had won their support, he carried the matter to God, declaring that it was the sentiment of many of the heavenly beings that he should have the preference to Christ.

We shall not at this time follow the immediate results of Satan's rebellion and his expulsion from heaven, but let us consider how his deceptive work is being continued to-day among those who profess to be the loyal people of God. In the hearts of many church-members there is being carried on to-day the same work of rebellion and disaffection, and the result is injury and weakness to the church. The artful foe has found a place in many hearts that should have no room for the selfish, ambitious principles that are being promulgated. For years the enemy has been seeking to bring false theories into the churches; and God alone can help us to meet his work successfully.

Satan sought to produce the same results among the people of Israel as they journeyed from Egypt to Canaan. God took Israel from the bondage of slavery, and under his own guidance brought them into the promised land. Moses, their visible leader, received instruction for them directly from God. But in spite of the wonderful evidences the people received that God was working in their behalf, they continually murmured and rebelled. God gave positive evidence that he ruled in the heavens; again and again rebellion was punished with death. Only two of those who as adults left Egypt, saw the promised land. The wanderings of the people were extended until the rest were buried in the wilderness.

To-day Satan is using the same devising to introduce the same evils, and his efforts are followed by the same results that in the days of Israel laid so many in their graves. Let us study the record of how Israel, in the sight of the mount on which they had shortly before seen so wonderful a display of God's power, were led into idolatry. While Moses was in the mount with God, receiving the sacred oracles, the people, in Aaron's charge, were worshiping a golden calf, while their leading men proclaimed the sacrilegious message, “These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.”

“When the people saw that Moses delayed to come down out of the mount, the people gathered themselves together unto Aaron, and said unto him, Up, make us gods, which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him. And Aaron said unto them, Break off the golden earrings, which are in the ears of your wives, of your sons, and of your daughters, and bring them unto me. And all the people brake off the golden earrings which were in their ears, and brought them unto Aaron. And he received them at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf: and they said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

“And when Aaron saw it, he built an altar before it; and Aaron made proclamation, and said, To-morrow is a feast to the Lord. And they rose up early on the morrow, and offered burnt-offerings, and brought peace-offerings; and the people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play.

“And the Lord said unto Moses, Go, get thee down; for thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves: they have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worshiped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.”

From this record we may learn how little dependence can be placed in men who trust in men, and do not make God their reliance. Those who are living in these last days are in the greatest danger of placing their confidence in men rather than in the true and living God. The Lord has given instruction that the history of the apostasy of Israel is now to be presented, because men who in the past have had great light have become self-sufficient, and are looking to men, trusting in human leaders, who are themselves practising evil. Men who ought to stand as firm as a rock to principle are treading in the same path that the Israelites followed. “Some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils.” This is the snare that has come into our ranks. There are wrong sentiments that have to be met. There are men who are acting the part of Aaron at the very time when every soul should be working to seal the law among God's disciples. They are building up the very things that God has specified should not be built up.

A great deal of time and labor and anxiety are required to counterwork the ingenuity of satanic agencies that are pressing their way among those who are ready to accept wrong philosophy, to cause confusion and division. Every jot of influence is needed to discern the great evils of Satan's devisings, and to keep souls from being drawn into the net of the modern Aarons who are saying, “These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.”

Long before, the Lord could have told Moses what was taking place. He could have revealed that Aaron could not be depended upon. But for wise and holy purposes he permitted the evil to develop. He suffered this shameful representation to come to its height. Then when the leading men had done all that it was in their power to do, he sent Moses down to punish the transgressors. The Lord sees what is in the hearts of men. At times he permits evils to take place that he may prevent still greater evils that would appear unless he permitted the designs hidden in human hearts to work out.

Mark God's words to Moses concerning this apostasy. They “have corrupted themselves,” he said; “they have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them.” Every man is tempted when he is drawn aside by his own lusts.

The fact that Aaron had been blessed and honored so far above the people was what made his sin so heinous. It was Aaron, “the saint of the Lord,” that had made the idol and announced the feast. It was he who had been appointed spokesman for Moses, and concerning whom God himself had testified, “I know that he can speak well,” who had failed to check the idolaters in their heaven-daring purpose. He by whom God had wrought in bringing judgments both upon the Egyptians and upon their gods, had heard, unmoved, the proclamation, "These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt." It was he who had been with Moses in the mount, and had there beheld the glory of the Lord, and who had seen that in the manifestation of that glory there was nothing of which an image could be made,— it was he who had changed that glory into the similitude of an ox. He to whom God had committed the government of the people in the absence of Moses, was found sanctioning their rebellion. "The Lord was very angry with Aaron to have destroyed him." But in answer to the earnest intercession of Moses, his life was spared: and in penitence and humiliation for his great sin, he was restored to the favor of God.

If Aaron had had courage to stand for the right, irrespective of consequences, he could have prevented that apostasy. If he had unswervingly maintained his own allegiance to God, if he had cited the people to the perils of Sinai, and had reminded them of their solemn covenant with God to obey his law, the evil would have been checked. But his compliance with the desires of the people, and the calm assurance with which he proceeded to carry out their plans, emboldened them to go to greater lengths in sin than had before entered their minds.

Of all the sins that God will punish, none are more grievous in his sight than those that encourage others to do evil. God would have his servants prove their loyalty by faithfully rebuking transgression, however painful the act may be. Those who are honored with a divine commission, are not to be weak, pliant time-servers. They are not to aim at self-exaltation, or to shun disagreeable duties, but are to perform God's work with unswerving fidelity.

The Second Angel's Message

What Is Babylon?

GEORGE I. BUTLER

"AND I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." Rev. 14:6-8.

In the recent past several articles have appeared in the REVIEW bearing on various points in connection with the first angel's proclamation. We quote it again, as we are about to consider the second angel's proclamation, to show the close connection between the two, and the result to those who rejected the great light of the first message. The reader should ever remember that these three messages, taken together, form a series; for the one following the second message begins with this statement: "And the third angel followed them." This language absolutely demonstrates that the three form one series, and that, taken together, they form the great platform of truth upon which the people of God will stand who are prepared for Christ's coming. The first is given as a grand announcement, showing the close of prophetic time, and the beginning of the judgment period; the second shows the consequences of the rejection of light, and the condition of the vast body of professed Christians before the second advent of our Lord and Saviour; while the third message presents a glorious reform which will serve to prepare a people for that grandest of all events.

This series, then, of three messages, composing the great last-day proclamation to the world of grand facts necessary for it to know in order to be ready for Christ's coming, is emphatically "present truth" for the last days. The first announces the close of prophetic time, and the beginning of the great judgment period preceding the coming of Christ, when the final decisions fixing the eternal destiny of all mankind will have been rendered. The first message of the three will be continued in its proclamation till the close of probation. What could be of greater importance to the world than a knowledge of the fact that the last great judgment of mankind had already begun?

Babylon is mentioned in the book of Revelation five or six times in a figurative sense, as a worldly, proud, apostate form of politics and religion combined in one system. The name Babylon is very suggestive. It originated at that interesting period when Nimrod, the mighty hunter before the Lord, was the head of a rebellious movement among the descendants of Noah. The Lord had designed that the descendants of Noah should spread abroad and repeople the earth. But they said, "Let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth." Gen. 11:4. Here were seen the beginnings of human ambition to be great and powerful and independent of God. So they began their city and proceeded to erect their proposed tower, "to reach unto heaven," with the evident design of providing against destruction from any future flood. This attempt was in reality a rebellion against God, and the Lord here confounded their language, so they could not understand one another in building. Hence, great confusion resulted, and their ambitious project was a failure. Here was the origin of the many languages and dialects spoken on our earth.

The whole scheme of the building of the city,— the object in view,— was contrary to God's designs for them; hence this fearful judgment of confounding their language, which absolutely destroyed their rebellious schemes. Here also can be discerned the "confusion" in religious matters. The "gate of God" became a mixture of pretentious service of God, with really a terrible apostasy, paving the way to the whole train of heathen religions.

Then again in later years Babylon became the oppressor of God's people. The Babylonian captivity resulted in mixing into the Jewish religion heathen conceptions and doctrines originated by Satan, the great apostate angel who brought sin into the universe. Thus commenced "the great controversy" between God and Satan, which has largely had its seat in our world. In his infinite wisdom God has permitted one exhibition of the result of sin and its awful train of evils in his universe, to show to all worlds the result of disobedience and rebellion against God, and also to show his wonderful love by the gift of his Son, man's Saviour and glorious benefactor. Sin is abnormal and evil; one exhibition of its terrible consequences will be enough to all eternity. It will soon be destroyed forever by the second coming of Christ.

The terms Babylon and Egypt are used to represent the sources of the evils which corrupted the religion of holy origin. Egypt was the most conspicuous source of idolatry in our world. From it the Greeks and Romans derived much of their knowledge of idolatry. Their great philosophers went there to learn its mysteries. When Israel came from Egypt to Canaan, the whole mass of the people was permeated with the idolatrous ideas of the Egyptians. The first prominent act of rebellion against God — the making of a golden calf — showed the result of Egyptian teaching and example. During all the history of Israel, God warned them against Egypt and its teachings and abominations.

The seventy years of captivity in Babylon resulted in greatly corrupting the Jewish religion. Only a few comparatively, ever returned to Canaan. The ten tribes were absorbed in the mass of heathenism. As tribes, they largely disappeared. And those who did come back were affected more or less by the Babylonian doctrines.

In the book of Revelation, the term Babylon is frequently used. It can not refer to the literal city of that name, for that was then in ruins. It must be used in a metaphorical sense. It is a descriptive term, suggested by the original root-meaning of the word, "confusion," mixture; an attempt to blend truth and error (things which can not mix, any more than can oil and water) into a religious system, claiming the right to control men's consciences, and tyrannically forcing people to bow to its dicta.

The Babylon of the apocalypse is a family affair: "And there came one of the seven angels that had the seven bowls, and spake with me, saying, Come hither, I will show thee the judgment of the great harlot that sitteth upon many waters; with whom the kings of the earth committed fornication, and they that dwell in the earth were made drunken with the wine of her fornica-

By and By

WHERE'ER heavy hearts are beating,
Comes the gentle, whispered greeting,
Hope's sweet voice is e'er repeating,
By and by! by and by!
Chase the tear-drop, check the sigh,
Joy is coming by and by.

Rosy childhood's pulse is bounding,
To that magic whisper sounding,
Telling of the joys abounding,
By and by! by and by!
Haste the moments, let them fly —
Joys, we'll grasp them by and by!

And to manhood, tried and weary,
Through the work hours, long and dreary,
Steals an echo, soft yet cheery,
By and by! by and by!
Flinch not, pause not, guerdon high
Shall reward thee by and by!

Lessons From the Apostasy at Sinai — No. 2

MRS. E. G. WHITE

ONLY a few days had passed since the Hebrews made a solemn covenant with God to obey his voice. They had stood trembling with terror before the mount, listening to the words of the Lord, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." "They made a calf in Horeb, and worshiped the molten image. Thus they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox." How could greater ingratitude have been shown, or more daring insult offered, to him who had revealed himself to them as a tender Father and an all-powerful King?

Moses in the mount was warned of the apostasy in the camp, and was directed to return without delay. "Go, get thee down," the Lord said; "for thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves: they have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worshiped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

"And the Lord said unto Moses, I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a stiff-necked people: now therefore let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them: and I will make of thee a great nation."

God declared that he would disown the people. He gave them their true character,— a stiff-necked people, who would not respect his law or come under his rule. "Let me alone," he said to Moses, "that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them: and I will make of thee a great nation."

Moses was tested with the promise of great honor. The Lord would place him at the head of a great nation. Had Moses possessed a narrow, selfish spirit, how quickly he would have grasped such an offer. But he would not listen to the promise of preferment. He continues to plead for the erring people. His one great desire is that the glory of God shall be maintained. Above all else he longs for the salvation of this people for whom the Lord has worked so wondrously. Their remarkable experience in escaping from slavery, the flight from Egypt, the passage through the Red Sea, — these are stamped on his mind as if graven in a rock, and he will not let Israel go.

O the power of prayer! Moses fills his mouth with arguments that express his own faith in God; and the Lord, who is testing and trying him, is not angry with him because of his importunity. God had said, "Thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt." But in his prayer Moses denies this honor. In humble, but determined assurance, he turns the people back upon God. They are thy people, he says. Thou art their God and Owner. Thou broughtest them forth out of the land of Egypt. I did only what thou commandest me. I was but thine instrument, obeying the orders thou gavest me. Thou, and thou alone, couldst do this work. The eyes of all the nations are upon Israel, a people so strongly saved. O, do not permit the throne of thy glory to be disgraced!

"Lord," he pleads, "why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt with great power, and with a mighty hand? Wherefore should the Egyptians speak, and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth. Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent [What an argument!] of this evil against thy people. Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou swarest by thine own self, and saidst unto them, I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it forever."

As Moses interceded for Israel, his timidity was lost in his deep interest and love for those for whom he had, in the hands of God, been the means of doing much. The Lord listened to his pleadings, and granted his unselfish prayer. God had proved his servant, he had tested his faithfulness and his love for that erring, ungrateful people, and nobly had Moses endured the trial. His interest in Israel sprang from no selfish motives. The prosperity of God's chosen people was dearer to him than personal honor, dearer than the privilege of becoming the father of a mighty nation. God was pleased with his faithfulness, his simplicity of heart, and his integrity, and he committed to him, as a faithful shepherd, the great charge of leading Israel to the promised land.

The record shows that prayers of faith, though offered by frail human beings, have power with God. The earnest cry, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me," has saved many a soul. If there were far more urgent intercessions for perishing souls, there would be far more souls saved. Of Christ it is written, "He saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor: therefore his arm brought salvation unto him; and his righteousness, it sustained him." He wondered that there was no man who would lay hold by faith on his fellow men, and save them with fear, pulling them out of the fire, hating even the garments spotted by the flesh.

"He put on righteousness as a breastplate." Christ was not covering up the sins of the transgressor, but was making the most determined effort to bring the sinner to a sense of the sinfulness of sin. His own hatred of sin, his own integrity, brought salvation to the sinner. "He put on righteousness as a breastplate, and an helmet of salvation upon his head; and he put on the garments of vengeance for clothing, and was clad with zeal as a cloak. According to their deeds, accordingly he will repay, fury to his adversaries, recompense to his enemies; to the islands he will repay recompense. So shall they fear the name of the Lord from the west, and his glory from the rising of the sun. When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. And the redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord: My Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever."

"And Moses turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand: the tables were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written. And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables.

"And when Joshua heard the noise of the people as they shouted, he said unto Moses, There is a noise of war in the camp. And he said, It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery, neither is it the voice of them that cry for being overcome: but the noise of them that sing do I hear.

"And it came to pass, as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that he saw the calf, and the dancing: and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount. And he took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strawed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it.

"And Moses said unto Aaron, What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought so great a sin upon them?" The sin of idolatry is a fearful sin, and Aaron, as a magistrate, should have faithfully discharged his duty, instead of engaging with the people in sin. It was Moses who interceded with God to spare his life. Aaron was saved by the prayer of Moses. Aaron did repent, or the Lord would not have pardoned his transgression. He did not stand out in rebellion, but took his stand with Moses; and notwithstanding he had taken sides with the idolaters, he was saved.

All the people had the opportunity of demonstrating their repentance, and thus saving their lives. "Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, Who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him." All were given the opportunity to be loyal to God. All who humbled themselves before him, and placed themselves on his side, showing that they desired to obey him, would be pardoned, while those who would not yield would condemn themselves as rebels. There would be no excuse for them. All were given the opportunity of repudiating their past idolatrous conduct, and of showing their determination to be true. But in the very presence of God many refused to repent. They were stubborn in their rebellion.

To the sons of Levi, who had taken their stand with him, Moses said, "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbor. And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses: and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men. For Moses had said, Consecrate yourselves to-day to the Lord, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother; that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day."

The Israelites had been guilty of treason, and that against a King who had loaded them with benefits, and whose authority they had voluntarily pledged themselves to obey. That the divine government might be maintained, justice must be visited upon the traitors. Yet even here God's mercy was displayed. While he maintained his law, he granted freedom of choice and opportunity for repentance for all. Only those were cut off who persisted in rebellion.

Love no less than justice demanded that for this sin judgment should be inflicted. God is the guardian as well as the sovereign of his people. He cuts off those who are determined upon rebellion, that they may not lead others to ruin. In sparing the life of Cain, God had demonstrated to the universe what would be the result of permitting sin to go unpunished. The influence exerted upon his descendants by his life and teaching led to the state of corruption that demanded the destruction of the whole world by a flood. The history of the antediluvians testifies that long life is not a blessing to the sinner; God's great forbearance did not repress their wickedness. The longer men lived, the more corrupt they became.

So with the apostasy at Sinai. Unless punishment had been speedily visited upon transgression, the same results would have again been seen. The earth would have become as corrupt as in the days of Noah. Had these transgressors been spared, evils would have followed greater than resulted from sparing the life of Cain. It was the mercy of God that thousands should suffer, to prevent the necessity of visiting judgment upon millions. In order to save the many, he must punish the few. Furthermore, as the people had cast off their allegiance to God, they had forfeited the divine protection, and, deprived of their defense, the whole nation was exposed to the power of their enemies. Had not the evil been promptly put away, they would soon have fallen a prey to their numerous and powerful foes. It was necessary for the good of Israel, and was also a lesson to all succeeding generations, that crime should be promptly punished. And it was no less a mercy to the sinners themselves that they should be cut short in their evil course. Had their lives been spared, the same spirit that led them to rebel against God would have been manifested in hatred and strife among themselves, and they would have eventually destroyed one another. It was in love to the world, in love to Israel, and even to the transgressors, that crime was punished with swift and terrible severity.

In this our day, when many, even among those who claim to be numbered among God's people, are not fully decided as to the right course, the Lord is calling for men who will move steadfastly in the path that he has marked out, and with unshaken determination carry out his purposes. Those who occupy positions of responsibility should know what saith the Lord. Like Moses of old, they should stand unflinchingly for the right, stemming the current of evil. In the critical times in which we are living, men of determination are needed,— men who will stand stiffly for the truth at all times and under all circumstances,— men who, when they see that others are becoming untrue to principle, will lift their voice in warning against the danger of apostasy.

Babylon and Its Fall

GEORGE I. BUTLER

Our last article introduced the second angel's message, and inquired into the reasons why the term Babylon was used in symbolic prophecy. We found that the original name signified "confusion," "mixture," and, as applied to religious matters, a confusion of religious ideas — error mixed with truth, and heathenism mixed with Christian doctrines; pride, bigotry, persecution, politics, united in a system with Christian profession.

Rev. 17:3-6 was quoted. Here a woman, gaudily dressed in purple and scarlet, is introduced as riding upon a scarlet-colored beast with seven heads and ten horns. This seven-headed and ten-horned beast can be none other than the Roman empire, described in other passages in this same prophecy. In many scriptures a woman is used in symbolic prophecy as a symbol to represent a church: a pure woman represents a pure church, a corrupt woman a corrupt church. This woman riding on the seven-headed and ten-horned beast must therefore represent the apostate church ruling over Rome, as it has done for many centuries. This woman is called "Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth."

No term could more fitly describe the papacy than this term Babylon, "confusion," "mixture." To every candid seeker after Bible truth, with the facts of history before him, the conclusion is inevitable that the Roman Church is the result of an apostasy from the pure religion of Christ and his apostles. Great corruptions came in during the first two hundred years of church history, but especially was this true after Constantine's time, when they increased till there was little resemblance between the church which the humble Nazarene founded and the apostles built up, and the church ruled by the papacy. She became the "mother of harlots," "drunken with the blood of saints," and her persecutions caused the death of millions upon millions of the humble disciples of Christ, who would not affiliate with her or accept her authority.

In the great Protestant Reformation of the sixteenth century, Luther, Calvin, and many others came out from her, and founded various other religious bodies. Some of them were state-and-church bodies; others had no such connections with the state. While these churches continued in the pathway of true reformation, God abundantly blessed them, and he was with them to a greater or lesser degree, according to their faithfulness to the teachings of his Word. The Catholics themselves professed to accept the Bible as their authority, yet according to their own teachings they preferred above it their own traditions and the authority of their councils and popes. In the Protestant Reformation far greater respect was accorded to the Scriptures, though many of the Protestants, especially the church-and-state bodies, still had much respect for human traditions. Yet all the so-called Protestant bodies which left the Roman communion brought with them more or less of tradition not authorized by the Scriptures. We will enumerate a few of these traditions: —

The keeping of Sunday in the place of the seventh-day Sabbath, which God appointed at the creation of the world. This Sunday-keeping practise has not one single text of Scripture for its support. The seventh-day Sabbath originated at creation by the example and appointment of the Creator himself. The patriarchs kept it. God commanded its observance from Mount Sinai, and

"They Shall See His Face"

MRS. A. E. BARNES

To see His face — O joy divine!
What richer treasure could be mine
Than when, these earthly trials o'er,
I see his face forevermore?

To see his face — my soul, rejoice!
To see his face and hear his voice;
To count my toilsome journey o'er,
And see his face forevermore.

My Father's face! O blessed thought!
With every earthly care forgot,
I'll stand upon that heavenly shore,
And see his face forevermore.

A blood-washed throng, redeemed from earth,
Shall see his face. O sound it forth,
Till all who will may find their place
In heaven, where they shall see his face!

Instruction to Ministers

MRS. E. G. WHITE

In these last days ministers need to guard the churches against the dangers arising from the acceptance of fanciful and erroneous theories by preaching the plain truths of the Word regarding individual duty and responsibility. The people of God are to be educated to hate and forsake all unrighteousness if they would be prepared for a place in the kingdom of heaven. Teach that the fruits of repentance are to be seen in the life in deeds of righteousness. By lives of faith and devotion, and reliance upon the Word of God as the foundation of all faith, by acts of unselfishness and sincerity, teach them to make known the saving grace of Christ.

The qualifications which shine brightest in the eyes of men and are most attractive in the kingdom of the world, have no recognition in the kingdom of God. The rewards of Christ's kingdom are not for the covetous, the selfish, the proud. No, no; those who enter into eternal life enter it because the perfection of Christ's character has been imparted to them. In the kingdom of God nobility and holiness of character are accounted wealth. That which is pure and lovely counts. The knowledge of the truth in the heart, virtue of character, the manifestation of love such as Christ possessed,— those who are possessors of these are sharers in the kingdom of Christ.

The lesson of the barren fig-tree is one that we should keep continually before us. It is not profession of righteousness that will meet the needs of the world to-day, and fulfil the will of God for the human family. God is looking for fruit-bearing branches. "Feed my sheep with pure provender," is the Lord's command to those who stand as teachers of the gospel of salvation. He has made provision that the gospel's saving power shall be represented in all places.

This gospel, Paul declares, must be preached to every creature under heaven; "whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfil the word of God." The apostle bears the burden of the stewardship given him. He must cooperate with God in the work of saving souls, dispensing faithfully as one who must give an account. And as he labors, he sees by the eye of faith the results of his work; souls who were without God and without hope in the world would receive the faith, and in their turn preach the gospel they had received. "Now in Christ Jesus," he declares, "ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. . . . For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord."

Conditions to our knowledge of the mystery of God are plainly stated. "If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel." This calls for much searching of the Scriptures. We can not be settled in the faith unless we educate and train every faculty of the mind. To continue in the faith means to have a determined purpose to use every God-given power in becoming an experienced and competent builder with God, building up the souls of those in the faith, and striving to reach those who have not yet come to a knowledge of the truth.

I was shown that mistakes have been made that have left wrong impressions upon minds, because there were allowed to preside over important interests men who were deficient in the saving grace of the gospel, who had not made its purity and simplicity a part of their lives, and who did not seek God often in earnest, humble prayer. Righteous, self-denying works were not regarded by them as being a necessary part of Christian experience. They did not see the necessity of having the Spirit of Christ and of emulating his example in their work of ministry.

I am instructed to say to our ministers, Be careful that the work of cleansing and sanctifying shall go on in your own individual souls. Let your first thought be to make your calling and election sure. Your example is to be full of kindness and encouragement. No masterful spirit is to come in, but let the heart be filled with the tenderness and love and compassion of Christ. Work every day for sanctification of the spirit through belief of the truth. Let all realize that they are chosen of God to reveal that they understand the mystery of godliness.

As a people we are to be purified from our natural evil habits and desires. Our hearts must be changed, or we can not correctly represent the Lord Jesus, who gave his life for us. The Son of God took humanity upon him that he might make it possible for humanity to take hold upon divinity through the exercise of a perfect faith. Christ is our example for the development of a perfect character. Through the strength we receive from him, we may be overcomers. In seeking him for those things that we need, we must exercise a faith that will not be denied. We must represent him by following humbly in his footsteps. Through faith in his merits and practise of the truth, we shall receive of his grace, and this will be revealed in kindness of heart and of action, and in singleness of purpose. Courtesy and sympathy will be revealed in our lives. By a daily opening of the heart to truth and righteousness, as they are found in Jesus, we shall be able to reveal that truth and that righteousness in our dealings with others.

The Spirit of Christ is grieved when any of his followers give evidence of possessing a harsh, unfair, or exacting spirit. As laborers together with God, each should regard the other as part of God's great firm. He desires that they shall counsel together. There is to be no drawing apart, for the spirit of independence dishonors the truth we profess. One special evidence that the Spirit of Christ is abiding in his church is the unity and harmony which exist among its members. This is the brightest witness to the possession of true religion; for it will convert and transform the natural man, and fashion him after the divine similitude.

The converting power of Christ is the agency that will overcome our individual defects of character, and make us laborers together with God. By the truth held in its purity souls will be reached who could not otherwise be influenced to obey. The Holy Spirit is to be our counselor and guide in every branch of the work. The will of God made manifest in the life reveals the power of the Word to overcome the natural traits of character, and to change the believer "from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

A Time for Earnest Work

G. B. THOMPSON

The close of probation! What an awful hour is that when the destiny of a world is decided! When we stop to think that this long-looked-for, yet awful, hour is near, how it ought to move the hearts of those who believe this solemn truth! The last plagues are at hand. When we pause to think that in a few brief years, at most, earth's millions, our unsaved friends and neighbors, will be in the grip of the seven last plagues, from which there will be no deliverance, it should arouse us to work for souls perishing in their sins.

Our inaction is appalling in view of the lost millions around us. We should awake to our responsibility. It is related of Rowland Hill, who was noted for his energy and eccentricity, that once, while speaking, he was carried away by the impetuous rush of his feelings, and exclaimed:—

"Beware! I am in earnest; men call me an enthusiast, but I am not: mine are words of truth and soberness. When I first came into this part of the country, I was walking on yonder hill; I saw a gravel pit fall in, and bury three human beings alive. I lifted up my voice for help so loudly that I was heard in the town below, a distance of a mile: help came and rescued two of the poor sufferers. No one called me an enthusiast then. When I see eternal destruction ready to fall upon poor sinners, and about to entomb them irrecoverably in an eternal mass of woe, and call on them to escape by repentance and fleeing to Christ, shall I be called an enthusiast?"

Our efforts are far too feeble when compared with the terribly solemn message with which we are entrusted, and the remnant of time which remains in which to finish the work. We should awake from the stupor which rests upon us, and throw all our power and energy into the finishing of the work. Let us work as if we really believed God's truth for this time.

Religious Conditions in the Last Days

GEORGE I. BUTLER

In order to comprehend fully the conditions connected with "the fall of Babylon," it seems necessary to consider certain scriptures which speak of the last days and of the religious conditions prevailing in that interesting period.

The fall of Babylon is certainly an important matter. It is made prominent in the book of Revelation. We should approach the subject in a candid, kind, Christian spirit, and never in a censorious, sharp, criticizing spirit calculated to wound and hurt the feelings of others. Our efforts should be to instruct, edify, and kindly lead along the lines of truth, as the Lord has done in his blessed Word. We should mildly seek to present the reasons of Babylon's fall, so that candid Christian people may see and fully comprehend, and be saved from its awful effects.

With these objects in view, we approach the subject by considering certain scriptures relating to the last days of time. In the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew we have a most remarkable prophetic discourse, given by our Saviour just before his crucifixion, in answer to his disciples' question, "Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

Jesus then answered their questions, and told them how and when these things would come. In his discourse he first rapidly gave a summary of the prominent events of the Christian dispensation. In the latter part of the chapter he gives the special signs of his coming. In verses 11-14 he gives a special description of the religious conditions prevailing in the last days: "And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." There can be no question but that Christ is here speaking of the very last days.

Notice especially verse 12: "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax [or grow] cold." The last days are days of great light and knowledge: "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Dan. 12:4. We have surely reached that period. But though it be an age of "knowledge," it is likewise an age of great spiritual stupor, coldness, and apathy among professed Christians generally. Who can dispute that we have reached such a period? There are some noble exceptions left in the world, we admit, but most assuredly religious coldness and apathy characterize these last days.

In the parable of the importunate widow (Luke 18:1-8), we have another statement by our Saviour bearing on this subject. In this parable there is introduced an unjust judge, who feared not God nor man, wholly selfish and indifferent to the rights of the poor oppressed widow. Holding the office of judge, he had to listen to the cause of the wronged and oppressed. She pleaded her case most earnestly. He simply put her off, and wished to be bothered no more with her claims. But she was persistent, and felt that she must have justice. She had the right to come to him, and she came constantly. He soon found that if her case did not receive attention, he would be worn out with her importunities. This selfish reason, rather than any desire to see justice done, induced him to grant her request. She got justice because of her earnestness. The Lord says: "Hear what the unjust judge saith. And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? . . . Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith [or this kind of faith] on the earth?"

His language strongly implies that there will be very little of this strong, vigorous, persistent, earnest faith on the earth when the Son of man comes. Our Saviour sometimes prayed all night for strength to carry out his wonderful mission. But the great majority of professed Christians in these last days know very little of prevailing faith. It is a day of religious carelessness and apathy.

In the latter part of Paul's first epistle to the Thessalonians, we have a wonderfully vivid description of the second coming of Christ: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. . . . For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, . . . and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness."

Why is it that some of God's professed people are of darkness, while others are the children of light? There must be a reason for this difference. Peter answers this question: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." 2 Peter 1:19. This earth is a dark place morally. Every form of iniquity prevails in it. The midnight of heathenism envelops more than a thousand million of earth's inhabitants to-day, after eighteen centuries of gospel light; and besides these, vast multitudes dwell in darkness almost as great. These care little for the light of prophecy, which alone can enlighten them. A small number have accepted that blessed light, and hence they are said to be "the children of light." They are illuminated by its clear rays. One class heeds "the sure word of prophecy," and the other rejects that light. Each has the same opportunity. God wishes to enlighten all; but his method is cast aside, sometimes with evident scorn and hatred, but still oftener with indifference and neglect. Hence the great darkness which broods over the mass of professed Christians to-day. They refuse to receive the light which God has in mercy sent. They are crying, "Peace and safety," when sudden destruction is impending.

What can be done to arouse and enlighten the professed people of God? Their condition is passing strange, yea, sad above measure. It is as it was at Christ's first advent. His professed people, the Jews, ignored the prophetic instructions God had given through his prophets. He had, through the prophet (Daniel 9), given the very year when the Messiah should appear. A few knew this, and believed, and were looking for his advent. Simeon was "waiting for the consolation of Israel." The Holy Ghost was with him. The Lord had made known to him that he should not die till he had "seen the Lord's Christ." In the temple of God he was waiting, and when they put the child Jesus into his arms, he cried, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace. . . . Mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

The widow, Anna, a prophetess, also recognized the fulfilment of the prophetic prediction. A small minority of God's professed people accepted the light. The great majority rejected him, and some

The Table of the Lord

MRS. PAULINE ALDERMAN

How shall I to thy banquet come, dear Lord?
Thy table in the wilderness? Thou hast
Invited me; and though I am so weak
And vile, I could not look on this great feast,
Much less partake of what thou hast prepared,
If Jesus' blood my sins had not removed.

O wondrous fount! Thy healing power avails,
And I — yea, even I — can come and take
These sacred emblems of thy pitying love.
So with thy saints in this dark vale of sin
I will sit down to thine appointed feast,
And take the bread of life, broken for me,—
Yea, and for all the world.

Dear Saviour mine,
Thou dost behold thy gathered children, and
Dost cheer us with thy presence as we come,
And thou art waiting till we reach thy home
Above the stars, above the mists of time,
There to renew thy promise to thy saints,
And sit down with them to the glorious feast.

We praise thee, O beloved One! to us
The fairest. Now to Calvary we look:
Unmeasured love flows from thy many wounds.
I see! I see! And bow at Calvary's cross.

Our Duty to Communicate Truth

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Again and again I am instructed to charge our people with their individual responsibility to work, and believe, and pray. The reception of Bible truth will lead to continual self-denial; for self-indulgence can never be found in a Christlike experience. Truly converted men and women will reveal the cross of Calvary in their daily actions. There are many Seventh-day Adventists who do not understand that to accept the cause of Christ means to accept his cross. The only evidence they give in their lives of their discipleship is in the name they bear. But the true Christian regards his stewardship as a sacred thing. He perseveringly studies the Word, and yields up his life to the service of Christ.

The word of encouragement is given, "Be not weary in well-doing," "always abounding in the work of the Lord." There is a world to be saved, a work to be done that can be accomplished only by the proclamation of the gospel message. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Should we not thank the Lord with heart and soul for his unspeakable gift? Should we not be willing to devote every capability and talent to the work of representing Christ before the world?

There is great need of the Holy Spirit's influence in our midst. There must be an individual work done in the breaking of stubborn hearts. There needs to be deep heart-searching, that will lead to confession of sin. Believers should at this time stand with softened, sanctified, broken hearts, every sin confessed in repentance that needeth not to be repented of. The Holy Spirit is waiting to kindle in the heart the love of God, that his praise may be spoken from lips that are true, unselfish, clean, and honest. When holy principles guide the life, the soul will be beautiful in its simplicity.

The influence of the prayer of faith is as far-reaching as eternity. The Lord will bless all who will seek him with the whole heart, and who with humble souls and earnest purpose strive to follow the example of Christ. To those who thus seek to become partakers of the divine nature, the words are spoken, "Be not weary in well-doing," "always abounding in the work of the Lord." He who labors in faith and humility, holding fast to the promises of God, will prevail. The greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven will be given to the faithful, believing children of God.

"Ye are the salt of the earth," said Christ; "but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men.

"Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill can not be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works," the Saviour declared. These "good works" will begin to appear when the experience of repentance and conversion is brought into the life. Not until then can words and works "glorify your Father which is in heaven." Unless we reveal the converting power of God in our lives, we can not work in safe paths. It is not in saying that we believe the truth, but by showing that we are changed in character, through a belief of the truth, that we make known to others the transforming power of the grace of God.

What is expected of the subjects of Christ's kingdom? The answer is given by Christ himself, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." No soul can enter into the heavenly courts who does not have an understanding of God's requirements, and does not strive to be perfect, even as God is perfect.

I am instructed to urge the necessity of personal consecration and sanctification of the whole being to God. Let each soul inquire, Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do, that the vigilance of Christ may be seen in my life, and that his example may be copied by me, and that I may speak sincere words that will help souls who are in darkness and sin? O, how I long to see our church-members clothed with their beautiful garments, and prepared to go forth to meet the Bridegroom. I am in fear and trembling for those who have not yet on the wedding garment. Many are expecting to sit down to the marriage supper of the Lamb who are unprepared for the coming of the King. They are like the blind; they do not discern their danger. "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way," the Saviour declared, "which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Every individual believer is under obligation to give to others the truth he possesses. Nothing should be allowed to keep the servant of Christ from letting his light shine forth to his fellow men. We are ever to be learners, ever to be increasing in a knowledge of how to lead others to the light of truth. All around us there are sinners to be labored for. If we will arouse ourselves to co-operate with the divine Worker, we shall see a great work accomplished. And we ourselves will grow in grace as we seek to communicate the will of God to others.

As professed Christians our lives must be Christlike, and this can only be when we receive this grace to impart it to others. Many among us who profess to believe are daily losing opportunities of receiving the grace of Christ and of imparting this grace to others. We should be daily increasing in ability to do the precious work of winning souls to Christ. This is such a precious work, such a satisfying work! And all heaven is waiting for channels through which can be poured the heavenly oil to refresh and strengthen needy souls. The Lord will protect and guide those who will let his divine fulness flow from their lips in grateful praise, and who labor, through deeds of charity and love, to bless mankind. Such workers will become consecrated agents for God.

I would say to every believer, Bring the spirit of heavenly grace into your soul, into your experience: this is the impress of the character of Christ. Angels are watching you, and they sing songs of thanksgiving and praise to the Lamb when his people engage in faithful, unselfish labor for others. And your reward for service will be found in the reflection of the tender spirit of Christ in your own life.

By communicating to others the grace we receive, we shall be made partakers of the rich blessings of God. Obedience to his will will keep the soul in the love of Christ. Bind yourselves up with Christ and with God, and reflect his glory to the souls ready to perish. Let there be a reconversion of soul on the part of those who have allowed themselves to grow careless and indifferent. If we would look upon suffering humanity with eyes that see their need, and would heed the command of Christ, "Go work to-day in my vineyard;" if we would speak to souls words of comfort and wisdom, and work out before them the principles of the gospel, the message of mercy would soon reach to every part of the world.

We become overcomers by helping others to overcome. We overcome by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of our testimony. The keeping of the commandments of God will yield in us an obedient spirit, and the service that is the offspring of such a spirit, God can accept. O that we all in the day of final award might hear the words spoken to us individually, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant"! How many in our churches will seek to set such an example as will reflect to mankind the Light of the world? The Saviour calls for workers who will give themselves to be worked by the Holy Spirit,— workers who will yield to the refining, elevating influences of truth, and thus be fitted to wear the crown of life in the kingdom of God.

Ye Did It Unto Me

H. MARSHALL J. RICHARDS

ONLY five short words, but what a depth of meaning! How expressive of a great opportunity grasped! Yet often how little understood or remembered when the blessed opportunity calls, offering to bring the very presence of the heavenly Guest within our homes! How often, unrecognized, has the Master knocked at our door, and then, unwelcomed, sadly turned away!

He must receive a welcome, or he will turn away. His glory he can not divide with another, and he respects that likeness to God which he has created in man's mind — the freedom of choice, freedom to do or not to do that which may be done. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Rev. 3:20. This is in direct reference to the reception of his Spirit into the soul in the gifts of righteousness, faith, love, and divine guidance. It shows clearly the Lord's recognition of our God-given right of choice. We can "choose" life, or "choose" death. See Deut. 30:19; Isa. 66:4; Eze. 18:30-32; Prov. 1:20-33.

Thus we may choose to live the daily life now that will bring eternal life hereafter; or, we may live the life that will bring eternal death. It is left with us to decide. And we are constantly deciding every day as the opportunities come and go.

At the final Judgment the balance between "life eternal" and "everlasting punishment," will be turned by what we have done to "the least of these, my brethren." As we have treated the Lord's children, so have we treated the Lord himself. It is all written in his Book. He says, "Ye have done it unto me!"

How am I treating Christ? How are you treating him, my brother? What are we doing to him? These are solemn questions. Our answer to them, as the days roll swiftly away, means either that we shall experience that fire "prepared for the devil and his angels," or enjoy everlastingly the kingdom prepared for God's redeemed children from the foundation of the world. Is it possible that all eternity for us depends upon the mere passing deeds and words of these fleeting days? — Yes, not only possible, but absolutely true! Read Matt. 25:31-46; Mark 9:42; Matt. 12:36, 37.

In Isaiah 58 the Lord gives us a description of the people who give the message of Sabbath reform. In verses 1-11 is revealed the character they will possess, and the work they will do. They are a people who will not "exact all your things wherewith ye grieve others." Verse 3, margin. "Is not this," says Jehovah, "the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" Verses 6, 7. "If thou take away from the midst of thee the yoke," the promise is given, "the putting forth of the finger, and speaking vanity; and if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon-day: and the Lord shall guide thee continually; . . . and they that shall be of thee shall build the old waste places." Verses 9-12.

We never can fulfil the last part of Isaiah 58 until we fulfil the first part. We must possess the character in order to do the work. But when we meet the conditions named, "then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noonday: and the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones; and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not. And they that shall be of thee shall build the old waste places: thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations." Verses 10-12.

May the Lord grant us each this experience, that we may be able to have a part in his glorious work.

"And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love." 1 Cor. 13:13. "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" 1 John 4:20. The Lord forbid that while we are thinking of our faith and hope of the future, we forget the love for our fellow man to-day!

Christ's love flowed out to all in deeds of kindness and help and salvation. He was called a "friend of publicans and sinners," because he tried to save them by going to them in kindness with the words of eternal life. If Christ be in us, and his word abide in us, shall we not often experience his sweet blessing resting upon us as his abiding "love" flows out from him through us in deeds of kindness and help to those whom he died to save? We are in his place. He is here by his Spirit, and he longs to reveal his loving, considerate character to the world. He can do it only through his people. Shall we let him do it through us? Thus only are we his people. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Romans 8:14. Are we his sons?

Conditions in the Religious World Before Christ's Coming

GEORGE I. BUTLER

"BUT know this, that in the last days grievous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, haughty, railers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, implacable, slanderers, without self-control, fierce, no lovers of good, traitors, headstrong, puffed up, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God; holding a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof: from these also turn away." 2 Tim. 3:1-5.

Here we have a catalogue of eighteen sins, which will characterize the professed church of Jesus Christ. The language of the apostle is decisive. These have a form of godliness, but have denied the power thereof. They profess to be children of God, but really are not. The conditions described present evidences of apostasy. True faith is not found among the masses of professed Christians. The church has become like the world around it. A low standard has been tolerated. The rich, selfish men of the world are not only received, but greedily welcomed into church communion. A great worldly church is the result. All sorts of sins are tolerated. Pride, fashion, love of display, are seen everywhere. Things which were discountenanced by the church in purer days are now tolerated. Gambling at church fairs is permitted — shall I not say encouraged? The barriers of the church, raised by godly ancestors, have been broken down. Jewelry, dancing, card-playing, theatergoing, etc., are countenanced. Novel-reading and all kinds of pleasure-seeking are considered innocent. Ministers become preachers of smooth things, and little evidence of true conversion is required for church-membership.

Indeed, there are multitudes of so-called ministers of Jesus Christ who do not believe large portions of the Bible. Bible critics are in evidence everywhere, and multitudes of church-members have no faith in the inspiration of the Sacred Word. So-called scientific theories of creation prevail to such a degree that scarcely any prominent minister pretends

Labor in Faith and Humble Dependence

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I wish that I could present before all our people the light God has given me regarding the spirit of labor and of humble dependence upon him that should be encouraged throughout our churches. Many of the members of our churches are Christians only in name; if they truly believed in Christ, they would, as his disciples, be doing the works of Christ. "If any man will come after me," the Saviour declared, "let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."

Sinners make a fatal mistake in continuing in impenitence and unbelief. But professed Christians make a more grievous error when they refuse to acknowledge their responsibilities, and leave those without the fold to perish. If they were truly Christians, they would follow the example of Christ. He left the heavenly courts, where he was the adored of angels, to come to earth and accept a life of poverty and self-denial, that he might unite humanity to the infinite God, fallen beings with the sinless inhabitants of unfallen worlds. By sacrifice of self he would make men the recipients of his grace, and bind them to the family of heaven by the golden cords of mercy and love.

"O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!" Wonderful divine economy! Notwithstanding their fallen state, men, through the redeeming power of Christ, are enabled to co-operate with him for the salvation of the race. Their influence, no longer destructive, becomes God's helping hand to correct the existing evils. Their powers and capabilities become agencies for the restoration of good. That which heretofore has helped on the work of destruction, brought under the discipline of the Holy Spirit, becomes a means of recovery to souls that are ready to perish. That which in the past has driven from the paths of right and truth now binds souls to the throne of God. This is God's purpose for those who accept his name and character.

This is no time for any of the Lord's workers to lose heart. The commission to the first disciples was, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Very shortly after these words were spoken, Christ was received up into heaven. As the disciples were gazing up into heaven for a last glimpse of their departing Lord, two angels stood by them, and said, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." This promise is soon to be fulfilled. We are watching and waiting for its fulfilment. And while we watch and wait, God bids us work courageously to proclaim the message of his return, "unto the uttermost part of the earth."

The promise of the Saviour's presence was given in connection with the great commission. "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," the Saviour said; "go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

These are the words of inspiration. You need not fear that you are making a mistake by believing fully in them. "And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming. If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him." Here is set forth the life of the church. The Son of God gave his life that he might become the propitiation for the sins of the world. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

The promise of the Father concerning his Son had been, "He shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand." At the close of his work on earth the Saviour could say, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Christ claims his own recompense for his conquests. "I am glorified in them," he says. His ransomed church is to be the chief source of his glory. Through them, unto principalities and powers in heavenly places is to be made known the manifold wisdom of God.

"I have given them thy word," Christ said; "and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth.

"As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.

"And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

It is the privilege of every believer first to talk with God in his closet, and then, as God's mouthpiece, to talk with others. In order that we may have something to impart, we must daily receive light and blessing. Men and women who commune with God, who have an abiding Christ, who, because they co-operate with holy angels, are surrounded with holy influences, are needed at this time. The cause needs those who have power to draw with Christ, power to express the love of God in words of encouragement and sympathy.

As the believer bows in supplication before God, and in humility and contrition offers his petition from unfeigned lips, he loses all thought of self. His mind is filled with the thought of what he must have in order to build up a Christlike character. He prays, "Lord, if I am to be a channel through which thy love is to flow day by day and hour by hour, I claim by faith the grace and power that thou hast promised." He fastens his hold firmly on the promise, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

How this dependence pleases the Master! How he delights to hear the steady, earnest pleading! How quickly the sincere, fervent prayer is recognized and honored! How intensely interested the heavenly angels are! "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" With wonderful and ennobling grace the Lord sanctifies the humble petitioner, giving him power to perform the most difficult duties. All that is undertaken is done unto the Lord, and this elevates and sanctifies the lowliest calling. It invests with new dignity every word, every act, and links the humblest worker, the poorest of God's servants, with the highest of the angels in the heavenly courts.

True believers are the light of the church and of the world. God has true messengers of healing in the world. They are those who are taught of God, who are imbued with his Spirit, ministers who experience the sanctification of the Spirit. The sons and daughters of God have a great work to do in the world. They are to accept the Word of God as the man of their counsel, and to impart it to others. They are to diffuse light. All who have received the engrafted word will be faithful in giving that word to others. They will speak the words of Christ. In conversation and in deportment they will give evidence of a daily conversion to the principles of truth. Such believers will be a spectacle to the world, to angels, and to men, and God will be glorified in them.

The Causes Which Led Up to the Fall of Babylon

GEORGE I. BUTLER

"AND he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the harlot sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. . . . And the woman whom thou sawest is the great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth." Rev. 17:15, 18, A. R. V.

In a previous article attention was called to the woman sitting upon many waters, whose name was "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of the Harlots and of the Abominations of the Earth." Rev. 17:5. In verse 15 we have an inspired definition of the word "waters" as used in these texts,—"peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues,"— the great sea of humanity, surging and moving in great waves or commotions, in political tempests and tumults. High in authority and influence, sits this woman, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and religious apostasy. Such has been the great Roman Church, rightly named indeed. For twelve long, dark, and weary centuries she ruled superior to all others, apparently supreme. The great men of the earth, kings, and all rulers, were in her communion; but the church was supreme.

In both the Old and New Testaments a woman is used as a symbol of the church. "The daughter of Zion," "the spouse" of Christ, was representative of the pure and blessed church of Christ. A harlot represents that church-and-state union seen so conspicuously in the past eighteen centuries, an attempted mingling of Christ and the world, really as impossible as the mixture of oil and water. How few realize what the great controversy is which has been in progress ever since the fall of man!

As the Bible truly represents it, evil and good, sin and righteousness, Satan and Christ, have been in controversy throughout all the centuries. God made man, and pronounced him very good. Satan deceived the holy pair. He lied, of course; for as Christ declared, he was the father of lies. This was the first apostasy on earth. Since then evil has generally been predominant. Two lines of people continued till the flood,— the "sons of God," or descendants of Seth, and Cain's posterity. The latter gradually succeeded in corrupting the former, till the earth was filled with iniquity. Only one family remained as representatives of God; at last the Lord cleansed the world in the deluge. By this act it would have seemed hopeful that righteousness should predominate. But not so. In a few generations, evil became again predominant, and the great mass were practising idolatry, worshiping beasts, serpents, the sun and stars. God had representatives, however, all the way along. Abraham was removed from his heathen ancestors, and devoted himself to the true God, to his service and worship. God accepted him. He was a remarkable character, and he commanded his household after him; so his descendants became a chosen seed to represent righteousness in the world till God's own Son came personally to earth to rescue all who would receive him. From time to time, God brought in important crises, through which to make manifest his power. He sent his people into Egypt, and after many years brought them out with an outstretched arm and plentitude of power, thus leaving upon their minds and hearts, and upon those of others who were interested, a deep impression that God is the Almighty One. A noble code of laws was given, and in their own land and their glorious city all their environments were made favorable. What was their response? — Apostasy, idolatry, and many forms of evil. The Lord in mercy spared them as his representative people till Christ should come. Great reformations, from time to time were brought about, as in the days of Elijah and Elisha; but after a little, the people returned into sin and rebellion. All the other inhabitants of the world were idolaters.

The Son of God appeared in humble circumstances. None of the pomp of this world was connected with his coming. Born in a stable, and cradled in a manger, the Light of life came to earth. He said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." "He was despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," yet "never man spake like this man." He went about doing good. Miracles of love and compassion followed him everywhere. None were so poor or despised or sick or afflicted but he ministered unto their necessities. Yea, the dead heard his voice, and, responding to his call, lived again. We should suppose that all would have received him as the long-promised Messiah, but the religious leaders hated him, and put him to death. The Jews as a nation forfeited their high position and blessings as God's special people. His glorious gospel was proclaimed all over the world, and thousands received it. The darkness of heathenism was illuminated, the idol temples were forsaken, and in all countries believers in the humble Nazarene greatly increased. Satan was now forced to adopt other tactics. As pagans were nominally converted, they brought with them some of their old ideas, and these began to be woven into the Christian fabric. The Christian religion itself became corrupted. The heathen Sunday was exalted as a so-called Christian institution. The immortal-soul doctrine was imported from Egypt, Greece, and Rome, and incorporated into the church creed. Various heathen practises, holidays, and customs utterly contrary to the teachings of the Scriptures, were introduced, accepted, and followed by the masses of Christendom. These were imbibed so gradually that they were almost unconsciously received.

At last the Emperor Constantine saw that this kind of Christianity was becoming popular, and so he himself favored it, though he really remained in heart an unconverted man, a great tyrant in practise. Now the church, with the favor of the state behind it, became Babylon, — confusion, mixture, heathenism mixed into a vast system, and forced upon the people. In some instances armies were marched up by the so-called converted ruler, and baptized by the thousands into nominal Christianity. One can easily see what kind of religion would result from such conditions. The sure result was Babylon the great, the mother of all abominations. Persecutions enforced upon alleged heretics caused the death of from fifty to one hundred millions of these heretics; so she is called "drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." No wonder that the prophet says, "And when I saw her, I wondered with a great wonder." It was not strange that he should wonder when he beheld professed Christians murdering other Christians. It was a new manifestation of satanic power, and demonstrated the complete fall of the mother of churches, and her final apostasy.

The great Reformation, under Luther and others, came at last, and multitudes left the communion of the Roman Church. In many things there was a our methods of teaching, our discipline, should all have for their aim the one great purpose of preparing workers whose appreciation of the issues of this message is so great that they may do the work given them in a most effective manner. There is danger, in our efforts to produce good work in any one department,— as, for instance, agriculture, manual training, music, or language,— that we lose sight of the mighty movement of which we are a part; and to just the extent that education thus becomes one-sided, it is useless.

We are not to turn out from our schools farmers, mechanics, linguists, or musicians as such; but we are to seek to develop in our students those elements of character which will best qualify them to be missionaries in heathen lands, ministers in the great cities of our home land, teachers in the preparation of workers, physicians who can bring healing to the soul as well as to the body, business men who can conduct the financial affairs of our great enterprises; and each teacher in each department of a school should have such a broad grasp of the fundamentals of this message and of the needs of the present hour that every effort will be performed with a proper view of all the departments of study, and not simply of his own.

We are not to teach our children to raise cabbages, milk cows, or train vines only, neither are we to teach them to handle verbs and nouns, or demonstrate difficult mathematical and scientific problems merely, or to be able to recall great portions of history, or even understand something of the meaning or philosophy of it, but we are to seek to bring each of these elements into the life of the student in such just and proper proportions as to give him a thoroughly balanced mind.

The School

The Aim of Our School Work

We are rapidly nearing the final crisis in this world's history, and it is important that we understand that the educational advantages offered by our schools are not to be such as are offered by the schools of the world. Neither are we to follow the routine of worldly schools. The instruction given in Seventh-day Adventist schools is to be such as to lead to the practise of true humility. In speech, in dress, in diet, and in the influence exerted, is to be seen the simplicity of true godliness.

Our teachers need to understand the work that is to be done in these last days. The education given in our schools, in our churches, in our sanitariums, should present clearly the great work to be accomplished. The need of weeding from the life every practise that is opposed to the teachings of the Word of God, and of supplying the place with deeds that bear the mark of the divine nature, should be made clear to the students of all grades. Our work of education is ever to bear the impress of the heavenly, and thus reveal the excellence of divine instruction above that of the learning of the world.

To some this work of entire transformation may seem impossible. But if this were so, why go to the expense of attempting to carry on a work of Christian education? Our knowledge of what true education means is to lead us ever to seek for strict purity of character. In all our association together we are to bear in mind that we are fitting for transfer to another world; the principles of heaven are to be learned, the superiority of the future life to this is to be impressed upon the mind of every learner. Teachers who fail to bring this into their work of education, fail of having a part in the great work of developing character that can meet the approval of God.

The last work of the prophet Elijah was to visit all the schools of the prophets in Israel, and to give the students divine instruction. This he did, and then ascended to the heavenly courts in a chariot of fire. As the world in this age comes more and more under the influence of Satan, the true children of God will desire more and more to be taught of him. Teachers should be employed who will give a heavenly mold to the characters of the youth. Under the influence of such teachers, foolish and unessential practises will be exchanged for habits and practises befitting the sons and daughters of God.

As wickedness in the world becomes more pronounced, and the teachings of evil are more fully developed and widely accepted, the teachings of Christ are to stand forth exemplified in the lives of converted men and women. Angels are waiting to co-operate in every department of the work. This has been presented to me again and again. At this time, the people of God, the truly converted men and women, under the training of faithful teachers, are to be learning the lessons that the God of heaven values.

The most important work for our educational institutions to do at this time is to set before the world an example that will honor God. Holy angels, through human agencies, are to supervise the work, and every department is to bear the mark of divine excellence. Let the Word of God be made the chief book of study, that the students may learn to live by every word that Christ has given. Mrs. E. G. White.

Visiting the School

A Talk to Parents

Much has been said in regard to the teacher's duty of visiting the parents and children at their homes, and becoming acquainted with the home life and environments of the child; but I have been thinking about another duty — that of the parents' visiting the school, and learning of the child's life there.

Did you ever stop to think how much time each day your child is actually out of your sight? But you say, "I send my child to church-school, and I know we have a good teacher. I never fear about my child while he is in school." That is all very well; but your duty does not cease there.

One parent (a member of the school board) said to me, when I asked him to visit the school, "O, I shall never have time for that. I have all confidence in you as a teacher." Yes, that is true enough; but, parents, how are you going to sympathize and co-operate with your teacher if you never see what he is doing in the schoolroom? You may have an idea of it, from the reports your children bring you, and from what you learn by meeting the teacher at church on the Sabbath; but that is not enough.

I have urged this matter upon the patrons of my school, until I have succeeded in getting most of them sufficiently interested to visit the school half a day at a time. It just inspires me to have them come, and I only wish they could stay the whole day. It encourages the children also.

Perhaps you wonder why Mary's standing in reading is not so high as you think it ought to be, and why Johnny's deportment is not so good, when you tell him each morning to "be a good boy, and mind the teacher."

Let me tell you what to do. Go to school with Mary and Johnny some day, and you will be there in time to see how orderly they take their seats when school calls, and how they get their books out and go to work. Then apply good thought and judgment; study the methods the teacher uses in teaching different pupils, and in presenting different subjects; and I am sure, when your visit is over, you will declare, "Well, I never knew that school is so different now from what it was when I went to school." You have really been in school and learned some things yourself, and are glad you took the time that day to visit the school.

Therefore, parents, visit the school, and you will better appreciate the privilege you have of obtaining a Christian education for your children.

The Hygiene of the Nose

Special symptoms to be observed are the following: —

1. Disturbances of breathing. Breathing through the nose is difficult, so the mouth is kept open.

2. Disturbances of speech. The voice has a nasal sound, since the stopping of the nose hinders clear speech.

3. Disturbances of hearing, on account of the swelling of the Eustachian tubes. In this way buzzing in the ears, deafness, etc., may occur.

4. Disturbances in the functions of the brain, resulting in inattention, so-called aprosexia nasalis, and the like.

Investigation has shown that this is a common disorder among schoolchildren. In Boston, from five to six per cent suffer with adenoids; in Germany about ten per cent.

In Leipsic investigation made by the school physician showed that out of 9,031 children, 23.2 per cent were afflicted with adenoids. The largest number of cases were found among the children of the so-called district schools, attended by the poorer classes. This was thought to be connected with the scrofulous tendency, and the fact that the children were weaker and not so well cared for. In the burgerschulen, where the better class attend, there were 18.9 per cent of the children with adenoids; while in the

Thy Kingdom Come

THROUGH all the earth abroad,
Wherever man has trod,
Send forth thy Word, O God;
Thy kingdom come.

O Christ, my Lord and King,
This is the prayer I bring;
This is the song I sing:
Thy kingdom come.

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE annual session of the California Conference, held in Oakland, was an important meeting. The question of who should be president of this conference for the year 1909 was decided. Elder S. N. Haskell was elected to the office, without one dissenting vote.

Elder Haskell and his wife work together harmoniously, and their united labors are much appreciated by this conference. The results of their efforts for the past year show that much good has been accomplished in many lines.

I did not attend any of the business meetings, but was able to give advice in some lines. We were much pleased with the spirit of harmony that pervaded the meetings held for counsel and for the laying of plans for future work.

On Monday, February 8, the Lord gave me a plain message for the people, and all present had evidence that the voice of the Holy Spirit was in the message I bore in the name of the Lord. I presented before our people principles that were sacred and holy, principles which the Lord expects his people to carry out. This discourse was reported by one of my workers, and will appear in the REVIEW.

At the conference meetings I presented to our people the need of pledging ourselves for advance work in our religious experience. God's people are to seek now, as never before, to be purified and sanctified, a holy people, who, by the exemplification of truth in their words, their purpose, and their actions, communicate their knowledge of truth, and do honor to the One who died that they might be a praise among all people. The grace of Christ alone can bring this about, making believers not only professors of the truth, but men and women who live the truth, and thus reveal the principles of the gospel. God can make his people a praise in the earth only as they allow themselves to be sanctified by their belief of the truth.

The Spirit of the Lord rested upon me, and was revealed in the words that were given me to speak. I asked those present who felt the urgency of the Spirit of God, and who were willing to pledge themselves to live the truth and to teach the truth to others, and to work for their salvation, to make it manifest by rising to their feet. I was surprised to see the whole congregation rise. I then asked all to kneel down, and I sent up my petition to heaven for that people. I was deeply impressed by this experience. I felt the deep moving of the Spirit of God upon me, and I know that the Lord gave me a special message for his people at this time. I realized that I had with me the presence of him whom the Jews took and crucified, but who rose from the dead, and declared to his followers, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: . . . and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Praise the Lord, O my soul!

After this meeting I felt that my work was finished, and we decided to return home the following day. Elder J. D. Rice drove us to the railway station in his carriage. I carried a cushion with me, thinking to sleep in the cars on the homeward journey; but my mind had been so powerfully wrought upon that I could not sleep; and during the journey I silently offered my prayer to God, asking him to give me physical and spiritual strength to reach the people with the message of life that Christ has given his faithful shepherds to proclaim.

Christ declared to his disciples that they were to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. His life of unselfishness and love was to be copied by them. In his name they were to give to the world unselfish service. The knowledge of his suffering on Calvary's cross and his unchanging love for mankind was to be made known to all people. And Christ further declared, "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." "But tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high."

God's people are to be constantly reaching up to him in prayer. It was after the early disciples had spent ten days in supplication, after all differences had been put away, and they had united in deep heart-searching, and in confession and putting away of sins, and in drawing together in holy fellowship, that the Holy Ghost came upon them, and the promise of Christ was fulfilled. There was a wonderful outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Suddenly there came from heaven the sound as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. "And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls."

These disciples did not confine themselves to any class of people or place. "They went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." Notwithstanding the fierce opposition that the disciples met, in a short time the gospel of the kingdom had been sounded to all the inhabited parts of the earth. In the providence of God great multitudes were gathered at Jerusalem at this time, and many were converted. These, returning to their homes, carried the wonderful news to every place.

The commission given to the first disciples is given to those who in these last days have received increased light from heaven. It was God's desire that all nations should be aroused to repentance and obedience by the working of the Holy Spirit. The message of saving grace is to be preached to all nations and kindreds and tongues and peoples. Let every soul now follow the movings of the Spirit of God; let the truth go forth as a lamp that burneth.

Not all can fill the same place; but every one who yields himself to the consecrating influence of the Holy Spirit will be under the control of Christ; and for consecrated men and women God has made full provision. Actual service will determine the character of the work of those ordained of God to bring salvation to human hearts and minds.

The work of God needs the gifts and offerings of his people. These are to be bestowed for the advancement of his kingdom. Just as long as men and women will be led and guided by the Holy Spirit for the magnifying of God's law and the advancement of the kingdom of grace, the work will go forward. Just so surely as they give evidence of the fruits of the Spirit in heart and life and character, souls will be reached and saved. Go to all nations, Christ says; my Spirit shall go with you; and angels of God that excel in strength will be present to aid every soul who by living faith will make God his strength.

I pray that every soul may see the necessity of using every capability in wise, earnest work for God. Let none be held back by any forbiddings of men, but let all seek the Lord with all the heart and with all the soul, and work in the spirit of Christ.

Consequences of the Rejection of Light

GEORGE I. BUTLER

VARIOUS evidences have been presented that the term Babylon (i. e., the state of "confusion," "mixture"), a descriptive title which God has used in his Word to designate religious bodies having some truth interwoven with considerable error, must include not only the Roman Church, but all churches of like character and conditions. The Roman Church, as the leading, most ancient church, stands conspicuous as being the greatest in numbers, and the most influential of all; hence it is spoken of as the "mother" in the description given in Revelation 17. This title necessarily implies that others have come out from her communion, and these "others" are unmistakably the great popular religious bodies who have called themselves Protestant,— those who have protested against the

Rest

M. E. YERGIN

THOUGH clouds rise up where the sun went down,
Praise God, for he lives alway;
And he giveth rest to his loved, and sleep,
While the storm wears out, away.

He giveth rest — sweet, living rest;
His power is the "Peace, be still!"
Yea, the storm, the sea, and the rocking earth
Are naught 'neath the calm of his will.

Not the angry mob, nor the frothing beast,
Nor the wreck of earth's goodly things,
Can disturb the calm of our peaceful rest,
As we hide 'neath his hovering wings.

Though the thunderous roar and hail of war
Should wrap God's child in its whirl,
His angels are keeping a zone of rest
Surrounding his cared-for pearl.

O he giveth rest — sweet, living rest!
His power is the "Peace, be still!"
And all the tumult and wreckage of earth
Is naught 'neath the calm of his will.

Two Kinds of Service[1]

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"CRY aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins. Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the ordinance of their God: they ask of me the ordinances of justice; they take delight in approaching to God. Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge?"

There is a great deal of profession in our world, plenty of self-justification, but the evidence of the deep work of grace in hearts is not so apparent. There is a very earnest question before us. The time has come when every one should understand that he has a soul to save or a soul to lose, a heaven to win and a hell to shun. We need to understand what we shall do to be saved.

There is something wanting in the experience of this class brought to view by the prophet. And self is brought into their service. "Behold," he says, "in the day of your fast ye find pleasure, and exact all your labors. Behold, ye fast for strife and debate, and to smite with the fist of wickedness: ye shall not fast as ye do this day, to make your voice to be heard on high. Is it such a fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul? is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord?

"Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?"

In the experience of God's people there have been yokes bound upon the churches that God never ordained,— yokes that have greatly marred the experience, and have offended the Lord God of Israel. Because a man carries responsibilities in the church, he is not given liberty to rule the mind and judgment of others with whom the Lord is working. The Lord wants every soul in his service to understand what is the kind of work required of him. "Is not this the fast that I have chosen," he says, "to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?"

His office in the church does not place the worker where he is unapproachable, but should lead him to earnest prayer, that he may have a conscience void of offense. Then God will give him power to speak words of consolation and advice and counsel to his brethren. The position he is to occupy is one of meekness and lowliness of mind. Then when one who is in trouble comes to him for help, he will be able to say, Let us pray, and kneeling down with that soul, will make himself one with him.

God has sent the instruction to break every yoke. We are one, one in Christ Jesus. Position does not make the man; position does not give liberty to exercise power arbitrarily over others. It is counsel that is needed, righteousness in deportment that is to be made manifest with meekness and humbleness of mind, and a spirit to seek the Lord until he is found.

The Reward of True Service

The prophet continues: "Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily: and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy rereward."

Here we have the promise of health; and our health is worth very much to us. It is our privilege to reflect light wherever we go; we can speak words of comfort and encouragement and uplifting; but let us bind no yoke upon another. Then "thy righteousness"— your right-doing, your righteous actions —"shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy rereward." These are wonderful, wonderful words. Let us seek to take them in. We are nearing the judgment, nearing the time when decisions for eternity will be made. Let us counsel together in meekness and lowliness of heart.

"Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answer; thou shalt cry, and he shall say, Here I am. If thou take away from the midst of thee the yoke, the putting forth of the finger, and speaking vanity; and if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noonday." Praise God with heart and voice for this possibility. Praise God that we can bring this promise to the Lord for fulfilment when we comply with the conditions. When we do not know which way to turn, light direct from God will come to us, if we will follow his directions. "And the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not."

We need to understand these words, for a great work is before us,— the closing work of this earth's history. "And they that shall be of thee shall build the old waste places." There are many of these. "Thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations; and thou shalt be called, The repairer of the breach, The restorer of paths to dwell in."

What is the breach here mentioned? — It is the breach in the law of God, made by the observance of the first day of the week for the Sabbath of the Lord. It is something in which all the world is taking part; but God declares, "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

We are not half awake to our privileges to-day. We do not understand as we should the work that is before us, or our obligation to place ourselves in right relation to God, that he may send his angels to help us in accomplishing the work. Our little selves can not do much; but when heaven is united with our efforts; when our work is blessed of God, righteousness will be revealed. There is a world to be saved; there are districts and cities to be worked that have not yet been labored for. We are thankful that we have publications that can be distributed. We are thankful for those that are being published in other languages. Let us now place ourselves in right relation to God, saying, All that I have comes from thee; all that I have I am willing to use to help in any place. I will do what I can. If I have much, I will give much; if I have but little, I will give that little to bring the truth to those who have it not.

Let us bring ourselves into submission to the Lord God of Israel. You may have your peculiar way; I may have my peculiar way, and some others their peculiar ways; but under God that way will be agreeable. If we are not under the control of God, led by the inspiration of his Spirit, our way will not be agreeable. What we need is to stand in right relation to the great I AM. When we stand in right relation to him, we can do as Christ has commissioned. Christ gave the word, Go to all nations, and he will be with those who go. "Lo," he declares, "I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

The Chronology of the Message of the Fall of Babylon

GEORGE I. BUTLER

Having given a general consideration to religious conditions during the last fifty or sixty years, we now come to the proclamation of the message itself.

The first message, proclaiming, "Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come," which was to be given to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, had for years been in progress, most forcibly calling attention to the nearness of Christ's second coming. It was being proclaimed with great power, and multitudes believed in it. Its proclamation in the United States was especially prominent. William Miller and some three hundred others were most actively engaged in it. It is estimated that a hundred thousand believers had accepted it. Their message was based upon the close of the great prophetic period, "Unto two thousand three hundred days [prophetic days; i. e., years]; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed [margin, "justified"]." Dan. 8:14. As we have shown by indubitable evidence, the two thousand three hundred days commenced at "the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," which occurred B. C. 457. This period of time must therefore end in A. D. 1843, supposing the decree went into effect at the beginning of the year 457; for it would take 457 plus 1843 full years to make the number twenty-three hundred years complete. So the numbers stood on the old prophetic charts, in use up to the first of the year 1844. As the Lord did not come in 1843, a more careful study of the decree of Artaxerxes and Ezra's relation to it, revealed the fact that Ezra did not reach Jerusalem with the decree in his possession until the fall of the year 457 B. C. Hence the decree of the king could not have gone into effect until that time. Therefore the period of twenty-three hundred full years would not close with the end of the year 1843, but must reach to the fall of 1844. There is no escaping this conclusion.

But this mistake in the exact ending of the final year of the twenty-three-hundred-day period was quite an important point to the friends of the advent movement; and especially was this so to its enemies. The latter then felt that a favorable point had been reached where they could safely and publicly oppose it. Previous to this, such manifest evidences of God's blessing went with it,— such remarkable revivals, so many converts were added to the churches wherever the near advent of Christ was proclaimed, — that their enemies could not well interfere with its progress. William Miller, the great apostle of Adventism in this country, and his colaborers, did not denounce the churches. On the contrary, when many converts had been made as the result of their labors, they counseled them to join the churches they preferred. Indeed, previous to the passing of the time, the most spiritual members of the churches became believers in the soon coming of Christ, and thus exerted a strong influence in behalf of those who taught them the precious truths of the near coming of the Master.

Yet many of the ministers were at heart opposed to the movement, and many of the laity who were worldly minded and popular had instinctively a feeling of opposition to it. They did not desire to hear about Christ's soon coming. When the time passed, these elements took courage to come out openly against the doctrine, opposing it in the churches. The ministers sought to silence those who loved to talk of it. The Adventists themselves had suffered a grievous disappointment. During the few months that followed the passing of the time, the half-believers, who had been moved by fear to nominally accept the doctrine, came out and confessed they had not really believed it any of the time. There were many of this class, who now took their places with the opposers.

But not so all. The firm, devoted believers were much disappointed, yet they studied their Bibles all the more. They prayed most earnestly — yea, agonizingly — for light from the Lord in explanation of their disappointment. They found quite a number of scriptures which were a great comfort to them — scriptures that greatly strengthened their faith. The prophet Habakkuk (Hab. 2:1-4) evidently refers to this very time: "I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am argued with [margin]. And the Lord answered me, and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry. Behold, his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him: but the just shall live by his faith." Christ's servants are represented as watchmen upon their towers, deeply interested in a certain event. Then a tarrying time is brought to view, when many are disappointed, and all connected therewith are in deep perplexity. Some show their lack of faith and give up, but others cling to the precious truths they have espoused.

Paul, in Heb. 10:35-39, uses language very similar, and undoubtedly refers to the same time. Indeed, his words are almost a direct quotation of the words of the prophet: "Cast not away therefore your confidence," he says, "for ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." To tarry is not to have a thing come as quickly as it is expected. "Now the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them who believe to the saving of the soul."

How plainly this brings to view the experience of the advent people. The time passed; there was a "tarrying" time,— a lull, till they could study and pray for light. Two classes were developed by this apparent "tarry;" the weak-kneed and worldly-minded drew out and went back into darkness. God was displeased with them. But others lived "by faith," and soon found light from the Lord. They were all the stronger for the parting with the faithless and unbelieving element. Soon the clear light shone upon their pathway. This tarrying time was an essential blessing to the true believers. It has its place in the advent experience.

In Matthew 24, our Saviour gives most clearly the signs of his coming. He speaks of the darkening of the sun and moon, and of the falling of the stars, as the special signs of his personal appearing. He says: "When ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." Then he speaks of two classes of servants: the good, faithful, wise servant, who gives "meat in due season,"— who shows our whereabouts in the stream of time; and the evil servant, who says, "My Lord delayeth his coming." So it has been in the advent experience. Both classes have been plainly in view during all these years. The Saviour then illustrates the condition of the Adventist people by a parable: "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom." There were two classes,— five wise and five foolish. The wise took oil in their lamps. The five foolish did not. At midnight a command went forth to go out to meet the bridegroom. The five wise virgins, being ready, went in with him to the marriage; the foolish ones, having no oil in their vessels, could not; etc. The cry at midnight, "Behold the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him," represents some advent experiences. The lamp represents the Word of God. His Word is a lamp to our feet. The oil represents the Spirit of God. That precious Spirit was with the wise virgins. They had faith in the Bridegroom's coming. His Spirit was with the Word.

Joyful in Him

WORTHIE HARRIS HOLDEN

THERE'S a whisper in the treetops,
There is music by the sea,
There's a murmur, mid the rushes,
Of the brook across the lea;

There's a voice from winged flowers,—
Hum of hopper and of bee,—
And a myriad-throated warble
From the feathered minstrelsy.

O, the night is one sonata,
And the day a chorus grand;
And our life a glorious anthem
When our Master has command!

For the minor chords, though plaintive,
Lend enchantment to the strain,
And the final hallelujah
Shall in joy engulf all pain.

Tune thy heart to sense the measure;
Train thine ear to hear each chord;
Every day conclude some measure
All harmonious to thy Lord.

Two Kinds of Service[1]

Higher Education a Preparation for Service

As men and women who profess to believe the truth for this time, we have no right to place ourselves in any wrong relation to God or his cause. We have a work to do for the Master, a work to do for the rising generation. We can not afford to send our children to the public schools. This has been presented to me for years. For years we have been establishing schools, but they are not perfected yet. There are some who think that we must pattern after the schools of the world if we would give our youth a complete education. What we need to give them is a complete education in that Book which assures us of that life that measures with the life of God. If we will obey his commandments, we shall live. This is the Book of books. It is to be the great study book for all who profess the name of Christ.

My brethren and sisters, do not neglect your children. Teach them that they have souls to save or to lose. Teach them to come into right relation to God. Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. It was because of such a training as this that Daniel and his fellows, when they were taken captives to Babylon, were able to stand the test. They had received the education that God gives, and he was able to make right impressions on their minds.

Do not fold your hands, and find fault with God, as did the class of worshipers the prophet Isaiah brings to view. They said, "Wherefore have we fasted, . . . and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge?" This class of professors makes no sacrifice for God, although for them he has made the sacrifice of his only begotten Son, sending him to our world that they might be sanctified and made holy, and that by learning to represent the character of Christ, they might bear a living testimony to all with whom they associate. We must take a higher standard than this.

I read in books that come to me how we must attain to a higher education, but these writings do not interpret what is meant by "higher education." What is higher education?—It is coming into unity with Jesus Christ. It is being made one with God. It is bringing God into mind and heart. Unless we have Christ in the life, we can not reveal him. To learn to humble self, to subdue self,—this is the higher education. Higher education,—the education which we should have, is that which proceeds from God and imparts a knowledge of what saith the Lord. It is to walk in the footsteps of Jesus,—to preach as he preached, to work as he worked.

"Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed. Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold of it." This is Bible sanctification; this is the higher education. When we make the Bible our book for study, and give to our students a knowledge of the Word of God, there will be no need to ask the question, Have they the higher education? What we need is an acquaintance with God, who "so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

We do not half serve God. We do not honor him as we should. We have a name to live, but O, so many of us are dead! We need to study the Word, and see if we are preparing to meet our Lord when he shall come in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. I want to stand in right relation to God. I have been in his work since I was sixteen years old. I do not want to fail now.

Everywhere there is missionary work to be done, and every soul of us should have an active part in it. It is astonishing to see how fields are opening everywhere. Workers are calling for means to carry on the work. Many students from our schools are going out and educating themselves in the languages, and opening the Scriptures to peoples of other tongues. This is an excellent work, just the work the Lord would have them do.

We need to become students of prophecy. We need to labor for every one that possibly can be helped. Now while there is opportunity, let us get the light before the people. There will never be a more favorable time for work than this; for the judgments of God are coming upon the earth more and more. We need Christians at this time, and to be a Christian means to be Christlike.

Speaking of those who have joined themselves to the Lord to serve him, God says, "Even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt-offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people." This is what we want. The Lord receives too little glory from the lips of any of us, but much of complaint. Shall we not change in this respect, and begin to offer praise and thanksgiving to God? Let us begin to do the works here brought to view. Let us bring the poor that are cast out to our house. Let us lay no yokes or burdens upon the people. Let us come to God with humble, lowly hearts, with tongues sanctified, and brain powers sanctified. If we will do this, there will be praises to God offered in every congregation. The songs of thanksgiving and joyful praise will be heard coming from happy hearts, and men will know that we enjoy the true religion of Jesus Christ.

There are just two classes of people brought to view in the Word of God. With which class are you standing? If all were brought together in heaven with their different temperaments unsanctified, what kind of heaven, think you, would we have? Do we not want to be transferred from this school below to the higher school above? There Christ will walk and talk with his people, and open to them the scriptures they do not understand. There we shall pluck the fruit of the tree of life. We shall see the King in his beauty, and behold his matchless charms. There will be no contention there; then let us not have it on earth. We are to begin here to obtain the higher education. We are to learn here to guard the lips, to govern the words. Christ gave his life for us, and he wants us to give our lives to him,—lives that are sanctified, soul, body, and spirit. Shall we not let our righteousness, as Isaiah has said, "go before" us? Then the glory of the Lord will be our rereward.

How few there are who praise God! But this is part of our higher education. In this life we are to learn to honor him by offering our praises and thanksgiving to him. It is only those who on earth have learned to glorify God that will be given a place in the courts of glory. If we are translated, we shall be translated just as we are. We are to be made perfect in this life; in this life our tongues are to be sanctified, our thoughts purified. Then let us take up this work of education now. Let us do those things that we shall wish we had done when the time comes that our work is finished.

I long to hear the voice of thanksgiving to God. I long to hear praises offered to him. I long to see happy Christians. Let us seek the Lord while he may be found. Let us bring Christ into our family circles. Let us invite the joy of the Lord into our homes and into our hearts. How much glory we could bring to God if we would consider that Christ died on the cross to make it possible for us to come into right relation to him in this respect. He worked out a perfect life amid the fiercest opposition that could be instituted against him. Then shall we not make earnest endeavors to be Christians? Should we not, when we meet to worship God, offer praise from hearts filled with thanksgiving? We have everything to praise God for. He "so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Interesting Facts Concerning Babylon's Fall

GEORGE I. BUTLER

THE fall of Babylon was announced by fifty thousand earnest believers in Christ's soon coming. This message was given in consequence of a great spiritual declension in the churches, and this declension has become more and more apparent as the years have gone by.

The careful and observing reader of The Revelation will notice that in each instance where the fall of Babylon is mentioned, there is a repetition. In the second angel's message (Rev. 14:8) we read: "And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen," etc. In Rev. 18:1-4, the subject of Babylon's great and final apostasy is more fully stated. "And after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. . . . And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities." Then the revelator proceeds to describe her complete destruction. Let the interested reader notice this point distinctly: the fall of Babylon and the destruction of Babylon are two distinct events. The destruction comes as a consequence of her fall. Her fall is a declension, or apostasy, because of the rejection of light. Instead of being the pure and faithful spouse of Christ, she becomes the worldly, proud, haughty mistress of the rulers and great men of the earth; in other words, church and state, politics and religion, are blended into one system. God holds such a union in abhorrence; but it is rapidly forming.

The second angel's message, announcing the fall of Babylon, is not said to be proclaimed with a great and loud cry; but both the first and the third angel's messages are said to be thus proclaimed; while of the proclamation contained in Revelation 18, already quoted, this is said most emphatically and most impressively. The angel is represented as "having great power," and the effect of his proclamation is that the whole earth is "lightened with his glory." He cried mightily, with a strong voice: "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen;" and then is brought to view the awful effects of her fall,— she "is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird." She "is become" such; as much as to say she was not always such. The process of her fall and apostasy was gradual, at times perhaps almost imperceptible: yet it was going steadily on, developing before the world, and especially before the student of prophecy, till at last the fruits of evil became so fully ripened that all candid believers of the Bible could plainly see her condition, which is then proclaimed with mighty power, and the solemn, awful command goes forth, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

Much of this was not proclaimed in the first announcement in the second angel's message. It would not have been true at that period when spiritual Babylon first rejected light. That first evil step led away from God's truth. "Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you: for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth." Walking is a movement indicating progress.

There occurred an important change in the attitude of the popular churches when they rejected the sure word of prophecy, which the apostle Peter says is a light in a dark place till the day shall dawn. When that light is rejected by the church, she must of necessity walk henceforth in great moral darkness. From that point when the first announcement was made, "Babylon is fallen," great changes for the worse have been going on. Preceding that time, many noble Protestant teachers and leaders were earnest students of prophecy, and expositors of grand prophetic truths. Martin Luther and his leading associates of the great Protestant Reformation were familiar with the prophecies concerning the papal church and its awful work of apostasy and persecution. Luther, looking forward from his time, thought the Lord would come in about three hundred years. Three centuries after Luther's day, multitudes of devoted followers of Jesus, in studying the same scriptures that Luther studied, reached the same conclusions he had reached, and publicly proclaimed the same great facts. If Luther had lived in our day, he would have been an Adventist.

In the grand Methodist revival, led by John Wesley, Adam Clarke, and many other devoted men, prophecy was highly prized and much studied. In some particulars their views were incorrect, yet it is a fact that much important light on the prophecies was brought out from the sacred page by them. John Wesley looked forward to about 1836 for the coming of the Lord, to about the time when William Miller began to proclaim the soon coming of the Saviour in the clouds of heaven.

We cite these well-known facts to make manifest the great change of attitude on the part of these modern churches, which took place about 1844, when, because of persecution, some fifty thousand Adventists were obliged to leave their communions. The popular churches turned their backs upon these great and glorious truths. What was their reason for so doing? They rejected most important Bible truths, and as the result, darkness came upon them, and they have become proud, worldly, fashionable churches, "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." The apostle says, "From such turn away."

The process of spiritual declension from this interesting point when the first announcement of Babylon's moral fall was made, has been rapid and conspicuous. So plain are the evidences of this, that the careful student of prophecy is forced to the conclusion that we are rapidly nearing the time when the mighty angel of Revelation 18 will join the second angel of Rev. 14:8, and the loud cry, "Come out of her, my people," will go forth. This point can not be far away. This last and mighty movement is but the completion of the message of the second angel's work of chapter 14:8. They are similar in nature and character. One goes forth at the beginning of the process of unbelief and apostasy; the other sums up the final completion of it, and powerfully announces the terrible result. Then Christ comes, and great Babylon receives her final doom.

Soon after the disappointment in 1844, and the time when the Adventist believers were really forced out of the popular churches, many realized that a great change had occurred in those churches. Spiritual coldness prevailed, and many confessed it in great alarm. They themselves in a degree realized that a change for the worse had occurred. Many publicly confessed this fact. The trend of the current downward toward worldly standards has since become most noticeable. In the purer days, most of the churches had strict rules of living, to which it was expected their members would conform. In these rules of living were defined duties which were in harmony with Bible requirements. Fashionable clothing, the wearing of jewelry, attendance at card parties and theaters, were prohibited as works of the flesh and the carnal mind. Attendance at meetings, supporting the cause of God, taking part in religious services, etc., were expected of the members. These provisions long ago became a dead letter in the popular churches. Church-members now take the lead in the wearing of fashionable clothing, jewelry, etc., and many attend card parties and theaters, and find enjoyment in worldly pleasures. And so common have these practises become that they are scarcely noticed. The members of several leading churches once renowned for their humble piety, plainness in dress, obedience in discipline,

Better to die than yield to sin;
O mortal, keep thy conscience pure;
Heed well that voice which speaks within,
And make thy last election sure.

"The heart's deceitful," saith my God.
Who knows like him its secret springs?
Who oft applies the chastening rod,
That he may give us better things?

God's saving truth presents a cross
The thoughtless rabble will not bear.
They can not bear to suffer loss;
The greater loss they do not fear.

O wisdom, may we heed thy voice!
Anoint our eyes, that we may see.
So shall we in the truth rejoice,

The Need of the Holy Spirit in Our Lives[1]

MRS. E. G. WHITE

My mind has been much exercised of late in regard to our need of the guidance of the Holy Spirit. The promise is given us, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you;" and the assurance is repeated, "For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." The thought is enforced upon us that our dependence must be more fully upon God. He is ready and willing to do for us the very things that we need. Let us trust him as his children. (1)

Christ instructed his disciples that they should not leave Jerusalem until the power of God should come upon them. The disciples obeyed the command, continuing "in prayer and supplication." "And when the day of pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."

How desirable it is that we be of one accord, of one mind, established in the word of the living God, and having our feet planted on the platform of eternal truth! Let us take the Bible as our guide and director, and seek to fulfil the word of the Lord. The grace of God will be upon all who will stand upon the platform of the sacred truths of his Word.(1)

"And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language. And they were all amazed, and marveled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born? . . . And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this? Others mocking said, These men are full of new wine.

"But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words: for these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel: And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy: And I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke: the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come: and it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved."

We are living in the last days, in a time when we may expect much from the Lord. These words should bring us to the throne of grace to claim great things of him. Here the promise is given that on the men and women and on our sons and daughters the Holy Spirit is to come; and "whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." This brings to view a wonderful work to be done, for which we need the converting power of God in our hearts every day. It is our privilege to experience this. Heaven is full of blessings, and it is our privilege to claim the rich promises of God for our individual selves. We need to seek the Lord day and night that we may know just what steps to take, and just what we ought to do.

The Lord has a special work to do for us individually. As we see the wickedness of the world brought to light in the courts of justice and published in the daily papers, let us draw near to God, and by living faith lay hold of his promises, that the grace of Christ may be manifest in us. We may have an influence, a powerful influence, in the world. If the convicting power of God is with us, we shall be enabled to lead souls that are in sin to conversion.

Our simplicity will accomplish much in this work. We are not to try to climb up to high positions or to gain the praise of men. Our aim should not be to be the greatest. We are to have an eye single to the glory of God. We are to work with all the intelligence that God has given us, placing ourselves in the channel of light, that the grace of God can come (2) upon us to mold and fashion us to the divine similitude. Heaven is waiting to bestow its richest blessings upon those who will consecrate themselves to do the work of God in these last days of the world's history. We shall be tested and tried; we may be called to spend wakeful nights; but let such times be spent in earnest prayer to God, that he may give understanding, and quicken the mind to discern the privileges that are ours.

Let us not reveal an untoward religion. Let there be no strife as to who shall be greatest, but let each seek for greatness in humility, for an understanding of the will of the Lord. God wants us to stand as free men and women in these last days of earth's history. While wickedness of every kind is being practised by those who do not take God into their counsel, we are to stand as a people who are endued with the Spirit of God, because we seek him with all the heart.

The early disciples prayed for the Holy Spirit, and they received it; and then what did they do? They preached the word. "Ye men of Israel, hear these words," Peter declared, "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved by God among you with miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know: him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain: whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that he should be holden of it. For David speaketh concerning him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved: therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope: because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance.

"Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulcher is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he seeing this before spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses."

(2) My brethren and sisters, this is our work. We are to be his witnesses, not merely by word of mouth, not simply by preaching Christ, but by living the truth, by having the living Witness in our hearts. When the great day of God comes, and those who have followed Christ stand clearly revealed with the light of God shining upon them, those who have at that time proved unfaithful will ask themselves the questions, Why did I not tell the truth as I knew it? Why did I not live it? Why did I not proclaim the truth with sanctified heart and soul and voice? These will be the thoughts that will come as they consider what they might have done, but did not do. My brethren and sisters, I beseech of you in the name of Jesus of Nazareth that you spend much time in prayer, and in searching the Word, that you may understand the promises that have been held out before you.

(1) [Promise after promise is given, assuring us of the fulness of power that God has, and yet we are so weak in faith that we do not grasp the power. O how much we need a living, earnest faith in the truths of God's Word! This great need of God's people is constantly before me. What shall we do, I ask, to impress them with their need? What can we do to arouse them to see that we are living in the very evening of this earth's history?] Heaven is full of the blessings that we need, and yet but a small portion of the Spirit's power is manifest among us. O, we need to awake! [We need to be converted anew each day. We need to seek for a faith that will lay hold of the arm of Jehovah.]

When I heard last year that certain of our brethren were moved upon by the Holy Spirit at Fresno, I felt as if I could not close my eyes in sleep. I wanted to praise God from the time I lay down until I should arise again. In the night season I would awaken to find myself exhorting our people with all the powers of my being, telling them of the riches of the grace of God, and appealing to them not to close their senses to the blessings which they might have. Night after night there were presented to me precious victories that the people of God were gaining, and I would awaken, and kneeling up in bed would glorify God for these manifestations of his Spirit. My brethren and sisters, it is the Spirit of God that can arouse men and women from their sleepy spirituality to be a living, working power in the world, revealing wherever they go that they are followers of Jesus Christ. Shall we not arouse, and come into right relation to God? Shall we not seek for that faith that works by love and purifies the life from every stain of sin?

"Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly," Peter continued, "that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." "Whom ye have crucified." I hope none here are crucifying Christ by a wrong course of action, but I pray that we may have a clear sense of what God is to us, and of what we may be to him as his messengers to a people that are ignorant of his will. The message is not only unto "you, and to your children," but "to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." When the people heard these words, they were pricked in their hearts, and said to Peter and the apostles, "Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation."

In the experience that followed, we may learn what a right testimony will accomplish when it is borne under the influence of the Holy Spirit. "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles. And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

Interesting Facts Concerning Babylon's Fall

GEORGE I. BUTLER

(Concluded)

But worse things than even these have occurred. The very foundations of Christianity and Bible religion are being undermined, even in the supposed houses of their friends. The Bible itself, the great bulwark and fountain of all true religious knowledge and instruction, is being set aside as a book of authority by so-called Protestants, even in their great schools of instruction.

In the past, Protestants have believed that Catholics were in great error in holding tradition as equal with the Scriptures in authority, if not superior.

But where do Protestants now find themselves in reference to Biblical authority? Since 1844, when the fall of Babylon was proclaimed, many views utterly contrary to Bible doctrine are being received by leading Protestants. The geological and Darwinian doctrines of evolution set aside the Mosaic account of creation, and consider it a fable utterly unworthy of belief. Few realize the effect of such teachings upon religious belief and character. The account of creation as given in Genesis, is upheld as a fact all through the Bible, Christ and his apostles often referring to the Mosaic record as an accepted truth. That account is interwoven into the very warp and woof of Bible doctrine and history. To disown that, as many intelligent Protestants now do, is to undermine the whole Bible structure of doctrine and authority.

The fall of man because of disobedience is the very foundation of Christian theology. It is quite popular nowadays to claim that man's fall was upward, and not downward. Years ago, when first preached, that doctrine was called blank infidelity. Now it has become quite common and popular. We think it was rightly named back there; but suppose, for a moment, that it is true. What becomes of the doctrine of a Saviour dying to rescue man from sin because of disobedience? What becomes of the grand Bible doctrine of Christ's coming to this world to suffer and die for the fallen race because of the effects of the fall of our first parents in the garden of Eden? Man's supposed fall upward, and his supposed constant advancement through the evolutionary processes from the ape, and animal creations, to his present eminence, is utterly subversive of the whole Biblical doctrine of the atonement, and what Christ declared he came to this world to accomplish; and it virtually destroys the credibility of the Bible revelation. Multitudes of great and scientific men are seeking to cover up this issue, but it is too apparent to be denied. Hence the conclusion is reached in our highest schools of learning, that the Bible is not a book of authority.

The foundations of our holy Christian religion, laid in the Word of God, are rapidly being relegated to the domains of fable and superstition by these evolutionary schools. And the worst of it is, through the spiritual blindness and darkness of modern Babylon, the professed people of God seem entirely ignorant of the progress being made in that direction. A large portion of the modern ministry is involved in this transition. The masses of the laity do not comprehend the dangers. They are looking to their leaders and great divines, who, as the Scriptures declare, are "blind leaders of the blind," and are rapidly progressing toward the great and awful doom awaiting those in moral darkness. In the language of the revelator, Babylon the great becomes "the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit." Every discerning mind can perceive that the process which finally results in this condition is even now making rapid progress.

Hosts of church-members are already indorsing the doctrines of Spiritualism. This great and terrible modern delusion began near Rochester, N. Y., in 1848, this side of the great advent message of 1836-44, just after the first announcement of the fall of Babylon. With its "rappings," "table tippings," speaking and writing mediums, clairvoyants, etc., it made for a time very rapid progress, and attracted the attention of multitudes. Hundreds of ministers and church-members embraced it, but its diatribes against the Bible, its free-love doctrines, etc., disgusted the sober, better class of church-members, and covered it with infamy. Its true nature became apparent, and its true character was demon-

The Teacher

Day by Day

I heard a voice at evening softly say,
Bear not thy yesterday into to-morrow,
Nor load this week with last week's load of sorrow;
Lift all thy burdens as they come, nor try
To weigh the present with the by and by.
One step and then another, take thy way,
Live day by day.

Live day by day.
Though autumn leaves are withering round thy way,
Walk in the sunshine. It is all for thee.
Push straight ahead, as long as thou canst see;
Dread not the winter whither thou mayst go,
But when it comes, be thankful for the snow.
Onward and upward. Look and smile and pray;
Live day by day.

The Teacher an Evangelist

The work of educating our youth as outlined for us in the instruction given of God, is to be sacredly maintained. For this reason we must select as teachers those who will educate in right lines. Said my Instructor: "Let not teachers be chosen to educate and train the youth who will not maintain the simplicity of Christ's methods. His teachings contained the very essence of sanctified simplicity."

Those teachers who present matters to the students in an uncertain light are not fitted for the work of educating the youth. No man is qualified for this work unless he is daily learning to speak the words of the Teacher sent from God. Now is the time to sow the gospel seed. The seed we sow must be clean and pure, and that which will produce the choicest fruit. We have no time to lose. The work of our schools is to become more and more in character like the work of Christ. Only the power of the grace of God working on human hearts and minds will make and keep the atmosphere of our schools and churches clean.

There have been teachers in our schools who could pass well in a worldly institution of learning, but who were unfitted for the training of our youth because they were ignorant of the truths of the gospel of Christ. They were unable to bring the simplicity of Christ into their labors. It should be the work of every teacher to present those truths that have called us out to stand as a peculiar people before the world, and which are able to keep us in harmony with heaven's laws. In the messages that have been sent to us from time to time, we have truths that will accomplish a wonderful work of reform in our characters, if we will give them place. They will prepare us for entrance into the holy city of God. It is our privilege to make continual advancement to a higher grade of Christian living.

I have been instructed to present these things before our teachers. We need to be converted from our faulty lives to the faith of the gospel. Christ's followers have no need to try to shine. If they will behold constantly the life of Christ, they will be changed in mind and heart, into the same image. Then they will shine without any superficial attempt. The Lord asks for no display of goodness. In the gift of his Son he has made provision that our inward lives may be imbued with the principles of heaven. It is the appropriation of this provision that will lead to a manifestation of Christ to the world. When the people of God experience the new birth, their honesty, their uprightness, their fidelity, their steadfast principles, will unfailingly reveal it. O, what words were spoken to me! What gentleness was recommended through the grace abundantly given. The greatest manifestation that men and women can make of the grace and power of Christ, is made when the natural man becomes partaker of the divine nature, and through the power that the grace of Christ imparts, overcomes the corruptions that are in the world through lust.

Mrs. E. G. White.

Promise and Performance

Teachers ought not to indulge in effusiveness of promise. As we can not trust the mere doctrinaire in government administration, so the teacher of many unfulfilled promises can not be trusted in the administration of the schoolroom. Unfulfilled promises and good government never mix. The school sees inconsistency. Children have not yet reached the place where they are content with a complete divorce between promise and performance.

No man can be excused if he does not perform what he has promised, unless for the best and most sufficient reasons. There are times, of course, when matters or our views so change that it would be impossible or highly inadvisable that we should do what in good faith we had promised to do. In that case, an explanation can be made which will not only satisfy the school, but make the pupils admire their teacher for his regard for the right.

As with public official, so with the teacher. He must promise both to himself and to others only what can be performed. He must be far-sighted enough to know what he can perform, or else not make the promise. But what may consistently be promised for the pupils' good, for the pupils' good he must promise, and at all hazards make good.

Helpless Youths and Useless Men

Are They the Result of False Education?

"Doctor, what is the matter with my son? Is he stupid or lazy? Is he degenerate?"

"Neither stupid nor degenerate, but helpless because he has grown up to eighteen years of age, uninstructed; unskilled in anything that will make for a successful career. He needs educating."

"But, doctor, he has had the best we could give him; he has just been graduated from the high school."

"Doubtless; but the curriculum at the American high school gives a certain privileged number of youths — a very small number — a preparation for college entrance. But how about the boy who is to start in business, trade, or industrial occupation? Does he get a four-year course preparatory to his work?

"You have come to me for professional advice about your son. You say he can find no position that suits him,— nothing to do. He has become indifferent, and has habits which you fear will bring him to no good."

"Yes, he finds fault with every position I have tried to get for him; says he's not adapted for the work."

"What has he been fitted to do?"

"Nothing that I can discover. He says he'll go to college if I'll send him. Would you advise me to make the sacrifice?"

"No, no; he needs training, not cultivating. He needs to learn something about living men and methods, not about dead men and past manners. Don't misunderstand me. I am an ardent advocate of college training,— of the highest possible work along these lines,— but only for scholars, men born to intellectual labor and investigation. . . .

No Democracy of Brains

"Your son is typical of thousands of helpless youths in this country to-day. He has been unfitted for the work nature intended him to do; not fitted for the work he is capable of doing. To send him to college would only make matters worse, and result in forming habits and acquaintances which would be injurious to his future career: he must be a manual worker; his brain is not made of cells that call for studious application in intellectual work."

"Yes; I have no wealth to give him."

"Well, then, why don't you fathers give your boys an education that will enable them to earn a living? Not all can become lawyers, doctors, or professors; and of many who have tried, I've seen the wrecks, moral and physical. When your boy was in the primary school, he built a boat that beat all the others upon the lake. He should, at that period in his developing ideas, have had a start in the use of tools, in the training of the hands and eyes."

"Yes, that's true, doctor: the boy wanted to go into a shop, but his mother and sisters ——"

"I know all about their ruinous false pride. As a handler of tools, as a skilful boat-builder, he would have been successful; and here is the most important fact, — he would have been mentally contented, physically balanced.

"What is his present attitude? — Discontented; unable to know what he wants. His eyes and hands have been allowed to go untrained; his mind, instead of being drilled to observe facts and apply their lessons, instead of realizing that man must make for proficiency in some line, or fail as a producer, has been absorbing the merry-go-round ideas of girls.

"He has no serious ideas of life; has a false pride due to his associations and the doughty smatterings of French and Latin. Of course he won't go into a carpenter shop in this town now. He feels that such a step would be humiliating. Think of the false ideas he has absorbed! To work with his hands is beneath his social level, so he remains useless and helpless — a parasite.

"It is from this class we specialists get the dipsomaniac, the despondent, and the useless — the men who go to the dump heap.

"Whose fault is this? — You fathers';

every one of you. You send your boy to school — to the public schools — without any care or investigation concerning his tastes, his teachers, or how he is to be made into a useful man. You pay your school tax, and think your duty ends here.

"When you notice that he is dissatisfied with his school, you pay no attention to his need of advice. When he tells you that he wishes Miss Brown would let him stay in the manual-training room instead of going to that 'horrid Latin class,' or says, when he comes home to dinner, 'I wish I could cut out all the po'try and mush, and learn sumpthin' I can get onto,' what do you, fathers, do for him?

"You tell him his teacher knows best; to do as she tells him. What a back slap at your fatherhood! You frankly admit to your sons that a young woman who sees them only in the class room, understands them, knows their desires and longings and capabilities better than you, the fathers, do.

"The fault with the public high school is that it was established with the idea that every boy was born mentally equal to his schoolmate; that every boy's brain was capable of any development under a universal curriculum. It was the impression held by the pedagogues that every boy was made from the same germinal stuff, that all brain cells were capable of the same kind and amount of development; hence a common mold could be used for any and all. Heredity, nationality, environment, prenatal influence, mental strength, and physical vigor were supposedly equal in all.

"You are a horse dealer. You receive a shipment of horses — young horses to be trained and schooled. You look them over carefully, and try them out in the ring. You pick out the horse that shows by his build and action that he is fitted for the park or hunting-field. Another you put aside as a prospective draft-horse, another as a general utility beast, and so on. Each of these horses needs special training along the line of work it was born to follow, and each is turned over to the instructor proficient in his specialty.

"What would have been the result if cart-horse, farm-horse, racer, hunter, and circus actor had all been placed in one ring and under one set of training rules? — Ruin of all the good qualities and natural attributes in each horse. We would have our horse markets filled with useless animals — horses no man wanted.

"The boy is a young animal. Give him training along the lines he was born to follow,— look into his pedigree,— and you will get a contented man and useful citizen. Many a boy who would have been a steady worker in the shafts of a cabinet shop has been goaded to balk and sulk, through the nagging of a teacher who constantly blamed him for not trotting the same speed as a carefully groomed and born trotter.

What Boys Should Be Taught in School

"We must have schools where boys are taught that a blacksmith is a far better citizen than the political clerk who has a high-school diploma, but is dependent upon the ward boss or saloon proprietor for his sporadic jobs.

"Many of the high schools will have to throw out of the windows Latin and Greek text-books, their French grammars and ancient histories, English history and poetry — but not the English language, or the way to speak and write it.

"Last spring I watched, in a small Massachusetts town, the parading of about three hundred boys from an industrial reformatory. These boys were the offcasts of the streets of Boston. They marched behind their own boys' band. Every lad in that little regiment was being trained along some line of industry which would make him an independent youth when released from school. Carpenters, hand-workers in iron, masons, gardeners, musicians — some form of craftsmanship was their gift from the State.

"Watching this parade of youthful craftsmen were a large number of boys who attended the high school. Most of them would have to earn a living; many were then a burden to their parents. Some lived four miles from the schools, yet so solicitous was the State that they all should receive an 'education,' that every school-day a bus, and in some cases a carriage, was sent to transport these young people to school.

"At these schools not one of them was getting a course of instruction which would enable him to compete for a living wage with the 'reform' boys.

"Is there not something ludicrous in sending a carriage every school-day in the year for a boy of sixteen who has not an ounce of scholarship in his mental make-up, and not an extra dollar in his or his parents' pockets, and then pay a teacher to cram some of the humanities into him?

"True, he may get an hour or so of manual training; but it is not enough to give him an understanding of the dignity of labor, or the necessity of training the eyes and hands. In fact, the slight attention given to this art is conducive to the impression that it is subordinate to a knowledge of history and Latin; and this idea leads to failure — to absolute uselessness. . . .

"This story of misfits, of uselessness from want of development of the inherent productive powers, is repeated to me hundreds of times a year. I have seen such pitiable wrecks, mental and physical, the results of false instruction and unguided talents, that I ask each father to stop a moment, shut down the desk or get leave of absence from the ship for a while, and look into his boy's mind; find out what he can do, what he is capable of doing, then send him to be trained along that line, and send God's blessing with him."— William Lee Howard, M. D., in the American Magazine for November.

Locked in a Closet

A Massachusetts teacher locked a little boy in a closet for some trifling misbehavior, and forgot him, and he was there twenty hours before he was discovered. The parents were frantic when the boy did not come home. The police department made anxious search for the missing lad; finally the whole community was aroused, and squads of men formed searching parties, and looked for him far and near.

The teacher was much exercised to think that one of her pupils was lost, and talked it over with her fellow teachers without once thinking that she had herself locked the lad in the closet the day before.

The boy's account of the affair is one of the most tragic on record. The offense was of no earthly account, else the teacher or some other pupil would have recalled the incident. The boy was reading a story-book instead of studying. He did not stop immediately, and so, without one word, she quietly took him by the arm, led him to the closet, shut the door, and turned the key. No one noticed it, and it made no impression on the teacher's mind. It was in mid-afternoon. The boy was not concerned until he heard the children marching out. He then fully expected to be let out, and made no disturbance until the teacher had gone. She was bridesmaid that evening, and so left as soon as the pupils were gone. Then he was frightened and frantic, and pounded the door, and shouted and cried himself to sleep, and from exhaustion and lack of air slept indefinitely.

The teacher had occasion to go to the closet for some books during the forenoon, and, naturally, almost fainted when she saw the boy asleep. The light and air revived him, fortunately, else the story would be even more tragic.

When will teachers learn that what is a terrible offense in their eyes is trifling to a child, but that what is so trifling to them by way of punishment that they can forget it may be terrible in the life of a child? Such an event as this may be necessary for the awakening of some teachers. That it was not a case of murder is due wholly to the fact that the door did not fit any tighter, and that it did not happen on a Friday.— Selected.

Talk on Discipline

Activity largely initiated by the pupils, and order which is self-sustaining (to which the class gives intelligent and full obedience), are the ideal to be striven for. But this can not be secured in a day. Rigid discipline is better than none; and freedom can be given only as pupils prove their right to it.

Disorderly, ill-mannered, or impudent conduct must not be tolerated. Teachers who fail to deal promptly and effectively with such cases will be relieved of their classes. No one who is a poor disciplinarian can by any possibility be a good teacher.

The ability to discipline easily is usually dependent upon the ability to teach well. Discipline is also made easier by attending scrupulously to the many small things that make up class conduct. Remember the following points in this connection: —

Do not permit conduct which interferes with the work of the class; no one can regulate disorder. Do not permit pupils to divide their attention between class work and the manipulation of knives, pencils, and the like.

Protect furniture, books, maps, etc., from vandal knives and pencils.

Remember that lack of absolute fidelity in carrying out well-known principles of government in passing pupils to the board, in collecting or distributing materials, and the like, affects the entire conduct and tone of your work; so that these neglected matters cause more worry and fatigue than the whole burden of your work. Have a plan for everything.— Greeley (Colo.) Bulletin.

The Priceless Lesson

I've learned as days have passed me,
  Fretting never lifts the load,
And that worry, much or little,
  Never smooths an irksome road;
For you know that, somehow, always,
  Doors are opened, ways are made,
When we work and live in patience
  Under all the crosses laid.

He who waters meadow-lilies
  With the dew from out the sky,
He who feeds the fluttering sparrows
  When in need of food they cry,
Never fails to aid his children
  In their stress, though great or small,
For his ears are always open
  To their faintest far-off call.

The Need of the Holy Spirit in Our Lives[1]

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Concluded)

THE gift of the Holy Spirit is promised to all who believe. But we shall find that it makes every difference whether or not we bear a living testimony in character, in mind, in intellect, and serve the Lord with full purpose of heart as we work to bring the light of truth to souls in every place.

There are places that have never yet been entered with the message of truth. Our camp-meetings in many instances have been held in the same place again and again. The Lord wants us to make a change in this respect. He wants us to work so that the truth will come to all ears and to all hearts, that the world may know what we believe. There are many, many places where such meetings should be held. Perhaps in these places fewer will come out to hear the word, but it is our duty to take the truth to these new places, letting the light of truth shine to every soul possible. When we follow the directions of the Lord, the workings of his Spirit will be seen among us. God will bless the speakers, giving them the words that are essential to the needs of the people, and that will lead them to take hold of the living promises of God, and to enjoy an experience similar to that which those enjoyed who were led to accept Christ by the teachings of the disciples on the day of pentecost.

The Prince of heaven, he who was one with the Father in the creation of the world, came to our world to labor for the salvation of men. He laid off his royal robes and glorious crown, and clothed his divinity with humanity, that humanity might touch humanity, and that divinity might lay hold of the strength of Omnipotence. In this strength he could successfully wrestle with the powers of darkness. Often in his labors, when opposition grew strong, and his enemies would have taken him, he said to his disciples, "Let us go to another place; my time has not yet come." By this he meant that the time of his final suffering and the closing of his earthly work had not yet come. So he would leave the city, and start out for the fields. There company after company would join him until thousands were listening to his words.

We read of one occasion when five thousand men besides women and children were gathered to hear him. When the day was far spent, the disciples came to the Saviour, and urged him to send the people away. Some were fainting by the way, and they had nothing to eat. To the question of Christ, "What food have you?" the reply was given, "Five barley loaves, and two small fishes." "Bring them hither to me," said Christ, and then, breaking the loaves into pieces, he handed to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude. The hungry multitude ate of the food provided, until all were satisfied. While the food was being passed from hand to hand, the wonderful miracle was wrought that converted that small supply into sufficient to feed so great a multitude. Then said Christ, "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." "And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fishes."

Just such experiences as this in spiritual lines will come to us as we work in faith and obedience to God. As we seek to proclaim the truth for this time, angels of God will be present to minister to the hearts of the people. These heavenly angels are all around us, waiting for opportunities to impress the minds of the people, that they in turn may become instruments in carrying the truth to other souls.

My brethren and sisters, we need to be converted. We need the power of the living God to come upon us, for many of us are without spiritual strength. Let us begin to put forth earnest efforts to carry the truth to places where it is needed. Let us seek for the souls that are perishing around us. Christ is a living Christ to-day. He is waiting to impart his great grace, his salvation and truth, to all who will seek for it with the simplicity of a child. We can not do anything to help ourselves, for we are poor mortals beset with temptations on the right hand and on the left. But with the help that Christ will give us, we may become established in the doctrines of the Word, and give its teachings to others. As we explain the Word of God, heavenly angels will be present to minister grace to the speaker and to the hearers.

Our hearts need to be softened by the Holy Spirit of God. Our own will and ways, our own inclinations and education, will mold and fashion us so that our message to the people will have but little effect. The Lord desires that our hearts shall be subdued by the grace of Christ. He would have us susceptible to the influences of his Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit is an educating power wherever it is found. To have the higher education is to have the religion of Christ, the sanctification of the Spirit of God. It is to have close friendship with God, to be in that place where we can have communion with him, and work under the ministration of his Spirit. The reason why I have been so anxious that we should open our proposed new training-school in California is that many youth may be encouraged to seek for this higher education. We want this school to be altogether different from many of the schools that have been established among us. It is to pattern after the schools of the prophets. We want that here the higher education shall be understood and sought for,— the education that comes from Christ and is imparted by God to his people.

We are to teach the youth how to learn of God, how to overcome their unhappy temperaments, how to cling to the Mighty One, that when the gates of the city of God are thrown back on their glittering hinges, and the nation that has kept the truth shall enter in, they will find an entrance there, and join in the song of triumph in the kingdom of glory. My brethren, we need the converting power of God upon us if we would pass safely through the perils of the last days. I want to see the King in his beauty, and I want, by the message I shall give, to help in preparing a people to lay hold of the might and power of God. To obtain a fitness for the coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven should be considered of more importance than anything else. We need to have heaven brought into our souls, and Christ manifested in our lives. We need to be willing to deny self, and to sacrifice our own wills and ways to the will and way of God. It is our privilege to be overcomers by the blood of the Lamb and the word of our testimony. We may follow on to know the Lord, and know that his goings forth are prepared as the morning.

It is our privilege to have a living experience, and to sustain that relation to heaven that the truth will go forth from us as a lamp that burneth. Those who have a living experience in the things of God, will long to see the truth go to places where it has not been. Christ says to his followers, "Ye are the light of the world." Let us take the lamp from under the bushel, that it may give light to all that are in the house. Many of us are asleep, and the end of all things is at hand. Everything testifies to the fact that we are living in the closing days of the earth's history. We should be able at this time to bear a living testimony of a living experience. When we ourselves are converted, we shall be able to strengthen others.

I would say to you, husband your means, that when any call comes to help in extending the knowledge of the truth, you may be able to respond. Let the truth go forth from place to place, that hearts may be converted. We need to make known to the world a new religion. We need to reveal in words and actions what higher education is. At times I have felt so deeply about this matter that I have lain upon my bed and cried to God. "Lord," I have said, "the case seems hopeless. What can we do to arouse the people? What can we say to make them see that the common experience that many are having will never give them an entrance into the kingdom of God?" God's people are to learn what it means to be taught of God, what it means to deny self, to sacrifice self. Heaven is full of power, and this power would come to us did we but feel the need of it. But many of us are satisfied with a common, cheap experience, and do not arise to the emergency. God help us to arise to the emergency.

[1] Sermon preached at Oakland, Cal., Monday, February 8.

I will not hold you any longer, but I would say that I greatly desire that the glory of God shall be revealed in his people. Shall we not, right here, make a covenant with God by sacrifice? Shall we not come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty powers of darkness? Who will pledge themselves to-day to seek the Lord while he may be found? You can not convert others until you find God for yourselves. Only when you have found him yourselves can you make him known to others. Will you not open your hearts and minds to the influence of the Spirit of God, so that the testimony borne will be lasting in its results? The servants of God may wear out their lives in service for you without result unless you co-operate with them. Unless you make determined efforts for yourselves, the Holy Spirit will not come upon you, and the results seen after the outpouring of the Spirit on the day of pentecost will not be seen among you. Who now, I ask, will make a determined effort to obtain the higher education? Those who will, make it manifest by rising to your feet. [The congregation rose.] Here is the whole congregation. May God help you to keep your pledge. Let us pray.

[Praying]. Heavenly Father, I come to thee at this time, just as I am, poor, weak, unworthy, and I ask thee to impress the hearts of this people gathered here to-day. I have spoken to them thy words, but, O Lord, thou alone canst make the word effective. I ask thee to forgive those who have failed in serving thee. Reveal thyself to them. Impress their minds. Let the converting power of God come upon them. Present before them in clear gospel light their privilege to reflect the character of Christ in words, in actions. Teach them that in order to be partakers in the strife, in order to obtain victories, spiritual victories, they must be partakers of the divine nature.

We beseech thee, for Christ's sake, to sweep away this awful darkness that would hide from view the religion of Christ. We can not do this, for we are mortal; but we can ask thee, thou God of heaven. Impress the minds of this people as thou hast never done before. Reveal it to them that there is a heaven to win and a hell to shun. Grant them the presence of thine angels in every home. These who have pledged themselves to seek the Lord,— help them to be in earnest, help them to understand that they are to be living lights bringing to others the convicting power of the Spirit of God.

We want our school to be established. Lord, thou knowest all about this. We know that we have looked to thee in this matter, that we have cried to thee in the night seasons, asking thee to take charge here. O, I pray thee that thou wilt make it such a school as has never yet been established among us! Let angels of God take charge of the work, and carry it through to thine own name's glory. Let the Spirit of God be present to enlighten the minds and touch the hearts of the students as the teachers give instruction that ought to be given. Let the glory of God come in, and let hearts and minds grasp the truths of the Word of God as they have never before grasped them.

Lord, prepare thy people to meet thee in peace. We need the Holy Spirit of God in every heart. Let thy converting power come upon us as it came upon thy people on the day of pentecost. O God, reveal thyself to us!

Let thy blessing rest upon us, dear Saviour. Let light shine into the chambers of the mind and into the soul temple, that we may see light in thy light, and joy in thy joy, as we see sinners turning to God with the whole heart. We have no power but in thee. We ask thee to mold and fashion us, and give us an experience after the divine similitude.

O God, I beseech of thee to work! Thou didst send one equal with thyself to live in the world a life of poverty and toil. Traveling on foot from place to place, he endured hardness and hunger. My Father, we are ashamed of the presentation we have made. Wilt thou not baptize us, Lord? Let thy converting power come upon this people. Help them to make a determined effort to resist the enemy, that he may flee from them; and thy blessed name shall have all the glory.

The Third Angel's Message

GEORGE I. BUTLER

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name. Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Rev. 14:6-12.

In close connection with these events follow the coming of Christ and the end of this dispensation.

I have quoted the scripture containing the series of the three angels' messages, in order that the reader may see their close connection with each other, and especially that they all together form one connected platform of truth upon which God's people must stand as a necessary preparation for the coming of Christ.

The second coming of Christ will be the grandest event that has ever occurred since the creation of this globe. Yea, it will be an event in which all the universe of worlds will be interested; for then God will put down all rebellion, and destroy sin and sinners, and Satan and his rebel angels, and will establish the reign of truth and righteousness forevermore. These three angels' messages united form one grand warning proclamation to the world. It is composed of three great divisions; namely, (1) a grand announcement to the world of the soon-coming Messiah and the beginning of the great assize of the preliminary judgment period for mankind; (2) the statement of the rejection of this light, and the consequent spiritual darkness and apostasy which comes in and becomes more and more apparent as the years go by, till God's people are finally called out of Babylon, and her sad end comes; (3) the last and most solemn and awful message ever given to poor fallen humanity,— a warning against the rejection of light, showing the necessity of an entire separation from all the apostasies of the past and present and of a coming back to all the holy truths of God's Word, summed up in the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus Christ. These truths contained in the third angel's message, if accepted and practised, will result in a full and complete reformation from the errors and false doctrines taught by the papacy in past and present ages. The grand Protestant movement was a reformation in part; but before Christ comes, there must be complete reformation,— a radical turning away from all that system of mixed truth and error fully comprehended in the great apostasy. Who will have the assurance to say that these three great divisions do not contain matters of sufficient importance to constitute a platform of truth sufficient for God's people to stand upon, and thence to proclaim to the whole world a warning of their great danger, and rescue all who will obey? The believers in these messages

A Call for Volunteers

CLIFFORD G. HOWELL

When the Master calls for soldiers,
He will lead against the foe.
Do not fear his steps to follow;
He will give thee grace to go.

Fear thou not to trust his guidance,
He has drunk thy cup of woe;
He will lift thy heavy burden;
He's the best friend we can know.

If thou gird the armor on thee,
He will give thee grace to stand;
He will hide thee in the hollow
Of his mighty, nail-pierced hand.

It is not with men, thy warfare,—
Fight thou not with "flesh and blood;"
But uplift "the poor in spirit,"
Lead them to "the Lamb of God."

And when all thy warfare's over,
When have ceased the din and strife,
Thou wilt know a bright forever,
And receive a crown of life.

Lessons From the Life of Enoch

MRS. E. G. WHITE

We read of the prophet Enoch, that he "walked with God . . . three hundred years." Enoch's walk with God was not in a trance or a vision, but in all the duties of his daily life. He did not become a hermit, shutting himself entirely from the world; for he had a work to do for God in the world. In the family and in his intercourse with men, as a husband and father, a friend, a citizen, he was the steadfast, unwavering servant of the Lord. His heart was in harmony with God's will; for "can two walk together, except they be agreed?"

Enoch was a public teacher of the truth in the age in which he lived. He taught the truth; he lived the truth; and the character of the teacher was in every way harmonious with the greatness and sacredness of his mission. Enoch was a prophet who spoke as he was moved by the Holy Ghost. He was a light amid the moral darkness, a pattern man, a man who walked with God, being obedient to his law,— that law which Satan had refused to obey, which Adam had transgressed, which Abel obeyed, and because of his obedience was murdered. Now God would demonstrate to the universe the falsity of Satan's charge that men could not keep God's law. He would demonstrate that though man had sinned, he could so relate himself to God that he would have the mind and spirit of God. This holy man was selected to denounce the wickedness of the world, and to give evidence that man can keep the law.

How little is said of Enoch; how brief is his biography! Many volumes are written of Napoleon; much is said of Cæsar and other great men of the world. Their exploits are recorded and sent through the length and breadth of the land; yet we have no evidence that these men honored God, or that God honored them. Of Enoch it is recorded, "Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him."

Enoch walked with God, while of the world around him sacred history records, "The wickedness of man was great in the earth," "every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." Enoch's righteous life was in marked contrast with that of the wicked people around him. His piety, his purity, his unswerving integrity, were the result of his walking with God, while the wickedness of the world was the result of their walking with the deceiver of mankind.

Enoch was an active worker. He did not seek ease and comfort. Nor did he spend his time in idle meditation, or in striving to gain happiness for himself. He did not participate in the festivities and amusements that constantly engaged the attention of the pleasure-lovers of the antediluvian world. In his day the minds of many were absorbed in worldly pleasures,— pleasures that tempted them to go astray. But Enoch was terribly in earnest. With the sinful and with the workers of iniquity he mingled only as God's messenger, to warn them to turn with abhorrence from their evil ways, and to repent and seek God.

Enoch did not become polluted with the iniquities existing in his day. Why need we in our day? But we may, like our Master, have compassion for suffering humanity, pity for the unfortunate, and a generous consideration for the feelings and necessities of the needy, the troubled, and the despairing. Those who are Christians indeed will seek to do good to others, and at the same time will so order their conversation and deportment as to maintain a calm, hallowed peace of mind. Selfishness and worldliness are not fruits of a Christian tree. No man can live for himself, and yet enjoy the approbation of God.

Christ cursed the fig-tree because it bore no fruit. Thus he would teach that God is not pleased with his human agencies if in their lives they utterly fail to fulfil the purposes for which they were created. Through the help provided, man, in his fallen nature, can do the very things God expects him to do. He can walk and work and live by faith in the Son of God. The Lord draws man close to his side, to walk with him, to work with him, and to teach him how to overcome temptation. With every temptation there is a way of escape, by walking humbly with God.

Were Enoch upon the earth to-day, his heart would be in harmony with all God's requirements; he would walk with God, although surrounded with influences which are the most wicked and debasing. So may we remain pure and uncorrupted. He was a representative of the saints who live amid the perils and corruptions of the last days. For his faithful obedience to God, he was translated. So, also, the faithful, who are alive and remain, will be translated. They will be removed from a sinful and corrupt world to the pure joys of heaven.

Enoch meditated and prayed, and put on the armor of watchfulness, and he came forth from his pleadings with God to plead with his fellow men. He did not mask the truth to find favor with unbelievers. His close connection with God gave him courage to work the works of God. He had the testimony that his ways pleased God. This is the privilege of every believer to-day. It is man dwelling with God, and God taking up his abode with man. "I in them, and thou in me," says Jesus. To walk with God and have the witness that their ways pleased him, is an experience not to be confined to Enoch, to Elijah, to patriarchs, to prophets, to apostles, to martyrs. It is the privilege of all the followers of Christ to have Jesus enshrined in their hearts, to carry him with them in their lives. This will make them fruit-bearing trees.

I wish I could impress upon every worker in God's cause the great need of continual, earnest prayer. They can not be constantly upon their knees, but they can be uplifting their hearts to God. We have too slight a hold upon God and upon eternal realities.

Those who teach the word must themselves live in hourly contact, in conscious, living communion, with God. The principles of truth and righteousness and mercy must be within them. They must draw from the fountain of all wisdom moral and intellectual power. Their hearts must be alive with the deep movings of the Spirit of God.

It is our privilege to-day to stand with the light of heaven upon us. It was thus that Enoch walked with God. It was no easier for Enoch to live a righteous life in his day than it is for us at the present time. The world at that time was no more favorable to growth in grace and holiness than it is now, but Enoch devoted time to prayer and communion with God, and this enabled him to escape the corruption that is in the world through lust. It was his devotion to God that fitted him for translation.

We are living amid the perils of the last days, and we must receive our strength from the same source as did Enoch. We must walk with God. A separation from the world is required of us. We can not remain free from its pollution unless we follow the example of faithful Enoch.

The love revealed in the Saviour's life of self-denial and self-sacrifice is to be seen in the lives of his followers. We are called upon "so to walk, even as he walked." The cause of our weakness lies in our refusal to obey this command. On every side there are opportunities to work for our fellow men. It is our duty to lead souls to the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world. It is important that we fill aright our position in the world, in society, and in the church; but we can not do this unless we have a firm hold on Heaven. Our faith must reach within the veil, whither our Forerunner has for us entered. It is possible for us to take hold by faith of the eternal promises of God; but to do this we must have a faith that will not be denied,— a steadfast, immovable faith that will take hold of the unseen.

Every man, woman, and youth who professes the religion of Christ should realize the responsibility resting upon the believer. All should feel that this is an individual work, an individual warfare, an individual preaching of Christ. If each would realize this, and take hold of the work, we should be mighty as an army with banners. The heavenly dove would hover over us. The light of the glory of God would no more be shut away from us than it was from the devoted Enoch.

Our Message[1]

In all great epochs of this world's history God has sent his own chosen messengers with admonitions suited to the times. There had been heard no prophetic voice for a long time before Christ, not for some four hundred years, till just before Jesus was to make his public appearance. "In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea, and saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Matt. 3:1, 2. He did not preach of interesting things about the ancestors, nor tell about a flood. He touched the needs of his own day,— repentance as a preparation for the kingdom at hand.

Six months or more later Jesus was baptized by John in Jordan, and was pointed out as the one whose advent John had come to proclaim. "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel."

Noah's message was repentance toward God, and faith in his word concerning the flood of waters which was to destroy the impenitent.

Isaiah and Jeremiah preached the same message of repentance. Repent and obey, so shall the kingdom of Israel be preserved. Later the message was, Repent and submit to the king of Babylon As opposed to this the false prophets counseled war, and promised victory. We know the outcome. Jerusalem was laid in desolation.

Luther's message was given of God, and was suited to the generation in which he lived — an age of sin and unbelief. It was a message of repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

There are now some seventy or eighty denominations working in China. Each one represents some special doctrine or board of management led by men from various countries. Now we are not to attach ourselves to some particular foreigner from America or England or from any other country, and follow him as our guide, but we must take the Bible, which they as the servants of God have brought to us, and give to China the message of God for this age. We must "preach the word." Some popular preachers take a text from the Scripture, and proceed to tell many stories or pleasing things about it. We must not do so.

Perhaps you have seen the children playing a certain game in which one has a handkerchief tied over his eyes, and is then turned loose to catch some one else. He catches this way and then that way, clutching at the air, because he can not see. We are not to go at our work in this manner. We are to do away with our blinders, and have the Spirit of God to enlighten the eyes of our understanding, so that we shall know what is meat in due season.

When the Jews read the ninth chapter of Isaiah, they thought their Messiah was to be a person of great fame and power and glory, who would lead them in a successful revolt against their Roman oppressors; but they made a great mistake.

In the time of Jesus the Jews said no prophets had ever come out of Galilee, and therefore this man of Nazareth could not be the Christ. Mistaken again! These preconceived theories of theirs blinded them.

God sent a special messenger to prepare the way for Christ's first advent, John the Baptist. He was to make the crooked ways straight and the rough places plain for the coming One. Just so will his second advent be heralded. My brethren, you are now standing in the place of John the Baptist. I am now as John the Baptist. This message of preparation for the return of the King is represented in Rev. 14:6, 7. It calls for repentance and faith in view of the judgment at hand. Some one may say this text says "an angel," and that I am not an angel, and I can not preach this message. Look! The text says this messenger preaches the everlasting gospel. Has God ever sent literal angels to preach the gospel? He sends men: whomsoever he sends, whomsoever he inspires to preach the gospel for this time, are represented by this messenger. Not slowly, slowly; the angel flies with the everlasting gospel,— flies to do the work of God. This, then, is our work,— this everlasting gospel our message. The judgment is at hand, but as in the days before the flood, men are buying and selling, engaged in worldly business, and know not that the kingdom is at hand.

This world is at strife with the gospel. Jesus said, "Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you: and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake." "But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." Matt. 24:9, 13. This gospel of suffering, of endurance with patience, is totally opposite to the spirit of this world. Our only safety is in following implicitly the leading of God.

Gideon and his army did not gain the victory by force of arms. At God's command they broke their pitchers and shouted, "The sword of the Lord, and of Gideon." Some are saying the law of God is done away. Over the chapel doors in many places back in the country we see a copy of the treaty between China and the foreign power represented by the missionary locating a particular chapel. We come with a message by the authority of that law lodged in the ark of the covenant in heaven, in patience to proclaim it, if need be to lay down our lives for it. I do not say it is wrong for us to comply with the request of this government and of foreign consuls in posting treaty regulations, etc., in the chapels, but we can not depend upon the protection of earthly powers in the promulgation of this message; for the dragon (Rev. 12:17) is very wroth with the commandments of God and with those who teach and obey them.

Our message is drawn from the Old and New Testaments. The everlasting gospel embraces the two as representing the revealed will of God. Rev. 12:1 represents the church under the symbol of a woman. The moon under her feet is the Old Testament, with its types and shadows prefiguring the way of salvation. This is the foundation of the church, which is clothed with the full brightness of the gospel of salvation. The Old Testament is not obsolete; it contains up-to-date truth.

This, then,— the everlasting gospel which is represented by the three angels of Revelation 14, and which is to prepare the world for the second advent of Christ,— is our message. It is the present truth of to-day, meat in due season for this generation, a message of obedience to the commandments of God and faith in Jesus Christ.

What Is the Beast?

GEORGE I. BUTLER

"And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name [or names, margin] of blasphemy. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death: and his deadly wound was healed; and all the world wondered after the beast. And they worshiped the dragon which gave power unto the beast, and they worshiped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him? And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to over-

Walking With Thee

JOHN M. HOPKINS

LET me walk with thee, my Saviour,
Hand in hand, close by thy side;
I would share thy loving favor,
And to thee my all confide.
Walk with me — how bright the pathway
Strewn with blessings all along;
Hand in hand to heaven's gateway —
Praising thee in prayer and song.

Walk with thee with hearts united
In the bonds of love divine;
Closely clinging to each other,
As the interlacing vine
Round the oak doth weave its tendrils,
For support its strength to share;
Thus would I, O blessed Saviour,
Cling to thee in faith and prayer.

Walk with me on love's sweet mission
To the suffering ones below,
Bearing light, and joy, and blessing
As we journey to and fro;
Seeking for the poor and lost ones
Who have wandered from the fold;
Binding up the broken-hearted,
Sheltering them from storm and cold.

Such to thee I'd bring, dear Saviour,
Once the "Lamb for sinners slain,"
Where alone is perfect cleansing,
And a balm for every pain.
Thus I pray that I may ever
Walk with thee through earthly night;
Then in heaven, with garments spotless,
May I walk with thee "in white."

A Perfected Church

MRS. E. G. WHITE

CHRIST "loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."

When God gave his Son to the world, he made it possible for men and women to be perfect by the use of every capability of their beings to the glory of God. In Christ he gave to them the riches of his grace, and a knowledge of his will. As they would empty themselves of self, and learn to walk in humility, leaning on God for guidance, men would be enabled to fulfil God's high purpose for them.

A Lesson From the Baptist's Teaching

The message given to John the Baptist for the people of his day is one that every believer might study to advantage. "And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins; as it is written in the book of the words of Esaias the prophet, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways shall be made smooth; and all flesh shall see the salvation of God.

"Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, That God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham. And now also the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

"And the people asked him, saying, What shall we do then? He answereth and saith unto them, He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise.

"Then came also the publicans to be baptized, and said unto him, Master, what shall we do? And he said unto them, Exact no more than that which is appointed you.

"And the soldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do? And he said unto them, Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely; and be content with your wages."

The work of reformation here brought to view by John, the purging of heart and mind and soul, is one that is needed by many who to-day profess to have the faith of Christ. Wrong practises that have been indulged in need to be put away; the crooked paths need to be made straight, and the rough places smooth. The mountains and hills of self-esteem and pride need to be brought low. There is need of bringing forth "fruits meet for repentance." When this work is done in the experience of God's believing people, "all flesh shall see the salvation of God."

"Ye shall know them by their fruits," Christ said. "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; and a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree can not bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit."

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

The fact that our names are on the church books will not secure for us an entrance into the kingdom of heaven. God asks, Have you used your opportunities for service and for the development of Christian character? Have you traded faithfully with your Lord's goods? Knowing the will of God concerning you, how have you obeyed that will? Have you sought to benefit and bless those who needed help and encouragement? There are many souls who would be brought to a higher standard of character if they could be taught to appreciate the work of purifying and refining and sanctification that should go forward daily in their lives. If they could be brought to sense the worth of souls for whom Christ has died, they would realize how perilous is the condition of him who does nothing to help in the work of salvation.

There is no human being in the world but bears fruit of some kind, either good or evil; and Christ has made it possible for every soul to bear most precious fruit. Obedience to the requirements of God, submission to the will of Christ, will yield in the life the peaceable fruits of righteousness. The inhabitants of this world are dear to God's family. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The Father permitted his only Son to suffer the penalty of sin; he gave the richest gift that heaven could bestow, that men and women might return from their rebellion to his law, and accept into their hearts and lives the principles of heaven. If men would acknowledge the Gift, and accept his sacrifice, their transgressions would be pardoned, and the grace of God would be imparted to them to help them to yield in their lives the precious fruits of holiness.

"Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit." We have a representation to make to the world of pure principles, holy ambitions, noble aspirations, that will distinguish us from all other people, making us a separate nation, a peculiar people.

In the night season I seemed to be repeating these words to the people: There is need of close examination of self. We have no time now to spend in self-indulgence. If we are connected with God, we shall humble our hearts before him, and be very zealous in the perfecting of Christian characters. We have a grand and solemn work to do, for the world is to be enlightened in regard to the times in which we live; and it will be enlightened when a straight testimony is borne.

The church is yet militant in a world that is apparently in midnight darkness, and growing worse and worse. While the requirements of a plain "Thus saith the Lord" remain unheeded by the worldly element in the church, the voices of God's faithful servants are to be strengthened to give the solemn message of warning. The works that should characterize the church militant and the works of the church that has had the light of truth for this time, do not correspond. The Lord calls upon church-members to clothe themselves with the beautiful garments of Christ's righteousness. Praise and prayer and thanksgiving should now be heard coming daily from converted hearts and lips.

God needs men and women who will work in the simplicity of Christ to bring the knowledge of truth before those who need its converting power. The message of Christ's righteousness must be proclaimed from one end of the earth to the other. Our people are to be aroused to prepare the way of the Lord. The third angel's message — the last message of mercy to a perishing world — is so sacred, so glorious. Let the truth go forth as a lamp that burneth. Mysteries into which angels desired to look, which prophets and kings and righteous men desired to know, the church of God is to make known.

Christ's wonderful sacrifice for the world testifies to the fact that man may be rescued from iniquity. If he will break with Satan and confess his sin, there is hope for him. Man, sinful, blinded, wretched, may repent and be converted, and day by day be forming a character like the character of Christ. Human beings may be reclaimed, regenerated, and may learn to live before the world precious, Christlike lives.

God has "made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fulness of the times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him: in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his will: that we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ."

What Is the Beast?

GEORGE I. BUTLER

(Concluded)

In the previous article, having quoted at length the prophecy (Rev. 13:1-10) of the power denominated "the beast," and showed it to be a symbol of an influential world-power after which all the world followed, we turned for its complete identification to Daniel's vision of the four great world empires,— Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome. We learned that Rome existed in two phases: first, as a heathen imperial power; second, as a professedly Christian — religio-political — power. This was shown by the change in the symbol. While Rome in its first phase was a wonderful power, its second phase was still more wonderful. Rome ruled by the popes exceeded in importance Rome ruled by the emperors. "The little horn" exceeded all the rest of the ten in world influence. Leading Protestant commentators agree that "the little horn" represents the papacy.

That which is symbolized by "the little horn" of Daniel 7 is precisely the same as that symbolized by "the beast" of Rev. 13:1-10. Rome in both its phases is represented by the revelator: first, in chapter 12, by the great red dragon with seven heads and ten horns, which stood ready to devour the "man-child," our Lord Jesus Christ, as soon as he was born (Herod, a Roman ruler, attempted his death); the second phase is symbolized by a sea monster having the same ten horns, and represented as doing the same kind of work attributed to the "little horn" of Daniel's prophecy. This similarity — really identity — is so forcibly presented by Elder Uriah Smith, author of "Daniel and the Revelation," page 524, edition of 1897, that we quote it verbatim: —

"1. The little horn was a blasphemous power. 'He shall speak great words against the Most High.' Dan. 7:25. The leopard beast of Rev. 13:6 does the same. 'He opened his mouth in blasphemy against God.'

"2. The little horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them. Dan. 7:21. This beast also (Rev. 13:7) makes war with the saints, and overcomes them.

"3. The little horn had a mouth speaking great things. Dan. 7:8, 20. And of this beast we read (Rev. 13:5): 'And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies.'

"4. The little horn arose on the cessation of the pagan form of the Roman empire. The beast of Rev. 13:2 arises at the same time; for the dragon, pagan Rome, gives him his power, his seat, and great authority.

"5. Power was given to the little horn to continue for a time, times, and the dividing of time, or 1260 days [years]. Dan. 7:25. To this beast also power was given for forty-two months, or 1260 days [years]. Rev. 13:5.

"6. At the end of that specified period, the dominion of the little horn was to be taken away. Dan. 7:26. At the end of the same period, the leopard beast was himself to be 'led into captivity.' Rev. 13:10. Both of these specifications were fulfilled in the captivity and exile of the pope, and the temporary overthrow of the papacy by France in 1798.

"Here are points that prove identity; for when we have in prophecy two symbols, as in this instance, representing powers that come upon the stage of action at the same time, occupy the same territory, maintain the same character, do the same work, exist the same length of time, and meet the same fate, those symbols represent the same identical power."

With these conclusions, no candid person can disagree. Both must refer to the papacy, that great overshadowing power that ruled the kings of the earth through all the Dark Ages previous to the Reformation. The same Roman Catholic Church exists to-day, representing the largest division of Christendom, still holding all its doctrines of the past, against which the great Reformation protested; and against which the third angel proclaims the most solemn warning to be found in the Canon of inspiration. Its work and influence are still potent in the world, and of late have been steadily increasing, especially in those lands which had once cast off its influence. Every specification of the revelator concerning it has been literally fulfilled, excepting its final destruction, which is now impending.

It arose among the ten kingdoms, out of the great sea of European populations, with all its blasphemous titles of pretended divine authority, wholly of Roman parentage. It was a composite power: its body like that of a leopard, Daniel's symbol of the Grecian power (Daniel 7); its feet like those of a bear (Medo-Persia); its mouth like that of a lion (Babylon), the preceding three universal kingdoms of Daniel's prophecy having been swallowed up by Rome and become a part of its territory. The dragon, the symbol of Revelation 12, — Rome as a heathen power — gave to papal Rome "his [the dragon's] power, and his seat, and great authority." Constantine, the first professedly Christian emperor, moved his own capital to Byzantium, and renamed it Constantinople, in honor of himself, thus leaving Rome, the old capital, to become the great papal capital of Christendom; and Justinian, the emperor of Eastern Rome, by a decree in A. D. 533, made the pope head over all the churches, and gave him the authority to correct heretics. This decree the Catholics themselves quote as a basis of their authority to rule.

The papal head was wounded to death when the French, under Berthier, in 1798, captured Rome, and carried the pope a prisoner into exile to France, where he died. The papacy for a brief period was without a pope, and Rome was declared a republic. A new pope was elected, but the papacy was for many years very much weakened. Indeed, up to the present time its previous power has never been fully restored. But recent indications demonstrate that its influence is rapidly increasing. But of this more will be said hereafter.

"The forty and two months," that is, 1260 years of his supremacy, reached to 1798. These wonderful fulfilments demonstrate beyond all question that we have the right view of this prophecy. The symbolic beast, against which the third angel's message warns, can be no other than the papacy, with all its apostasies from the blessed gospel of Christ, — a spiritual system completely antagonistic to the humble, loving spirit of our Master and many of his glorious doctrines.

In order to bring this power before the reader clearly, that the absolute necessity of such a warning message to the whole world in the last days as will enable all candid people to renounce the errors growing out of this papal system, may be shown, we notice briefly 2 Thess. 2:1-8 (American Revised Version): "Now we beseech you, brethren, touching the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together unto him; to the end that ye be not quickly shaken from your mind, nor yet be troubled, either by spirit, or by word, or by epistle as from us, as that the day of the Lord is just at hand; let no man beguile you

Wholly Thine

COME, Holy Spirit, fill my heart,
  And all my ransomed powers control,
Until, renewed in every part,
  Christ sits enthroned within my soul.

Yes, every fiber of my frame,
  Lord, I would consecrate to thee,
To magnify thy holy name,
  Since thou didst give thy life for me:

My heart to be thy dwelling-place;
  My feet to walk thy peaceful ways;
My lips to tell thy wondrous grace,
  And sound thy name in prayer and praise;

Till every word that I shall speak
  Shall be what thou wouldst have me say,
Wert thou to stand, holy and meek,
  In just my place in every way;

Till all that I shall say or do
  Shall witness to thy guiding power;
And in thy service kind and true,
  I follow thee from hour to hour.

The Need of Earnest Labor for Others

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THOSE who become children of God are under obligation to him to do all in their power to seek and to save the lost. They are to make use of every possible means to give to sinners the word of life and the saving grace of Christ. Remembering the sacrifice that Christ made that he might give to men a perfect example, church-members are to follow his example of self-denial and self-sacrifice, that they may save the souls that are perishing in unbelief and sin.

Heavenly beings are greatly interested in the salvation of the souls for whom the Father has done so much. God gave his only begotten Son to be the Redeemer of the fallen race. Christ gave himself to a life of humiliation and poverty that he might be able to leave to all an example of what life should mean to every member of the human family. He tasted death for all, that every soul might have the privilege of becoming acquainted with God. And heavenly angels are "ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation."

And yet how many church-members there are who feel little responsibility to make Christ known to their friends and neighbors. If all had carried the love of Christ in their hearts, and the truth on their lips, if we had been diligent in opening the word of life to those about us, showing what Christ is to us, and what he is willing to be to them, hundreds more would be rejoicing in the truth to-day. But we shut ourselves up within ourselves. We seem to think that it is well with us, and that it is not in our line to speak of Christ. Is he not all in all to us? If we obtain any victories, is it not through his grace that they are wrought? Then why should we not lift him up? The parables of the lost piece of silver and the lost sheep teach most precious lessons. They deal with the subject of man lost and man recovered. Many, many more would be recovered if they were labored for as represented in these parables.

Growth in grace is shown in an increasing ability to work for God. He who learns in the school of Christ will know how to pray, and how to speak for the Master. Realizing that he lacks wisdom and experience, he will place himself under the training of the Great Teacher, knowing that only thus he can obtain perfection in God's service. And daily he becomes better able to comprehend spiritual things. Every day of diligent labor finds him at its close better fitted to help others. Abiding in Christ, he bears much fruit.

My brethren in the ministry, a most solemn, sacred work is given you to do. Labor to give the light to those who know not the truth. Church-members, ask God to give you a burden to open the Scriptures to others, and to do missionary work for those who need help. Some will be rescued in one way, and some in another, but the work must always be done as the Lord shall lead.

Let us prepare to raise the standard of the Lord, the standard of purity and holiness. Let every soul purify his own heart, and prepare for the Lord when he shall come in power and great glory. Let believers be quickened by the grace of Christ to work for the saving of their fellow beings. Let the publications containing Bible truth be scattered like the leaves of autumn. Lift him up, the Saviour of souls, lift him up higher and still higher before the people. It is time now to gather strength from the source of all strength, to cry aloud and spare not, to press back the clouds of darkness, that the light of heaven may be revealed.

Christ's last act before leaving the earth was to commission his ambassadors to go to the world with his truth. His last words were spoken to impress the disciples with the thought that they held in trust the message of heaven for the world. In obedience to the Saviour's command, the disciples returned to Jerusalem, and there waited for the promised outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Heavenly intelligences co-operated with them, and gave power to the message that they bore. The Holy Spirit gave efficiency to their missionary efforts, and on one occasion three thousand were converted in a day.

The delegated servants of Christ are to bear their testimony in the power of the Spirit. The yearning desire of the Saviour for the salvation of sinners is to mark all their efforts. The gracious invitation first given by Christ, is to be taken up by human voices and sounded throughout the world: "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." The church is to say, Come. Every power in the church is to be actively engaged on the side of truth. The followers of Christ are to combine in a strong effort to call the attention of the world to the fast-fulfilling prophecies of the Word of God.

O, how solemn and important is the work entrusted to us! How far reaching this work is in its results! How are we to obtain strength and wisdom necessary for its successful accomplishment? As Daniel sought the Lord, so we are to seek him. Daniel declares, "I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes." We are to seek the Lord in humility and contrition, confessing our own sins, and coming into close unity with one another. Brethren and sisters, pray, pray, for your own sakes, and for the sake of others.

We are to come to God in faith, and pour out our supplications before him, believing that he will work in our behalf, and in behalf of those we are seeking to save. We are to devote more time to earnest prayer. With the trusting faith of a little child, we are to come to our Heavenly Father, telling him of all our needs. He is always ready to pardon and help. The supply of divine wisdom is inexhaustible, and the Lord encourages us to draw largely from it. The longing that we should have for spiritual blessings is described in the words, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." We need a deeper soul-hunger for the rich gifts that heaven has to bestow. We are to hunger and thirst after righteousness.

O that we might have a consuming desire to know God by an experimental knowledge, to come into the audience-chamber of the Most High, reaching up the hand of faith, and casting our helpless souls upon the One mighty to save. His loving-kindness is better than life.

If we but realized how earnestly Jesus worked to sow the world with the gospel seed, we, living at the very close of probation, would labor untiringly to give the bread of life to perishing souls. Why are we so cold and indifferent? Why are our hearts so unimpressible? Why are we so unwilling to give ourselves to the work to which Christ consecrated his life? Something must be done to cure the terrible indifference that has taken hold of us. Let us bow our heads in humiliation as we see how much less we have done than we might have done to sow the seeds of truth.

My brethren and sisters, I speak to you in word of love and tenderness. Arouse, and consecrate yourselves unreservedly to the work of giving the light of truth for this time to those in darkness. Catch the spirit of the great Master worker. Learn from the Friend of sinners how to minister to sin-sick souls. Remember that in the lives of his followers must be seen the same devotion, the same subjection to God's work of every social claim, every earthly affection, that was seen in his life. God's claims must always be made paramount. Christ's example is to inspire us to put forth unceasing effort for the good of others.

God calls upon every church-member to enter his service. Truth that is not lived, that is not imparted to others, loses its life-giving power, its healing virtue. Every one must learn to work, and to stand in his lot and place as a burden-bearer. Every addition to the church should be one more agency for the carrying on of the great plan of redemption. The entire church, acting as one, blending in perfect union, is to be a living, active, missionary agency, moved and controlled by the Holy Spirit.

As surely as we seek the Lord earnestly, he will make the way plain before us. All around us are doors open for service. Let us prayerfully study the work to be done, and then enter upon it with full assurance of faith. We are to labor in quietness and humility, in the meekness and lowliness of Christ, realizing that there is a trying time before us, and that we shall always need heavenly grace in order to understand how to deal with minds. It is the patient, humble, godlike worker who will have something to show for his labors.

As a people, and as individuals, our success depends, not on numbers, on standing, nor on intellectual attainments, but on walking and working with Christ. The more fully we are imbued with his Spirit, the greater will be our love for the work, and the greater our delight in following in the footsteps of the Master. Our hearts will be filled with the love of God; and with earnestness and power we shall speak of the crucified Saviour. And as he is uplifted before the people, as they behold his self-sacrifice, his goodness, his tender compassion, his humiliation, and his suffering, their hearts will be melted and subdued, and they will be won to his cause.

The Two-Horned Beast of Rev. 13:11-17

GEORGE I. BUTLER

In considering the third angel's message, we have noticed at some length the warning against the symbolic beast, and have found that beast to be the papacy, with all that term comprehends,—the concrete result and outcome of the great apostasy from the religion of our Lord and Saviour, which sets itself up in the so-called temple, or church, of God, claiming for itself the attributes and prerogatives of God.

But associated in this warning message is another power also,—another so-called "beast," which performs a great work. "And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed. And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." Rev. 13:11-17.

Of what is this two-horned beast a symbol? We have seen that in symbolic prophecy living creatures are used as symbols of mighty nations, especially in the books of Daniel and The Revelation. The four beasts of Daniel 7; the ram, the he-goat, and the little horn which waxed exceeding great, of Daniel 8; the great red dragon with seven heads and ten horns, of Revelation 12; the leopard beast, which has been shown to be the papacy, of Revelation 13, etc., are familiar examples. Revelation 12 and 13 are one connected line of prophecy, reaching from Christ onward to the end of the world, the great red dragon representing pagan Rome, and the leopard beast Rome ruled by the popes. It is distinctly stated that the two-horned beast is "another beast;" hence it can not be the same as any of those which preceded it, nor a part of them.

How much territory did the first two include? Pagan Rome had conquered and incorporated into its own territory all that was formerly occupied by Babylon, Medo-Persia, and Grecia; that is, all of western Asia, northern Africa, and all of Europe. Hence there was no portion of the Old World where the two-horned beast could exercise its dominion; for it was "another beast."

About four hundred years ago Columbus discovered America. It was sparsely settled by aborigines. Here was a theater for the development of a great nation. The United States of America, after a little over a century of political existence, has a population of nearly one hundred million people, and no nation on the earth to-day has greater influence in the world's affairs. Should not this wonderful country, with its rapidly growing population, power, wealth, and influence, be noticed in prophecy? Here people have settled from almost every land on earth. Here liberty has prevailed. Here Protestantism has had a greater influence than in any other nation. Here, as in no other nation, the grand truths of Christ's soon coming have been proclaimed. No other country of earth has so rapidly increased in power, prestige, wealth, and population as this.

What was the particular period marked out by the prophecy for this power to rise? It was seen "coming up" in 1798, when the papacy received the "deadly wound." The United States became an acknowledged nation by the other great powers in 1783, at the close of the war of the Revolution. It had fairly begun its wonderful career in 1798, when the French carried off the pope. It was then a youthful power. It had "two horns like a lamb." Its horns were just beginning to develop when John beheld it in vision at that important epoch.

The dragon and the leopard beast arose from the sea, which, as explained in prophecy, means peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues. Rev. 17:15. Those powers came up among the myriads of peoples of the Old World. But this power came up in the wilderness of the New World, still largely unexplored. Eminent authors and historians, in describing the rise of our country, have used such language as this: "Like a silent seed we grew into empire;" "emerging;" "amid the silence of the earth;" we gained our power "by peaceful conquests." To a great extent this is true of our past progress.

It has a republican form of government. When desiring to accomplish its purpose in making an image to the beast, its appeal to the people is direct: "Saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they [the people] should make an image to the beast," etc. This demonstrates that in this case the people rule. This indicates a republic.

The description of this power in its first appearance, as given by the prophet, indicates innocency and gentleness. No other great nation ever arose to prominence with so much of justice and so much that is praiseworthy as this country. The oppressed people of the world were drawn toward the great republic. They came from every quarter. Various nationalities are incorporated into the United States. Many fled from tyranny, to come and enjoy liberty and human rights under the star-spangled banner. The Declaration of Independence recognizes the equality of men before the law. "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The province of human governments among men is to safeguard these rights. The federal Constitution guarantees these rights. "No religious test shall ever be required as

WHAT varied feelings stir our breast
Betwixt the hours of morn and eve!
Like fickle phantoms they possess
The balm to soothe or bane to grieve.

Grim doubt assails us, and we fain
Would e'en deny our hope of heaven,
While our arch-enemy again
With taunts declares such solace riven.

O joy that in our Father's love
He weighed this weak humanity!
Our heart is fixed on things above
Despite all Satan's subtilty.

And feelings rife, temptations sore,
Can ne'er disturb our Rock for aye.
He is my Saviour evermore,
And will be with his own alway.

What though the tempter should assert,
"Thy feelings can not claim thy King!"
Christ's power will never me desert
Since I accept his offering.

O Christ, thou knowest all our frame,
Thou, too, wast tempted like as we,
None else can sympathize the same,
Nor understand our moods like thee.

Instruction to Ministers

MRS. E. G. WHITE

A GREAT warfare is before God's servants in the closing work of this earth's history. The God of heaven is soon, very soon, to set up his kingdom,— a kingdom which shall never be destroyed. Every worker is to be an earnest, valiant soldier, fighting under the banner of Prince Emmanuel. Mighty victories are to be gained by the people who bear the banner of truth. We are slow to realize what will be the results of a faithful presentation of the message of the third angel. When they are obedient to the word, when self is hid with Christ in God, and they labor with God's glory alone in view, ministers of Christ will accomplish a work as wonderful as it is far-reaching.

Two Classes of Workers

Because some can readily pray and exhort, and seem to have a knowledge of the theory of the truth for this time, it has been taken for granted that these were called by God to the work of the ministry. But these are no special evidences that one has been chosen by God to teach the truth. Men may be able to pray and to preach fluently, they may have a theoretical knowledge of truth, but unless their hearts have been sanctified through obedience to the principles of the truth, they can not exert a saving influence or build up souls in the faith.

I was shown two classes of men. One class thought themselves competent for the work of the gospel field, and were urging themselves forward in it; but their lives did not reveal a growing Christianity. They had not a high sense of the sacredness of eternal things, and in their lives there were no special marks of devotion. They did not reveal a depth of experience in the things of God.

Then I was shown another class whom God was preparing to labor for the salvation of souls. What a contrast there was between this and the first company! These were unassuming men. They did not seek to bring themselves into notice, or to exalt self, but they exalted Christ. By their modest deportment they adorned the truth they professed. They possessed refinement, good judgment, sound minds. They had elevated ideas of sacred things, and a high sense of the sacredness of the work. The language of their heart was, Who is sufficient for these things?

Some of this latter class were advanced in their preparation for the work of teaching the truth; others needed a deeper experience than they had yet obtained. These I was shown should not be urged to take upon themselves responsibilities in the work of ministry yet. God would lead them, giving them the experience they needed for successful work.

Those with whom the Lord is working, and whom he has called to positions of trust in his cause, will possess wisdom and sanctified judgment. God does not lay the burden of his work upon those who do not honor him in their private lives. Some who do not know the grace of Christ may take upon themselves the responsibility of dealing with minds; but God has not laid this work upon them.

I have been shown that there is danger that those who are not wise in the management of their temporal affairs, may not be wise in the management of sacred interests. "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much." Some there are who do not manage wisely their temporal affairs; but instead of charging their failures in this respect to unfaithfulness and slackness, they deceive themselves into believing that the Lord has not prospered them in their worldly business because he has called them to preach. They allow this idea to influence their actions, and instead of seeking to overcome their failings, accepting counsel and instruction from those who have had experience, they give up to discouragement and defeat.

Men may think that they are doing an excellent work; but if their work is done to exalt self and to divert the attention of the people to the human agency, it will become a snare. We may preach the gospel, we may visit the sick, and help the poor; we may go through the entire range of Christian activities, and yet never live as in the presence of God, because our work is such as to eclipse Christ and glorify self.

I would plead with our workers to watch unto prayer, lest they fall under the deceptive arts of Satan. Watch, watch, lest the enemy obtain a hold upon your souls. Satan is playing the game of life for every soul, and those who are unguarded will be caught in his snares. These may be men in official positions; they may be ministers of the gospel. They may be physicians in our sanitariums who have not a true sense of their responsibilities, and who are letting precious opportunities slip by unimproved, by which they might speak a word in season to needy souls.

I speak to the men in responsible positions, warning you of the dangers of negligence. Bear in mind that Satan is playing the game of life for your souls. He is working through agencies that you little suspect. Holy and perfect trust in the Lord is your only safeguard.

Ministers of the gospel, the enemy is watching for your souls. Some will fall suddenly who have long been tested and tried, but who are unprepared to close up their earthly account with joy. Let our ministering brethren keep their souls guardedly. Those who claim to be children of God should keep the heart with all diligence, guarding every point of attack, lest Satan take us unawares. Temptations will come to every soul.

"Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after; but Christ as a son over his own house, whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end. Wherefore (as the Holy Ghost saith, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness . . .) take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. But exhort one another daily, while it is called To-day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end."

Words of Encouragement

The Lord has made some remarkable revelations regarding the experiences his people will pass through, and we have reason to wonder that we have thus far been so well protected from the plottings of the enemy, and that his schemes against us have, to such a large degree, been unsuccessful. Let us gather to our souls the sure encouragements the Lord has given, and read often the precious promises of his Word. Christ is our Mediator and our Redeemer.

We are given a special message to bear in times of depression and discouragement: "Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water."

I ask you to read the whole of this thirty-fifth chapter of Isaiah, with the fifty-sixth chapter. When you are disappointed because of the spiritual lack you see in the churches and in individuals, read these promising words of inspiration. They are given for the encouragement of our churches, and are to be claimed in times of emergency. When you meet with those who are not willing to be helped and strengthened, do not allow yourselves to become discouraged; when you find halting and disaffection among the believers, let your faith in God be strong. I have been shown that evil angels in the form of believers will work in our ranks to bring in a strong spirit of unbelief. Let not even this discourage you; but bring a true heart to the help of the Lord against the powers of satanic agencies.

It is time now that every soul who has a knowledge of present truth come into line and renew his consecration to God. We are to come up to a much higher standard. Let us make the Word of God our strong testimony. We are to learn to lean upon his sure promise, and be ready to communicate encouragement to others. Let us take hold of the mighty assurances that God has given us in Christ and in his Word, and endeavor daily to carry on the work that the Redeemer undertook in behalf of humanity.

The Image of the Beast

GEORGE I. BUTLER

In our investigation of the third angel's message, we considered briefly the prophecy of the two-horned beast of Revelation 13. Every specification concerning its rise has been met, as shown by the facts of history, in the government of the United States of America up to this point, "He shall speak as a dragon." Its lamblike horns, symbolizing civil and ecclesiastical power, with their appearance of youth and innocency, fitly symbolized the principles of this government. Government by the people; the equality of all men before the law — all men having equal rights; the institution of governments among men to preserve those rights; the Bible, and the Bible alone, the foundation of Protestantism; all men having a right to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences — none other having the right to interfere so long as his rights were not violated; no union of church and state,— surely these doctrines are full of lamblike innocency, and excellent purity. Yet the prophecy goes on to say: "And he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him [or "in his sight," American Revised Version, that is, in his presence], and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men. And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast, saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by the sword, and did live." Rev. 13: 11-14.

Surely, here is a career marked out quite different from the innocent and lamblike professions made by this government at its commencement. The American government in its earlier days of comparative purity has been the best on earth. The rights of man have been more respected; greater liberty and freedom have been enjoyed; religious liberty in larger degree has existed; multitudes from foreign lands have poured in to enjoy the liberty here permitted. The people of Oriental lands, who for ages have slept on in the darkness of heathenism, wishing to be let alone, have at last learned of the blessings of freedom, and now greatly wish to emigrate to this country and enjoy its blessings. In the memory of many, Japan isolated herself from all the world. But Commodore Perry, an American officer, opened the door, and now, lighting its lamps from his torch, Japan sends her youth to America to learn civilization and liberty, religion and human rights. The influence of America is world-wide. No nation equals its progress, growth, wealth, and blessings. It is eminently fitting that this last-day power should be noted in prophecy as a remarkable, yea, wonderful nation.

The glorious principles of Protestantism have here had their greatest development. In the Old World there are, to be sure, great Protestant nations. But they have been hampered by church and state influences, which have hindered their full development. Here the consciences of men have been freer to act and develop in the principles of greater liberty. Here we have had a "church without a pope, and a state without a king." Here the greatest, most influential religious systems of mankind had in a sense their local habitat. Earlier Rome, as a universal kingdom, was pagan; later Rome, papal; and in a higher, more fully developed sense than elsewhere, the United States was and is Protestant. Catholics, to be sure, are plentiful in the United States, and are shrewdly hiding their designs of capturing this nation, and placing it in the papal column. But as yet they have not fully succeeded. Though they are more numerous than any one Protestant church, and are making greater progress than any other one of the orthodox churches, yet in this country, Protestantism as a whole, including all its denominations, is still in the ascendant. How long this will remain so is problematical. Influences are at work, and quite fully developing, which threaten great danger to Protestantism as a living, powerful factor in elevating and influencing for good the well-being of mankind.

How gratifying it would be if the facts would justify us in concluding that Protestantism as a whole is to triumph gloriously, and that the great Reformation, begun by Luther, will end in discarding every fragment of papal apostasy and meet the mind of God. But the facts will not warrant such a conclusion. They tell a very different story. They demonstrate that the great Protestant organizations are fast letting go of the principles of the Protestant Reformation, that as bodies they are making overtures to the papacy and reaching forth their hands across the gulf that separates them, and becoming more in sympathy and union with Catholicism than ever before since Luther's time.

This condition is fully manifest in the quotation made from the prophecy, "He shall speak as a dragon." The dragon spirit is a persecuting spirit; it manifests itself in an unwillingness to grant the enjoyment of equal rights to all. That spirit originated with the fallen angel. There is nothing Christlike about it. The papacy above every other power on earth has manifested it. The state churches — the so-called Protestant churches, where secular power has been in their hands — have manifested it in a degree; the Puritans in New England persecuted the Quakers, and Baptists, and others; and in recent years the popular Protestant churches, through Sunday laws, have oppressed Seventh-day Adventists in various instances. More than one hundred instances have occurred where members of this church have been thrown into jail or worked in chain-gangs; and in several instances men have died because of such imprisonment in insanitary confinement.

Determined efforts are being made to secure more and more severe Sunday laws, till they shall have power to put down by the strong hand of the law even the most conscientious people who keep the seventh day and claim the right to work six days in every week.

The limits of this article forbid that we should enter into a lengthy examination of what is occurring in the religious bodies in our own country in the direction of connecting politics and religion and bringing about a condition of affairs where the churches can enforce so-called religious institutions by law. Zealous men of ability and prominence are diligently working in this direction. The change of the United States Constitution by an amendment recognizing God in that great document, thus giving a religious cast to that instrument, is one proposed plan. This is a very plausible idea with many religious people. Strenuous efforts are being made every year to get Congress to enact Sunday laws for the District of Columbia, thus securing the United States' indorsement of the first day of the week as the national sabbath wherever the fed-which come to us. We need to know more of the spirit of sacrifice, self-denial, and economy, that we may thus help to prepare men and women for efficient service.

A young man or woman who comes to the years of accountability and is trained for efficient service is a most valuable acquisition to the cause of truth. We have hundreds, yes, thousands, of sturdy young men and women in these less favored lands who are anxious for an education. Can not our young people deny themselves unnecessary luxuries in order to help in this way? This is the spirit which should actuate the students in all our schools.

Our Opportunities in the South

In a speech at Atlanta, Ga., recently made before the Conference for Education in the South, a fuller account of which appears elsewhere, Gov. Hoke Smith, of Georgia, offered, as a partial and practical solution of the negro education in the South, the suggestion that Northern men move among them, and that employers in the North seek the services of the negro; for, as the governor showed from statistics, the negro develops best when scattered among the whites. There are two very needy classes in the South, the poor whites and the negroes, both of which demand the uplifting efforts of the gospel. Work for these people is made very possible at this time by a sentiment in the South thus forcibly voiced by the governor of Georgia. (1)

It was conclusively demonstrated at the conference that the most effective means for doing a permanent work of value for these classes is through the school. These people perhaps always need to be led; consequently work of a pastoral character is imperative. The civilizing influence of a school which teaches the value and dignity of manual work, and particularly agriculture, is of the greatest value. While it is true that much of the work begun will have to be followed up by continual labor, yet it is also true that many of these people may be so educated that they can, in turn, carry on similar work for others in like conditions.

Much can be done for this needy people. But it is evident that this work can not be best prosecuted by desultory or spasmodic efforts. If it rests upon us, and it does, whether we realize it or not, we should organize for more effective work than we have heretofore undertaken. The value of unity and organized effort is as great in this field as any in the world. Not every one is qualified for work in this land, and those who go need the counsel and support, financially and otherwise, of those who are studying the field as a whole. We have hundreds of families living in our crowded cities of the North, and even in rural districts, who, it would seem, could be speedily prepared for valuable service as teachers and gospel workers, to live among these needy classes, and give to them the uplifting and soul-saving influence of the gospel. Surely the gateway to a great, broad avenue of opportunity is wide open.

The School

Home Schools

As church-schools shall be established in the future, there is a class of work to be done in connection with them that has not been done in the past. All who can should have the privileges of a home church-school. It would be well if several families in a neighborhood would unite to employ a humble, God-fearing teacher to give to the parents the help that is needed in educating their children. This will be a great advantage, and a plan more pleasing to the Lord than that which has largely been followed of removing the youth from their homes to attend one of our larger schools. The church-members, uniting, could erect an inexpensive building, and secure a wise teacher to take charge of the school.

Our small churches are needed. And the children are needed in their homes, where they may be a help to their parents when the hours of study are ended. The Christian home is the best place for young children; for here they can have parental discipline that is after the Lord's order. God would have us consider these things in all their sacred importance. It is the precious privilege of teachers and parents to co-operate in teaching the children how to drink in the gladness of Christ's life by learning to follow his example. The Saviour's early years were useful years. He was his mother's helper in the home; and he was just as verily fulfilling his commission when performing the duties of the home and working at the carpenter's bench as when he engaged in his public work of ministry.

It is not required that all the youth rush off from home responsibilities to seminaries or higher schools in order to reach the highest rung of the ladder. It should be remembered that right in the home there are generally young children to be instructed. The elder should ever seek to help the younger. Let the elder members of the family consider that this part of the Lord's vineyard needs to be cultivated, and resolve that they will put forth their best capabilities to make home attractive and to deal patiently with younger minds.

There are young persons in our homes whom the Lord has qualified to give the knowledge they have to others. Let these strive to keep spiritual lessons fresh in the mind, that they may impart the knowledge they have gained. If these elder members of the family would become learners with the children, new ideas would be suggested, and the hours of study would be a time of decided pleasure as well as of profit.

The tender years of childhood are years of sacred responsibility to fathers and mothers. Parents have a sacred duty to perform in teaching their children to help bear the burdens of the home, to be content with plain and simple food and neat and inexpensive dress. The requirements of the parent should always be reasonable; kindness should be expressed, not by foolish indulgence, but by wise direction. Parents are to teach their children pleasantly, without scolding or fault-finding, seeking to bind the hearts of the little ones to them by the silken cords of love. Let all, fathers and mothers, teachers, older brothers and sisters, become an educating force to keep up every spiritual interest, and create a wholesome atmosphere in the home and school life that will train the younger children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Our children are the Lord's property; they have been bought with a price. This thought should be the mainspring of our labors for them. The most successful methods of assuring their salvation, and keeping them out of the way of temptation, is to instruct them constantly in the Word of God. And as parents become learners with their children, they will find their own growth in a knowledge of the truth more rapid. Unbelief will disappear; faith and activity will increase; assurance and confidence will deepen as they thus follow on to know the Lord. (2) Their prayers will undergo a transformation, becoming earnest and sincere. Christ is the Head of his church, the dependence of his people; he will give the needed grace to those who seek him for wisdom and instruction.

I speak to fathers and mothers: You can be educators in your home churches; you can be spiritual missionary agencies. Let fathers and mothers feel the need of being home missionaries, the need of keeping the home atmosphere free from the influence of unkind and hasty speech, and the home school a place where angels of God can come in and bless and give success to the efforts put forth.

Let parents unite in providing a place for the daily instruction of their children, choosing as teacher one who is apt to teach, and who as a consecrated servant of Christ will increase in knowledge while imparting instruction. The teacher who has consecrated self to the service of God will be able to do a definite work in missionary service, and will instruct the children in the same lines. Let fathers and mothers co-operate with the teacher, laboring earnestly for the salvation of their children. If parents will realize the importance of these small educating centers, co-operating to do the work that the Lord desires to be done at this time, the plans of the enemy for our children will be frustrated.

Science as It Is Taught

Some examples of examination questions in science, quoted by H. W. Hornwill in an article on "Science and the Schoolboy Mind," contributed to The Scientific American (New York, August 22), are not only extremely ludicrous, but suggest serious doubts regarding the efficiency of instruction in elementary science in some of our schools. Mr. Hornwill himself regards such specimens as well worth the teacher's careful study, since they often point to some flaw in methods of teaching, and suggest in what direction there is need for reform. In the first place, he calls attention to their

The Relation of Man to His Fellow Man

MRS. E. G. WHITE

IN the Lord's plan human beings have been made necessary to one another. To every one God has entrusted talents, to be used in helping others to walk in the path of right. It is by unselfish service for others that we improve and increase our talents.

Like the different parts of a machine, all are closely related to one another, and all dependent upon one great Center. There is to be unity in diversity. No member of the Lord's firm can work successfully in independence. Each is to work under the supervision of God; all are to use their entrusted capabilities in his service, that each may minister to the perfection of the whole.

There are many who have not a clear understanding of the relation man should sustain to his fellow man in the work of God. How many there are who ask the question, Am I my brother's keeper? Said the angel, Yea, thou art thy brother's keeper. To every professed Christian the words are spoken, Suffer not thy brother to be left unwarned; cherish a spirit of kindness and of love toward the erring. Often when a man commits a wrong, it is because spiritual blindness is upon him; he is deceived and deluded. Treat not such as an enemy. The Lord has bought him with a price. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The soul who accepts the sacrifice of Christ in his behalf is pledged to have a special care for his brother who is erring.

He who claims to be a Christian should examine himself and see if he is as kind and considerate of his fellow beings as he desires his fellow beings to be of him. When this is done, there will be a showing that is after the divine similitude. It is God's plan that each believer shall be a help to those who have not yet become partakers of the divine nature. Christ has pledged himself to co-operate with those who work with him. He has pledged himself to train us to be his colaborers. He will help us to follow his example, doing good, and refusing to do evil. By Christ's wonderful union of divinity with humanity, we are assured that even in this world we may be partakers of the divine nature, overcoming the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Christ taught that rank or wealth should make no difference in our treatment of one another, and that in the light of heaven all are brethren. Earthly possessions or worldly honor do not count in God's valuation of man. He created all men equal; he is no respecter of persons. He values a man according to the virtue of his character.

To possess true godliness means to love one another, to help one another, to make apparent the religion of Jesus in our lives. We are to be consecrated channels through which the love of Christ flows to those who need help. Every true worker is connected with heavenly instrumentalities. All such are workers together with those who are "ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." God sends his light to those who keep the windows of the soul open heavenward. Under the Holy Spirit's influence, they work the works of God. He who approaches nearest to obedience to the divine law will be of the most service to God. He who follows Christ, reaching out after his goodness, his compassion, his love for the human family, will be accepted by God as a worker together with him. Such a one will not be content to remain on a low level of spirituality. He will constantly reach higher and higher.

In order that Christ's work may be accomplished in the earth, his servants must exert an influence that will draw their fellow men to him. Every one is to work out his own salvation with fear and trembling, lest he make errors that will lead others astray. All are to seek diligently for the wisdom that God gives to those who walk in faith. God sent Christ to our world to show what human beings may become through the aid of divine grace.

Christ was tempted in all points like as we are tempted, yet he maintained his integrity. Not once did he swerve from his allegiance. No stain of sin marred his life. He is our example. We are to follow him. Every good word uttered, every good action performed, will exert an influence that will be as lasting as eternity. God expects his chosen people to co-operate with him. They are to advance constantly in their religious experience, drawing nearer to Christ, becoming more like him, daily revealing more nearly the perfection he requires. Such an assimilation to Christ makes human beings examples of what God expects his children to be. And this experience all must gain who are pronounced worthy to enter the holy city.

The experience of the Son of God in our world exemplifies the love that every pardoned sinner must feel in his heart and reveal in his life,— the love which Christ declared his disciples must show for one another. "Little children," he said to them, "yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me: and as I said to the Jews, Whither I go, ye can not come; so now I say to you. A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."

This was a new commandment to the disciples. The Saviour had not yet given his disciples the full revelation of his love for them. After his agony in Gethsemane, his betrayal, and his trial; after his abuse at the hands of his murderers, and his sufferings on Calvary, his disciples realized more fully how much he loved them.

Continuing his instruction, he said, "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you."

Let the workers in God's cause press together, working in perfect harmony, placing all their faculties at God's disposal, to be used in demonstrating the power of his grace. Then God will be honored and glorified. The Lord wants his people to stand far above all selfish interests. He wants them to conquer the temptations they meet. He calls for the communion of saints. When the Lord's people are filled with meekness and tenderness for one another, they will realize that his banner over them is love, and his fruit will be sweet to their taste. Heaven will begin on earth. They will make a heaven below in which to prepare for heaven above.

THE coming General Conference will doubtless be one of the most important assemblies of God's people this side of heaven. Understanding as we do the trend and present status of the third angel's message; the international complications, especially the recent events in Turkey, indicating the speedy fulfilment of Dan. 11:45; and the great religious awakening among the popular churches, sweeping like a mighty wave over the whole world, and designed by a master mind to forestall the "loud cry" of the third angel, we may know that the end is very near. For reasons well known to Seventh-day Adventists this Conference will doubtless be, during its continuance, the central object of interest in the universe. Holy angels will be on the ground to impress hearts and to guide in all the deliberations. But there will be upon the ground, uninvited agencies, and among them the prince of darkness himself, to thwart the counsels of God's people.

If there was ever a time in our history as a people, when every one should earnestly pray that the blessing of God and his guiding hand should be over the General Conference, it is just now at its present session. Let us all seek an individual consecration so that God may pour upon us a pentecostal blessing.

The General Conference

THIRTY-SEVENTH SESSION, MAY 13 TO JUNE 6

The Work Before Us

[The following is a report of a sermon by Mrs. E. G. White at the General Conference, May 19.]

There is a very great and important work for our conferences in America to do. We are to carry the work in America in such a way that we shall be a strength and help to those who are proclaiming the message in distant countries. Every nation, tongue, and people is to be aroused and brought to a knowledge of the truth. Something is being done, but there is much yet to be done, much to be learned right here at this Conference, in order that the work may go forward in a way that will honor and glorify God.

My soul has been so burdened that I have not been able to rest. What line can we dwell upon that will make the deepest impression upon the human mind? There are our schools. They are to be conducted in such a way that they will develop missionaries who will go out to the highways and hedges to sow the seeds of truth. This was the commission of Christ to his followers. They were to go to the highways and the byways bearing the message of truth to souls that would be brought to the faith of the gospel. I felt deeply in earnest as I saw how much needs to be done in the places I have recently visited. We must stand in the strength of God if we are to accomplish this work.

In his labors each worker is to look to God. We are to labor as men and women who have a living connection with God. We are to learn how to meet the people where they are. Let not such conditions exist as we found in some places when we returned to America, in which individual church-members, instead of realizing their responsibility, looked to men for guidance, and men to whom had been committed sacred and holy trusts in the carrying forward of the work, failed of understanding the value of personal responsibility and took upon themselves the work of ordering and dictating what their brethren should do or should not do. These are things that God will not allow in his work. He will put his burdens upon his burden-bearers. Every individual soul has a responsibility before God, and is not to be arbitrarily instructed by men as to what he shall do, what he shall say, and where he shall go. We are not to put confidence in the counsel of men and assent to all they shall say unless we have evidence that they are under the influence of the Spirit of God.

Study the first and second chapters of Acts. Light has been given me that our work must be carried forward in a higher and broader way than it has ever yet been carried. The light of heaven is to be appreciated and cherished. This light is for the laborers. It is for those who feel that God has given them a message, and that they have a sacred responsibility to bear in its proclamation.

The message of present truth is to prepare a people for the coming of the Lord. Let us understand this, and let those placed in responsible positions come into such unity that the work shall go forward solidly. Do not allow any man to come in as an arbitrary ruler, and say, You must go here, and you must not go there; you must do this, and you must not do that. We have a great and important work to do, and God would have us take hold of that work intelligently. The placing of men in positions of responsibility in the various conferences, does not make them gods. No one has sufficient wisdom to act without counsel. Men need to consult with their brethren, to counsel together, to pray together, and to plan together for the advancement of the work. Let laborers kneel down together and pray to God, asking him to direct their course. There has been a great lack with us on this point. We have trusted too much to men's devisings. We can not afford to do this. Perilous times are upon us, and we must come to the place where we know that the Lord lives and rules, and that he dwells in the hearts of the children of men. We must have confidence in God.

Wherever you may be sent, cherish in your hearts and minds the fear and love of God. Go daily to the Lord for instruction and guidance; depend upon God for light and knowledge. Pray for this instruction and this light until you get it. It will not avail for you to ask, and then forget the thing for which you prayed. Keep your mind upon your prayer. You can do this while working with your hands. You can say, Lord, I believe; with all my heart I believe. Let the Holy Spirit's power come upon me.

If there were more praying among us, more exercise of a living faith, and less dependence upon some one else to have an experience for us, we would be far in advance of where we are to-day in spiritual intelligence. What we need is a deep, individual heart and soul experience. Then we shall be able to tell what God is doing and how he is working. We need to have a living experience in the things of God; and we are not safe unless we have this. There are some who have a good experience, and they tell you about it; but when you come to weigh it up, you see that it is not a correct experience, for it is not in accordance with a plain Thus saith the Lord. If ever there was a time in our history when we needed to humble our individual souls before God, it is to-day. We need to come to God with faith in all that is promised in the Word, and then walk in all the light and power that God gives.

I felt very deeply when our brethren who have come from foreign fields told me a little of their experiences and of what the Lord is doing in bringing souls to the truth. This is what we want at this time. God does not want us to go on in ignorance. He wants us to understand our individual responsibilities to him. He will reveal himself to every soul who will come to him in all humility and seek him with the whole heart.

There are schools to be established in foreign countries and in our own country. We must learn from God how to manage these schools. They are not to be conducted as many of them have been conducted. Our institutions are to be regarded as God's instrumentalities for the furtherance of his work in the earth. We must look to God for guidance and wisdom; we must plead with him to teach us how to carry the work solidly. Let us recognize the Lord as our teacher and guide, and then we shall carry the work in correct lines. We need to stand as a united company who shall see eye to eye. Then we shall see the salvation of God revealed on the right hand and on the left. If we work in harmony, we give God a chance to work for us.

In all our school work we need to have a correct understanding of what the essential education is. Men talk much of higher education, but who can define what the higher education is? The highest education is found in the Word of the living God. That education which teaches us to submit our souls to God in all humility, and which enables us to take the Word of God and believe just what it says, is the education that is most needed. With this education we shall see of the salvation of God. With the Spirit of God upon us, we are to carry the light of truth into the highways and the byways, that the salvation of God may be revealed in a remarkable manner.

Will we carry forward the work in the Lord's way? Are we willing to be taught of God? Will we wrestle with God in prayer? Will we receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit? This is what we need and may have at this time. Then we shall go forth with a message from the Lord, and the light of truth will shine forth as a lamp that burneth, reaching to all parts of the world. If we will walk humbly with God, God will walk with us. Let us humble our souls, and we shall see of his salvation.

Report of the Australasian Union Conference

[Elder O. A. Olsen, as president of the union, presented the following report to the Conference, May 21.]

Review of the Union Field and Work

It is with hearts full of sincere gratitude to God, from whom is every good gift and every blessing, that we here recount some of the mercies that have been so graciously bestowed on the work in the Australasian field. The country as a whole has enjoyed general prosperity, and this in turn has made our situation the more favorable for the work of the message.

Our field is an extensive one, taking in, as it does, the Commonwealth of Australia, New Zealand, all the South Sea Islands, the Philippines, the East Indies, the Straits Settlements, and Malay Peninsula; an immense area stretching from 20 north latitude to 46 south latitude; and from 95 east longitude to 130 west longitude; with a great variety in the way of population, numbering, at a conservative estimate, from sixty to sixty-five millions.

The Trouble and the Cure

S. O. JAMES

THERE are letters that ought to be written,
There are kind words that ought to be said,
To the souls that have been sorely smitten,
To hearts that have recently bled;
But the cares of this earth-life are pressing;
They are claiming my hands and my mind;
O, is it not sad and distressing
When a worker has fallen behind!

I know you are sick of transgression,
Being bound by the enemy's chain;
But the Master will hear your confession,
And kindly employ you again.
Don't question, like poor doubting Thomas,
And say, "If he'd show his dear face,"—
But remind him just now of his promise,
And claim the abundance of grace.

Words of Counsel to the Church

MRS. E. G. WHITE

SANCTIFICATION of character is the work of a lifetime. It is a work of education that will result in a life molded and fashioned after the divine. Our lives are to be hewed, and squared, and polished until they reflect the likeness of Christ. "I sanctify myself," the Saviour declared, "that they also might be sanctified through the truth." "Thy word is truth." The word of God is to be the daily meat and drink of all who love and serve him. That word, received into the heart, will cleanse the life and sanctify the entire being.

To those who keep the mind stayed upon Christ, he will come as the rain, "as the latter and former rain unto the earth." And by constantly looking to Christ and patterning after him, we shall grow up into him in all things. Faith will grow; conscience will be sanctified. And the fruits of the Spirit in the life will be "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith."

No human power can put unselfish love in the heart of man; only Christ can do this. He alone can give heavenly wisdom, and this he does in response to our expressed desire to be led by his pure Spirit. He who is the light of every man that cometh into the world promises that his righteousness shall go before us, and his glory be our rearward. While we follow his guidance, we shall walk safely; we can not make crooked paths for our feet. The Saviour asks those who receive him to look to him for wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. He calls them children of the light, children of the day, because the light of Christ's character is reflected in them. The light of heaven dwells in their hearts, and his grace is daily conforming them to the divine image.

My brethren and sisters, you can individually subordinate eternal interests to those of eternal worth, but God is calling you to seek not for the bread that perisheth, but for that which endureth unto eternal life. Eternal riches are within your reach. The gold currency of heaven is offered you,— that which bears the image and superscription of the Infinite. Beware of the temptation to lavish your affections upon things unimportant. The world's Redeemer would disenchant the mind that is mistaking phantoms for realities and realities for phantoms. Minds are absorbed with earthly, temporal things, but God bids you leave not eternity out of your reckoning. He would have you extend your point of vision beyond the bounds of earth; for there is infinity beyond.

We need to cultivate faith. If in faith we would seek the wisdom that cometh from above, we would obtain a rich experience in the things of God. By receiving and obeying the truth, we may bring into the life a power that will keep the love of God fresh in heart and mind and soul.

The religion that has power to govern our thoughts and words will be a blessing to all who come within the reach of our influence. It will be productive of good fruit in our own lives and in the lives of others. It is the privilege of every child of God to gather from his Word that strength that will give him peace with God and peace with his fellow beings. God's people need to be in earnest in drawing near to him, and making their own hearts right. Then the grace of God will rest upon them. When the Holy Spirit is allowed to do its work on human hearts, self will be crucified, and Christ will give to his people the gift of his grace and a perfect understanding of their great need. When they make a full surrender of themselves to him, the work that he desires to see done for his people will be accomplished.

The Son of God came to our world, and took humanity upon him, that fallen men and women might have the privilege of becoming the children of God. "You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins," the apostle writes; "wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience: among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ (by grace ye are saved); and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

It is the gospel, and the gospel alone, that will sanctify the soul. It is this that makes possible to the receiver the life that measures with the life of God. This is the record that God hath given us, even eternal life; and that life is in his Son. He who is partaker of the divine nature will escape the corruptions that are in the world through lust. His faith in Christ as the Life-giver, gives him life. Those who submit their will to the will of God will grow in grace. A faith that works by love and purifies the soul will give them a rich experience. The fruits of the Spirit will be seen in their life, and the efficiency of the Spirit be seen in their works.

When those who have had the light walk in the light, humbling the heart before God and daily conforming to his will, then the church will be an honor to the cause of truth. Upon those who uphold the principles of the Word in all their sacred purity, and who labor faithfully for the souls ready to perish, God will put his seal of approval.

The Former Days

WASHINGTON MORSE

I WISH a little space in the good old REVIEW to call to remembrance the former days, and thus celebrate my ninety-third birthday. Since the close of our Conference, I feel like the man who was healed (Acts 3:8) —"walking, and leaping, and praising God" for the third angel's message. Never in my experience in fifty-nine years have I seen the greatness of this message as now. No wonder that the unmixed wrath of God is to be poured out upon those who are found, when probation comes to an end, worshiping the beast and his image.

What has the beast done? He has put to death fifty millions of God's people; he has taken away God's holy Sabbath, and brought in the first day a counterfeit sabbath.

In 1 Sam. 10:6-9 we learn that the Spirit of God came upon Saul, and he was turned into another man. This

Hills and Valleys

S. O. JAMES

OUR life is a journey of ups and downs,
And the valleys are full of sorrow;
For our City in Canaan will sink from sight,
The shadows will come, and the chilly night,
When we dare not move to the left or right,
Only long for the sunny morrow.

Yes, life is a journey of ups and downs;
But the valleys are seen from heaven.
Faith whispers, "I'll order your steps aright;"
The just must follow, nor ask for sight;
True wisdom is certain to win the fight;
Just ask, and it shall be given.

'Twill help us all through the ups and downs;
Dear heart-broken one, believe it.
Whether you labor in country or town,
Whether you meet with a smile or a frown,
Jesus will furnish you stars for a crown;
Look up and prepare to receive it.

Revealing Christ

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE Father in heaven desires that the world shall see Christ in his followers. Life and immortality are to be brought to light through those who are one with God in Christ. It is our privilege to have the spirit of light and knowledge that is the wisdom of heaven. All who have this spirit, in whatever position they may be placed, the highest or the lowest place of service, will reveal in their work the power of this light and knowledge. Constantly we are to behold him who lived among men a life of perfect obedience. And the more closely we study him, the more nearly shall we resemble him in character, and the greater will be our efficiency in working for others.

The sacrifice of the Son of God was made that human nature might be elevated, and restored to its original purity. Jehovah suffered the glory of his Son to be veiled that the fallen race might be redeemed. Amazing love was revealed in the sacrifice thus made. He who was rich with the riches of eternity became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. He was high and exalted in heaven, crowned with glory, and honored by all the angelic host, yet he, the brightness and glory of heaven, consented to sojourn among fallen mortals, and by dying in their stead, rescue them from death. It behooved him in all things to be made like unto his brethren, that he might elevate them from the degradation into which they had fallen through sin.

The condescension of Christ in behalf of men was a marvel to the angels. Redemption through Christ was to them a mystery of love and wisdom, and it absorbed their interest even more than had the work of creation. Such love amazed and enraptured them. It was so ardent, so matchless, so devoid of selfishness, they could not comprehend it. The creation of man in the beginning, the formation of the heavens and the earth, the beauty and glory with which the Creator had clothed all nature, had called forth the wonder and admiration of the universe of heaven, their reverence and love. But this condescension of their Commander in exchanging a throne for a manger in Bethlehem, and subjecting himself in mockery and insult, poverty and a felon's death, called forth from the shining hosts of heaven the highest adoration and the deepest joy. Their joy and praise burst forth, at the announcement to the shepherds on the hills of Bethlehem, in the song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Man alone, he for whom this great sacrifice was made, manifested indifference. He who should above all others have been interested, charmed, captivated, and filled with the deepest gratitude, was unmoved, untouched. This indifference is apparent to-day not only in those who are in open rebellion to God, but in those who profess to be the followers of Christ. These will receive the greater condemnation; for Christ is more greatly dishonored by those who profess his name, yet in works deny him, than by those who stand in open rebellion to his will. Christ is not put to shame by the sinful lives of sinners as he is by professed Christians whose lives are not circumspect, and sanctified by the truth they profess.

The enchantments of the world, the riches of the universe presented with all their attractions, could not for a moment divert the Son of God from the work before him, though the path before him was marked with suffering, tears, and blood. The accomplishment of his purpose was more to him than the woe, more to him than the enrapturing joys of heaven.

How should we, the objects of such love and condescension, appreciate the mystery of redemption. The splendors of the world, presented in their most attractive form, should sink into insignificance before this great condescension. Those who are true followers of Christ will be willing to suffer for his sake. As they contemplate this mystery, the heart will be filled with tender love, a lively devotion. They will feel that they must follow the example of him who went about doing good, and who cheerfully gave his life to ransom us from the degradation of sin. Selfishness and worldliness will be seen to be inconsistent with the profession of the name of Christ. They can not live for themselves and be Christians.

We need in all our churches the evidences of the meekness of Christ. In order to do intelligently the solemn work committed to us, we must hide self in Christ. We have a short time in which to accomplish the work that is essential. Let us earnestly prepare for the conflict that is before us. I am instructed to say to all our people, Let your light so shine in words and deeds, that you will reveal that truth is cherished in the heart.

If we reveal the meekness and self-abnegation that was seen in Christ's life, the seed we sow will grow. As our experience enlarges, our opportunities will multiply, our knowledge will increase, and through Christ we shall become strong in bearing responsibilities. O precious privilege to co-operate with heavenly and divine agencies!

Those who labor for souls need to remember that they are pledged to co-operate with Christ, to obey his directions, to follow his guidance. Every hour they are to ask for and to receive power from on high. They are to cherish a constant sense of the Saviour's love, of his efficiency, his watchfulness, his tenderness. They are to look to him as the Shepherd and Bishop of their souls. Then they will have the sympathy and support of heavenly angels. Christ will be their joy and crown of rejoicing. Their hearts will be controlled by the Holy Spirit. They will go forth clothed with holy zeal, and their efforts will be accompanied by a power proportionate to the importance of the message they proclaim.

The Mark of the Beast and the Seal of the Living God

GEORGE I. BUTLER

(Concluded)

IN our last article it was clearly shown four times by the Word of the Lord that the seal or sign of God's law is the seventh-day Sabbath. The work of restoring to the law its seal by calling the attention of mankind to the requirements of the fourth commandment, has been in progress ever since the proclamation of the third angel's message. This message is being proclaimed practically to all the nations under heaven to-day. Over one hundred thousand believers have already embraced it. Never did it make such rapid progress as now. The fourth command of the decalogue has been practically trampled under foot for ages, and another sabbath, nowhere taught in the Bible, has been substituted for the true by the papal beast, and blindly held as sacred by the majority of the Protestant world. The effort of some to make the people believe that the fourth commandment furnishes authority for the observance of Sunday is too transparently wrong to deceive

Marah and Elim

To-day 'tis Elim with its palms and wells,
And happy shade for desert weariness;
'Twas Marah yesterday, all rock and sand,
Unshaded solitude and dreariness.
Yet the same desert holds them both, the same
Hot breezes wander o'er the lonely ground;
The same low stretch of valley shelters both,
And the same mountains compass them around.

So it is here with us on earth, and so
I do remember it has ever been;
The bitter and the sweet, the grief and joy,
Lie near together, but a day between.
Sometimes God turns our bitter into sweet,
Sometimes he gives us pleasant water-springs;
Sometimes he shades us with his pillar-cloud,
And sometimes to a blessed palm-shade brings.

What matters it? The time will not be long;
Marah and Elim will alike be passed;
Our desert wells and palms will soon be done,
We reach the "City of our God" at last.
O happy land! beyond these lonely hills,
Where gush in joy the everlasting springs;
O holy paradise! above these heavens,
Where we shall end our desert wanderings.

Awake, Thou That Sleepest!

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I am instructed to arouse our churches in every place from their sleeping condition. Those who hear the word of life, but do not practise it, can not hope to escape the corruption that is in the world through lust. In the great work that is before us, we shall meet with constant temptation. Though many of us are sleeping at our post, Satan does not sleep; and he will put forth untiring efforts to bring in heresies that will turn us from a whole-hearted worship of God. Not as a fiend, not as a being that repels, but as an angel of light he will come, and those who are not watchful and grounded in the truth for this time will be overcome by his wiles.

In the wilderness of temptation Satan came to Christ as an angel from the courts of God. It was by his words, not by his appearance, that the Saviour recognized the enemy. The record states: "Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungered. And when the tempter came to him, he said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread."

Though he appears as an angel of light, these first words betray his character: "If thou be the Son of God." Here is the insinuation of distrust. Should Jesus do what Satan suggests, it would be an acceptance of the doubt. "But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

"Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and setteth him on a pinnacle of the temple, and saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone."

In quoting this scripture, Satan left out the words, "in all thy ways," meaning, in all the ways of God. So long as Christ stayed in the path of duty, to carry out the work that God had appointed him, Satan could gain no advantage over him. Again the Saviour resisted temptation by presenting the word of God: "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God," he said. No rash, presumptuous act would the Saviour perform to give proof to Satan of his divinity.

This circumstance was to be a lesson to every child of God. It teaches us not to accept any challenge of the enemy. As Satan was the adversary of Christ, so he is of all who believe in Christ. But to every tempted soul the words are spoken, "Ye shall observe to do therefore as the Lord your God hath commanded you: ye shall not turn aside to the right hand or to the left. Ye shall walk in all the ways which the Lord your God hath commanded you, that ye may live, and that it may be well with you, and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye shall possess."

"Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and showeth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; and saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. Then the devil leaveth him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto him."

Christ is the way, the truth, and the life. I ask you to study his life, my brethren and sisters. He came to bring to men the gift of eternal life. In the sacrifice of his Son, the Father revealed how much he desires that sinners shall be saved. "Therefore doth my Father love me," Christ declared, "because I lay down my life." The Father loves us with a love that is but feebly comprehended.

It is because men and women lack the spirit of self-denial and self-sacrifice, that they can not comprehend the sacrifice made by heaven in giving Christ to the world. Their religious experience is mingled with selfishness and self-exaltation. How can such professors have anything but a meager hope of sharing the inheritance of Christ? "Verily I say unto you," he said to his disciples, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

There are many who, while professing godliness, measure themselves among themselves, and in consequence grow weak in spiritual life. Pride is not overcome. Not until these souls fall on the Rock and are broken, will they understand their need. O, that they might confess their wrongs before God, and plead for the presence of the Holy Spirit in their lives! Truth and righteousness will flow into the hearts that are cleansed from selfishness and sin, and through the lives of those in whose souls truth occupies the first place.

Let our ministers set an example of humility of spirit. My brethren, let your hearts melt as you consider the price Christ has paid for your soul's salvation. Let your conduct be governed by the pure principles that governed in the life of Christ. The meek and lowly in heart will be sanctified by their belief of the truth. This is the sign of Christ's followers, the world over.

Christ encouraged men to study the Word, and to give its truths to others, imparting, at any sacrifice of self, the light and life of heaven. This was the antidote of the incoming evil. He assumed human nature that he might save to the uttermost all who would come unto God by him. And he prayed that the sanctifying grace of truth, received into the lives of its converts, might call the attention of the world to the wonderful plan of salvation. Those who truly love Christ will not be satisfied with a cheap experience. They will work out earnestly the characteristics of the divine pattern. Their hearts will seek for purity and true holiness. To such the Lord will reveal his grace, and will give power to win souls to heaven.

The wickedness of the world is not abating. Every year evil becomes more prevalent, and is more lightly regarded. Let our gatherings together be made seasons of heart searching and confession. It is the privilege of this people who have had such great blessings to be trees of righteousness, shedding forth comfort and blessing. They are to be living stones, emitting light. Those who have received pardon for their sins should with earnest purpose lead those who are in the ways of sin into paths of righteousness. Partaking of Christ's self-denial and self-sacrifice, they will teach men and women to give up selfishness and sin, and accept in their place the lovely attributes of the divine nature.

There is great need for studying the Word of God. From one end of the world to the other the message of Christ's righteousness is to be sounded by human lips, to prepare the way of the Lord. The youth, the aged, and the middle-aged are to act a personal part in preparing their own souls for the great event that is soon to take place, even the second coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven, and in so doing they will reflect light upon many other souls.

"O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God! Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him: behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom."

Like John the Baptist, we are to point men and women to Jesus, saying, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." In the message we bear, the character of God, as revealed in Christ, is to be manifested to the world. The call is to be sounded by human lips and exemplified in human lives. By word and by action we are to repeat the divine call, "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

Impressions of the General Conference

GEORGE I. BUTLER

The World's General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, for 1909, will long remain a remarkable epoch in the history of the denomination. It was held at the American capital. The leading papers of the city gave extended notices of its most important transactions. Indeed, many leading papers in various portions of the country gave more or less space in their columns to this quadrennial gathering. These facts simply show that the growth of this denomination and the principles for which it stands are of considerable interest to the public as matters of news. The denomination is more and more attracting public attention. This is an encouraging omen.

The meeting continued nearly a month. Some attended a part of the time, and then went home to give others of the family a chance to attend. But the congregations remained quite uniform from the commencement to near the close. There was an attendance of not far from two thousand Sabbath-keepers. The buildings were fully occupied, and there was a large city of tents well filled. It was by far the most important meeting ever held by the denomination. Its leading characteristic was that of a great missionary meeting. The chief theme was the carrying of the last warning message to the world in the present generation. The leading plans and business questions studied, largely centered in this important question. The field considered was the whole world.

To a true believer in this, the most grand and momentous message the world ever heard, demonstrating the nearness of the appearing of the blessed Saviour, the last General Conference will ever be a glorious landmark, a bright spot in his memory. From almost all parts of the earth were gathered the representative men in the work of this last message,— the missionaries who have taken their lives in their hands to go to earth's teeming millions. From Korea, Japan, China, India, the Polynesian islands, Malay Peninsula, Australia, New Zealand, the dark continent of Africa, Central Asia, all of Europe, South America, West Indies, all of North America, representative men came to this great Conference. It was an inspiring assemblage. All had but one story to tell,— the swift progress of the all-important message. Their stirring reports were most inspiring. Many of them greatly touched our hearts.

It would seem that Europe was becoming acquainted with the message almost as fully as the United States. It, too, is sending out its missionaries to the regions beyond. Prosperous missions have been established in the darkest places in the Dark Continent. God is working wonderfully in Russia, and even in cold Siberia and many other countries. Hundreds of Catholics have been embracing the message of present truth. Station after station of missionaries is being established in Africa in various places. Delegations of prominent men from various tribes are beseeching that missionary stations may be established in their tribes. Students go long distances on foot to attend our schools and to learn the gospel of salvation. Indeed, some of the missions of other churches are wondering how it is that our work accomplishes so much more than theirs. The answer is easy enough to those who know and love the truth,— we have a message of great and precious light to give to the people, while they are not giving the message now due the world. Protestantism seems to be going into decadence, or, in other words, the popular churches are really leaving their former Protestant principles.

There were weighty problems to be solved at this Conference. With the multitude of openings springing up in every direction, how should persons and means be raised with which to meet these demands of the message? Great plans were laid, and these may be learned from the Bulletin and our other periodicals. They will be laid before our people at the camp-meetings. Every earnest Seventh-day Adventist will want to know what these plans are, and do all he can to help carry them into effect. No other people has ever had such an important work to do as have Seventh-day Adventists. The world is to be warned in this generation. Never was greater consecration required of any people. All who want to hear at last, "Well done, good and faithful servant," will certainly rally round the cause at this important epoch in its history.

The perfect union of sentiment throughout the entire camp was most noticeable. Some came wishing to raise questions which would produce discord, and such had the discouraging experience of seeing their plans come to naught. The whole interest was in the cause of giving the last warning message. Nehemiah's sentiments seemed to be in the ascendant, We "are doing a great work" and "can not come down" to enter into any controversy. The writer never saw our people apparently more united. All seemed cheerful and happy and hopeful in God.

The servant of the Lord, Sister E. G. White, came all the way from the Pacific Coast to attend this meeting. Although eighty-two years of age, she was given strength to stand before the vast congregation and make her voice heard. Age and abundant labors have left their marks upon the physical system, but her mind, so often illuminated by the divine Spirit, seemed perfectly clear.

Her example of continued labor in faithfulness and earnestness, even with the physical weaknesses of old age upon her; her exhortations to earnestness and faithfulness, greater devotion to God's work and Word; her intense interest in the salvation of all; her pity for those in darkness and sin, were a stern rebuke to ease-loving ministers, and careless, selfish souls satisfied with their own indifference; also, a great encouragement to those who long for greater usefulness.

From the labors of the Conference, she has gone to New England, to the scenes of her earliest labors, to give her testimony there. What a life of earnestness, sacrifice, industry, spirituality, and of following after the blessed Master has her life presented to this people and to the world! May our dear Lord grant strength and grace for its continuance years yet to come.

The Sin of Ananias

G. B. THOMPSON

God's hatred of sin is forcibly illustrated in the case of Ananias and Sapphira, recorded in Acts 5.

What was their sin? — They told a lie. They lied to Peter, and they lied to the Holy Spirit. Lying is common. Ever since Satan lied in Eden, men have been addicted to it. With a pretense of telling the truth, men add to, pervert, and deceive. And because they do not fall dead on the spot, many seem to think that the Most High does not care. But this record of the sin of Ananias and his wife contains a warning for us at this time against the sin of lying. Let us study it.

Pentecost was past, the gospel was being preached, and thousands were em-

My Need

MARY VALLIANT NOWLIN

Quicken me, all-glorious Son,
With life the Father giveth thee —
With light and immortality —
Thou Christ, who art my judge to be.
O let me never be undone!

Lord, through thy Spirit so impart
The fullest riches of thy grace,
The glory shining from thy face,
That in my actions all may trace
The throbbing of thy love-filled heart.

And let there mingle in my voice
The tones that stirred the far-off sea —
The far-famed, blue-waved Galilee —
That gentle, loving sympathy
That made all lonely hearts rejoice.

O Christ, this fulness I so crave,
So feel the lack, I'd faint to-day,
If thou, Lord, hadst not bid me pray,
And watch for souls along the way,
And tell them of thy power to save.

Then let these graces in me meet,
O thou who knowest all my need!
Come, teach me by love's simple creed,
That I may gather gems indeed,
And some day lay them at thy feet.

O, I will sing all heaven through,
If I should find in that glad place —
Which I shall reach, Lord, by thy grace —
Some trav'ler, lost in earth's dim maze,
That I had told thy story to!

Be of Good Courage

MRS. E. G. WHITE

There are some in our churches who, if there is discouragement in any line, are sure to talk about it. This is not the right way to do. Those who do not work in hopefulness, keep themselves under a cloud of doubt. The enemy is not dead, and the nearer we come to the close of this earth's history, the more vigilant will be his efforts to keep souls in discouragement, that the light of heaven may not be revealed in words and acts to bring hope and cheer and courage to others. We must be wide-awake to meet the wiles of Satan. We should ever be drawing nearer and nearer to God, for we need increased faith and a firm reliance on the help that God can give. These will make us a help and blessing to others.

I am so thankful that we have a faith that will stand the test of trial and opposition. As trouble in the world increases, the Lord's children will have to suffer; but the Word of God affords comfort and encouragement for such a time. Read the first and second chapters of First Corinthians; there are precious assurances here for the child of God.

Paul is speaking to his brethren in the faith: "Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours: grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ; that in everything ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge; even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you: so that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ."

We have some understanding of what this waiting means. The testimony of the Spirit of God to-day harmonizes with that given through the apostle Paul. "God is faithful, by whom ye are called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord."

The apostle continues, "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." In our labors there is need of carefulness of speech, watchfulness of each action, that through the grace of Christ the responsibilities that have been placed upon us may be borne in the spirit of Christ. Christ would have us united in Christian fellowship, — a tie more binding than the ties of human kinship. He would have us take our stand upon a higher platform. Christ has pledged himself to work for us if we will take hold of him by faith.

We are now in the closing work of this earth's history. There is not a moment's time to be given to doubting. My brethren and sisters, let your faith increase. However discouraging appearances may be, believe that the Lord will work in behalf of his cause and his people. The Spirit of God is everywhere knocking for admittance to the hearts of men. God is caring for his work in every place. His children are the special objects of his care. If by faith we will accept the light God gives in messages of encouragement or reproof, and advance step by step in the right way, keeping our eyes steadfastly fixed on our Leader, light will shine along the pathway, the approval of God will stimulate us with hope, and ministering angels will co-operate with all our efforts.

Consider the estimate that Christ places upon those who follow his example: "Ye are the salt of the earth," he says, "but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men. Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill can not be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

These are wonderful lessons for us. Study them carefully, and profit by their instruction. A higher spiritual tone is required of us. The Lord would have us spiritually minded, that we may be able to see the working out of his plan in our lives. We are to be laborers together with God in accomplishing the work that he would have done. Wherever we are, we are to reflect light.

It is our privilege to gain precious victories day by day. Let us go forward in faith and hope and courage. Let us regard patience and kindness as sacred things which we must bring into every line of our work. Let us vindicate the greatness of the work by building up amiable, hopeful characters. This we can do through the grace of Christ.

We have no need to be sad and discouraged. The words and example of our Redeemer should bring us comfort and joy and strength to work his works. Let us reveal in our lives the fact that we are relying upon him who gave his life that we might not perish, but have everlasting life. Let us draw by living faith on the power of God. In no other way can we obtain the victory over the hosts of Satan. If by faith we will lay hold of the heavenly provision, the greatest powers in the universe will enable us to make complete our triumph over Satan and sin.

Thank the Lord that to human agencies is committed the grand work of extending the triumphs of the cross. Let us keep our eyes fixed on the mark of the prize. Let us not fail nor be discouraged. The words in favor of truth, spoken with the assurance that comes from the possession of a right purpose, and in cheerful hope, from a pure heart, will make angels rejoice.

"In that day thou shalt say, O Lord, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedst me. Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid: for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song; he also is become my salvation. Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation.

"And in that day shall ye say, Praise the Lord, call upon his name, declare his doings among the people, make mention that his name is exalted. Sing unto the Lord; for he hath done excellent things: this is known in all the earth.

"Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion: for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee."

Let us keep our eyes fixed on the city of God, where the Prince of heaven will one day welcome his faithful ones. Let us think of him looking down upon our world, and watching with earnest desire those who are striving to overcome by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony. When his work on earth is finished, he will welcome the righteous to the mansions he has prepared, and place on their heads the crown of the overcomer.

Increasing Confidence

GEO. O. STATES

In the fifty-seven years that I have been a Sabbath-keeper, nothing has ever so inspired confidence in the final triumph of the third angel's message as do the Bulletin reports of the General Conference. Just as far back as I can remember, when there were only a few of our people in the Eastern States, and Elders M. E. Cornell and J. B. Frisbie began giving the message in Michigan, our people believed that this truth would go to every part of the world, and that there would be gathered out one hundred forty-four thousand from all nations. These grand truths used to inspire our very beings. As I read the proceedings of the Conference, and the reports of the delegates from nearly every part of the world, telling how the message was spreading, I could almost hear their voices, and I said, "This is the truth, and I know it is."

Courage, brethren and sisters; the city is almost in sight. We have no time to look at the mistakes of our brethren. Doubtless they have made mistakes, and do still make mistakes; we all do. The servant of the Lord has said: "But when, in a General Conference, the judgment of the brethren assembled from all parts of the field, is exercised, private independence and private judgment must not be stubbornly maintained, but surrendered. Never should a laborer regard as a virtue the persistent maintenance of his position of independence, contrary to the decision of the general body."

As I carefully read the proceedings, and saw how strongly our leading brethren differed on vital questions which affected the interests of the work, how the questions were freely discussed, and when they were finally acted upon, were passed unanimously by a rising vote, I said, "Thank the Lord for the spirit of prophecy. Our leading brethren believe, and practise what they preach." "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together [all united] shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion."

Now let these brethren and sisters who were permitted to attend this World's Conference go to their respective fields of labor and spread that spirit of unity among the laborers that could not attend, then let all the laborers go out and infuse that spirit through the rank and file, all standing firmly on the Word of God and the spirit of prophecy which God placed in this church from the very start, and the message will swell into the loud cry, and a short work will the Lord make in the earth. "For he will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness: because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth."

I believe, brethren and sisters, that if all our laborers would do this, and give the message with the old-time ring, it would soon swell into the loud cry, the power of God would be seen, and the sick would be healed. "I asked the angel why there was no more faith and power in Israel. Said he, 'Ye let go of the arm of the Lord too soon. Press your petitions to the throne, and hold on by strong faith. The promises are sure. Believe ye receive the things ye ask for, and ye shall have them.' I was pointed to Elijah. He was subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly. His faith endured the trial." "If the enemy can get the desponding to take their eyes off from Jesus, and look to themselves, and dwell upon their own unworthiness, instead of dwelling upon the worthiness of Jesus, his love, his merits, and great mercy, he will get away their shield of faith, and gain his object, and they will be exposed to his fiery temptations. The weak should therefore look to Jesus, and believing in him, they can then exercise faith."

During the five years, and more, since my nervous breakdown, many times I have gone before the Lord in secret and asked him if I might not be laid away to rest, for it did seem to me that if I could not have a part in giving the message, I would rather await the first resurrection. Brethren and sisters, my very life is bound up in this truth, and since reading the reports of the Conference, I have wondered if I have learned the lessons God has for me in my terrible affliction, and if I have come to the place where I can say, "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." I need your prayers as I work in the quiet of my home to build up my health, that I may have that submissive spirit that our Example had when he said, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt." If I should be healed and have a part in the loud cry, those who know my affliction would say, Surely that is the work of God.

Achan

G. B. THOMPSON

"There must be an Achan in the camp," we sometimes hear it said when there is trouble and a waning of spirituality in the church. Achan seems to be to this day a synonym for spiritual stagnation. In the midst of discord and wrangle somebody is impressed that an Achan should be weeded out, and unless this is done, Israel will probably languish nigh unto death.

But who is Achan anyway? and what did he do that he has become a synonym for hypocrisy and spiritual declension even to this time? Achan was "the son of Carmi, the son of Zabdi, the son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah." Joshua 7:1. With the rest of Israel he had marched around the city of Jericho, and probably lifted his voice in the shout of victory which overthrew the walls. No doubt he rejoiced when he saw the mighty power of God displayed in delivering the city into their hands. We have no record which shows that Achan was specially bad at heart. He was numbered with God's chosen people. But a temptation came upon him. He "committed a trespass in the devoted thing." Joshua 7:1, A. R. V. He "coveted," and as a result "took" that which belonged in the treasury of the Lord, instead of in his own. It was through yielding to this sin that he lost everything, and became a byword of unrighteousness to this day.

But what did he do? Simply this: Concerning the spoil of Jericho, the Lord had said: "All the silver, and gold, and vessels of brass and iron, are holy unto Jehovah: they shall come into the treasury of Jehovah." "Keep yourselves from the devoted thing, lest when ye have devoted it, ye take of the devoted thing; so would ye make the camp of Israel accursed, and trouble it." Joshua 6:19, 18, A. R. V. This was plain instruction, and there was no reason why it should not be understood and obeyed. Certain things were holy, and were to be placed in the Lord's treasury, and Israel were to "keep" themselves "from the devoted thing."

But Achan did not do this. After witnessing and sharing in the great victory which came to God's people, he was one day walking among the ruins of the city and saw among the spoils "a goodly Babylonish garment, and two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight." He "coveted them," and when none of his brethren were looking, he "took them," and hid them in the earth in the midst of his tent. Joshua 7:21.

Sad spectacle indeed! A professed servant of God digging a hole in the ground in his tent to hide something that was holy and belonged in the Lord's treasury, but which because of covetousness, he had stolen, and put among his own stuff!

But there is nothing uncommon about Achan's transgression. Many are doing the same to-day. He was covetous, and as a result, that which was holy and belonged to God and his service, he took for himself. Many in the church to-day are covetous and guilty of this same sin.

"Achan understood well the reserve made, and that the treasures of gold and silver which he coveted were the Lord's. He stole from God's treasury for his own benefit.

"I saw that many who profess to be keeping the commandments of God are appropriating to their own use the means which the Lord has entrusted to them, and which should come into his treasury."—"Testimonies for the Church," Vol. III, page 269.

Lead Me, Lord

I do not ask, O Lord, that life may be
A pleasant road;
I do not ask that thou wouldst take from me
Aught of its load;

I do not ask that flowers should always spring
Beneath my feet;
I know too well the poison and the sting
Of things too sweet;

For one thing only, Lord, dear Lord, I plead:
Lead me aright,
Though strength should falter and though heart should bleed,
To thee, my Light.

A Revival Needed

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The Lord calls for a revival among his people, an acknowledgment of the peculiar obligations he places upon them. He calls upon every soul who has the fear of God before him to walk and to work with an eye single to the glory of God. There is a great work to be done, and none can properly represent that work unless they humble their hearts before God day by day, and walk in all the light he sends. (1)

A great work will be accomplished by God's people if they will work in unity and unselfishness and with humility of heart. All self-exaltation must be seen and put away. Truth and righteousness alone will stand the test for this time. We need to have the Spirit of God daily with us, that we may be kept from all evil thoughts and unwise actions. We should fear lest our eyes become blinded to our individual spiritual needs in these perilous times. Many professed Christians have been allowing themselves to become absorbed in the upbuilding of selfish interests. We are now to awake from our spiritual sleep.

Brethren and sisters, let us begin at once the work of consecrating ourselves to God. Let every church-member offer himself a humble offering to the Lord. Parents, bring your children to the Lord. Be determined to seek the Lord with all the heart, and make a full surrender of yourselves to him. Pray, and believe the promises of God. Seek for the grace of Christ, that you may be taught his way and his will. As fathers and mothers, a sacred work is yours to remove every stumbling-block from the path of your children. Then the Lord can work. My brethren and sisters, labor for your own souls, and for the souls of others, that you may be accounted laborers together with God.

When church-members are fully decided to be Christians, which means to be Christlike, to be humble, pure, honest, the Lord will manifest himself by his Holy Spirit. Now is the time to do the work that needs to be done. It is self-esteem that leads men and women away from God and away from those who need their help and tender sympathy.

While he was clothed with human nature, Christ had such a firm conviction that he was doing the will of his Father that he could say, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. . . . And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye will ask anything in my name, I will do it." Blessed be God for this assurance. The name of Jesus is all powerful to save. It is this magic name that dispels our darkness, and gives us light in the Lord. It cheers our hearts in the darkest seasons of our pilgrimage, and gives us peace with God.

We have a work before us in preparing for the constantly changing scenes of the world's population. There needs to be a living testimony borne from converted hearts. God is our sufficiency. The church needs to awake to an understanding of the subtle powers of satanic agencies that must be met. If they will keep on the whole armor, they will be able to conquer all the foes they meet, some of which are not yet developed.

Confederacies will increase in number and power as we draw nearer to the end of time. These confederacies will create opposing influences to the truth, forming new parties of professed believers who will act out their own delusive theories. The apostasy will increase. "Some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." Men and women have confederated to oppose the Lord God of heaven, and the church is only half awake to the situation. There needs to be much more of prayer, much more of earnest effort, among professed believers.

Satanic agencies in human form will take part in this last great conflict to oppose the building up of the kingdom of God. And heavenly angels in human guise will be on the field of action. The two opposing parties will continue to exist till the closing up of the last great chapter in this world's history. Satanic agencies are in every city. We can not afford to be off our guard for one moment. The true, stanch believers will pray more and more, and will talk less of matters of little consequence. More and more decided testimonies will come from their lips to encourage the weak and the needy. This is no time for the people of God to be weaklings, neither one thing nor the other. Let all be diligent students of the Word. We must (2) be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. We can not live haphazard lives and be true Christians.

With emphasis these words were spoken: "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God: praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints."

The Lord would have us awake to our true spiritual condition. He desires that every soul shall humble heart and mind before him. The words of inspiration found in the nineteenth and twentieth psalms are presented to me for our people. It is our privilege to accept these precious promises, and to believe the warnings. I pray that our hearts may be fully awake to the perils that surround those who are indifferent to the soul's eternal welfare. We need to search the Scriptures as never before. The Word of God is to be our educator, our guide.

Let humility of soul be cherished, and entire surrender to God be made. Let our churches put away selfishness and pride, and cease to lift up the soul unto vanity. The end is near, and we are to give the message of warning and mercy to the world. And not only are our lips to proclaim this message, but by lives of simplicity and meekness and right-doing we are to reveal that we believe the truths of the Word of God.

A Triangular Question

For more than half a century the Seventh-day Adventist people have maintained that the Scriptures plainly teach that in the last days the Ottoman empire in Europe will come to an end, and that following this there will be world-wide war — "a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time." And we have further declared that according to the Word of God this universal war would terminate in the battle of Armageddon, the end of the world, and the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Hidden Beauty

HETTIE L. OLSEN

'Tis only a piece of marble,
  Awkward and rough and tall,
All covered with dust, and unnoticed;
  It seems of no use at all.
Some tired, way-worn traveler
  May rest in its kindly shade,
And at its base, on the greensward,
  May his weary head be laid.

'Tis passed by the high and noble,
  By the rich, the poor, the lone,
To them a blot on the landscape
  Is that block of ugly stone.
One day a far-famed sculptor
  By chance passed by that way;
He pauses, examining closely
  That giant so dusty and gray.

He sees not the grimy surface,
  He sees not unyielding rock;
Nay, he sees a beautiful image
  In its rough exterior locked.
To his workshop he has it taken,
  Where the hammer and chisel he plies,
Till a white-robed, wingèd angel
  Stands before admiring eyes.

So many of us, like that marble,
  Seem worthless and in the way;
But there is a wise, true Sculptor
  Who can chisel the worthless away;
The blows may fall fast and heavy,
  But the quicker the work will be done,
And then God will see perfected
  The image of his dear Son.

What the Cause of God Demands of His Servants

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The work of God is a straightforward, sensible, loving work, and belief of the truth for this time should lead to a straightforward, sensible, loving experience in God's people. Truth must be received and practised in every opportunity given us for doing good. We are to treat the great subjects of eternal interest as all-important. We are to urge the truth for this time on those who know it not, saying, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve," while we pray that the Lord will bring conviction and conversion to their hearts. In this work the Holy Spirit is to be our sanctifier and our efficiency. The assurance of success is ours, because of the provision made by Christ. We shall meet with obstacles and difficulties; bitter and relentless will be our enemies; but as we follow on to know the Lord, we shall know that his going forth is prepared as the morning. Christ's presence is promised to us in our labors. "Lo, I am with you alway," he says, "even unto the end of the world." In his presence there is fulness of joy; at his right hand there are pleasures forevermore.

The Lord is true to all the terms of salvation. He longs to work for his people. "The Lord shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody." This work will be done through the agency of those who are truly the Lord's, and who are standing on vantage-ground.

The Lord has pledged himself to make his name a praise in the earth. What power he has promised to all who will work in co-operation with heaven! The three highest powers in the universe are pledged to labor with those who will seek to save the lost. God wants his people to claim his promised help for the accomplishment of his work in the world. "Harken unto me, my people;" he declares; "and give ear unto me, O my nation: for a law shall proceed from me, and I will make my judgment to rest for a light of the people. My righteousness is near; my salvation is gone forth, and mine arms shall judge the people; the isles shall wait upon me, and on mine arm shall they trust."

In a special manner truth is adapted to the necessities of every human heart. As the children of God comprehend the ability of the Lord to supply their needs, they will reach out to meet the needs of the souls who are perishing in sin. God will accept all who will exercise faith in him and become doers of his word.

Christ's Example

Christ labored untiringly to accomplish the great work that he came to the world to do. His desire to save the lost race was manifest on all occasions. He went about doing good. It was his mission to help those in need, to seek the lost, to lift up the bowed down, to heal the sick, to speak words of sympathy and consolation to the sorrowing and the distressed. His heart was ever touched with human woe. How earnestly he worked for sinners! And how constant were his efforts to prepare his disciples to carry the gospel message to the ends of the earth!

Christ placed himself on the altar of service a living sacrifice. Should we, his disciples, spare ourselves? In these days when there is so great a work to be done, unceasing activity is called for. Darkness has covered the earth, and gross darkness the people. Many are far from Christ, wandering in the wilderness of sin. They are strangers from the covenant of promise; and the Lord is coming soon. Already the judgments of God are in the land. Shall we let the unwarned multitudes go down into darkness and death without a preparation for the future life?

A Call to Consecration

The testimony comes to every believe at this time, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God. For I say through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith."

"Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer; distributing to the necessity of saints; given to hospitality."

It is not learned men, not eloquent men, who are so much needed now, but humble men, who in the school of Christ have learned to be meek and lowly, who will go forth into the highways and hedges to give the invitation, "Come; for all things are now ready." Those who beg at midnight for loaves for hungry souls will be successful.

It is a law of heaven that as we receive we are to impart. The Christian is to be a benefit to others; thus he himself is benefited. "He that watereth shall be watered also himself." This is not merely a promise. It is a law of God's divine administration, a law by which he designs that the streams of beneficence shall be kept, like the waters of the great deep, in constant circulation, perpetually flowing back to their source. In the fulfilling of this law is the power of Christian missions.

God calls for whole-hearted, sympathizing, liberal, unselfish men, for nobility of dealing. He will not tolerate selfishness. Christ's servants are to have his spirit; they are to be lifted far above all littleness and cheapness of thought or action. They are to lay hold of the merits of a crucified and risen Saviour. Human hands may never have been laid on them in ordination; but there is One who will give them a fitness for the work, if they will ask in faith. I entreat of you to ask and to receive the Holy Spirit. This Spirit can be received only by those who are consecrated, who deny self, lifting the cross and following after the Lord. We have only a little longer time in which to prepare for eternity. May the Lord open the closed eyes of his people and quicken their dulled senses, that they may comprehend the great truths of the gospel — the power of God unto salvation to those who believe.

The whole body of believers needs to be vitalized by the Holy Spirit of God. We should study, plan, economize, and set in operation every means possible whereby we may reach and bless suffering and ignorant humanity. The light which God has given to us as a people is not given that we may treasure it among ourselves. We are to act in harmony with the great commission given to every disciple of Christ, to carry to all the world the light of truth. The human family is God's heritage. "Ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price," the apostle declares. When this great truth is realized by believers, the affections of the heart and the powers of the being will co-operate to render to God the highest service.

A Thousand Dollars a Day

G. B. THOMPSON

A THOUSAND dollars a day is quite a large sum, yet this is practically the amount that is needed to carry forward the work already begun in planting the standard of the third angel's message in the regions beyond. Think of it! Every time the sun rises in the morning, Sabbaths and all, from some source there must come a thousand dollars to feed and clothe our faithful laborers toiling at the front. And we must either furnish this amount or recall some of our laborers, and dismantle some of our mission posts established in the midst of teeming millions who know nothing of this message.

But, you say, our missionary operations in foreign lands are becoming quite expensive. They are, thank the Lord! And it will take more each year, until the work is done. Next year's budget must be larger than this year's. If it is not, it will indicate stagnation in some place. As the lines of the message extend, more laborers must be sent to strengthen the work; and the more mission stations opened and the more laborers sent to fill the Macedonian calls, the more funds it will require. A thousand dollars a day will not long suffice. An individual offering of a dime a day will do just now, perhaps, as a financial shibboleth, but the growth of the work already warns us that we must soon pass on to something larger.

Back in 1874, when Elder J. N. Andrews, our first missionary across the sea, went to Europe, it did not require so much as it does now to finance the work. We did not have to plan for a thousand dollars every time the orb of day came up. A few thousand dollars would suffice while the earth was describing its yearly orbit around the sun. Would you be glad if it took no more than that now? Hardly, for we desire to see growth. We all are glad the message is taking on new and greater strength, and taxing our resources to the utmost to furnish the recruits needed to advance into new fields, and to strengthen the work already begun. But in order to keep pace with the work we must continually lay broader plans. To depend on the plans laid in the past to carry forward the work of the future is folly. This would be something like putting a full-grown man into the clothes he wore when a boy.

But who is responsible for securing this thousand dollars a day? Dear reader, as you see the sun come up each morning, remember that another thousand dollars must be found to use in forwarding God's last message, and ask yourself the question, "How much am I responsible for raising this amount?" Is the treasurer of the General Conference responsible alone? — No, indeed. Are the union and local conference treasurers responsible? — In part they are, but not wholly. The responsibility must be laid where it belongs, and that is upon the local churches. Every church elder, deacon, and treasurer, the officers and teachers in every Sabbath-school, should all wrestle with this financial problem, and help solve it. It is an individual responsibility, and nothing is needed more in this cause than a recognition of individual responsibility in all lines of work. Why should a few men carry all the burden in this matter, and the great majority in the churches scarcely ever think of it? My brethren, these things ought not so to be. Ministers and laymen should keep this stupendous work constantly before them, and be ceaseless in their activities until they know that what is actually needed to carry forward the work in an economic manner, is placed in the treasury. When all do this, there will be no scarcity of funds for carrying forward the message either at home or abroad.

"Here Is the Patience of the Saints"

GEORGE I. BUTLER

"AND the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name. Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Rev. 14:9-12.

We have quoted this scripture more than once, because of its great importance, and because we wish all who read these articles to become very familiar with it. Never was there a message to mankind of greater importance than this. It is the most solemn to be found in all the canon of inspiration. Let all notice that in this message there are two important divisions: (1) That most fearful threatenings are uttered against beast and image worshipers,— those who receive the papal beast's mark; and (2) that in the latter part of this message God's true people are plainly recognized. The language is peculiar and emphatic: "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."

Under this last message to humanity that will ever be heard in this world, those who will accept that light and be faithful in the promulgation of it, are recognized as God's peculiar people; those who will not accept and obey it, will help to compose that great mass against which his fearful threatenings are uttered.

The Lord calls attention to a peculiar characteristic of the period of time during which his great work will be done. It is a special time of patience, spoken of in various scriptures,— the time of the saints' special exercise of patience: "Here is the patience of the saints." When is it? — It is at the time of the proclamation of the third angel of the message series. This particular feature is not mentioned in either the first or the second message. The special period of patience is not reached until the time when the third angel proclaims his message,— not until the time of the great disappointment in 1844 has passed, and Babylon's spiritual fall has taken place. Then the time of special patience is entered upon.

What is patience? — "The act or power of calmly or contentedly waiting for something due or hoped for." This is Webster's second definition of patience. And how wonderfully well it applies to those who have so long been waiting for their Lord's coming! None but the old believers can appreciate the full force of the application. In the great advent movement of 1840-44, they fully believed his coming was to take place immediately, because of the fulfilment of the prophecy, "Unto two thousand three hundred days [years]; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed [" justified," margin]. That prophecy did reach to that great judgment period allotted to an examination of the books of God's remembrance and the final decision of all cases just before Christ's coming to execute the sentence of that grand assize. But the believers then had no conception of the great work to be done in warning the world fully of the coming of Christ. That warning must and will be given. God's Word declares it; it says, "The earth was lightened with his glory." That is the warning message of which the revelator speaks. The warning of the world of Christ's soon coming is the last special work of God's people, even as Noah, the preacher of righteousness, warned the antediluvian world during the one hundred twenty years while the Spirit of God was still striving with that generation.

The advent believers fondly hoped to see their Lord in a comparatively brief time. They knew the Lord must come soon, for over and over the Saviour had declared most positively that he would come soon after the signs which he gave

The Resurrection

Forth from the grave at break of day
Jesus the Conqueror treadeth the way;
Vain is the tomb, the watch, or the seal,
Death hath he spurned 'neath the touch of his heel.
Saw you the gleam of the messenger
bright,
As back from the tomb in his wonderful might,
With a sweep of his arm, the grim stone
he rolled,
While the guards fall affrighted his face
to behold? (1)

O Death, thy dominion forever is lost,
When Christ paid all debts at such infinite cost;
No longer the grave shall boast of its slain,
For Jesus the Crucified liveth again.
He lives, and because of his life we shall live,
For vict'ry to all who believe he shall give;
When he cometh to reign, we shall reign
with him there,
With our glorified Lord, whom we'll meet in the air.

But O, my beloved, the midnight is here,
Long pauses the stroke we are waiting to hear,
While the world and the careless sleep
on to their doom,
And the messenger cries, "Behold he shall come!"
Then watch while you wait for that glorious dawn,
As heirs of the kingdom to which you
are born;
For the King in his beauty shall come to his own,
And the saved of all nations shall serve
at his throne.

"As Ye Have Received . . . So Walk"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving."

We need a firm reliance upon God if we would be saved from the power of satanic agencies. If we will keep close to the teachings of the Word, the truths of that Word will be our safeguard, saving us from the delusions of these last days. We need the truth. We need to believe in it. Its principles are adapted to all the circumstances of life. They prepare the soul for duty, and brace it for trial. They bear the stamp of the divine Author. Upon all with whom they are brought into contact, they exert a preserving influence. (1)

The natural stubbornness of the human heart resists the light of truth. Its natural pride of opinion leads to independence of judgment and a clinging to human ideas and philosophy. There is with some a constant danger of becoming unsettled in the faith by the desire for originality. They wish to find some new and strange truth to present, to have a new message to bring to the people; but such a desire is a snare of the enemy to captivate the mind and lead away from the truth.

In our experience we shall see one and another start up with new theories in regard to what is truth, and, irrespective of what the influence of the advocacy of such theories may be on the mind of the hearers, they will launch out into the work of advocating their ideas, even though these teachings may be in opposition to the belief that has called out Seventh-day Adventists from the world, and made them what they are. The Lord would have those who understand the reasons for their faith rest in their belief of that which they have been convinced is truth, and not be turned from the faith by the presentation of human sophistries.

The warning comes down the line to our time: "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." Let us heed this warning, and not be too ready to accept the productions of those who come to us presenting new light. We have the truth in the Word of God; we have the light that has come to us in the proclamation of the first, second, and third angels' messages. The injunction is given us, "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power."

In these last days we need a large and increasing faith. We need to be established in the faith by a knowledge and wisdom not derived from any human source, but which is found only in the riches of the wisdom of God. Men may claim great intelligence, but they need more than human intelligence to grasp the revelations of the Word of God, which Inspiration declares have been hidden for ages. "The world by wisdom knew not God," but "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." "As it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."

The apostle Paul lifts up the Saviour before men, declaring, "In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." Why then should we seek wisdom of those who have not learned the wisdom of God? Why should we not come ourselves in faith to Christ and receive the fulness of which the apostle speaks? The grace of Christ has made it possible that there be a close union between the receiver and the Giver. Those to whom God reveals by his Spirit the truths of his Word will be able to testify to an understanding of that mystery of godliness which from eternal ages has been hid in the Father and the Son.

Those who have accepted the truth of the third angel's message are to hold it fast by faith; and it will hold them from drifting into superstitions and theories that would separate them from one another and from God. Our reception of the truth we hold as Seventh-day Adventists was not a chance experience. It was reached by earnest prayer and careful research of the Inspired Word. The Lord would have us walk and work in perfect unity. His name, Christ Jesus, is to be our watchword, his example our badge of distinction, the principles of his Word the foundation of our piety. In unity of spirit and action will be our strength. Satan is at work to create differences of opinion among us, and to shake our faith in one another. Thus he seeks to lead us to yield our minds to be worked by a spirit that is not of God, and that will bring in alienation and disaffection. But Christ's prayer that we all might be one as he is one with the Father, is to be fulfilled in his church in these last days. Our unity one with another is to be our credentials to the world that we have accepted him whom the Father sent to the world to represent the principles of heaven.

Christ took his stand among men as the Oracle of God. He spoke as one having authority, addressing himself in strong terms to the people, and demanding implicit faith and obedience. We as a people have based our faith upon the principles set forth in his Word. We have pledged ourselves to bring heart and mind to obedience to the living Word, and to follow a "Thus saith the Lord."

All our present and future hopes depend upon our kinship with Christ and with God. The apostle Paul speaks strong words to confirm our faith in this respect. To those who are led by the Spirit of God, in whose hearts the grace of Christ is dwelling, he declares: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ: if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." "Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father."

We are called by Christ to come out from the world and to be separate. We are called to live holy lives, having our hearts continually drawn out to God, and having in our lives the Holy Spirit as an abiding presence. Every true believer in Christ will reveal that the grace of his love is in the heart. Where once there was estrangement from God, there will be revealed copartnership with him; where once the carnal nature was manifest, there will be seen the attributes of the divine. His people are to become workers of righteousness, constant seekers after God, constant workers of his will. This will make them complete in Christ. To angels and to men and to worlds unfallen they are to make it manifest that their lives are conforming to the will of God, that they are loyal adherents to the principles of his kingdom. The Holy Spirit, dwelling in their hearts by faith, will bring them into fellowship with Christ and with one another, and will yield in them the precious fruits of holiness.

"Here Are They That Keep the Commandments of God"

GEORGE I. BUTLER

Here we have another specification which will characterize the believers developed by the third angel's message of Rev. 14:9-12. What are the commandments of God here referred to? We answer, with perfect certainty, that the term "commandments of God" must clearly refer to the decalogue,— the ten commandments. These were spoken by God from Mount Sinai with a voice which shook the earth, and were written with his own finger upon the imperishable tablets of stone,— an honor conferred upon no other document under heaven: "And the Lord said unto Moses, Come up to me into the mount, and be there: and I will give thee tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them." Ex. 24:12. These ten commandments, therefore, themselves constitute a law. God calls them that. In the typical system they alone were placed in the ark, under the mercy-seat, over which the wings of the cherubim were spread, the typical representation of the throne of God, from which mercy and forgiveness come. Other laws were given, but no other law had such honor as was placed upon the decalogue.

The ten commandments are a summary of the moral law. Scores of texts of Scripture teach the truthfulness of this statement. For fifteen centuries all Christians have admitted that the ten commandments were so held, and that all the commandments of the decalogue were binding upon God's people. And most denominations still admit it in their articles of faith, catechisms, etc. Some, however, claim that the fourth commandment was abolished by Christ, and that another day was substituted for the Sabbath, which is the seventh day of the weekly cycle.

What does our Saviour say in his great inaugural address, the sermon on the mount?—"Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled ["accomplished," American Revised Version]. Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven." Matt. 5:17-19.

These words will forever stand as most conclusive evidence that the moral law is perpetual in its duration. As long as heaven and earth remain, not a letter or point of a letter will be removed from it. The context demonstrates that our Saviour was speaking of the ten commandments, because he quotes two of them in close connection: "Thou shalt not kill," and "Thou shalt not commit adultery."

The apostle upheld in the strongest possible language the obligation of the law of God, even as Christ did: "Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law: that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God." Rom. 3:19. In the verse following, Paul says, "By the law is the knowledge of sin." John says, "Sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John 3:4. All have sinned,— broken the law,— and the moral law therefore condemns all mankind,— condemns them because they have broken God's commandments; hence they must have a Saviour, or all are forever lost. By the law is the knowledge of sin; by the gospel is the cure for sin. Sin, or the breaking of God's law, causes all the woe, sorrow, and curse of this wicked world. Therefore God's law will stand and testify against sin as long as the world lasts. Not a letter of it has passed away: "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law." Rom. 3:31. To establish is to make firm, immovable. The law then stands as a whole,— every commandment, every word, every letter, every point of a letter: "Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good." "For we know that the law is spiritual: but I am carnal, sold under sin." Rom. 7:12, 14.

The law and its principles search every heart, and condemn all the transgressors thereof. The keeping of the ten commandments is one of the conditions of our final salvation: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22:14. These words especially apply at the time when Christ is about to come; for in close connection we find this text: "And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."

This is not saying that we are saved by works, or that of ourselves we can keep the commandments of God. We can of our own selves do nothing. The law can not save; it can only point out the wrong. The gospel through faith in Christ furnishes the only remedy for sin. To every repentant soul Christ gives pardon full and free. He changes the sinful heart, imparts a new spirit and a new life, and writes upon the tablets of that regenerated heart his own law. Then in the joy of his new-found experience, his child exclaims, as did David of old, "How love I thy law." The keeping of the commandments is accomplished by the power of the indwelling Saviour. The disciple gives proof of his love and loyalty by walking in the paths of obedience. We are saved by faith without the works of the law, but we are saved by a faith that works, by a faith which demonstrates its life and genuineness by walking in the footsteps of our blessed Example. Keeping the law does not put Christ into the heart, he enters the heart through faith; but Christ in the heart and controlling the life, says: "I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart." Ps. 40:8.

Hence the keeping of God's commandments is a most important matter. The third angel's message declares, "Here are they that keep the commandments of God." This is one of the most prominent marks which will identify the last gospel church on earth. What is it to keep the commandments of God?—It is to keep all of them: "If ye fulfil the royal law according to the scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well: but if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors. For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. For that law which said [margin], Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law. So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty." James 2:8-12.

1. God's law is called the royal, that is, the kingly, law. It was given by the God that made the universe.

2. The law of God is that which convinces a man of sin; because sin is the transgression of the law, and by the law is the knowledge of sin.

3. In order to become one who keeps God's commandments, we must keep all ten of them. The illustration given demonstrates that beyond all question. If we commit no adultery, yet if we kill, we become transgressors of the law. Hence, if we keep the commandment against murder and yet break the Sabbath commandment, we by the same process of reasoning will be accounted transgressors of the same law. Therefore,

Give the Best

THERE are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to your heart will flow,
A strength in your utmost need;
Have faith, and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your words and deeds.

God's Desire for His People

MRS. E. G. WHITE

GOD is waiting to see revealed in his people a faith that works by love and purifies the soul; for this alone will fit them for the future, immortal life. There is a great work to be accomplished, and little time in which to do it. The cause needs converted, devoted men who will make the Lord their dependence. Through such workers the Lord will reveal the power of his grace.

Christ placed himself where he could, by word and work, become a minister of healing and blessing. As the sin-pardoning Saviour, he was a well-spring of life wherever he was. In his work to relieve the sick and suffering, he was fulfilling his mission to men. His example is to be prayerfully followed by his servants. Believers are first to be converted to obedience to God's commandments; then as obedient children they will minister of their abundance to the suffering and the needy. There will be an example given of true Christian self-denial and self-sacrifice. The time now devoted to pride of dress and love of the world will be given to the uplifting of humanity. And when God's word is presented in simple faith, Christ will make the word effectual.

My brethren and sisters, let the truth of God abide in your heart by a living, holy faith. Bible truth must be comprehended before it can convict the conscience and convert the life. The remnant people of God must be a converted people. The presentation of this message is to result in the conversion and sanctification of souls. We are to feel the power of the Spirit of God in this movement. This is a wonderful, definite message; it means everything to the receiver, and it is to be proclaimed with a loud cry. We must have true, eternal faith that this message will go forth with increasing importance to the close of time.

Christ desires to see his likeness reflected in every renewed soul. Those who continue meek and lowly in heart, he will make laborers together with God. Our spiritual conflicts might often be called our spiritual rebellions. It is the heart's lack of submission to the will of God that so often brings us into difficulty. We want our own way, and this often means rebellion against God's way. We need to do as Christ did — wrestle with the Father in prayer for strength and for power to make him known in our words and actions.

Study the instruction given in the fifty-eighth chapter of Isaiah. Here are life and light, goodness and truth, for all who will receive the words of warning and encouragement, and will apply the truth to their individual lives. In working to benefit and bless others, a sense of satisfaction is experienced. The Lord creates peace in the soul. This is of more value than gold. Every faithful performance of duty stands registered in the books of heaven, and receives more than an earthly reward. It is a sacred duty that we owe to God to receive his grace that we may give it to others.

All that we have has been entrusted to us by God for wise investment. We are to devote our means, and our physical and mental powers, in the service of the Master. We are to seek to increase our talents. With them we are to accomplish results that will be as far-reaching as eternity. Our Lord's entrusted goods are sacred, and are to be kept unmingled with worldly merchandise. Few, even among church-members, realize their accountability to God as his servants. The leaven of worldliness permeates the mind, and spiritual discernment is lost. My brethren and sisters, let us cleanse the soul-temple from the buyers and the sellers.

To do the Master's bidding, and to promote his work in the earth, should be the one aim and purpose of our lives. Then there would be an upward growth, and the Holy Spirit would work upon the heart to transform the character. A generous spirit would be revealed in kindness and tender regard for others. Self would be hid with Christ in God. Beholding the character of Christ, we would become changed into his likeness.

Let us forsake self, and accept Jesus Christ as the way, the truth, and the life. Faith in him is the only valuable science. He is the living representative of perfect obedience to the eternal word. He took human flesh into vital union with divinity. He passed over the same ground where Adam fell. He bore the test upon which our first parents failed; he was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin. Had he failed on one point, Satan would have been victorious.

In the night season my mind often dwells upon the work of infinite sacrifice revealed in the humiliation and death of Christ. The Creator of man, he who upon Mount Sinai proclaimed the eternal law; in his dying agony vindicated his right to pardon transgression and sin. As he hung upon the cross, his murderers and they that passed by reviled him: "Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross. Likewise also the chief priests mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said, He saved others; himself he can not save."

O how his mother and his disciples hoped that he would manifest his mighty power, and silence his revilers by coming down from the shameful cross! They were pained by the unfeeling taunts of the ignorant revilers. "Let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him. He trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him: for he said, I am the Son of God."

"And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us. But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss. And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."

The faith of the dying thief grasped the truth of a sin-pardoning Saviour. And Jesus showed himself able to save to the uttermost all who should receive him. Verily I say unto thee to-day, he said, thou shalt be with me in paradise. Even in the agonies of death, in his humiliation and apparent defeat, he asserted his right and his power to forgive sin.

For you and for me, our Saviour hung on Calvary's cross. What are we willing to do and to sacrifice for his sake? Let every soul make some sacrifice for Christ. He has given his life for us; he has risen from the dead, and is now at the right hand of God. He is still at work for the salvation of men and women. Who will unite with him in labor?

"The Faith of Jesus"

GEORGE I. BUTLER

"HERE are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." In the preceding article some attention was given to what is meant by the term "the commandments of God," and what it is to keep them. In this article some attention will be given to the last term, "the faith of Jesus."

At this particular point it may be proper to call attention to the importance of thoroughly comprehending the force of these expressions in the special connection in which they are used by the revelator. The term "the commandments of God" is often used in the Scriptures, also "the faith of Jesus," either in this exact form or equivalent expressions.

This Day Is Mine

THIS day is mine! To-morrow may not be!
I do not know that it will ever come!
Another day I may not live to see;
These lips which now can speak may then be dumb.

This day is mine! No moment can I spare
For idle thoughts or self-indulgent ease;
The work He gives to-day, with love and care
Must be done now, if I my Lord would please.

This day is mine! It soon will pass away,
Swept backward in the tide of vanished years:
I can not have again a misspent day,
Though I should seek it carefully with tears.

This day is mine! How swift the moments fly!
Alas for me if when at set of sun,
In looking back, with sad and tearful eye,
I find, too late, my work has not been done.

This day is mine! God gives me all the days
That I may work for him and do his will;
And if each day I walk in wisdom's ways,
He'll guide my steps, and love and keep me still.

This day is mine! O then with all my might,
For love of him, and with a faith sublime,
Let me each task perform, and feel at night
That all my work is even with my time.

Ministers as Christ's Representatives

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE religion of Jesus Christ should be an apparent quality in the lives of his workers. They must know Christ, and to know him, they must know his love. Their fitness as workers should be measured by their ability to love as Christ loved, and to work as he worked. The whole man must be sanctified, purified, refined, ennobled. When Christ is formed within, the hope of glory, the worker will realize that as the representative of Christ, words and works and thoughts must be such as can meet the approval of God.

The Lord's messengers should have an intelligent understanding of the pattern that Christ came to the world to give to men. The Saviour was a man of tenderest sympathies; he was susceptible to the needs of all with whom he came in contact, and who were in need of his help. He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. In presenting the word, let the workers dwell on his susceptibility to the griefs and sorrows of men. Let them present before those who have spoiled their lives by self-indulgence, and who are impatient and fretful, the beauty of Christ's life from the manger to the cross. His lovely character is the pattern for every human soul.

To labor for the conversion of souls is the highest, noblest work in which the human agent can engage. But in our working for this object must be revealed the fact that we are laying hold of the grace of Christ, that we are guided and controlled by the Spirit of God. His holiness, his power, his unbounded love, revealed in the human instrument, will convict and convert souls. When the presence of Christ fills the life, the worker has a sense of divine power with him. The fact that he is a joint worker with God captivates his affections and desires, and fills him with earnest love for the souls for whom he labors.

We need to have a broader view of the Saviour as "Christ and Lord." "All power" is given to him to give to those who believe in his name. We do not half acknowledge his right to our homage and obedience, and to our increasing faith in him. We need to understand the depth of significance there is in the words of the apostle, "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, and not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. . . .

"Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved," the apostle continues, "bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness. And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord."

The work to be done at this period of time demands that the channels appointed to receive the living waters for thirsty souls be greatly multiplied. The work is to be done through unselfish effort. Every advance move made now must be made with increasing effort; for Satan is working with all his powers to increase the difficulties in our way. He works with all deceivableness of unrighteousness to secure the souls of men. I am charged to say to ministers of the gospel, and to our missionary physicians, Go forward. The work to be done calls for self-sacrifice at every step; but go forward. The worker who reveals a right spirit and consistent behavior under trying circumstances is proving his adaptability for his work. He is qualifying himself to meet all kinds of minds, and to be a true representative of the Master Worker. Those who will yield to the Holy Spirit's guidance will come forth purified and refined, as gold from the fire.

The knowledge that souls are perishing in their sins should arouse every worker to greater fervor in giving the light of present truth to all within his reach. He should never forget that whenever a soul is truly converted, God is glorified, and angels in heaven burst forth into singing.

All who would have success in the work must tarry long with God. The story is told of an old Lancashire woman who was listening to the reasons her neighbors gave for their minister's success. They spoke of his gifts, of his style of address, of his manners. "Nay," said the old woman, "I will tell you what it is. Your man is very thick with the Almighty."

Our fitness for God's service will be found in constant communion with him. When we consecrate ourselves to God, the power which comes alone from God will bring definite results in our work. We are to act as in the presence of God; his eye is ever upon us; his eye is guiding us. We must die to self before God can use us fully to his name's glory. If we will learn of Christ as little children, we shall make a success wherever we are.

The workers need to study the life of Christ until they give themselves unreservedly to him. "It is the spirit that quickeneth," Christ declared, "the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Those who practise the words of Christ become one with him. Their lives represent the pure principles of the Word in simplicity and meekness. The apostle Paul wrote, "I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

I am very thankful for the instruction that has come to us regarding the relation we sustain to God as his servants. We are to be under the rule of Christ, to work out the mind and will of God. We are to be kind and courteous to our fellow workers because they also are the property of Christ, bought with a price. The price that Christ paid to purchase our redemption we can not estimate. He, the only begotten Son of God, gave his precious life that those who believe in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. When we comprehend more fully this amazing sacrifice made in our behalf, we shall not be indifferent and ungrateful, but we shall partake with him of self-denial and self-sacrifice. The Lord is to be our praise in this life, and in the future eternal life. Let us strive for the crown of life that is to be given to every faithful soul.

Here Are They That Keep the Commandments of God, and Have the Testimony of Jesus Christ. Rev. 14:12

GEORGE I. BUTLER

God teaches his people, precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little, the great lessons of heavenly origin. It is the true method of all successful teaching. His great volume, the Canon of Inspiration, which we call the Bible,— in other words, The Book, because the most important of all books,— is made up of treatises written by inspired men as they were moved upon and their minds illuminated by the Holy Spirit. The light was God-given. It is not merely one continued narrative, written by some one person, but the united spiritual testimony of numerous chosen agents, each adding something important to the testimony of those preceding him, all constituting one grand whole, the Word of God, all in beautiful harmony when truly understood.

Having given considerable attention to the connected prophetic three angels' messages of Rev. 14:6-12, and considered with some care every specification contained in them, and found each and all met in the great advent movement of our time, we unhesitatingly conclude that this is the true fulfilment of the prophecy. We know of no other way to ascertain the fulfilment of any prophetic utterance: when all the points given are met in the fulfilment, that is the true solution. They will never be duplicated. If they were, then we could never tell when they were fulfilled. It would throw complete uncertainty over all prophetic statements of Holy Writ.

We now proceed to give a brief exposition of a parallel prophecy, the twelfth chapter of Revelation. For the sake of brevity, we request the reader to read the whole chapter. It commences with the appearance of a great wonder in heaven,— a woman clothed with the light of the sun, crowned with twelve stars, the moon under her feet. To the woman was given a son, a man child, who was to "rule all nations with a rod of iron." There appeared a monster before the woman, a great red dragon with seven heads and ten horns, seeking to devour the child as soon as it was born. But the dragon did not succeed; for the man child was later caught up to the throne of God.

When this wonderful description is reduced to our common language, what do we have? The introduction of wonderful events about the commencement of our Christian era. Breaking forth from twilight darkness, came a flood of gospel light, a newer and clearer dispensation, the light of the Mosaic dispensation retreating like the moon before the rising light of the gospel sun, the twelve apostles appearing as stars, the woman, the true church, presenting the child, Immanuel, to the world. Before her stood a great red dragon with seven heads and ten horns, ready to devour the man child as soon as born. This dragon was a symbol of Satan, as shown in verses 9-12. But Satan works through human agents, hence in this chapter we find him working through earthly governments.

In the book of Revelation any symbolic creature with seven heads and ten horns always symbolizes Rome in some of its many phases. Here it represents Rome in its pagan form, as the leopard beast of chapter 13 represents Rome as a so-called Christian power. Herod, the Roman governor or king of Judea, represented Rome seeking to destroy the infant Jesus. Herod failed; for Joseph and Mary, being warned of God, fled with the child into Egypt and remained there till Herod was dead. Nevertheless, Rome in the person of Pilate, another Roman governor, did put to death the Son of God. But he was raised from the dead, and ascended to his Father above.

The woman, the symbol of the true church of God, did at last flee into the wilderness before this persecutor, Rome, where in obscure, hidden, retired places she existed for twelve hundred sixty years, while papal Rome ruled the world. In 538 the head of the papal system had received from Justinian, the emperor, authority over all churches, with power to correct heretics. Twelve hundred sixty years from that date brings us to the year 1798, when France dethroned the papacy, and it received a deadly wound. Not even yet has the pope recovered the full power which he held before. He hopes to do so, however; and by the help of apostate Protestants he doubtless will. In that "wilderness" condition God's true church was comparatively hidden from public view.

The great Protestant Reformation crippled the papacy exceedingly. This experience occurred within the last few centuries. It is brought to view in the prophecy (Rev. 12:16) as the powers of the earth (i. e., earthly governments) helping the woman, God's true people being protected from papal persecutions by German princes, Scandinavian powers, and by the English government. Now we come to our own time: "And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." Rev. 12:17. This brings us to the close of that line of prophecy, and necessarily to the last body of believers on earth.

His last great effort will be made against the "remnant" of the true church, "which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." His wrath against them will be greatly stirred and powerfully manifested. The meaning of remnant is "that which remains after a part is removed," a "small portion," etc. It is used quite a number of times in the Bible, always with that sense. A "remnant of the woman's seed" must be the very last generation of the true church of God on earth, the very same people that the third angel's message develops. The same distinguishing characteristic identifies both — they "keep the commandments of God." They are the same people. To keep these commandments, all of them must be kept; the fourth commandment as well as the other nine.

One other feature must be noticed. They have "the testimony of Jesus Christ." Let the Word define what the testimony of Jesus Christ is: "For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Rev. 19:10. Let us put the definition of the term in the place of the term itself. This will always give the true meaning. "And the dragon [Satan] was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the spirit of prophecy." Such, in effect, is the statement concerning the last of the true church on earth, the "remnant" of the true people of God.

As the spirit of prophecy is the leading, crowning gift of those gifts Christ bestowed upon his church when he left them to ascend to his Father, we are authorized by this scripture to expect that the church of Christ in the last generation, composed of those living when he comes, will be characterized by special manifestations of that gift which he placed in his church on earth. Why not? In every great crisis of God's cause he has manifested his special power to help his people. In the Egyptian exodus what mighty spiritual evidences God gave of his presence and power! In every important crisis in the history of that people God raised up persons, and clothed them with spiritual power to perform mighty works. In every step of that people's progress God's power was manifest. He warned them faithfully through his servants the prophets. After the captivity in Babylon, Ezra, Nehemiah, and other prophets had his special help and guidance. After a long interim from Malachi onward till Christ was about to come, these manifestations seemed to cease. But what an outpouring of the Spirit was manifest in connection with the first advent! That was called the "former rain," watering the gospel seed. But before Christ's coming the second time, there is

My Prayer

PEARL HEFTY

Blessed Saviour, hear my pleading!
  Broken-hearted, now I cry;
Be my helper, strong exceeding,
  Ever watchful, ever nigh.

Jesus, help me bear my crosses
  Meekly, as thou didst bear thine;
Help me not to feel earth's losses,
  Since thy loving heart is mine.

When the path seems dark and lonely,
  And the way I can not see,
May I, looking to thee only,
  Jesus, safely walk with thee.

Words of Instruction to Workers

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Representations have been made to me that show how greatly our physicians and ministers and teachers need a development of Christian character, that they may properly represent the love of God to a fallen world. They are to speak the word of God from hearts melted in tenderness. In the large assemblies there are those who will be reached by words that tell of God's pardoning mercy and his matchless love; and these, in turn, will be the means of enlightening others in regard to the love of God. The Lord rejoices over the one repenting soul; he alone can measure the influence for good that one soul can be in drawing others to the foot of the cross. If the workers' labors are prompted by devotion to God and a desire to see souls saved in his kingdom, the Lord will impress them with words to speak that will represent his grace and love; and through the aid of the Holy Spirit souls will be convicted and converted. Their words will inspire faith and hope in the heart, and large numbers will be blessed with the light of truth, and be led to rejoice in the mercy and love of God.

Christ consented to suffer much in order to save souls. Should we not manifest patience and gentleness and long-suffering in dealing with the perishing? The words were spoken, "Love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous: not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing."

We must expect to meet all classes of minds. And when we are falsely spoken of, let us remember that the Prince of life passed through the same experience. Let ministers, physicians, and teachers take a straightforward course, "having your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, whereas they speak against you as evil-doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation."

And we are to be faithful in reproving wrong-doing. This God requires of every one of his laborers. Pure and unadulterated trust will always meet the elements of unsanctified profession. There will always be those who claim to be doing God service, but who are serving him not. Those who are blinded by erroneous opinions are to be treated with gentleness, yet labored for faithfully that their minds may be undeceived. Saving truth must be repeated over and over again. If these deceived souls can be convinced of their errors and converted, what rejoicing there will be in the heavenly courts!

Those who minister the word of God to the people are to remember that they are dealing with souls for whom Christ has died, and that they must meet the record of any unfaithfulness in the judgment. It is not merciful or just to allow a course of deception to be practised upon human minds. Satan will surely use erroneous theories to deceive and confuse minds, and we can not pass by these errors and be guiltless before God. Patiently, and in a spirit of meekness and gentleness, yet with a firmness that can not be misinterpreted, we are to reprove wrong, and to teach professed believers to adorn the doctrine of Christ our Saviour.

The work of the Lord is to be carried forward intelligently. Clear, well-defined plans must be laid for the extension of the message. Workers are needed who will reveal the spirit and mind of Christ, men who are consecrated to God, body, soul, and spirit, and who will carry out his will in meekness and humility, respecting the counsels given by his Spirit. Let every man stand in his lot and place, looking to Christ as his guide and counselor, and yoking up with his brethren in service for the Master. Christ will instruct those who manifest a teachable spirit.

We are engaged in an important and an essential work, and we must carry on an aggressive warfare. We are to stand for true Protestant principles; for the policies of the papacy will edge their way into every possible place to proscribe liberty of conscience. Every eye should now be single to the glory of God.

Those who have been seeking to undermine the confidence of our people in the testimonies of the Spirit of God, and in the leadings of Providence in our work, will one day be revealed as having acted a part similar to that of Judas. Judas was tempted and tried, but not rising above these temptations, he lost ground, and finally went so far as to betray his Lord. Christ permitted Judas to go with the other disciples on their evangelistic tours, but on these occasions, Judas often manifested a spirit of superiority. He sought to exercise authority over his brethren. This spirit, unchecked, opened the way for the enemy to work upon his heart and mind, until at length he went so far as to betray his Saviour with a treacherous kiss. There are to-day, among the professed people of God, some who are walking in the same path; and unless they are converted, they will one day be numbered with the open enemies of God's work for this time.

My brethren, withhold not the testing truths that should come to every soul at this time, and which must be practised by those who would find acceptance with God. We are to let the word of God come to every appointed agency, for there is a crisis before the people of God. Labor that souls may receive that word of truth that refines and sanctifies the soul, finding delight in the truth because Christ is identified with truth.

Study the Master's methods of labor and teaching. All his illustrations were so simple that even the lowliest could understand the truths they symbolized. It is said of his instruction, "The common people heard him gladly." So today he would have ministers and teachers use words that all, even the most ignorant, can understand. The Lord rejoices when simplicity marks the words and works of his ministers. Let his followers copy his example, and thus magnify his name.

The end of all things is at hand, and there is much important work to be done. The work at our camp-meetings should be conducted, not according to man's devising, but after the manner of Christ's working. The church-members should be drawn out to labor. The light is to be taken from under the bushel, that it may reach to the many who need it. God calls upon believers to obtain an experience in missionary work by branching out into new territory and working intelligently for the people in the byways. To those who will do this, openings for labor will come. Angels of God will direct in the opening of fields nigh and afar off, that the work of warning the world may be accomplished.

To every church the instruction is given to gather in the ignorant and those who need help. Our brethren and sisters need to go forth as the first disciples went, to the byways and the highways, teaching the message of truth. They need to become laborers in the Lord's vineyard. God's servants must not be idlers, but must work diligently to win souls. One soul saved is of more consequence than all the riches of the world. Let our church-members ask themselves the question, Do I improve my opportunities? What fruit am I bearing to the glory of God?

Why did the Saviour choose as his missionary field places which others did not discern as being of special advantage? Why did he labor to sow the seed in out-of-the-way places? Why did he travel slowly away from the villages where he had been communicating light and opening the Scriptures? There was a world to hear, and some souls would accept the truth who had not yet heard it.

My fellow workers, there is missionary work to be done in many unpromising places. The missionary spirit needs to take hold of our souls, inspiring us to reach classes for whom we had not planned to labor, and in ways and places that we had no idea of working. The Lord has his plan for the sowing of the gospel seed. In sowing according to his will we shall so multiply the seed sown that his word will reach thousands who have never heard the truth.

Opportunities are opening on every side; press into every providential opening. Eyes need to be anointed with the heavenly eye-salve to see and sense these opportunities. God calls now for wide-awake missionaries.

We need more of the love of Christ expressed in our lives for the souls perishing all around us. Christ looks upon these souls, not as they are in themselves, but as they may be if they will surrender themselves to him in sincerity, as did the thief on the cross. In the hour of his greatest suffering, Christ responded to the prayer of the penitent thief with the words, Verily I say unto thee to-day, Thou shalt be with me in paradise. The Son of God gave his life that he might uplift and ennoble all who would repent of their sins, accept his mercy, and trust in his power to save.

The Saviour in his labors had to deal with all classes of men, and all characters, and his life was the daily lesson book of those with whom he came in contact. Let us bear this in mind. The Lord is testing us individually; our motives are being held under close examination. As the truths of the Word are taught, let the evangelist and the physician remember that they have a part to act in bringing about the fulfilment of that word. If they will work in faith and humble dependence upon God, many will be led to accept the evidence of the word and to obey a "Thus saith the Lord."

Robbing God

G. B. THOMPSON

THE question is asked, "Will a man rob God?" Mal. 3:8. Hardly, one would think. Well might one shudder at the thought of a sin of such awful turpitude.

But the inspired seer continues, "Yet ye have robbed me." Then some are guilty at the bar of God of this great sin. In the presence of such an indictment by the Holy Spirit each will do well to inquire, like the disciples of old, "Lord, is it I?"

But, you say, I do not rob God, for I pay him an honest tithe. Very well, but we may do all this and still rob God. Withholding our tithe is not the only way by which we can rob the Lord. The Great Benefactor says some have robbed him in "tithes and offerings." We may pay a faithful tithe, and yet withhold offerings and in this way be guilty of the sin charged.

Are any doing this, you say? Well, in view of the shortness of time, and the vast import of the message with which we are entrusted, were all as liberal as they should be, we would certainly be able to raise a sum equal to ten cents a week a member. Do you not think so?

Reader, please look over your stuff, look over your farm, your store, your business, your bank account, and see if you have put all in the cause you should, or have withheld, and thus robbed the Lord. Look at this now, as you will when face to face with the record in the judgment.

Spiritual Gifts Designed for the Church in All Ages

GEORGE I. BUTLER

OUR last article brought us to the remnant church, the last division of the true church of the gospel dispensation. The inspired description of it is found in these words: "Which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." Rev. 12:17. "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Rev. 19:10. This church must be the one brought to view in the third angel's message: "Here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Rev. 14:12.

We are logically compelled to conclude that the true spiritual gifts with which Christ endowed his church will be manifested in the last true church on earth. Before discussing the question as to whether they have been actually so manifested in connection with the proclamation of the messages of the three angels, let us consider briefly the question of the perpetuity of the spiritual gifts which Christ placed in his church. The general opinion of the Protestant churches is that those gifts were designed for the apostolic church and were particularly confined to that period. Do the Scriptures teach the truthfulness of that view? Let us examine their testimony.

On the very night of the Saviour's arrest, in his last discourse previous to his crucifixion, he spoke these words: "If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter [Greek, Paraclete], that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." John 14:15-17.

Here is the direct promise of the Holy Spirit to be with his disciples in a measure and sense that it had never been with his believing people before. Behold the wonderful pentecost, when this promise began to be fulfilled in that special sense. "And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing, mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. . . . And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Acts 2:2-4. These one hundred twenty disciples gathered in that room, after ten days of humiliation of soul and confession of sin, were in a fit condition of mind and heart to receive this outpouring of "the former rain" of the Holy Spirit. In all of the four thousand years of previous history from creation till that point had there ever been a scene equal or like to it? It is not known that there was a single learned speaker of other tongues present. But in the large crowd which soon gathered were representatives of eighteen different nationalities. The Spirit of God present enabled these poor Galileans to speak the word of God in the languages which these visitors could readily comprehend. All these persons were greatly amazed. Nothing like it had ever been seen before.

Then Peter arose and distinctly declared this occasion to be a fulfilment of the prediction of an ancient prophet. He said: "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; . . . I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy." Joel 2:28; Acts 2:17, 18. As the result of Peter's brief discourse, three thousand souls were converted to God and baptized. This shows what can be done when the Spirit of God is powerfully present. What a contrast to many so-called "revivals" of the present age!

A prominent question worthy of consideration now confronts us. Was the outpouring of the Spirit on the day of pentecost a complete fulfilment of the Saviour's promise of sending them the Comforter? Or was it but the beginning of the fulfilment of that promise? Let the record decide: "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever." The Comforter was not merely for the one hundred twenty assembled on one day, but for his disciples forever. John 14:16. Peter's testimony is much to the point: "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts 2:39.

How then can Christians, with any reason, claim that the promise of the outpouring of the Spirit was only designed for the apostolic age? How can they cut out of that promise the children of the apostolic church, and those afar off? yea, and "even as many as the Lord our God shall call"? Is not the Lord calling any one in our age? If not, why are all churches making such efforts to call in the unconverted? Spiritual gifts are still for the church.

  Than the fountain by the way.

Better to be a little wise
  Than learnèd overmuch,
Better than high are lowly thoughts,
  For truthful thoughts are such.

Better to have a quiet grief
  Than a tumultuous joy;
Better than manhood age's face,
  If the heart be of a boy.

Better a death when work is done
  Than earth's most favored birth;
Better a child in God's great house,
  Than the king of all the earth.

An Appeal for Self-Sacrificing Effort

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE Lord claims the service of all who believe the truth for this time. They are to be laborers together with Christ in proclaiming the message of mercy to the world. God has committed to each talents to be used for his name's glory. The vineyard is the world. The soil to be cultivated is found in every city, in every village, in the highways and byways, in places near and afar off. Seed is to be sown in good works that will benefit those who have not had the light of present truth. The kind of ministry brought to view in the fifty-eighth chapter of Isaiah is to be faithfully done. Those who are arrayed in Christ's righteousness, the beautiful garments of truth, and whose lives are being sanctified by the truth, will go forth to labor for all classes with equal solicitude. They will not be bound about by bands of selfishness, but will regard all the world as the field.

"Let your light so shine before men," the Saviour declared, "that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." There is to be no limit to the places where the light should shine. It is to reach to the regions beyond. Tell it, urge upon all with earnest force, to give their service for those who are in the darkness of error. To teach the word of God to unbelievers, to unite our prayers for them, are duties that we owe to our Redeemer.

This is a time when every church and every family should be exercised unto godliness. I feel sad as I see men and women and youth spending time and energy in self-gratification. Selfishness is occupying much time that the Lord would have devoted to religious activities. I have been shown that the money that is lavishly spent by many believers for unnecessary things should be given to the work of winning souls that are ready to perish. It is time that our people felt the need of being laborers together with God. Self-denial and self-sacrifice are highly appropriate for this time. "We are laborers together with God," the Spirit through Paul declares. If unbelievers see in our works and lives devotion and self-sacrifice in order to save souls ready to perish, they will be impressed with the reality of the truths we profess. The truth that sanctifies the receiver will make its impression upon them.

This is a time when every soul needs to cling earnestly to God. Those whom the Lord is leading to do his last work in the earth are to stand as Micah and Zephaniah and Zechariah stood in their day, to call to repentance and good works. The writings of these prophets contain warnings and instruction applicable to this time, and should receive our careful study. They should teach us to shun every phase of evil that made such warnings essential to the people of the past. Let every soul arouse and make diligent examination of self, that everything that would separate the people of God from righteousness may be put away.

O that our people would arouse and put away all weakness of the flesh and spirit! It was for this that Christ wept and prayed. The heart of Infinite Love was stirred as he saw souls being snared and selling themselves for worldly gain. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth," he said, "where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness! No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye can not serve God and Mammon."

I have thought much of how little burden is carried by those who know the truth for those who know it not. Christ came to this world to call sinners, not the righteous, to repentance. Those who know the truths of the Word of God are not to hide their light in obscurity, but as faithful missionaries are to give the warning message to unbelieving neighbors and friends. They are to work as Christ has given them example. All who have a knowledge of the testing truths for this time should ask themselves the question, Am I giving the time and labor to the work of saving souls that Christ requires of his followers?

I would say to all our people, Place yourselves in the light, that you may reflect light, and that souls may be led to see the great and soul-saving truths of the Word of God. Every believer in Christ should be a laborer together with him in drawing souls from sin to righteousness. We are to keep in view the life that measures with the life of God. We are to watch for opportunities to bring the truths of the Word before those who do not see and understand. Christ is not now with us in person, but through the agency of the Holy Spirit, he is present to impart his power and grace and great salvation.

A review of our churches is being made by the One who says, "I know thy works." The need of the church to-day is true conversion, consecration, zeal, and whole-hearted service. These elements, brought into the life, will make church-members vessels unto honor, men and women through whom the Lord can communicate the teachings of his Spirit.

Another great need of the church is humility,— the deep humility of Christ. Believers need to see the necessity of working as Christ worked. O for that devotion and humility of heart that will lead God's people to do those things that Christ has commanded, and still in all humility and truth say, We are unprofitable servants; we have done only that which it was our duty to do! But many, many are swelling with pride and importance, who in God's estimation are lukewarm. Self-gratification is revealed because of a few things accomplished. Where do we hear the testimony of hearts that are broken in repentance and confession before God? Where do we see professed believers wearing the yoke of Christ? How little time is given to fervent prayer, the result of which would be the possession of a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price.

When the Captain of our salvation descended to earth, he brought with him the interests of all heaven. He advanced to Calvary with all the lovers of mercy and the friends of mankind in his train. I ask, Had angels of God taken the place of human agencies in the administering of the gospel, think you there would be whole regions to-day sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death? Were angels given power to revolutionize and prescribe the duties of the church, would they not say, "Go, stand and speak . . . to the people all the words of this life"? How can those who have been converted, be so indifferent? I call upon them in the name of the Lord, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

The Lord demands the cultivation of every talent. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." Our words, our prayers, our voluntary and sincere service, our humble, earnest efforts to represent precious, saving truth,— by all these we are to show our love for him who gave his life for us. O that our efforts to bless others might be in proportion to the light we have received! But we do not render to God returns that are proportionate to the wonderful truths we claim to believe.

My brethren and sisters who claim to believe the truth for this time, let the books of heaven record of you a righteous zeal; let it be said there, as God views your self-denying, self-sacrificing works, that you are laborers together with God. I speak to all, lay members as well as ministers: Be laborers together with God. Let humility be cultivated. Christ will be your efficiency if you will look unto him, the Author and Finisher of your faith.

Spiritual Gifts for the Church in All Ages

(Concluded)

GEORGE I. BUTLER

"And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." 1 Cor. 12:28.

The apostle has been teaching a lesson of unity in the church, likening it to the human body and its members. He sums his arguments up in these words: "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." Verse 27. Then come the words quoted above. The gifts of the Spirit are the agencies designed to bring about and maintain union in Christ's spiritual body; they, especially the spirit of prophecy, are absolutely essential for the accomplishment of that object. Human nature, unaided by the Holy Spirit, since the moral fall of man under Satan's temptations, is selfish, morally weak, given to pride and vainglory. It can not raise itself to holiness, love of God, and fitness for the life eternal. The body of believers in Christ is simply a company of human beings full of human infirmity. The Spirit of God with its heavenly agencies, placed in the church, will enable the church to rise above human infirmity, and be a unit, even as Christ and the Father are one. John 17. The apostolic church was thus a unit, and was a mighty power for good in this world of sin. The gospel, through the help of this divine influence, went in one generation to the ends of the earth. Rom. 10:18; Col. 1:23. But gradually the church backslid, and did not realize its need of this constant Helper; it began to absorb the spirit of the world, and became more and more like the world, by mixing heathen doctrines and practises with the pure doctrines which Christ and the apostles taught. Corruption was the sure result. The church was tainted with the doctrines of paganism. Many false doctrines were believed and advocated. Error seemed to hold well-nigh supreme control, and truth was at a discount. It might be classed as an axiom, a self-evident truth, that God's Spirit could no longer acknowledge such a church as his true representative on earth. Then there came the great Reformation of the sixteenth century. The Bible, and the Bible alone, was the motto of this great religious movement. Tradition was rejected. An excellent work was done, and God wrought mightily in behalf of his servants to bring the church back again to apostolic purity of doctrine and holy living. But soon the spirit of reformation lost its vitality. The great Protestant churches became converted by the influences which they opposed, and at the present time we see many so-called Protestant churches rejecting the Word of God and accepting modern traditions and theories. The doctrine of the Sunday Sabbath, the immortality of the soul, the conscious state of the dead, sprinkling instead of the true mode of baptism, and other beliefs which might be mentioned and which are still believed by Protestants, show that the Reformation failed in fully accomplishing the work that God designed it to do. And added to these evils are other great errors which are sapping the very foundations of Christian faith, such as the modern doctrine of evolution as taught in some of the great Christian universities and colleges.

It is time now in the providence of God for a new movement to rise which will stanchly stand for the Word of God as a basis of Christian faith, and reject all fellowship with these disintegrating and infidel-making theories that are now revolutionizing the great religious world. It is a time to cry aloud and spare not, to lift up our voices like a trumpet, and show God's people their transgressions and the house of Israel their sins, as the prophet of old declared. Isa. 58:1. This is the last great religious movement of God's people in our world, proclaiming the coming of the Son of man the second time without sin-offering unto salvation.

Can such a movement be carried on successfully without those spiritual gifts God "set" in his church? We see no possible hope that it could be. Every evidence of God's dealings in the past with his people in important crises in the earth demonstrates that the presence of the special gifts of the Spirit were essential to the accomplishment of his work.

In Noah's time, when the world was to be warned of the coming deluge, God had inspired Noah as a preacher of righteousness to understand his will about the flood and warn all who would listen. When the great mass of mankind again had gone into idolatry, he raised up Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and commenced an important work with them, which accomplished vast results in preserving the knowledge of God in the world. All of these were inspired men of God.

After a long captivity in Egypt, and such a wonderful schooling in sorrow that they felt a great need of help from God, the time came for their deliverance. Moses and Aaron were raised up, and a wonderful work of miraculous power was manifested. God's servants had special spiritual gifts imparted to them, or nothing could have been done for the deliverance of that people. It was a great era in the history of God's work in the world, and a wonderful record concerning it has been left for the world's perusal.

So it has ever been. Samuel was a mighty prophet. The era of David and Solomon was the most glorious in the history of Israel. Spiritual gifts and power were most manifest. It was so in every important crises. In the return of the captivity, Ezra, Nehemiah, and other prophets were spiritually endowed to enable them to do their work successfully.

What a remarkable display of spiritual agencies was manifested at Christ's first advent. It far exceeded any previous movement. The Son of God came down and was incarnated among men. His apostles were inspired, and the world was wonderfully blessed by these agencies.

And now after ages of backsliding, apostasy, false doctrine, and perversions of God's truth, we have come down to the very last days of this world's history. The cry has gone forth, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh!" Some thirteen lines of prophecy all center here at this time, and are fulfilled before our eyes. The Lord is coming in this generation. We are in the very closing of the time of the end. The message is sounding to the ends of the earth, solemnly announcing the rapid approach of the greatest event of all the ages. The Lord of glory is about to come as a triumphant conqueror, to put down forever all rebellion in God's universe, and gather every true believer into the mansions of glory. Will any person in his senses, in view of such an event, suppose for a moment that there will be no spiritual gifts in connection with it, no manifestation of spiritual agencies out of the ordinary routine of Christian work? Such a conclusion would be preposterous. It would be in direct contradiction of Christ's words to the revelator, when speaking to him of the remnant of God's church, the last church of this world's history, which has the testimony of Jesus Christ, defined to be the spirit of prophecy.

Six of the Seven Last Plagues

PERCY T. MAGAN

Last week we spoke of some general features relative to the seven last plagues. This week we desire to present six of these plagues; viz., the first five and the seventh, and to notice especially one striking feature prominent in all of them.

The opening verse of the sixteenth chapter of Revelation relates the commission which is given to the angels hav-

In the dawning, O my Saviour!
I shall see thee face to face,—
Thou in thy transcendent beauty,—
And behold thy matchless grace,
When with host angelic winging
Earthward their majestic flight,
Thou descendest, mid the singing
Of heaven's choir of angels bright.

In the dawning, O my Saviour!
First of all thy face I'll greet,
Clasp in mine thy hands once bruisèd,
Kneel and kiss the nail-pierced feet.
Haste the dawning, O my Saviour!
We have waited for thee long,
Haste the time when thy redeemed shall
Sing the great redemption song.

Haste the dawning, O my Saviour!
Speed thy coming, O my King!
When throughout the endless ages
Thy dear praises we shall sing;
When through golden fields of Eden,
With our loved ones we shall roam;
No more weeping, no more parting,
But forever "home, sweet home."

Day is dawning, O my Saviour!
Light is breaking through the gloom,
Soon the coming of the morning
That shall open wide the tomb;
Soon the sound of thy dear footsteps
Through the heaven-illumined sky;
Soon — ah, soon — the glad ascension
To our glorious home on high!

"That They All May Be One"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The Lord has given me a special message for the churches that claim to believe the truth for these last days, and especially for those who carry responsibilities in connection with our school and sanitarium enterprises for the education and training of the youth for the work of God.

Those who hold positions of trust in the work of God are in need of constantly seeking the Lord; for there is a great missionary work to be accomplished. It is a work similar to that of the one whom the prophet Isaiah describes as "the voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain: and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

All who profess to believe the truth for this time need to make the Word of God their constant study; its principles are to be brought into the life experience. As a people we need to understand that the time has come when all differences should be acknowledged and put away, when everything that is not in accordance with the Word of God should be taken out of the life. Probation is soon to close, and God's people need to humble their hearts before him, seeking him with humility of mind for grace to perfect a righteous character.

Disunion among professed believers is a great dishonor to the cause of Christ; but in unity there is convincing proof of what the word of the Lord will accomplish for those who humble themselves before him and seek him in earnest prayer. Believers in Christ are not to see how far apart they can draw, but they are to draw together in the bonds of love and faith. A united communion with God on the part of his church is something that is greatly needed at this time.

Christ's Prayer for Unity Among His Followers

If we would study the prayer of Christ recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John, we would understand what a grievous mistake we make when we introduce into the church those things that create division and strife. Christ prayed that his followers might be one with him as he was one with the Father. He desired that they themselves should pray earnestly to become one in faith and understanding of his Word. The closeness of the relation that he would have exist between himself and his people is brought to view in the words, "All mine are thine, and thine are mine; and I am glorified in them."

One of Christ's last works for his disciples before his betrayal and crucifixion was to commit them to the keeping of his Father, and to pray that the spirit of unity and love might be always manifest in them. "I am no more in the world," he prayed, "but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me that they may be one, as we are. While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled. And now come I to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves. I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth."

There is no genuine sanctification except through the truth. Everything depends upon our sacredly cherishing and advocating the truth we hold. Those who are saved through faith in Christ will exert a saving influence upon others. And wonderful will be the results of the influence of those whose words and works express their faith in Christ. Their lives will be made a convincing power in the great work that Christ came to the world to do. Their unity and love will convince men and women that God has sent his Son into the world with saving grace for all mankind.

"As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world," Christ continued. "And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

Here we see the need of faith leading to harmonious action. A spirit of harmony and love in labor is to give evidence of our faith in Christ. This unity of sentiment and works is not revealed among Christ's followers to-day as he desires it should be; and because of this, objections to our faith are raised by some. The presence of the Holy Spirit with any people will lead them to speak the same thing and to work the will and works of Christ. This is the most convincing of all arguments.

"The glory which thou gavest me," Christ declared, "I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

"Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world. O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee: but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me. And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them."

Let those who are ready to differ and to separate into factions, consider the teachings of this prayer. When as a people we see the necessity of maintaining a sacred unity among ourselves, remarkable changes will take place in the hearts and lives of some who are now eagerly striving for the supremacy. Every verse in this chapter contains instruction of the highest and most essential kind,— instruction that every church should have. If there are higher attainments to be reached than are here brought to view, where shall we learn about them? where are they to be found? Christ presents eternal principles for our study that we may answer his prayer in our own experience. O that these teachings might be brought more fully into the religious life of our people, and its refining, purifying, unselfish principles be truly appreciated!

WORTHIE HARRIS HOLDEN

Across the hills the evening shadows lengthen,
And night draws on — the night of all the earth;
The while above a quiet peace seems brooding,
The air is rife with revelry and mirth.

We, children of the day, behold the token —
A sign our long-expected Lord is nigh!
At midnight will we see the Bridegroom coming,
In majesty descending from on high.

Let not vain pleasure for a moment beckon
Thy weary soul to seek an hour's repose;
O listen not to foolish comrades pleading,
Nor e'en permit thy sleepy eyes to close.

Far from the din of earth-joys and amusements
Seek an anointing, wrestling in prayer,
Nor let Him go until he grants his blessing,
Changing thy name to that of conqueror there.

Ne'er wilt thou, even for a moment, reckon
Earth's sacrifice too great for heaven's store,
When thou shalt meet thy King, with lamp well burning,
And "enter in" to joys forevermore.

Truth a Sanctifying Power

"For their sakes I sanctify myself," Christ said, "that they also might be sanctified through the truth."

No error can sanctify the soul; we must bear this in mind. Sanctification comes not through error, but through belief of the truth. We need to possess a faith that is based upon the sure word of promise.

The Word of God specifies the quality of the faith that will distinguish between the sacred and the common, and will render the life well-pleasing to him who has purchased the powers of our being by the redemption price of his blood. All men have a certain kind of faith; but it is that faith which works by love that purifies the soul. This faith cleanses the life from all self-serving, from all acquiescence to man's arbitrary exactions. It is a genuine faith that is revealed in the spirit, in the speech, and in the actions. In the life of the one who possesses such a faith as this the will of Christ will be daily carried out.

The soul who really believes the truth will carry out in his life the principles revealed in the life of Christ. Of Enoch it is written that his ways pleased God; and without faith it is impossible to please God. Not a thread of coarseness or selfishness was woven into the web that this servant of God was weaving in his daily life. And of him we read, "Enoch walked with God . . . three hundred years; . . . and he was not; for God took him."

The Lord's measure of correct character is given in the words of the prophet Micah: "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" There are men who may be represented as doing justly and loving mercy, but who have not the true principle within them, the faith that will lead them to walk humbly with the Lord. They may seem to have every specification needed but that of sanctified faith, but lacking this, they lack all. The life is not sanctified, and without this sanctification of motive and purpose, it is impossible to please God. God has given men and women affections and intellect that they may appreciate the character of God as it was revealed in the earthly life of Christ, and through faith in Christ reveal the same attributes. Christ is to be manifest in the life of every true believer. Each is to prove in his life his right to the claim he makes for citizenship in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

The Sacrifice of Christ

I am instructed to keep before our people the need of having high, pure motives and sanctified purposes. The church of Christ on earth is to represent Christ's character and work. The aim of Christ's life was to receive of the Father, that he might give, in precept and in unselfish service, that which would save men and women from sinning, and turn the rebellious into paths of righteousness. "For their sakes I sanctify myself," he said, "that they also might be sanctified through the truth." He stood before the human race as the representative of the Father. He devoted all the powers of his being to the work of redemption. For this he withdrew from the glories of heaven, and set his feet in the path of humiliation and trial. He humbled himself that he might uplift mankind. As he took up his earthly work and saw the duties and the trials that confronted him, he did not fail nor become discouraged. His great desire was to establish the cross between divinity and humanity, that man might be reconciled to God.

The question was put to Christ at one time, If your doctrine is true, if you are, as you claim, the Son of God, why do you come to the world like this? Why do you subject yourself to humility and privation? Had it been possible for men to be redeemed with a smaller sacrifice than was made, the Son of God would not have taken the guilt of the transgressor upon his sinless soul. But the spotless Son of God was the only offering that would atone; none but his life would suffice to save the sinner from ruin.

Christ was sent from heaven with the gift of eternal life for all who would receive it. The message he brought was true; but it cost the life of him who gave it. "I am come," the Saviour said, "that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Never was there such depth of meaning in any words as in those of the Saviour as he stood before the world, with the cross in view, and said, "I am come;" "he that sent me is true."

The power and authority of God are supreme, and he is true. He gives, to all who accept Christ, power to live the truth under the most trying circumstances. Those who have broken his law are sinners; but he says to them, I gave my only begotten Son to die for sinners. He bore the penalty of the sins of the world. He is sufficient for your redemption. If you will plant your feet upon the platform of obedience; if you will repent and accept the merits of the Son of God, you may have hope of eternal life. The soul who will take God at his word, and obey his law, may live. To such the assurance is given, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

The science of overcoming as Christ overcame is the science of salvation. If we will unite with Christ in the work of developing Christian character, if we will maintain unwavering faith in God and in the truths of his Word, we shall be given strength to overcome every evil thing in the life. But there are some to whom Christ says to-day, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life,"— eternal life which my Father will give to all who believe. "I am the way, the truth, and the life," he pleads; "come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Christ is grieved to-day at the manifestation of unchristlike spirit and unchristlike actions among his professed followers. Many who bear his name are bringing reproach upon his cause by their unchristian words and deportment. I am instructed to say to our people, Guard your words and actions. Let every messenger of the Lord comprehend the truth as it is in Jesus, that he may become a laborer together with God. It is the power of God, and that alone, that can soften and subdue our hearts, and expel the worldliness and pride that exist among us.

The love of Christ for the human family led him to assume human nature, and to submit to every test that human beings must bear, that man might be brought into right relation to his Maker. Human beings had taken sides with the first great rebel, and the angels whom he had deceived. When Satan and his rebel host were defeated and cast out of heaven, they did not give up the struggle against right. Satan's work has been the same since the days of Adam to the present, and he has pursued it with great success, tempting men to distrust God's love and to doubt his wisdom. And in the great closing work of the rebellion the powers of evil will unite in a desperate struggle to work out their deceptive plans to lead souls to ruin. Ministers and physicians and men in positions of trust as lawmakers will unite in this work of rebellion. Thousands are already taking their place on the side of satanic agencies. Some of these wear a pretentious garb of righteousness, but it is the form of godliness without the power. Clear light has been permitted to shine upon all; but when Satan's sophistries are heeded, when men and women reject light and evidence, gradually they become converted to the theories that Satan offers. Too late, too late they will see that angels of God are in the warfare against all who have departed from the faith.

(1) [In the night season I seemed to be enumerating in my mind the evidences we have to substantiate the faith we hold. We see that seducers are waxing worse and worse. We see the world working to the point of establishing by law a false sabbath, and making it a test for all. This question will soon be before us. God's Sabbath will be trampled under foot, and a false sabbath will be exalted. In a Sunday law there is possibility for great suffering to those who observe the seventh day. The working out of Satan's plans will bring persecution to the people of God. But the faithful servants of God need not fear the outcome of the conflict. If they will follow the pattern set for them in the life of Christ, if they will be true to the requirements of God, their reward will be eternal life, a life that measures with the life of God.

At this time a very decided work in character building should be going forward among our people. We are to develop before the world the characteristics of the Saviour. It is impossible to please God without the exercise of genuine, sanctifying faith. We are individually responsible for our faith. True faith is not a faith that will fail under test and trial; it is the gift of God to his people.] We are to experience a true conversion; we are to study earnestly and prayerfully the example of Christ. God is waiting to bestow wonderful endowments upon his church if they will seek him with the whole heart in unity of spirit.

Brethren and sisters, let us study carefully the prayer of Christ. Let us seek to experience the oneness in faith and works for which he prayed. The Fatherhood of God is given to us in the gift of Jesus Christ; and as God was one with his only begotten Son, so he would have his earthly children one with him. Faith in Christ will help us to overcome all weakness of the flesh. It is our privilege through faith in our Redeemer to become sanctified, holy, cleansed from all sin in this life, and in that life that measures with the life of God to be partakers in the joys of the redeemed.

The Appalling Price of an Armed Truce

G. B. THOMPSON

UNDER the above heading the Christian Endeavor World of July 15 contains the following in its editorial page, concerning the tremendous increase in war preparations being made by the United States: —

"Burns sang, 'Facts are chiels that winna ding.' If he were alive to-day, he would no longer sing; he would weep over some of the facts that confront us, and that we are passing on as a legacy to our children.

"Twenty years ago the United States navy cost twenty-two million dollars a year. This year the cost is one hundred thirty-five million dollars. The population has increased thirty-five per cent, while the naval expenditures have advanced six hundred per cent. Edward Everett Hale wrote not very long ago: 'Think of it! I heard Sumner's peace oration in 1845. He amazed people by saying that the ship of the line, "Ohio," then new, cost eight hundred thousand dollars, and that was more than all the gifts made to Harvard College in two hundred years. Now we propose to spend twenty million dollars on one ship!'

"We are spending seventy-two per cent of the income of the government for purposes of war, past and present, and only twenty-eight per cent for peaceful government. The combined cost of army and navy from July 1, 1908, to April 30, 1909, that is, for ten months, was $206,483,937.37. We throw more than three hundred million dollars into the yawning maw of the war-god every year, and his appetite is increasing. The nations of the world are verily seized with insanity, lashed into madness by hysterical fear of what the other nations are going to do.

"Nobody has any idea where it will all end. That the present rate of increase can not go on is evident, yet no nation will begin to retrench. We are treated to the amazing spectacle of a world governed by fear and jealousy and greed, and this condition, which seems to us so natural, is plunging us into a debt that is growing positively appalling. While thousands of families are starving, and millions of workmen can not find employment, we are emptying our bags of gold into this war abyss which always claims more. The high angels must weep over the superlative folly of the statesmen and the kings of the earth."

When this terrible strain of the nations to keep their war equipment up to the highest standard will end no one knows. A recent despatch says that Japan has decided to build a monster war-ship of thirty-six thousand tons. The Christian Herald of August 25 takes from the Michigan Christian Advocate the following statement of Bishop Mallalieu concerning the "Dreadnaught" discussion, which is much to the point: —

"It costs about fifteen hundred dollars every time a twelve-inch gun is fired. This, of course, includes the wear and tear of the gun. But fifteen hundred dollars would build a neat cottage for a laboring man. It would support two first-rate female teachers. It would support a minister of the gospel of peace in heathen lands for a whole year. Then it costs ten million dollars of good money to build one of those horrible 'Dreadnaughts;' and one million dollars per annum to keep one of them afloat, and in ten years or less the ship that costs all this goes to the junk-heap. But what could be wrought with the twenty million dollars thus spent on one engine of war in the brief space of ten years? A thousand churches could be built, each costing twenty thousand dollars; or two thousand schoolhouses could be built, each costing ten thousand dollars; or twenty thousand school-teachers, good men and college graduates, could be employed at a salary of one thousand dollars; or five thousand farms could be bought, paying four thousand dollars for each one of them; or forty thousand young men or women could be kept in college for a whole year, allowing each one of them five hundred dollars. . . . More than fourteen million have lost their lives in the wars of the nineteenth century, and, sad to say, most of these have been slain within the bounds of Christendom."

All this war preparation is made in view of an inevitable conflict which statesmen foresee. Just when or how the match will be applied to the great war magazine of the world which will result in an international explosion no one can exactly foretell. But this dreadful day is surely hastening on. The heathen nations are waking up. Plowshares are being beaten into swords. War is absorbing agriculture. Mr. B. F. Yoaman, the well-known railroad man, in addressing a farmers' union in Oklahoma recently, said: —

"We would better spend more of the money we burn up in powder in making new farms. A forty-acre farm of irrigated land will comfortably support a family of five. It costs fifty-five thousand dollars to make a twelve-inch gun. The money that goes to pay for this gun would reclaim fifteen hundred seventy-one acres of land, providing homes for one hundred ninety-six persons. When all the guns on all the battle-ships are shot at one time, the government blows off in noise and smoke one hundred fifty thousand dollars. This would reclaim more than four thousand acres of land, giving homes to more than five hundred farmers and their families."

These are stirring words. And what is true of this nation is equally true of all the great nations of the world. What will the end be? Simply this: Armageddon. The nations are preparing for a terrible conflict which they see is coming; and the armed truce can not much longer continue. Diplomacy may avert the catastrophe for a little time, but erelong the whirlwind will break loose. When all the flower of manhood, now training in all the world, and equipped with the best implements of destruction the inventive genius of man can construct, meet on the field of com-

Love and Hope

L. D. SANTEE

The love of my Saviour prevents me
From sharing the sins of the world;
But a glorious prospect contents me,
Where the banners of peace are unfurled.

For my heaviest loss it requites me,
That prospect of heaven and home.
From the cross, 'tis the crown that invites me,
To be given when Jesus shall come.

O that "home of the soul"! with emotion
I dream of its bright jasper walls,
With a loving and loyal devotion,
Of the Saviour who patiently calls.

And now, in my chamber, while kneeling,
What hopes are enshrined in my heart;
What visions of beauty are stealing,
Of the country where friends never part!

I'm free from the world, I can never
Engage in its sin and its wrong;
For Christ has redeemed me forever,
His love is the theme of my song.

Sanctified Service

MRS. E. G. WHITE

When Christ gives to any of his followers a place in his service, he expects that they shall not only learn how to work intelligently, but that they shall labor in his spirit of consecration and submission to the will and ways of God. No worker is to bring into his labors ungoverned, unsanctified traits of character; for Christ can not co-operate with unconsecrated human beings; he can not use unsanctified human talents. He who has not learned to be a laborer together with God is to search the Word diligently that he may learn God's perfect will concerning him. "The flesh profiteth nothing," Christ declared, "the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."

The Lord will work for his people if they will work for him in his way, and not according to the ways of unsanctified hearts. The diligent, humble worker, seeking by earnest prayer and study of the truth as it is in Jesus, will most assuredly be regarded. He seeks for help, not from the ideas of human writers, but from the very fountain of wisdom and knowledge; and the Holy Spirit fulfils his office work to empty the golden oil into the golden bowls, that the lamps may send forth clear, perfect light, bringing to the understanding of others the purposes of God.

Those who work for God need a daily supply of divine power. They need to be filled with a determined purpose to run in the way of God's commandments. As little children, they must come in humility and meekness to the feet of Jesus, and learn of him how to promote the glory of God by working for the salvation of their fellow men.

God would have his ministering servants come up to the standard which in their sermons they set for others. The principles of self-sacrifice which they lay down for others, they should exemplify in their own lives. The Spirit of God can enable them to reach this perfection of character. It is possible for all who believe in Christ to reveal in their lives the grace of humility, of liberality, of self-denial and self-sacrifice. Christ is our example in all things. He laid aside the glory that he had with the Father, that he might live on earth the life of a poor man, and reveal to all classes of society, rich and poor alike, the principles of the kingdom of heaven. His perfect life, in which were so fully revealed the attributes of mercy and compassion, enabled him to say to men and women, "Be ye therefore merciful;" "Do good unto all men;" "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

There is no defect in God's plan for the salvation of men. If the gospel is not to every soul the power of God unto salvation, it is not because the gospel is at fault, but because men are not practical believers, practical receivers of the grace and righteousness of Christ. It is because professing believers do not take Christ as their personal Saviour, but follow Jesus a long way off.

The Holy Spirit through the apostle Paul declares, "He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." Since the ministry of the word is the appointed agency for the perfecting of the saints, is there not a deficiency in the ministry which will in some way explain the deficiency in our churches? Have believers been educated in the vital principles of practical religion? or has this work been neglected because the one who ministered the word was not himself maintaining a living connection with God?

The direct teachings of the Word of God must be brought to bear on the practical life, and no minister should feel satisfied unless fruit is seen as the result of his personal labor. Eloquent sermons will seldom do the work of breaking up long-established habits of selfishness, and leading the church to a deep Christian experience. The true servant of God will be in earnest. He will manifest humility of soul, and will labor untiringly for the church of God. He will reveal the attributes of the faithful shepherd, and will tenderly care for the sheep of the Lord's pasture. He will "be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die."

A true shepherd of souls will care for the sheep and lambs of his flock; and the love of Christ, filling his own heart, will flow through him to them. He will guard them carefully. His tender love for his charge has been presented in a picture I have seen representing Christ, the true Shepherd. The shepherd is leading the way, while the flock follow closely behind. Carried in his arms, and enfolded in his robe, is a helpless lamb, while its mother walks trustingly by his side.

The prophet Isaiah, speaking of the work of the true Shepherd, says, "He shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom." The lambs need more than daily food. They look to the shepherd for protection. They need watchcare. The one that goes astray must be faithfully searched for until it is found and restored to the fold. The figure is a beautiful one, and well represents the faithful, loving service that the under-shepherd of the flock of Christ is to give to those under his protection and care.

My ministering brethren, arouse the people,— those who know not the present truth, those who are strangers to the blessings of the gospel, and those who are neglecting their work for God. God is waiting to give to men and women the riches of his grace, that truth may become to them a sure refuge in time of trial and need. "Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God? Then will the Lord be jealous for his land, and pity his people. . . . Behold, I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith: and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen."

All the congregations in our land need to learn more of Christ and him crucified. A religious experience that is not founded on Christ, and him alone, is worthless. Let the truth, in its simplicity and power, be presented to them. This will hold the attention and arouse the interest, and lead the mind to heavenly and divine things. In every congregation there are souls who are unsatisfied. Every Sabbath they should hear something that will help them in the way of salvation and teach them how to become better Christians. The important thing for them to know is, How can a sinner be justified before God? Let the way of salvation be presented before them in simplicity. Lift up Jesus as the sinner's only hope.

Let the one to whom God gives success in his work, keep on the garments of humility and contrition, if he desires to remain of value in the sight of heaven. Whether he be a successful evangelist, a gifted teacher, a clear writer, let him also be a man of faith, a man of prayer; let him never place human merit where God's honor should be. Only those who are cleansed from all self-exaltation can become complete in Christ. While the workers keep their eyes fixed on Christ, they are safe. When they lose sight of him, they are in the greatest danger.

The spirit of wisdom that dwelt in the early disciples was the secret of their success. And Paul declared, "Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to naught: but we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory."

Jesus is the fountain of all wisdom. Those who connect with him receive their counsel from a divine source. And it is only such as have "the wisdom that is from above" who can "walk in wisdom toward them that are without." If we keep the glory of God ever in view, our eyes will be anointed with the heavenly eye-salve, and we shall be able to see deeper, and to behold afar off what the world is. As we discern its dishonesty, its craftiness, its selfishness, its eye-service, its pretense and boasting and grasping covetousness, we are to take our stand to represent the cause of truth by a revelation of sound principles, a firm integrity, and a holy boldness in acknowledging Christ.

The End of All Things Is at Hand

FLORENCE LLOYD EVANS

THE "time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation," is at hand. The earth is laying aside her usual quiet habits, and is participating in a general unrest. Cyclones and hurricanes, earthquakes and tidal waves, are no longer unusual things, neither are they confined to a few localities, but are becoming much more frequent, and are often felt in places where the reeling "to and fro" of the earth was never before known.

Any one who is candid with himself must admit, in the moment of his soberest reflection, that the world is in a terrible condition. Never before have the nations made such gigantic preparation for war as at the present time. To-day there is not a single nation that is not straining every resource to increase its fortifications, armies, and navies.

We are confronted with a social problem that increases in difficulty with every new day. Oppression of the lowly and unfortunate — the amassing of money out of the miseries of life — is one of the noteworthy abuses. The great concentration of wealth, whether it be in corporate trusts or by individuals, has reached a point dangerous to the future prosperity of the nation. In every strike it may be seen that "violence" is becoming more pronounced. We can easily recognize that the greatest evil of any civilized age is confronting us.

Society to-day is a school that is filling the world with criminals. The world is driving headlong unto the time when every imagination will be only evil continually, as in the days of Noah; when the corrupting vice of Sodom, as in the days of Lot, will break out as a debasing plague.

Though this violence has not as yet broken out with all its malignant powers, nevertheless the seeds of the evil are rapidly growing into a prolific harvest. Stability of governments is no longer a fact. Change is in the atmosphere. There is dissatisfaction everywhere. Statesmen are at their wits' end, and philosophers speculate in vain.

New diseases are constantly breaking out upon man and beast. Even the tiller of the sod is painfully aware of the fact that it is becoming more and more difficult to raise a crop. The outlook before the world to-day is filling men with fear and perplexity. What does all this mean?

Jesus gives a vivid description of the conditions that will prevail on the earth near the close of time. He foretells the time of trouble, the last-day perils, and the distress of nations: "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21:25, 26.

Looking down to the end of time, the prophet beheld the angry nations. He heard the piteous cry of the laboring man oppressed by those who are heaping to themselves treasures for the last days, and he saw the injustice, crime, and violence that fill our land. Who can doubt the fulfilment of prophecy? Will God allow sin to reach to the heights of folly, plunging men to the lowest depths of wickedness, and do nothing to expose the danger, and to rescue those whom he gave his only begotten Son to save? — No, never! "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, . . . and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Rev. 1:7. "And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Rev. 6:14-17.

But to those who have heeded the admonition of the Father in heaven, it will be the gladsome day of all ages. With exultant joy God's people will shout, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us." The Lord is coming soon to destroy all evil, and if wickedness is still found in our hearts, we shall perish with our sins. But just now he is inviting us to come to him. The same Jesus that hung on the cruel cross on Calvary is pleading for us. Let us not crucify him again, but accept him while mercy pleads, that we may greet him with rejoicing when he shall come. Who will heed his warning? Is it possible for any to spurn so devoted and faithful a friend? "To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

Turkey the Flash-Point

PERCY T. MAGAN

IN the last issue of the REVIEW, under the title "The Great Sign Plague," it was made clear from the Word of God that the sixth in order of the seven last plagues is the only one that can be seen taking shape and coming into being. It was further established that this plague has to do with the operations of "the kings of the East," or, as the Revised Version reads, "the kings that come from the sunrising," and with "the kings of the earth and of the whole world," and that all of these are to be gathered to "the battle of that great day of God Almighty." And again it was made manifest that the lining up of the world powers for the final fray constituted God's great sign that human probation is about to close, that opportunity for salvation is soon to cease.

It is therefore all-important that every point in the Scripture bearing upon this plague be thoroughly and clearly understood. I quote again the story of this plague as it is in the Scripture: —

"And the sixth poured out his bowl upon the great river, the river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way might be made ready for the kings that come from the sunrising. And I saw coming out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet, three unclean spirits, as it were frogs: for they are spirits of devils, working signs; which go forth unto the kings of the whole world, to gather them together unto the war of the great day of God, the Almighty. (Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.) And they gathered them together into the place which is called in Hebrew Har-Magedon." Rev. 16:12-16, R. V.

Now notice that the closing scene in this plague is the "war of the great day of God," and that by means of the agency of unclean spirits, "the kings that come from the sunrising," and "the kings of the whole world," are gathered together for the battle of Armageddon. And notice again that the starting point of this entire drama, the opening scene in the plague, is laid around the river Euphrates,— is the drying up of the water of the great river Euphrates.

Whatever this is, it is the flash-point of the whole international situation. It is the thing which touches off the powder in the world-wide magazine. For it is when the water of the great river Euphrates is dried up that the way of the kings that come from the sunrising is made ready — made ready for them to do battle with "the kings of the whole world."

philosophy; for it is as old as the paganism of the ancients. The youngest convert, with a heart glowing with the love of God and the lamp of God shining upon his pathway, ought to be able to see that such a religion is no part of God's message to men. It is, by its own confession, wholly human in origin, and is therefore necessarily "of the earth, earthy." Such a religion can light the path of no sin-sick soul, give no comfort in trouble, offer no hope for a life beyond the grave; for all that comes to a ransomed soul in the life beyond must come from and through the supernatural, and "in the new religion there will be no supernatural element." Its basis of morals will be a human basis only, frail, imperfect, and always subject to change. A religion with no message of God in it has no place in this world, which needs God so much.

Catholic Federation

The American Federation of Catholic Societies was planned for a definite object. That object was to bring the united power of American Catholics to bear upon American politicians for the shaping of American legislation in harmony with the purposes of the Catholic Church. The federation is growing in numbers continually, and its purposes are being taken out of the mist of uncertainty and indecision, and focused upon definite objects. It is an organization that is to play a very important part in the history of this nation from now on.

Says the editor of America (a Roman Catholic journal), in speaking of the desirability of eliminating unimportant resolutions from the proceedings of the society: —

> It is desirable to agree upon a few very definite and practical points, and to turn the whole machinery of the organization upon their accomplishment. Other points might be mentioned and recommended in proportion to their importance, for such local branches of the federation as may deem them most necessary and feasible. We should then expect to find in the annual report submitted to the subsequent convention an account of the results effected in accordance with the resolutions.

We as Protestant Christians understand very well that one of the "definite and practical points" toward which this organization will work is the securing and enforcing of laws regarding the observance of Sunday. The organization has definitely committed itself to a policy of opposition to what it terms "Sabbath desecration," and the Catholic Church has signified its willingness to unite with the Protestant churches for the enforcement of Sunday laws. In view of this prospect, Sabbath-keeping Christians can not look with unconcern upon the declared purpose of this strong Catholic organization.

He Has Broken

MARY VALIANT NOWLIN

He has broken, and he will bind;
  He has bruised, and he will heal.
God's ways are hid from finite mind.
Still in his presence let me find
  All, all I need for my heart's weal.

I do not ask thy hand to stay —
  Break on, till every cord is riven
That clings to idols but of clay.
Break on, dear Christ, weep as I may:
  Take all the toys that earth has given.

O tender hand, O mystic touch,
  Strong as thy love, and full of peace,
Help lest I sorrow over much
If my heart's quick thy hand should touch,
  And cry unwittingly, Release!

O Christ of God, all that I ask,
  If every heart-string must be riven,
Stay not thy hand, nor quit thy task,
Till everything thou dost unmask,
  Till every cord is bound to heaven.

* The Work Before Us[1]

MRS. E. G. WHITE

There is a very great and important work for our conferences in America to do. We are to carry the work in America in such a way that we shall be a strength and help to those who are proclaiming the message in distant countries. Every nation, tongue, and people is to be aroused and brought to a knowledge of the truth. Something is being done, but there is much yet to be done, much to be learned right here at this Conference, in order that the work may go forward in a way that will honor and glorify God.

My soul has been so burdened that I have not been able to rest. What line can we dwell upon that will make the deepest impression upon the human mind? There are our schools. They are to be conducted in such a way that they will develop missionaries who will go out to the highways and hedges to sow the seeds of truth. This was the commission of Christ to his followers. They were to go to the highways and the byways bearing the message of truth to souls that would be brought to the faith of the gospel. I felt deeply in earnest as I saw how much needs to be done in the places I have recently visited. We must stand in the strength of God if we are to accomplish this work.

In his labors each worker is to look to God. We are to labor as men and women who have a living connection with God. We are to learn how to meet the people where they are. Let not such conditions exist as we found in some places when we returned to America, in which individual church-members, instead of realizing their responsibility, looked to men for guidance, and men to whom had been committed sacred and holy trusts in the carrying forward of the work, failed of understanding the value of personal responsibility and took upon themselves the work of ordering and dictating what their brethren should do or should not do. These are things that God will not allow in his work. He will put his burdens upon his burden-bearers. Every individual soul has a responsibility before God, and is not to be arbitrarily instructed by men as to what he shall do, what he shall say, and where he shall go. We are not to put confidence in the counsel of men and assent to all they shall say unless we have evidence that they are under the influence of the Spirit of God.

Study the first and second chapters of Acts. Light has been given me that our work must be carried forward in a higher and broader way than it has ever yet been carried. The light of heaven is to be appreciated and cherished. This light is for the laborers. It is for those who feel that God has given them a message, and that they have a sacred responsibility to bear in its proclamation.

The message of present truth is to prepare a people for the coming of the Lord. Let us understand this, and let those placed in responsible positions come into such unity that the work shall go forward solidly. Do not allow any man to come in as an arbitrary ruler, and say, You must go here, and you must not go there; you must do this, and you must not do that. We have a great and important work to do, and God would have us take hold of that work intelligently. The placing of men in positions of responsibility in the various conferences, does not make them gods. No one has sufficient wisdom to act without counsel. Men need to consult with their brethren, to counsel together, to pray together, and to plan together for the advancement of the work. Let laborers kneel down together, and pray to God, asking him to direct their course. There has been a great lack with us on this point. We have trusted too much to men's devisings. We can not afford to do this. Perilous times are upon us, and we must come to the place where we know that the Lord lives and rules, and that he dwells in the hearts of the children of men. We must have confidence in God.

Wherever you may be sent, cherish in your hearts and minds the fear and love of God. Go daily to the Lord for instruction and guidance; depend upon God for light and knowledge. Pray for this instruction and this light until you get it. It will not avail for you to ask, and then forget the thing for which you prayed. Keep your mind upon your prayer. You can do this while working with your hands. You can say, Lord, I believe; with all my heart I believe. Let the Holy Spirit's power come upon me.

[1] Sermon at the General Conference, May 19, 1909.

If there were more praying among us, more exercise of a living faith, and less dependence upon some one else to have an experience for us, we would be far in advance of where we are to-day in spiritual intelligence. What we need is a deep, individual heart and soul experience. Then we shall be able to tell what God is doing and how he is working. We need to have a living experience in the things of God; and we are not safe unless we have this. There are some who have a good experience, and they tell you about it; but when you come to weigh it up, you see that it is not a correct experience, for it is not in accordance with a plain Thus saith the Lord. If ever there was a time in our history when we needed to humble our individual souls before God, it is to-day. We need to come to God with faith in all that is promised in the Word, and then walk in all the light and power that God gives.

I felt very deeply when our brethren who have come from foreign fields told me a little of their experiences and of what the Lord is doing in bringing souls to the truth. This is what we want at this time. God does not want us to go on in ignorance. He wants us to understand our individual responsibilities to him. He will reveal himself to every soul who will come to him in all humility and seek him with the whole heart.

There are schools to be established in foreign countries and in our own country. We must learn from God how to manage these schools. They are not to be conducted as many of them have been conducted. Our institutions are to be regarded as God's instrumentalities for the furtherance of his work in the earth. We must look to God for guidance and wisdom; we must plead with him to teach us how to carry the work solidly. Let us recognize the Lord as our teacher and guide, and then we shall carry the work in correct lines. We need to stand as a united company who shall see eye to eye. Then we shall see the salvation of God revealed on the right hand and on the left. If we work in harmony, we give God a chance to work for us.

In all our school work we need to have a correct understanding of what the essential education is. Men talk much of higher education, but who can define what the higher education is? The highest education is found in the Word of the living God. That education which teaches us to submit our souls to God in all humility, and which enables us to take the Word of God and believe just what it says, is the education that is most needed. With this education we shall see of the salvation of God. With the Spirit of God upon us, we are to carry the light of truth into the highways and the byways, that the salvation of God may be revealed in a remarkable manner.

Will we carry forward the work in the Lord's way? Are we willing to be taught of God? Will we wrestle with God in prayer? Will we receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit? This is what we need and may have at this time. Then we shall go forth with a message from the Lord, and the light of truth will shine forth as a lamp that burneth, reaching to all parts of the world. If we will walk humbly with God, God will walk with us. Let us humble our souls before him, and we shall see of his salvation.

The Birth of the Turkish Empire

PERCY T. MAGAN

In a previous article in the Review I endeavored to make it plain that the drying up of the waters of the river Euphrates, or, in other words, the destruction of the Turkish empire, is the signal for the long-looked-for universal war.

Now since the "waters" of the Turkish empire are to be "dried up," it will stand us in hand to go back to the days of the rise of the Ottoman empire, to the time when the "waters" of that nation were "moved as the rivers," and rose "up as a flood;" for no one can really understand the hidden springs of life and action in the Turkish question of to-day who does not, to some degree at least, familiarize himself with things from the Mohammedan standpoint.

During the last century, by the men of Western nations the Turks have been regarded as the offscouring of the earth. The rejuvenation of their empire has been dubbed "a bootless speculation;" and Carlyle drastically characterized the Turk as "unspeakable."

But it was not always thus. For many generations the Turk was powerful, "and it seemed for a while rather a question whether he would not send the Europeans out of their own grounds. He was for centuries the great terror, the nightmare of Western Europe."—"History of Our Own Times," by Justin McCarthy, Vol. I, chap. 25, par. 4.

The rise of the Turks was romantic and phenomenal. "When it is recalled that at the beginning of the thirteenth century the Osmanli Turks were pastoral tribes living in tents and movable huts in Central Asia, slightly fixed to the soil, holding the camp rather than the land as native country, and recognizing allegiance only to powerful chiefs; that at the beginning of the fourteenth century they had migrated into Asia Minor, and had become somewhat fixed to a small tract of land in Anatolia; at the beginning of the fifteenth century they had acquired vast possessions in Anatolia and Rumelia, Bulgaria, Ragusa, Servia, and Wallachia in Europe; at the beginning of the sixteenth century they had added Trebizond, Karaman, and Armenia in Asia, and Greece (including Constantinople), Bosnia, Herzegovina, Albania, and the Crimea in Europe; and by the middle of that century Tunis, Egypt, Algiers, and Tripoli in Africa, Kurdistan, Arabia, Syria, and Bagdad in Asia, and Moldavia, Hungary, and Transylvania in Europe,— when significant facts like these are recalled, it is obvious" that the rise of the Ottoman Turks was no common or unimportant event in the history of mankind. See "Turkey and the Turks," by Munroe, page 13.

The Osmanli, or Ottoman Turks, have ever been regarded by the Western nations as interlopers in Europe. While the great powers of Europe are of Teutonic and Slavic extraction, the Osmanli Turks are of Mongolian stock. They originated in the plains of Sungaria near the desert of Gobi. "These were one of two great races which alternately filled the rôle of the scourges of God."

"The thirteenth century had half run its course when Kaykubad, the Seljuk sultan of Iconium, was one day hard beset near Angora by a Mongol army. The enemy was rapidly gaining the mastery, when suddenly the fortune of the day was reversed. A small body of unknown horsemen charged upon the foe, and victory declared for the Seljuk. The cavaliers who had thus opportunely come to the rescue knew not whom they had assisted, nor did the Seljuks recognize their allies. The meeting was one of those remarkable accidents which sometimes shape the future of nations. Ertoghrul, son of Suleyman,— a member of the Oghuz family of Turks, which the Mongol avalanche had dislodged from its old camping grounds in Khorasan, and had pressed in a westerly direction,— was journeying from the Euphrates banks, where he had halted awhile, to the more peaceful seclusion of Anatolia, when he unexpectedly came upon the battle-field of Angora. With the nomad's love of scrimmage, and the warrior's sympathy for the weaker side, he led his four hundred riders pell-mell into the fray, and won the day. He little thought that by his impulsive and chivalrous act he had taken the first step toward founding an empire that was destined to endure in undiminished glory for three centuries, and which even now, when more than six hundred years have elapsed, and many a fair province has been wrested or inveighled out of its grasp, still stands lord over wide lands, and holds the allegiance of many peoples, of divers races and tongues. From Ertoghrul to the reigning sultan of Turkey, thirty-five [now thirty-six] princes in the male line have ruled the Ottoman empire without a break in the succession. There is no such example of continuous authority of a single family in the history of Europe."—"Turkey," Lane-Poole, pages 8, 9. Such was the romantic and humble birth of the Turkish power of to-day.

At Sugut in 1258 there was born Othman, the son of Ertoghrul. He was the first ruler of the line who ventured to assert his absolute independence. His descendants took the name of Othmanlis, or, as we call them, Ottomans. This man was destined not only to give his

Life Paths

L. D. SANTEE

Each life and each station has crosses,
And shadows will darken the sun;
We count o'er our gains and our losses
In the brief little day we have won;
We stand in the sunshine of gladness,
And rejoice that our life is not vain,
Then descend to the valleys of sadness,
And drink of the vintage of pain.

O, the stains of the world leave their traces,
We have sins that we can not atone,
There is sadness and pain on all faces,
As each journeys his pathway alone;
But when we are grieving and sobbing,
When tears for our failures will start,
Then, close to our own, there is throbbing,
Christ's tender, compassionate heart.

He is able to save from all sinning,
He has purchased my life on the tree,
By his love he the weary is winning,
And he died for my brothers and me;
There's a joy that will come after sorrow,
There are chaplets that wait to be given,
And the pathways on earth that were narrow
Will end in the kingdom of heaven.

A Remarkable Trip

W. C. WHITE

Thursday evening, September 9, Mrs. Ellen G. White returned to her home near St. Helena, Cal., after an absence of five months and four days, during which time she had traveled over eight thousand miles, and spoken to audiences, large and small, seventy-two times, in twenty-seven places, from San Diego, Cal., to Portland, Maine, and from Huntsville, Ala., to Madison, Wis.

The chief purpose of this journey was to attend the quadrennial session of the General Conference in Washington, D. C., which convened May 13 to June 6. Her visits to other places were in response to urgent invitations, and were made possible by the merciful bestowal of strength and courage as she proceeded from place to place.

A few days before starting out on her journey, she remarked that as she was eighty-one years of age and in feeble health, it would doubtless be best for her to take the most direct route to Washington, but that she could not disregard the calls to visit Los Angeles, Loma Linda, and Paradise Valley in Southern California, nor the invitation to stop in College View, Neb., and speak to the five hundred students in Union College. She said: "I must also visit my son, Edson, in Nashville; and if the Lord gives me strength, I would be pleased to visit Brethren Sutherland and Magan at the Madison school." And she expressed a desire to stop off a day at Asheville, N. C., where Prof. S. Brownsberger lives, and where Sister Rumbaugh has just built and given to the conference a commodious meeting-house and parsonage.

It was agreed that she ought not to exhaust her strength just before the General Conference, and that we would promise only the visits to Southern California, College View, and Nashville, and that we would arrange other features of the trip from time to time as seemed to be advisable.

During the four weeks occupied with the journey to Washington, Mrs. White was able to speak four times at College View; twice each at Loma Linda, Nashville, and Asheville; and once each at Paradise Valley Sanitarium, Madison school, Hillcrest school, Huntsville school, and the Alden school at Hilltop.

At Paradise Valley we found the sanitarium enjoying a good patronage. The building operations which for three years have been an annoyance to patients were completed. The grounds, in the hands of a skilful gardener, were becoming more and more beautiful. And the house was so well filled that the question as to whether we have done wisely in building so largely seemed to be answered in the affirmative. Since our visit we learn that the building has been filled with patients, and that many of the helpers have had to find rooms in rented buildings. The most urgent need of the institution is students for the nurses' training-school. The physician, the manager, and the head nurse are all experienced teachers, and ready to conduct a strong school if students can be found.

At Loma Linda the work was steadily growing. The patronage at the sanitarium and the attendance at the College of Evangelists were very encouraging. As a result of the faithful work of physicians, nurses, and students, in doing field work in the San Bernardino Valley, many warm friends to the sanitarium and the work it represents are being won in Redlands, Riverside, San Bernardino, and the smaller towns and villages in the valley. It is to be hoped that the spirit of the true evangelist, the willingness to go out among the people, to meet them in their homes, and to adapt the ministry to the needs of the individual will be cherished and developed at Loma Linda, and that eventually workers may go forth from there to be efficient laborers and leaders in this same work in other institutions and in distant fields.

At College View we found a full school and a prosperous sanitarium. The Nebraska Sanitarium has not only cleared itself of debt, but it has also contributed freely to the building up of a healthy branch institution at Hastings. The college has become so popular that it is embarrassed by the large attendance, and plans are being laid to provide accommodations in other places for some of the intermediate students.

In a discourse delivered in the College View church, Sabbath, April 17, Mrs. White said: —

"We should thank God constantly that he has made so plain the work that he would have us do. When we feel like complaining, let us look to ourselves, and see if we are not neglecting some duty. Let us see if we are not leaving undone some work that God requires us to do. We can not afford to misrepresent the truth before the world and before the Lord. Let us remember that we are his workmen,— laborers together with him. It is he who has put this work into the hands of his church on earth.

"We need the inspiration that comes from earnestly seeking God, that he may give us a sense of the greatness of the work, and may open our hearts and minds to understand the responsibilities resting upon the church of God in these last days. We can not afford to neglect any duty that devolves upon those who are preparing for the courts of God.

"I thank God that we have this school. We are not in the school work to make money; we are here to give the youth a well-balanced education. To this end they must educate their muscles as well as their minds for service. The physical powers should be brought into exercise, that the brain powers may not be overtaxed. We want this school to stand forth as an example in every way. You may have a large school; but if you would have its work a success, you must co-operate with the Lord and with one another."

Regarding their duty to maintain a right influence in the home, and to co-operate with the teachers in the school, the following words were addressed to parents: —

"Fathers and mothers, wake up. You may have in the school those who minister the word of God to the students; but you must co-operate with these teachers by carrying out in the home life the teachings of the Bible. If you will study earnestly to know the will of God, you will find encouragement to do the work that God has laid upon you. If you will do your duty, the God of heaven will act his part. Parents who leave to the school the work of making Christians of their children will meet with terrible loss. The youth need the righteous influence of their parents in every word and action, in all their conversation and habits. As long as they are in the world, they are to be trained to obey the Word of God, and thus prepare for a place in the city of God.

"It is the privilege of parents to take their children with them to the gates of the city of God, saying, I have tried to instruct my children to love the Lord, to do his will, and to glorify him. To such the gates will be thrown open, and parents and children will enter in. But all can not enter. Some are left outside with their children, whose characters have not been transformed by submission to the will of God. The words are spoken: You have neglected home duties. You have failed to do the work that would have fitted the soul for a home in heaven. You can not enter. The gates are closed to the children because they have not learned to do the will of God, and to parents because they have neglected the responsibilities resting upon them.

"Fathers and mothers, there is a work for you to do. You have a school established here; but you are not to leave the burden of the training of your children with the teachers of the school. It is your privilege and duty to link right up with them by carrying forward this work of Christian education in your homes. Fathers and mothers need to be wide-awake, that their spiritual life may not decline. There is an eternity before us. The youth are to graduate from their schools in this world to the school above. If we are found worthy, Christ will open to us the gates of the city of God, inviting fathers and mothers and children to enter in, so that parents may not be separated from their children, or children from their parents.

"Fathers and mothers are to educate their children to obedience, teaching them to keep the law of the Lord, which is perfect, converting the soul. This is a most important work. If you neglect this work because your time and attention are given to the world, you will defeat the purpose the Lord has for the youth in preparing them for the service of God at home and in foreign fields.

"Every family that finds entrance to the city of God will have been faithful workers in their earthly homes, fulfilling the responsibilities that Christ has laid on them. There Christ, the heavenly Teacher, will lead his people to the tree of life, and he will explain to them the truths they could not in this life understand. In that future life his people will gain the higher education in its completeness. Those who enter the city of God will have the golden crown placed upon their heads. That will be a joyful scene, which none of us can afford to miss. We shall cast our crowns at the feet of Jesus, and again and again we will give him the glory, and praise his holy name. Angels will unite in the songs of triumph. Touching their golden harps, they will fill all heaven with rich music and songs to the Lamb."

The Outlook and the Call

E. E. ANDROSS

[We take the following pointed paragraphs from the annual address presented at the meeting of the Southern California Conference.— Ed.]

Early in June the Imperial Press Conference convened in London, with more than one thousand delegates, representing the press from all parts of the empire, in attendance. Lord Rosebery, ex-premier, was the orator of the evening. In the course of his remarks he gave utterance to the following very significant words: —

"I do not know that in some ways I have ever seen a condition of things in Europe so remarkable, so peaceful, and in some respects so ominous, as the condition which exists at this moment. There is a hush in Europe, a hush in which you may almost hear a leaf fall to the ground. There is absolute absence of any questions which ordinarily lead to war. . . . All forebodes peace; and yet at the same time, combined with this total absence of all questions of friction, there never was in the history of the world so threatening and so overpowering a preparation for war. That is a sign which I confess I regard as most ominous. For forty years it has been a platitude to say that Europe is an armed camp, and for forty years it has been true that all the nations have been facing each other armed to the teeth. . . . They can not arm any more men on land, so they have to seek new armaments upon the sea, piling up these enormous preparations as if for some great Armageddon — and that in the time of profoundest peace."

"When they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, . . . and they shall not escape."

In a recent article on "The Changing Times," Mr. Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, speaks in a very forcible way of the present situation, as follows: —

"Wealth is piling up in such enormous sums that Crœsus and Lucullus would be unnoticed among the multi-millionaires. All these changes are moving with increasing velocity, and that which to-day seems to be the summit of advance is to-morrow almost forgotten in the rapid unfoldings of something new. . . . It must be conceded that theology is at a discount; that creeds and forms of worship are losing their hold. . . . We stand amazed in the midst of these marvelous changes, and wonder if this progress is to continue, and whether in these rapid changes is to be found evidence of a decaying moral sense, and uplifting of the material above the spiritual, and a splendor and luxury which precede national decay and ruin."

In an article in the Literary Digest of July 17, 1909, entitled "The Modern Passion for Righteousness," appears the following: —

"Together with this appears a turning away from theology. This is accompanied by a turning away from Christ as a moral fact of the present. He thus comes to be looked upon as a historical figure of the past; they disregard altogether the idea of judgment to come."

How forcibly this situation reminds us of the words that came to us through the spirit of prophecy some nineteen years ago, as follows: —

"We are standing upon the threshold of great and solemn events. Prophecies are being fulfilled, and stormy times are before us. Old controversies which have apparently been hushed for a long time will be revived, and new controversies will spring up; new and old will commingle, and this will take place right early. The angels are holding the four winds, that they shall not blow until the specified work of warning is given to the world; but the storm is gathering, the clouds are loading ready to burst upon the world, and to many it will be as a thief in the night. All heaven is represented to me as watching the unfolding events. A crisis is to be revealed in the great and prolonged controversy in the government of God on earth. Something great and decisive is to take place, and that right early. If any delay, the character of God and his throne will be compromised."

While this is a dark picture, and one from which we would fain turn away, we must remember that as the darkest hour of the night is just before dawn, so this darkness is a token of the breaking of eternal day. "The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light."

These things have aroused and alarmed the people, and many are inquiring, "What do these things mean?" They are not only ready, but anxious, to listen to or to read anything that explains these things, and now, just now, is our opportunity.

The Rise of the Ottoman Empire

PERCY T. MAGAN

In the previous article the chivalrous and romantic story of the birth of the Ottoman empire was traced. In this paper will be shown the rapid and remarkable rise of that people to opulence and power, and also the motive force back of this and all Mohammedan movements.

Perhaps it will be best to take the last feature first. The Turks hold that they are descended from Japheth, the son of Noah. He was the father of three sons. The Turks teach that to his firstborn, Aboul-Turk, he gave the sovereignty of Turkestan.

Again: the Turks profess the religion of Mohammed. The creed of that faith is generally compressed into the well-known formula: "There is no god but God, and Mohammed is his prophet." But there is another and longer form, which reads as follows: —

"I believe in God, and his angels, and his books, and his prophets, and the last day, and the predestination of good and evil by God, and the resurrection after death. I bear witness that there is no God but God, and I bear witness that Mohammed is his slave and his prophet." (Cited by Sir Charles Eliot, "Turkey and the Turks," chap. 6, par. 3.)

From the above it must be perfectly clear that Mohammedanism is very far from being a heathen religion, as some are wont to believe. It teaches belief

Whate'er Is Best

INITA S. CHILSON

AT early morn, ere a tint of rose
Falls on the fragrant, dew-bathed flowers,
At early morn, ere the day unfolds
Its joy- or sorrow-laden hours,
I come into Thy presence sweet,
And this my one request:
Lord, in thy wisdom infinite,
Send me this day whate'er is best;
Whate'er is best, or joy or pain,
I know not what to ask;
O Master mine! I pray that thou
Wilt set for me my daily task.

When earth and sea, with golden light
Are burnished at the midday hour,
When cares of day have driven away
Some of the morning's calm and power,
I haste to the shade of thy sheltering wing,
And sweet is the noontide rest.
With willing heart I gladly sing:
Dear Lord, still send whate'er is best;
Whate'er is best, or gain or loss,
I care not, since 'tis thy behest;
Safe 'neath the shelter of the cross,
I only know thy will is best.

When eventide, with silver veil,
Enfolds the earth all hushed in sleep,
When silence reigns o'er hill and dale,
And darkness broods above the deep;
So grateful for the hour of prayer,
I welcome thee, my heavenly Guest,
And give thee thanks that through the day
Thou sentest me whate'er was best:
Come life or death, thou knowest best,
I lay me down in peace to sleep,
And calm my slumber, sweet my rest,
While angels fair their vigil keep.

Counsel to Teachers

MRS. E. G. WHITE

[Mrs. E. G. White and her party on their way to the General Conference, spent five days in College View. Friday morning she spoke to five hundred students in the college chapel, and Sabbath and Sunday she spoke to large congregations in the church. Monday morning, by request, she met with the college faculty. The following is a portion of her address to the thirty teachers assembled.— W. C. WHITE.]

I WILL read 2 Corinthians, the sixth chapter: —

"We then, as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain. (For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succored thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.) Giving no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed: but in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings, in fastings; by pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, by the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armor of righteousness on the right hand and on the left, by honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report: as deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and, behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things. . . .

"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

You should study also the seventh chapter, but I will not take time to read it now.

There is constant danger among our people that those who engage in labor in our schools and sanitariums will entertain the idea that they must get in line with the world, study the things which the world studies, and become familiar with the things that the world becomes familiar with. This is one of the greatest mistakes that could be made. We shall make grave mistakes unless we give special attention to the searching of the Word.

The question is asked, What is the higher education? There is no education higher than that contained in the principles laid down in the words I have read to you from this sixth chapter of Second Corinthians. Let our students study diligently to comprehend this. There is no higher education to be gained than that which was given to the early disciples, and which is given to us through the Word. May the Holy Spirit of God impress your minds with the conviction that there is nothing in all the world in the line of education that is so exalted as the instruction contained in the sixth and seventh chapters of Second Corinthians. Let us advance in our work just as far as the Word of God will lead us. Let us work intelligently for this higher education. Let our righteousness be the sign of our understanding of the will of God committed to us through his messengers.

It is the privilege of every believer to take the life of Christ and the teachings of Christ as his daily study. Christian education means the acceptance, in sentiment and principle, of the teachings of the Saviour. It includes a daily conscientious walking in the footsteps of Christ, who consented to lay off his royal robe and crown and to come to our world in the form of humanity, that he might give to the human race a power that they could gain by no other means. What was that power? — It was the power resulting from the human nature uniting with the divine, the power to take the teachings of Christ and follow them to the letter. In his resistance of evil and his labor for others Christ was giving to men an example of the highest education that it is possible for any one to attain.

The Son of God was rejected by those whom he came to bless. He was taken by wicked hands and crucified. But after he had risen from the dead, he was with his disciples forty days, and in this time he gave them much precious instruction. He laid down to his followers the principles underlying the higher education. And when he was about to leave them and go to his Father, his last words to them were, "I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

To many who place their children in our schools, strong temptations will come because they desire them to secure what the world regards as the most essential education. Who knows what constitutes the most essential education, unless it is the education to be obtained from that Book which is the foundation of all true knowledge? Those who regard as essential the knowledge to be gained along the line of worldly education are making a great mistake, one which will cause them to be swayed by individual opinions that are human and erring. To those who feel that their children must have what the world calls the essential education, I would say, Bring your children to the simplicity of the Word of God, and they will be safe. We are going to be greatly scattered before long, and what we do must be done quickly.

The light has been given me that tremendous pressures will be brought upon every Seventh-day Adventist with whom the world can get into close connection. Those who seek the education that the world esteems so highly, are gradually led further and further from the principles of truth until they become educated worldlings. At what a price have they gained their education! They have parted with the Holy Spirit of God. They have chosen to accept what the world calls knowledge in the place of the truths which God has committed to men through his ministers and prophets and apostles. And there are some who, having secured this worldly education, think that they can introduce it into our schools. But let me tell you that you must not take what the world calls the higher education and bring it into our schools and sanitariums and churches. We need to understand these things. I speak to you definitely. This must not be done.

Upon the mind of every student should be impressed the thought that education is a failure unless the understanding has learned to grasp the truths of divine revelation, and unless the heart accepts the teachings of the gospel of Christ. The student who, in the place of the broad principles of the Word of God, will accept common ideas, and will allow the time and attention to be absorbed in commonplace, trivial matters, will find his mind becoming dwarfed and enfeebled. He has lost the power of growth. The mind must be trained to comprehend the important truths that concern eternal life.

I am instructed that we are to carry the minds of our students higher than it is now thought to be possible. Heart and mind are to be trained to preserve their purity by receiving daily supplies from the fountain of eternal truth. The divine Mind and Hand has preserved through the ages the record of creation in its purity. It is the Word of God alone that gives to us an authentic account of the creation of our world. This Word is to be the chief study in our schools. In it we may hold converse with patriarchs and prophets. In it we may learn what our redemption has cost him who was equal with the Father from the beginning, and who sacrificed his life that a people might stand before him redeemed from everything earthly and commonplace, renewed in the image of God.

If we are to learn of Christ, we must pray as the apostles prayed when the Holy Spirit was poured upon them. We need a baptism of the Spirit of God. We are not safe for one hour while we are failing to render obedience to the Word of God.

I do not say that there should be no study of the languages. The languages should be studied. Before long there will be a positive necessity for many to leave their homes and go to work among those of other languages; and those who have some knowledge of foreign languages will thereby be able to communicate with those who know not the truth. Some of our people will learn the languages in the countries to which they are sent. This is the better way. And there is One who will stand right by the side of the faithful worker to open the understanding and to give wisdom. The Lord can make their work fruitful where men do not know the foreign language. As they go among the people, and present the publications, the Lord will work upon minds, imparting an understanding of the truth. Some who take up the work in foreign fields can teach the word through an interpreter. As the result of faithful effort there will be a harvest gathered, the value of which we do not now understand.

There is another line of work to be carried forward, the work in the large cities. There should be companies of earnest laborers working in the cities. Men should study what needs to be done in the places that have been neglected. The Lord has been calling our attention to the neglected multitudes in the large cities, yet little regard has been given to the matter.

We are not willing enough to trouble the Lord with our petitions, and to ask him for the gift of the Holy Spirit. The Lord wants us to trouble him in this matter. He wants us to press our petitions to the throne. The converting power of God needs to be felt throughout our ranks. The most valuable education that can be obtained will be found in going out with the message of truth to the places that are now in darkness. We should go out just as the first disciples went out in obedience to the commission of Christ. The Saviour gave the disciples their directions. In a few words he told them what they might expect to meet. "I send you forth," he said, "as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." These workers were to go forth as the representatives of him who gave his life for the life of the world.

The Lord wants us to come into harmony with him. If we will do this, his Spirit can rule our minds. If we have a true understanding of what constitutes the essential education, and endeavor to teach its principles, Christ will help us. He promised his followers that when they should stand before councils and judges, they were to take no thought what they should speak. I will instruct you, he said. I will guide you. Knowing what it is to be taught of God, when words of heavenly wisdom are brought to our mind, we shall distinguish them from our own thoughts. We shall understand them as the words of God, and we shall see in the words of God wisdom and life and power. . . .

We are to educate the youth to exercise equally the mental and the physical powers. The healthful exercise of the whole being will give an education that is broad and comprehensive. We had stern work to do in Australia in educating parents and youth along these lines; but we persevered in our efforts until the lesson was learned that in order to have an education that was complete, the time of study must be divided between the gaining of book knowledge and the securing of a knowledge of practical work. Part of each day was spent in useful work, the students learning how to clear the land, how to cultivate the soil, and how to build houses, using time that would otherwise have been spent in playing games and seeking amusement. And the Lord blessed the students who thus devoted their time to acquiring habits of usefulness.

Instruct the students not to regard as most essential the theoretical part of their education. Let it be more and more deeply impressed upon every student that we should have an intelligent understanding of how to treat the physical system. And there are many who would have greater intelligence in these matters if they would not confine themselves to years of study without a practical experience. The more fully we put ourselves under the direction of God, the greater knowledge we shall receive from God. Let us say to our students: Keep yourselves in connection with the Source of all power. Ye are laborers together with God. He is to be our chief instructor.

China's Awakening

G. B. THOMPSON

An ancient seer, looking down through the centuries to the time when "the day of the Lord is near," and the nations are preparing for slaughter, exclaimed, "Let the heathen be awakened." Joel 3:12. This suggests that in the days when the final chapters in the history of the world are being written, and the drama of sin finished, there would be an awakening among the nations known as "heathen."

For centuries these great heathen Gibraltars have lain almost dormant. The twelfth century after Christ looked back upon the twentieth century before Christ, and scarcely a ripple was seen upon the surface that indicated a breaking away from medieval habits and customs. More than half the world seemed hopelessly chained in the shackles of ignorance and superstition for all time.

But a change has suddenly come. The light of the present civilization is piercing the gloom of the ages, and the millions are waking up. In the Chicago Tribune of Oct. 3, 1909, Mr. Frank C. Carpenter, writing from Peking, gives a most interesting account of China's awakening, from which I take the following: —

"I write of the greatest intellectual movement of all time. This nation of four hundred million is starting to school, and thousands of teachers are already at work, beginning to instruct it along the lines of our civilization. The movement was started only four years ago by the great empress dowager at the advice of Yuan Shih Kai, Chang Chi Tung, and other progressive statesmen. By an imperial edict the old system of examinations under which China has been working for centuries was wiped off the slate, and the new education was begun.

"Now there are colleges in every provincial capital, and modern schools in the four thousand walled cities. A government department of education has been instituted, and over it is one of the great imperial boards. In the new constitution which was issued last year a system of common schools was provided, and compulsory education at the earliest possible moment. By that constitution China will have its parliament within eight years from now, and the work of training the people for self-government

Readings for the Week of Prayer

To Be Read in All the Churches in the United States

The Merited Blessing

Not to the sinful pleasures,
Not to the lustful thought,
Not to the evil-minded,
Is the benediction brought;
Not to the wild and wayward
Who trample their brother down,
Not to the angry-hearted,
Cometh the blessing down.
But to the one who loveth,
Whose spirit knows no guile,
Who feels for the poor and lonely,
That treasure his welcome smile;
Who gives his life and labor
To thwart misfortune's frown,
Whose every act is kindly,
Cometh God's blessing down.

Suggestions to Church Elders and Leaders for the Week of Prayer

The week of prayer becomes more and more important as we near the end. It surely is a very fitting thing at the close of the year to set apart a week for especially consecrating our lives and all we have and are unto the Lord.

The one who presents the reading for the day should have time to study the subject and pray for God's blessing in his own soul. Each day's service will afford time for special prayer or testimony seasons. Encourage as many as possible to take part. We can improve our meetings for prayer by learning to make short prayers in public, coming to the Lord with definite, pointed, heartfelt requests, in which all can join in hearty "amen." The young people should be encouraged to take part in the services. Pray for the wandering feet, and labor personally for the backslidden and unconverted.

Some one adapted to work for the children should be appointed in each church in time to prepare for such work. The studies outlined for each day should be taken up, and the season thus be made profitable for our children.

The first Sabbath of the season — December 11 — the regular church-offering envelopes should be passed out, and the announcement made that on the following Sabbath the annual offering to missions will be taken. See that absent members get the envelope. Encourage all to be liberal toward God,— to remember that this is a yearly thank-offering that we bring to him for the blessings and bounties of the year.

Let us make it in fact a week of prayer to God for his blessing upon our own souls, our homes, the churches where we live, and the great outlying needy world into which we are sent with the closing gospel message. It will then indeed be a week of real revival, a week of putting away sin, a week of coming near to the Lord. Such an experience we all need. May God make this the best week-of-prayer season we as a people have ever experienced.

(Reading for Sabbath, December 11)

I am filled with sadness when I think of our condition as a people. The Lord has not closed heaven to us, but our own course of continual backsliding has separated us from God. Pride, covetousness, and love of the world have lived in the heart without fear of banishment or condemnation. Grievous and presumptuous sins have dwelt among us. And yet the general opinion is that the church is flourishing, and that peace and spiritual prosperity are in all her borders.

Yet few are alarmed or astonished at their want of spiritual power. . . . Let each put the questions to his own heart: "How have we fallen into this state of spiritual feebleness and dissension? Have we not brought upon ourselves the frown of God because our actions do not correspond with our faith? Have we not been seeking the friendship and applause of the world, rather than the presence of Christ and a deeper knowledge of his will?" Examine your own hearts, judge your own course. Consider what associates you are choosing. Do you seek the company of the wise, or are you willing to choose worldly associates, companions who fear not God, and obey not the gospel?

Are your recreations such as to impart moral and spiritual vigor? Will they lead to purity of thought and action? Impurity is to-day wide-spread, even among the professed followers of Christ. Passion is unrestrained; the animal propensities are gaining strength by indulgence, while the moral powers are constantly becoming weaker. Many are eagerly participating in worldly, demoralizing amusements which God's Word forbids. Thus they sever their connection with God, and rank themselves with the pleasure-lovers of the world. The sins that destroyed the antediluvians and the cities of the plain exist to-day — not merely in heathen lands, not only among popular professors of Christianity, but with some who profess to be looking for the coming of the Son of man. If God should present these sins before you as they appear in his sight, you would be filled with shame and terror.

And what has caused this alarming condition? Many have accepted the theory of the truth, who have had no true conversion. I know whereof I speak. There are few who feel true sorrow for sin; who have deep, pungent convictions of the depravity of the unregenerate nature. The heart of stone is not exchanged for a heart of flesh. Few are willing to fall upon the Rock, and be broken.

No matter who you are, or what your life has been, you can be saved only in God's appointed way. You must repent; you must fall helpless on the Rock, Christ Jesus. You must feel your need of a physician, and of the one only remedy for sin, the blood of Christ. This remedy can be secured only by repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. Here the work is yet to be begun by many who profess to be Christians, and even to be ministers of Christ. Like the Pharisees of old, many of you feel no need of a Saviour. You are self-sufficient, self-exalted. Said Christ, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." The blood of Christ will avail for none but those who feel their need of its cleansing power.

What surpassing love and condescension, that when we had no claim upon divine mercy, Christ was willing to undertake our redemption! But our Great Physician requires of every soul unquestioning submission. We are never to prescribe for our own case. Christ must have the entire management of will and action.

Many are not sensible of their condition and their danger; and there is much in the nature and manner of Christ's work averse to every worldly principle, and opposed to the pride of the human heart. Jesus requires us to trust ourselves wholly to his hands, and confide in his love and wisdom.

We may flatter ourselves, as did Nicodemus, that our moral character has been correct, and we need not humble ourselves before God, like the common sinner. But we must be content to enter into life in the very same way as the chief of sinners. We must renounce our own righteousness, and plead for the righteousness of Christ to be imputed to us. We must depend wholly upon Christ for our strength. Self must die. We must acknowledge that all we have is from the exceeding riches of divine grace. Let this be the language of our hearts, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake."

Genuine faith is followed by love, and love by obedience. All the powers and passions of the converted man are brought under the control of Christ. His Spirit is a renewing power, transforming to the divine image all who will receive it. It makes me sad to say that this experience is understood by but few who profess the truth. Very many follow on in their own ways, and indulge their sinful desires, and yet profess to be disciples of Christ. They have never submitted their hearts to God. Like the foolish virgins, they have neglected to obtain the oil of grace in their vessels with their lamps. I tell you, my brethren, that a large number who profess to believe and even to teach the truth, are under the bondage of sin. Base passions defile the mind and corrupt the soul. Some who are in the vilest iniquity have borrowed the livery of heaven, that they may serve Satan more effectively.

"Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin." He feels that he is the purchase of the blood of Christ, and bound by the most solemn vows to glorify God in his body and in his spirit, which are God's. The love of sin and the love of self are subdued in him. He daily asks: "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?" "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The true Christian will never complain that the yoke of Christ is galling to the neck. He accounts the service of Jesus as the truest freedom. The law of God is his delight. Instead of seeking to bring down the divine commands, to accord with his deficiencies, he is constantly striving to rise to the level of their perfection.

Such an experience must be ours if we would be prepared to stand in the day of God. Now, while probation lingers, while mercy's voice is still heard, is the time for us to put away our sins. While moral darkness covers the earth like a funeral pall, the light of God's standard-bearers must shine the more brightly, showing the contrast between heaven's light and Satan's darkness.

God has made ample provision that we may stand perfect in his grace, wanting in nothing, waiting for the appearing of our Lord. Are you ready? Have you the wedding garment on? That garment will never cover deceit, impurity, corruption, or hypocrisy. The eye of God is upon you. It is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. We may conceal our sins from the eyes of men, but we can hide nothing from our Maker.

Experience is knowledge derived from experiment. Experimental religion is what is needed now. "Taste and see that the Lord is good." Some — yes, a large number — have a theoretical knowledge of religious truth, but have never felt the renewing power of divine grace upon their own hearts. These persons are ever slow to heed the testimonies of warning, reproof, and instruction indicted by the Holy Spirit. They believe in the wrath of God, but put forth no earnest efforts to escape it. They believe in heaven, but make no sacrifice to obtain it. They believe in the value of the soul, and that erelong its redemption ceaseth forever. Yet they neglect the most precious opportunities to make their peace with God.

They may read the Bible, but its threatenings do not alarm or its promises win them. They approve things that are excellent, yet they follow the way in which God has forbidden them to go. They know a refuge, but do not avail themselves of it. They know a remedy for sin, but do not use it. They know the right, but have no relish for it. All their knowledge will but increase their condemnation. They have never tasted and learned by experience that the Lord is good.

To become a disciple of Christ is to deny self and follow Jesus through evil as well as good report. Few are doing this now. Many prophesy falsely, and the people love to have it so; but what will be done in the end thereof? What will be the decision when their work, with all its results, shall be brought in review before God?

The Christian life is a warfare. The apostle Paul speaks of wrestling against principalities and powers as he fought the good fight of faith. Again, he declares, "Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin." Ah, no. To-day sin is cherished and excused. The sharp Sword of the Spirit, the Word of God, does not cut to the soul. Has religion changed? Has Satan's enmity to God abated? A religious life once presented difficulties, and demanded self-denial. All is made very easy now. And why is this? — The professed people of God have compromised with the powers of darkness.

There must be a revival of the strait testimony. The path to heaven is no smoother now than in the days of our Saviour. All our sins must be put away. Every darling indulgence that hinders our religious life must be cut off. The right eye or the right hand must be sacrificed if it causes us to offend. Are we willing to renounce our own wisdom, and to receive the kingdom of heaven as a little child? Are we willing to part with self-righteousness? Are we willing to give up our chosen worldly associates? Are we willing to sacrifice the approbation of men? The prize of eternal life is of infinite value. Will we put forth efforts and make sacrifices proportionate to the worth of the object to be attained?

"He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked;" and "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." This conformity to Jesus will not be unobserved by the world. It is a subject of notice and comment. The Christian may not be conscious of the great change; for the more closely he resembles Christ in character, the more humble will be his opinion of himself; but it will be seen and felt by all around him. Those who have had the deepest experience in the things of God, are the farthest removed from pride or self-exaltation. They have the humblest thoughts of self, and the most exalted conceptions of the glory and excellence of Christ. They feel that the lowest place in his service is too honorable for them.

It is such workers that are needed in the cause of God to-day. The self-sufficient, the envious and jealous, the critical and fault-finding, can well be spared from his sacred work. They should not be tolerated in the ministry, even though they may, apparently, have accomplished some good. God is not straitened for men or means. He calls for workers who are true and faithful, pure and holy; for those who have felt their need of the atoning blood of Christ and the sanctifying grace of his Spirit.

I am deeply solicitous that our people should preserve the living testimony among them; and that the church should be kept pure from the unbelieving element. Can we conceive of a closer, more intimate relation to Christ than is set forth in the words, "I am the vine, ye are the branches"? The fibers of the branch are almost identical with those of the vine. The communication of life, strength, and fruitfulness from the trunk to the branches is unobstructed and constant. The root sends its nourishment through the branch. Such is the true believer's relation to Christ. He abides in Christ, and draws his nourishment from him.

FIRST SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST CHURCH BUILDING IN AUSTRALASIAN UNION CONFERENCE, BISMARCK, TASMANIA; SURROUNDED BY EUCALYPTUS TIMBER

The Jews had always regarded the vine as the most noble of plants, and a type of all that was powerful excellent, and fruitful. "The vine," our Lord would seem to say, "which you prize so highly, is a symbol. I am the reality; I am the true vine. As a nation you prize the vine; as sinners you should prize me above all things earthly. The branch can not live separated from the vine; no more can you live unless you are abiding in me."

The Father is the vine-dresser. He skilfully and mercifully prunes every fruit-bearing branch. Those who share Christ's suffering and reproach now, will share his glory hereafter. He will not be "ashamed to call them brethren." His angels minister to them. His second appearing will be as the Son of man, thus even in his glory identifying him with humanity. To those who have united themselves to him, he declares, Though a mother may forget her child, yet will not I forget thee. I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands. Thou art continually before me."

O what amazing privileges are proffered us! Will we put forth most earnest efforts to form this alliance with Christ, through which alone these blessings are attained? Will we break off our sins by righteousness, and our iniquities by turning unto the Lord? Skepticism and infidelity are wide-spread. Christ asked the question, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" We must cherish a living, active faith. The permanence of our faith is the condition of our union.

My brethren, you are disregarding the most sacred claims of God by your neglect to consecrate yourselves and your children to him. Many of you are reposing in false security, absorbed in selfish interests, and attracted by earthly treasures. You fear no evil. Danger seems a great way off. You will be deceived, deluded, to your eternal ruin, unless you arouse, and with penitence and deep humiliation, return unto the Lord.

It is God who holds in his hands the destiny of souls. He will not always be mocked; he will not always be trifled with. Already his judgments are in the land. Fierce and awful tempests leave destruction and death in their wake. The devouring fire lays low the desolate forest and the crowded city. Storm and shipwreck await those who journey upon the deep. Accident and calamity threaten those who travel upon the land. Hurricanes, earthquakes, sword and famine, follow in quick succession. Yet the hearts of men are hardened. They recognize not the warning voice of God. They will not flee to the only refuge from the gathering storm.

Again and again has the voice from heaven addressed you. Will you obey this voice? Will you heed the counsel of the True Witness, to seek the gold tried in the fire, the white raiment, and the eye-salve? The gold is faith and love, the white raiment is the righteousness of Christ, the eye-salve is that spiritual discernment which will enable you to see the wiles of Satan and shun them, to detect sin and abhor it, to see truth and obey it.

Children's Lesson — No. 1

Beginning Right

Scripture Text: Luke 6: 47-49.

The foundation of character is laid in childhood. All about us little people are laying foundations for life. Some build on rock, some on sand.

(Make a picture of a foundation marked in squares, and let the children name the things that will help in forming a good character; and as they are named, write them in the open squares.)

One of the best stones to place in the foundation of life is prayer. This is the week of prayer. Shall we not begin to-day to pray as we have never done before?

(Let the children give an example of answered prayer of which they have known, as this will make the lesson more practical.)

The Lord has not given away all his blessings. He has one for each of us to-day. "Ask, and it shall be given you."

Our Time and Work From the Prophetic Standpoint

W. W. PRESCOTT

(Reading for Sunday, December 12)

WE are identified with a world-wide movement, whose purpose it is to prepare the world for the second advent of our Lord. It is, therefore, fitting that we should frequently review the grounds of our faith, and renew in our own minds the confidence that this movement is of God, by careful examination of the Scriptural evidences which establish the certainty of our faith. As a result of such study, we may be able to bear our part in the work with greater courage and efficiency.

In this reading we shall consider, under four divisions, some of the reasons for believing that this second-advent movement is what it purports to be — the closing work of the gospel on earth in co-operation with the closing work of redemption in heaven: (1) The time of the movement; (2) the place where the movement had its rise; (3) the nature of the message given; (4) the result of the message.

The Time of the Movement

When the final proclamation of the gospel is made to the world, all time prophecies of the Scripture must have been fulfilled. The prophetic utterances which have outlined the history of the world-kingdoms must have been converted into history. Daniel's foreview of the rise and fall of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome, and the division of Rome into ten kingdoms, must have been realized in the onward march of events, so that there would be no place for another world-kingdom. The whole prophetic outline must have been entirely filled in, so that the impending event would be the setting up of the fifth kingdom, "which shall never be destroyed: . . . but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever."

In history must be found the fulfilment of all other prophecies which enter into more minute details concerning the rise, and the divinely revealed work, of the little horn described by Daniel; the man of sin concerning whom Paul wrote; and the composite beast from the sea delineated by John. These phases of counterfeit Christianity, extending over a period of many centuries, must have been fully wrought out before the final warning against the beast and his image could consistently be given.

It is also certain that we must be able to show that every time-period in prophecy has found its application, before we can proclaim with certainty that the people of this generation will "see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." These leading periods, as given in the Scriptures, began with the time of Noah, and ended in our own day. The 120 years during which the warning of the coming flood should be given (Gen. 6: 3); the 400 years during which the seed of Abraham should be afflicted in Egypt (Gen. 15: 13); the 65 years, at the end of which Ephraim should be broken (Isa. 7: 8); the 70 years of captivity in Babylon (Jer. 25: 8-11); the 1260 years, during which saints, times, and the law should be under the power of the little horn (Dan. 7: 25); the 2300 years marking the limit for treading down the sanctuary and the host (Dan. 8: 13, 14); the 1290 years, and the 1335 years "from the time that the continual burnt-offering shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up" — all these definite divisions of time must have found their place in the world's calendar, when the time has come for the closing of earthly history.

Not only this, but what the prophets have foretold of general conditions at the time of the end must be an accurate description of current events while the closing message is being given. The situation in the political world, in the social world, in the religious world, must answer clearly to the prophetic delineation of the very last days. Furthermore, the advent movement itself must begin at such a time, and be carried forward in such a way, as to fulfil the prophecies relating to this last work of the gospel. Any movement which does not meet these demands could not be the closing work of God in the earth; but a movement which does meet these requirements could be no other than the true work of God, preparing the way for the second advent of Christ.

The Place Where the Movement Had Its Rise

Inasmuch as a leading characteristic of the final threefold message is to be a warning against the worship of the beast and his image, it would seem clear that this message should have its rise in that country where the beast is most aggressive during the last generation, and where the image of the beast is formed. That this is the United

This world, and all the things in it, are soon to be burned up. 2 Peter 3: 10.

There are two kinds of sleep — natural sleep and spiritual sleep, or body sleep and mind sleep. Before Jesus comes, many people will be sound asleep who look as if they were wide-awake. Their consciences are asleep. Against this kind of sleep the Lord warns us. It is a deadly sleep. He says to all such — Isa. 52: 1, first part.

It is hardest to keep awake just before morning. It is dangerous to be sleeping when Jesus' coming is near. Rom. 13: 11, 12.

Jesus tells us how to keep awake. Mark 13: 33-37. "Watch, pray, work." What shall we watch? for what pray? for whom shall we work? Let us do all these during this week of prayer, and keep on doing them till Jesus comes.

The Life of Self

EXTRACTS FROM "TESTIMONIES FOR THE CHURCH," ARRANGED BY W. B. WHITE.

(Reading for Thursday, December 16)

[If so desired, the leader can cut out the following paragraphs and pass them around before beginning the study, letting different ones in the congregation read them in answer to the questions.]

1. What must be given up to become the follower of the lowly Christ?

"Many who profess the name of Christ and claim to be looking for his speedy coming, know not what it is to suffer for Christ's sake. Their hearts are not subdued by grace, and they are not dead to self, as is often shown in various ways. At the same time they are talking of having trials. But the principal cause of their trials is an unsubdued heart, which makes self so sensitive that it is often crossed. If such could realize what it is to be a humble follower of Christ, a true Christian, they would begin to work in good earnest, and begin right. They would first die to self, then be instant in prayer, and check every passion of the heart. Give up your self-confidence and self-sufficiency, brethren, and follow the meek Pattern."—"Early Writings," Edition 1906, page 113.

TWO CRIBS OF "MEALIES" (CORN) ON THE SOLUSI MISSION FARM, OUR FIRST MATABELELAND STATION, AFRICA

2. For what service has God created us and placed us in the world?

"Some who think themselves excellent Christians do not understand what constitutes service for God. They plan and study to please themselves. They act only in reference to self. Time is of value to them only as they can gather for themselves. In all the affairs of life this is their object. Not for others but for themselves do they minister. God created them to live in a world where unselfish service must be performed. He designed them to help their fellow men in every possible way. But self is so large that they can not see anything else. They are not in touch with humanity. Those who thus live for self are like the fig tree, which made every pretension, but was fruitless." —"Desire of Ages," Trade Edition, page 692.

NATIVES COMING TO OUR SOLUSI MISSION TO TRADE

3. As Satan sees that his time is short, what does he seek to lead men to do? When he is successful, what does he do?

"I saw that there were some like Judas among those who profess to be waiting for their Lord. Satan controls them, but they know it not. God can not approve of the least degree of covetousness or selfishness, and he abhors the prayers and exhortations of those who indulge these evil traits. As Satan sees that his time is short, he leads men on to be more and more selfish and covetous, and then exults as he sees them wrapped up in themselves, close, penurious, and selfish. If the eyes of such could be opened, they would see Satan in hellish triumph, exulting over them, and laughing at the folly of those who accept his suggestions and enter his snares." — "Early Writings," Edition of 1906, page 268.

4. What change has come over many who formerly loved God and enjoyed his favor? Why the change?

"Some who have formerly loved God and lived in the daily enjoyment of his favor, are now in continual unrest. They wander in darkness and despairing gloom, because they are nourishing self. They are seeking so hard to favor themselves that all other considerations are swallowed up in this. God, in his providence, has willed that no one can secure happiness by living for himself alone. The joy of our Lord consisted in enduring toil and shame for others, that they might be benefited thereby."—"Testimonies for the Church," Vol. IV, page 224.

5. When we sit at the feet of Jesus, what shall we learn regarding the value of our own work?

"It is the love of self that brings unrest. When we are born from above, the same mind will be in us that was in Jesus, the mind that led him to humble himself that we might be saved. Then we shall not be seeking the highest place. We shall desire to sit at the feet of Jesus, and learn of him. We shall understand that the value of our work does not consist in making a show and noise in the world, and in being active and zealous in our own strength. The value of our work is in proportion to the impartation of the Holy Spirit." —"Desire of Ages," Trade Edition, pages 385, 386.

6. What is the cause of the great weakness in our churches? Whose spirit is it that rises up in the hearts of some when things do not please them?

"There is a cause for the great weakness in our churches, and that cause is hard to remove. It is self. Men have none too much will, but they must have it wholly sanctified to God. They need to fall on the Rock and be broken. Self must be crucified in every one who shall enter the gates of the city of God. The fierce spirit which rises up in the hearts of some in the church when anything does not please them, is the spirit of Satan, and not the spirit of Christ."—"Testimony for Ministers," page 26.

7. Why does God permit us to come in contact with suffering and calamity?

"Upon your faithfulness in this work, not only the well-being of others, but your own eternal destiny depends. Christ is seeking to uplift all who will be lifted to companionship with himself, that we may be one with him as he is one with the Father. He permits us to come in contact with suffering and calamity in order to call us out of our selfishness; he seeks to develop in us the attributes of his character,— compassion, tenderness, and love. By accepting this work of ministry, we place ourselves in his school, to be fitted for the courts of God. By rejecting it, we reject his instruction, and choose eternal separation from his presence."—"Christ's Object Lessons," page 388.

8. What should those who live to serve their own interests never expect?

"Let none suppose that they can live a life of selfishness, and then, having served their own interests, enter into the joy of their Lord. In the joy of unselfish love they could not participate. They would not be fitted for the heavenly courts. They could not appreciate the pure atmosphere of love that pervades heaven. The voices of the angels and the music of their harps would not satisfy them."—"Christ's Object Lessons," page 364.

9. With whom will the great Judge place those who have drifted along, and who have sought to please themselves?

A BAPTISM OF BELIEVERS IN LISBON, PORTUGAL

"Those who have drifted along, carrying no responsibility, thinking of themselves, pleasing themselves, will be placed by the Judge of all the earth with those who did evil. They receive the same condemnation." — "Christ's Object Lessons," page 365.

10. Instead of withering up with selfishness, with what should our souls be expanding?

"I saw that he is greatly displeased with the least manifestation of selfishness on the part of his professed people, for whom Jesus spared not his own precious life. Every selfish, covetous person will fall out by the way. Like Judas, who sold his Lord, they will sell good principles and a noble, generous disposition for a little of earth's gain. All such will be sifted out from God's people. Those who want heaven must, with all the energy which they possess, be encouraging the principles of heaven. Instead of withering up with selfishness, their souls should be expanding with benevolence."—"Early Writings," Edition of 1907, page 268.

11. What is the duty of every soul? Name some of the terrible results of permitting self-exaltation to come into the heart.

"I saw that many prayed for God to humble them; but if God should answer their prayers, it would be by terrible things in righteousness. It was their duty to humble themselves. I saw that if self-exaltation was suffered to come in, it would surely lead souls astray, and if not overcome, would prove their ruin. When one begins to get lifted up in his own eyes, and thinks he can do something, the Spirit of God is withdrawn, and he goes on in his own strength until he is overthrown."—"Early Writings," Edition of 1907, page 120.

12. What is the sin that is well-nigh incurable?

"God can not connect with those who live to please themselves, to make themselves first. Those who do this will in the end be last of all. The sin that is most nearly hopeless and incurable is pride of opinion, self-conceit. This stands in the way of all growth. When a man has defects of character, yet fails of realizing this; when he is so imbued with self-sufficiency that he can not see his fault, how can he be cleansed?"—"Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VII, page 200.

13. What, more than anything else, mars our communion with God and one another?

"How often our service to Christ, our communion with one another, is marred by the secret desire to exalt self. How ready the thought of self-gratulation, and the longing for human approval. It is the love of self, the desire for an easier way than God has appointed, that leads to the substitution of human theories and traditions for the divine precepts."—"Desire of Ages," page 484.

14. What always prevents our beholding the Lord? What kind of spirit in us enables us to see God?

"Selfishness prevents us from beholding God. The self-seeking spirit judges of God as altogether such a one as itself. Until we have renounced this, we can not understand him who is love. Only the unselfish heart, the humble and trustful spirit, shall see God as 'merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth.'"—"Desire of Ages," page 351.

15. What will those be sure to do who love self more than they love Jesus?

"Satan is constantly seeking to cause distrust, alienation, and malice among God's people. We shall be often tempted to feel that our rights are invaded, when there is no real cause for such feelings. Those whose love for self is stronger than their love for Christ and his cause, will place their own interests first, and resort to almost any expedient to guard and maintain them."—"Testimonies for the Church," Vol. V, page 242.

16. Before honor comes what?

"Before honor is humility. To fill a high place before men, Heaven chooses the worker who, like John the Baptist, takes a lowly place before God. The most childlike disciple is the most efficient in labor for God. The heavenly intelligences can co-operate with him who is seeking, not to exalt self, but to save souls."—"Desire of Ages," page 518.

17. When an individual thinks he is indispensable for the success of God's work, what results?

"But when men exalt themselves, feeling that they are a necessity for the success of God's great plan, the Lord causes them to be set aside. It is made evident that the Lord is not dependent upon them. The work does not stop because of their removal from it, but goes forward with greater power."—"Desire of Ages," page 518.

18. Of what must we be stripped before God can do anything for us?

"The Lord can do nothing toward the recovery of man until, convinced of his own weakness, and stripped of all self-sufficiency, he yields himself to the control of God. Then he can receive the gift that God is waiting to bestow. From the soul that feels his need, nothing is withheld. He has unrestricted access to him in whom all fulness dwells."—"Desire of Ages," page 347.

19. Many have served self so long that in their efforts to uplift Jesus, unconsciously to themselves, whom do they exalt?

"Watch unto prayer. In this way alone can you put your whole being into the Lord's work. Self must be put in the background. Those who make self prominent, gain an education that soon becomes second nature to them, and they will soon fail to realize that instead of uplifting Jesus, they uplift themselves; that instead of being channels through which the living water can flow to refresh others, they absorb the sympathies and affections of those around them. This is not loyalty to our crucified Lord."—"Testimony to Ministers," page 330.

20. What is shut out of our hearts until self is emptied out? What is given us when self has been expelled?

"We can receive of heaven's light only as we are willing to be emptied of self. We can not discern the character of God, or accept Christ by faith, unless we consent to the bringing into captivity of every thought to the obedience of Christ. To all who do this, the Holy Spirit is given without measure."—"Desire of Ages," page 202.

21. When every false god is cast out of the soul, what fills the place?

"When one is fully emptied of self, when every false god is cast out of the soul, the vacuum is supplied by the inflowing of the Spirit of Christ. Such a one has the faith which works by love and purifies the soul from every moral and spiritual defilement. The Holy Spirit, the Comforter, can work upon the heart, influencing, directing, so that he enjoys spiritual things. He is after the Spirit, and he minds the things of the Spirit. He has no confidence in self; Christ is all in all."—"Testimony for Ministers," page 370.

22. With what sacrifices is God well pleased?

"'The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.' Man must be emptied of self before he can be, in the fullest sense, a believer in Jesus. When self is renounced, then the Lord can make man a new creature. New bottles contain the new wine."—"Desire of Ages," page 323.

Children's Lesson — No. 6

Who Shall Go?

Begin this lesson by showing that children always wish to be invited to any place their parents may go. The eager question is asked, "Who shall go?" They do not wish to be left behind.

The Lord never leaves out the children when he sends invitations. (Illustrate by the children of Israel when leaving Egypt. Ex. 10:8, 9.)

The Lord cared for the children by appointing the Passover. Ex. 12:23. Made memorial for them. Joshua 4: 19-24. Loves them just as well now, and says to them, "Come."

He has sent us an invitation to-day. Joel 2:12-14. Whom has he invited? Verse 16. Will you come?

Another Year of Missionary Advance

W. A. SPICER

(Reading for Friday, December 17)

Never yet has come to us a week of prayer that did not mark another year of missionary advance. That is something to thank God for. Every turn in the road grows brighter with promise. Every year calls to us in louder tones that the warning message is speeding on, and that we are to follow hard after in our praying and giving and going.

Who can ever weary of watching the progress of the message? The news of the fields will never become an old story with us. We are seeing the hand of the Lord at work. We are watching in these days the work that prophets and kings and angels have looked forward to through the ages.

Isaiah saw it in vision. He saw the redeemed being gathered in the last days to Zion. He heard the world scoffing as the people in whose heart is God's law went forth with the last gathering message. He saw that people rise and shine. In his joy, he cried out by inspiration to that favored people:—

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth! Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion. . . . The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God." Isa. 52:7-10.

All the prophets and saints have longed to see this day. Daniel and John pointed out the very time when the message would be heard, and in The Revelation it was seen actually reaching every nation and tongue, leaving everywhere it touched a people keeping the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. We are face to face with it all to-day. We are seeing just what the prophets talked about and longed so to see, and all the word will be gloriously fulfilled.

This very year has marked a new era in this missionary advance. Did not all our hearts burn within us as we read or heard the reports of the recent General Conference? With one voice, brethren from all the four quarters of the earth testified that the power of this blessed message is transforming lives and building up a successful work in every land it touches. And what a cry of need came to us in this united call from the fields! Rolled into one voice, it is a cry like the sound of many waters calling, "Send us help." Our embarrassments are not those of lack of success. The victories everywhere, the opening doors, the souls looking this way for help, the crying need, place us where the only possible thing for any believer to do is to cut loose and cut down, and throw every available resource of means and time and strength into the service.

What the delegates told us at the Conference about open doors, and the reports that constantly come, correspond exactly to these words from the spirit of prophecy:—

> "Our General gives the command, 'Go forward.' Thousands are thirsting for living truth. The Macedonian cry is coming to us from every direction, 'Come over and help us.' Time and again I have had presented before me a vision of people across the broad ocean, standing in perplexity, and pale with anxiety, earnestly inquiring, 'What is truth?' They say: 'We want the bread of life. . . . We want to find the old paths. We want to come back to the simplicity of gospel religion.' My tears flow as I see this picture rising vividly before me. The voice from heaven pleads, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.'"—Mrs. E. G. White, in "Stewardship Series," No. 1.

Think of that brother in Siberia traveling two thousand miles to find one of our ministers who could teach him this message! Then think of two or three ordained ministers in that whole vast country. A church elder away in Russian Turkestan, Central Asia, reports a baptism with three hundred people gathered at the riverside, some to scoff and some to pray. So pressing was the crowd, the believers had to wade out to a little island, and there, with the manifest presence of the Holy Spirit, true souls followed their Lord in baptism. We had no thought of the Turkestan region as a near field for our work three years ago. Now the message is stirring the people there.

From Riga, Russia, Sister J. T. Boettcher sends us a word for this service, Elder Boettcher being away in the south, looking for a site for their Russian school. What cause for thanksgiving, by the way, that a school in Russia can now be planned for! A little time ago it could not have been mentioned aloud. Here is the message from Russia, a letter sent to the Riga headquarters from the believers away in Manchuria, near the Chinese border. They have never seen a minister, and write from Harbin:—

"Dear Brethren: You write us that Elder Loebsack is in the city of Akmolinsk, Siberia,— that is pleasing to the Lord, and causes us great joy,— but if you knew how we long for a minister to come to us as soon as possible! Here are many souls who wish to be baptized for the forgiveness of sins. I will not write much, for you have already heard of the Seventh-day Adventists in Harbin. Christ says, 'Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.' On the eleventh of August a child of one of the brethren in Harbin died. We accompanied the body to the graveyard, and at the funeral many people were there, both Chinese and Russians, who wondered greatly that we had no leader. But we know that Christ is our leader."

Thank God for the first light of the message kindled in Manchuria! Turn where we may, we find hearts now seeking to find those who have the truth for this time. From the Balkans, Southeastern Europe, Elder Hinter reports an experience. As he travels, he scatters tracts and papers. One night recently, at a late hour, a knocking was heard at the door of his dwelling in Bucharest, Rumania. Some one opened the door, and found three peasants standing without, who had walked from a village about fifty miles distant. On being asked why they sought the house of Mr. Hinter at such an hour, they replied:—

"We seek the way of salvation, and have heard that from this man the way of salvation may be learned. We have received a paper with his address, and so have come here on foot to receive instruction."

From away in the Cook Islands, in the South Pacific, an islander who had received the Rarotongan paper and some books, writes:—

"My joy is beyond expression. There came a young man to our shores, Tonga by name, and sold many books here. He sold a case full in just a twinkling. Now the result is this, that there is no use of any missionary preaching unto us fables. . . . Send us more and more light."

Down in Africa there is real hearthunger. "The natives come hundreds of miles to our stations," said Elder Edmed at the General Conference, "to plead for teachers." Elder R. C. Porter,

Thy Will Be Done

WORTHIE HARRIS HOLDEN

I KNOW not, Lord, that e'en one soul
  Hath through me found thy fold;
I know not if my stammering tongue
  One half thy grace hath told;
Nor half thy blessings daily given
  Do I to thee confess;
Yet all my days, by mercies crowned,
  Proclaim thy faithfulness.

I would my lips might burn with fire
  From off thine altar, Lord,
That so my praise, attuned to heaven,
  With angels might accord.
I would my voice might travel far
  To those in darkest night,
And lead them past the maze of sin
  Through penitence to light;

But one thing only do I plead,
  That Jesus may be mine;
Each day, each hour, my guide, to lead
  Where'er thy will design.
Then humbly may I live the task
  In love allotted me,
Assured my place must be the best
  In which to worship thee.

Visits to Philadelphia, New York, and Newark

W. C. WHITE

FRIDAY morning, June 11, Mrs. E. G. White closed her work in Washington, and in the afternoon went to Philadelphia, to spend the Sabbath. She was accompanied by Miss Sara McEnterfer and the writer. (2)

At the meeting with conference presidents and members of the General Conference Committee held in the Seminary building Friday morning, Mrs. White made another earnest appeal in behalf of the work to be done in the large cities. She said: —

(1) [" When I think of the many cities yet unwarned, I can not rest. It is distressing to think that they have been neglected so long. For many, many years the cities of America, including the cities in the South, have been set before our people as places needing special attention. A few have borne the burden of working in these cities; but, in comparison with the great needs and the many opportunities, but little has been done. Where is your faith, my brethren? Where are the workmen?] In many of our large cities the first and second angels' messages were proclaimed during the 1844 movement. To you, as God's servants, has been entrusted the third angel's message, the binding-off message, that is to prepare a people for the coming of our King.

"Time is short. The Lord desires that everything connected with his cause shall be brought into order. He desires that the solemn message of warning and of invitation shall be proclaimed as widely as his messengers can carry it. The means that shall come into the treasury is to be used wisely in supporting the workers. Nothing that would hinder the advance of the message is to be allowed to come into our planning.

"Night after night, I have lain awake, weeping and pleading with God, because of the seeming inability of some to discern opportunities for extending our efforts into the many unworked places,— near-by places that might have been warned years ago, had we chosen to do a broad work, rather than to hover around a few centers. We need to cultivate a spirit of self-sacrifice, and of constant devotion to the needs of a lost world.

"For years the pioneers of our work struggled against poverty and manifold hardship in order to place the cause of present truth on vantage-ground. With meager facilities, they labored untiringly; and the Lord blessed their humble efforts. The laborers of to-day may not have to endure all the hardships of those early days. The change of condition, however, should not lead to any slackening of effort. And now, when the Lord bids us proclaim the message once more with power in the East; when he bids us enter the cities of the East, and of the South, and of the North, and of the West, shall we not respond as one man, and do his bidding? [Shall we not plan to send messengers all through these fields, and support them liberally? Shall not the ministers of God go into these crowded centers, and there lift up their voices in warning to multitudes? At such a time as this, every hand is to be employed.]

"O, that we might see the needs of these great cities as God sees them! We must plan to place in these great cities capable men who can present the third angel's message in a manner so forceful that it will strike home to the heart. Men who can do this, we can not afford to gather into one place, to do a work that others might do. Can we expect the inhabitants of these cities to come to us and say, 'If you will come to us and preach, we will help you to do thus and so'?

"Shall we not advance in faith, just as if we had thousands of dollars? We do not have half faith enough. Let us do our part in warning these cities. The warning message must come to the people who are ready to perish unwarned, unsaved. How can we delay? As we advance, the means will come. But we must advance in faith, trusting in the Lord God of Israel."

Arriving in Philadelphia, we were met by Elder W. H. Heckman, and taken to the Pennsylvania Sanitarium. This institution is owned and loyally supported by the Eastern Pennsylvania Conference. It is housed in an excellent building; it is well managed, and has an able corps of physicians and nurses. It enjoys a liberal patronage from the citizens of Philadelphia, but its location (where the noise of street-cars reaches it) and its limited capacity make it difficult for the institution to accomplish what was at first expected of it,— to pay all expenses, to pay interest on the investment, and to clear away the debt.

This sanitarium was one of the last to be located before our physicians began to consider seriously the counsel to select rural locations for our institutions for the sick. How to secure a proper location in the country for this institution, and thus open the way for the enlargement of the work, is a problem that must be studied.

[Sabbath afternoon, the beautiful and commodious meeting-house in West Philadelphia was crowded to its utmost capacity. The day was warm, and abundant ventilation was needed. But the beautiful colored windows were not built to open. As a result, the congregation suffered intensely, and the speaker was so poisoned that she experienced great suffering for a week, and was barely able to fill one of her three appointments in New York City. Why will a people having abundance of information on health, sanitation, and ventilation, allow wrongly built meeting-houses to stand year after year as closed reservoirs for poison air?] (3)

During her discourse, Mrs. White urged the importance of consecrated efforts being put forth by church-members, to spread the gospel message. She said: —

"The Lord wants us to be colaborers with him, to help those who are perishing for lack of the knowledge that we have. We need men clothed with the righteousness of Christ, to labor in every city, in every community. Those who profess to be his followers should humble their hearts, so that they can labor in a simple and acceptable manner.

"Our Lord called his disciples from the humble rank of fishermen. So to-day he can use those who will follow him, even though they may not have had opportunity to receive what is regarded as a high education. As they humbly and prayerfully study the Scripture, the spirituality of the Word will lay hold on their minds, and they will go forth prepared to labor acceptably for the Master. All who really appreciate the great sacrifice that has been made in our behalf will gladly make sacrifices, that others may be strengthened to grow up into Christ the living head."

Friday morning, June 18, we went to New York. During the last thirty miles of the journey, Mrs. White viewed with lively interest the many cities located so closely to one another, and several she pointed out as places that had been presented to her as neglected communities, where work should be done as soon as possible.

In New York, our brethren had located a large tent on a vacant lot in a populous district, and Elders S. N. Haskell, E. W. Farnsworth, G. B. Starr, C. L. Edwards, and C. S. Longacre, and Dr. D. H. Kress united with the ministers of the Greater New York Conference in conducting general meetings.

Mrs. White spoke in the tent on Sabbath forenoon, June 19, dwelling upon the experiences of Christ at his baptism, and during his severe temptations in the wilderness, as recorded in the third and fourth chapters of Matthew. In response to an invitation for all who desired to do so to signify their reconsecration to the Master's service, practically the entire congregation arose.

The Newark Meeting

Before leaving Washington, it had been planned that if able to do so, Mrs. White would speak in Newark, N. J., Sunday morning, June 20. The church in Newark is one of the largest in the conference, and it was a convenient place for representatives from all the churches in northern New Jersey to gather. Therefore Elder B. F. Kneeland had urged the making of this appointment, and had notified the churches.

After the sickness in Philadelphia, the Sabbath service in New York completely exhausted Mrs. White's strength, and it seemed unreasonable to ask her to go to Newark Sunday. But all necessary preparations were made for the trip, and we waited to hear her decision Sunday morning. Courage and a desire to fill the Newark appointment were her first words, and so the carriage was ordered, a hasty breakfast taken, and then came the twelve-mile drive.

At Newark a congregation of about three hundred were assembled, and Mrs. White spoke to them with her old-time simplicity and power regarding daily Christian experience, the duties of home religion, and the proper training of the children.

In the afternoon Dr. Kress gave an address on practical hygiene, which was greatly appreciated, and after this the representatives of several churches engaged in a council about tract and missionary work. The membership of the New Jersey Conference is not large, but there is among the workers a faith and enthusiasm that must bring great results.

The twelve-mile drive back to New York was warm and wearisome, and Mrs. White suffered much with rheumatism, therefore she pleaded to be released from further appointments in New York, and we took the early train Monday forenoon for South Lancaster, Mass.

Clergy Censure Governor

K. C. RUSSELL

THE Washington Post of October 26 contains the following interesting and suggestive paragraph: —

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., OCTOBER 25.— At a meeting of the Methodist Ministers' Association to-day, Governor Marshall was severely criticized, and a resolution adopted censuring him for the following utterances at a meeting of the Associated Charities at Columbus last night: 'When the average man joins the church, Mrs. Millionaire looks at him with her turned-up nose, and says, "He can not sit in my pew; he does not belong to my set." When the average woman joins the church, her standing depends on the cut of her gown and the style of her hat. If the church of the living God would get back to where every man and woman were a brother or sister, the churches of the State would soon be filled with communicants.'"

To the mind of the thoughtful reader there are a number of queries that naturally arise as he reflects on the foregoing statements. He would probably wish to ask those who censured the governor, "Do you think the governor's statement incorrect?" If so, it is nevertheless in fullest harmony with the utterances of many of the most faithful, talented, and discerning ministers of all the denominations. Then why censure him? We do not recall any similar rebukes for the men of God who have frequently and freely given utterance to the same scathing accusations. Was it because such words from so eminent a layman are more apt to offend the rich of the church and reduce the flow of finance into the sacred treasury?

If not for this reason, was the censure because the governor's words were a reflection upon the clergy for their failure to preach against the rapidly growing spirit of pride and worldliness which is so alarmingly prevailing in many of the popular churches of the time?

To the careful student of God's Word, the utterances of the governor are but too true a verbal portrait of a condition that is to exist in the last days among those who make a high profession of religion. That Word says that "in the last days . . . men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, . . . despisers of those that are good, . . . having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

At the time when these things are to exist, the charge to the gospel minister is, "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, . . . Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come [has come] when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." This scripture has its application to our own time, and we see its fulfilment to-day.

In view of this, then, let no one — much less a minister of the gospel — attempt to silence the voice of one who has the exemplary boldness to speak forth in no uncertain way against the worldliness that is sapping the very life of the professed church of Jesus Christ.

The Day at Hand

D. T. SHIREMAN

"THE night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." Rom. 13:12. Do we realize as we ought the great fact that the long night of sin, darkness, and suffering will soon be past? Do we really believe it? Are we putting off the works of darkness and putting on the armor of light?

Says Inspiration: "And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." If we know this, we will show it by our works. How can we expect to be saved from the coming destruction if we fail to have on the armor of light and let that light shine out to those in darkness?

We do not need to go to foreign fields to find work. Our first work is around our homes — for our neighbors. It is not so much to argue with them as to show Christ's love by deeds of kindness. "It is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." The time of our salvation is fifty-two years nearer than when I first believed. How glad I am that the Lord has given me a humble part in this solemn work. The words of our Saviour are, "Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand," and, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." "The golden morning is fast approaching; Jesus soon will come" May we be ready.

Keep the Church Out of Debt

HELEN A. STEINHAUER

"Do you pay tithes?"—"Of course, I do." Well, then, imitate the Israelites, and always put aside as much more as a free-will offering. In this way the contribution-box need never pass you, for be it much or little, you will always have something to put in. You will be able to keep up your end of church expenses; and if the rich will lay aside a free-will offering tithe too, as well as their poorer brethren, the church never will be in debt. Moreover, no one will feel the poorer for what he gives, as the Lord will repay.

Battle Creek, Mich.

IT would make Christian life a great deal more simple for us if we would get it definitely settled in our minds that obedience is the one thing in discipleship. It is never ours to consider the expediency of any command that is given to us, or to inquire into the probabilities of success or failure in what we are bidden to do. The moment our duty is clear, it is ours to do it without question, without doubting, without reasoning. The lack of it is the cause of so much indefiniteness, indecisiveness, vacillation, and weakness in many Christian lives.— Southern Presbyterian.

of righteousness. God's purpose is the same through the ages, though the details of its outworking may change from century to century. His ultimate purpose is the rule of righteousness in every portion of his realm. So sure as God exists, just so certain will he triumph over sin, and he has so arranged it that the frailest mortal that ever stood upon this earth may share in that glorious triumph.

It is a wonderful opportunity given to mortal man; and it is to the glory of God that he can take the weak things of this world and with them overthrow the kingdom and powers of darkness; that he can take sinful men and with them bring in the rule of everlasting righteousness — not because of their sin, but because of their loyalty and submission to him in his unchanging purpose. To have a part in that triumph is the greatest privilege that man could ask, and to share in the glorious result of it will satisfy every redeemed soul.

War-Ships and Peaceful Pageants

UNDER this heading the Denver Republican of September 29, gives expression to the following pertinent and sensible remarks, in regard to the recent display of war-vessels at the Hudson-Fulton celebration: —

> The despatch of war-vessels by Great Britain, Germany, and other foreign powers to participate in the Hudson-Fulton celebration at New York City was a great honor to the United States, and evidence of the friendship of the nations represented. But how incongruous, after all, was the presence of these floating fortresses and their frowning guns in the midst of a peaceful pageant designed to commemorate events which had nothing to do with war.
> War-vessels are sent upon occasions of this kind because they seem more distinctly than merchant ships to possess a national character. They represent the sovereign power, as ambassadors are distinguished from ministers by the fact that they represent the person of the ruler. But in this very particular it is unfortunate that circumstances seem to make their employment requisite; for they tell of force, and from every port-hole destruction glares. . . .
> Should a similar occasion offer, how much better would it be if the United States, instead of sending a fleet of battle-ships to represent the naval strength of this country, were to despatch an equal number of vessels engaged in commerce and bearing in their structure and character a message of peace from the American people to all the world.

But the suggestion of the Denver Republican will never be carried out. The spirit of these times demands pomp and pageantry, and peace is not the offspring of such a spirit, nor does it foster such demonstrations. The world is preparing for its greatest war, and nothing so fitly shows that fact as the representation of nations at peaceful functions by ships that bristle with cannon.

Christ's Eight Sentences While on the Cross

NOAH W. VINCENT

NAILS pierced our Saviour's hands and feet,
  Sharp thorns had pierced his brow;
As if for earth nor heaven meet,
  See Christ uplifted now!
In love he prays, "Father, forgive,
  They know not what they do."
His Father hears, the murderers live;
  God's boundless love how true!

Soon to the contrite, trusting thief,
  Who owns his dying Lord,
Christ gives in death a sweet relief,
  Sure hope of blest reward:
"To-day," said he, "do I declare,
  True are my words to thee,
In paradise, God's city fair,
  Together we shall be!"

Next, to his mother standing there,
  The sad, heart-piercéd one,
Christ says in tender, filial care,
  "Woman, behold thy son!"
Then to his loved disciple John,
  Still near, his friend, his brother,
Come lovingly from lips death-wan,
  The words, "Behold thy mother!"

Hear now Emmanuel's dying cry
  Of sharpest agony;
O list! "My God, my God, O why
  Hast thou forsaken me?"
Well known was this long, long before,
  Foretold e'en from the first.
Fulfilling now one scripture more,
  Our Saviour cries, "I thirst!"

The work God gave he had well done;
  "'Tis finished!" loud he cries:
Slain Lamb of God! Atoning Son!
  Sin-ending Sacrifice!
Our sins, our shame, the Saviour bore
  When nailed to Calvary's tree;
God's love in Christ may we adore
  To all eternity.

"Father," he breathes, "into thy hands
  My spirit I commend;"
Then bowed his head in death's strong bands:
  So died the sinner's Friend.
In love he prays for us to-day;
  O heed our Saviour's call!
Let's come to him, his word obey;
  Find him our God, our all.

Visit in Central New England

D. E. ROBINSON

AFTER resting for four days at the home of Brother H. C. Wilcox in South Lancaster, Mass., Mrs. E. G. White and her helpers left to attend the Central New England camp-meeting, held at Nashua, N. H. The grounds were in a good residence portion of the city, on a street-car line. There was a good attendance, there being a larger number present than at any previous camp-meeting since the formation of the Atlantic Union Conference, and the division of the former New England Conference. Among the other laborers present were Elders S. N. Haskell, H. J. Edmed, E. W. Farnsworth, F. C. Gilbert, H. C. Hartwell, F. W. Stray, and C. S. Longacre, also Dr. D. H. Kress and Prof. B. F. Machlan.

During the forenoon meeting on Sabbath, June 26, the Spirit of the Lord was manifest in a marked manner. Mrs. White spoke, basing her remarks upon the chapters in Exodus containing the account of the giving of the law from Sinai, Israel's apostasy, and Moses's intercession with God in their behalf.

"I have read of this experience," she said, "that we may not become careless or indifferent, thinking that it makes no great difference if we do not exactly fulfil God's requirements. Many even think that it matters not whether they observe as the Sabbath the day that God has plainly specified, or substitute a day of man's invention. In the Judgment we shall all be judged by the standard of God's Word.

"The mercy and compassion of God have been manifested in long-suffering kindness to his people. Let us follow on to know the Lord, that we may know that 'his going forth is prepared as the morning.' In the gift of Christ we see something of the measure of God's love to us. 'For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.' What have we manifested of self-denial and self-sacrifice in Christ's service? Unless we are in communion with God, unless we reveal the fruits of a pure and undefiled religion, our religious profession is worthless.

"Heaven is open for us. God is waiting, longing to bestow upon us his choicest blessings, if we will come to him as little children. And we need all the power that we can receive. In a little while from this, the power of Satan will be so manifest that it will be impossible for you to enjoy such advantages as you do to-day. I beg of you to appreciate these advantages, and to make of this gathering a season of earnest seeking of the Lord.

"I long to see souls converted at this meeting. How many here will seek the Lord with all their hearts? You can not make yourselves any better, but you may come to the Saviour just as you are. We feel in earnest in the matter of preparing for the coming of our Saviour in the clouds of heaven. I am sure that there are many here to-day who will take their stand on the Lord's side."

Mrs. White then requested some of the front seats to be vacated, and made a call for those who desired to receive special help in drawing near to God, to come forward. She appealed specifically to the unconverted, to backsliders, and to children and parents. While many were responding to the invitation, she said: —

"We are not to fix an arbitrary time on such occasions as this when our meetings must close. When the Spirit of God begins to work, we must not restrict its operations, even if a rule has been made that the meeting shall close at a certain hour or minute."

Elder Gilbert, Elder Haskell, and others joined in seconding this earnest appeal, and the silent but powerful work of the Spirit on hearts was manifested as one and another went forward. Earnest prayer was then offered in behalf of this company. Afterward they were divided into a number of divisions, and opportunity was given for each to bear testimony. Though this service continued for over three hours, those present felt that it was a time of refreshing.

In a discourse Sunday forenoon, Mrs. White emphasized the importance of Christian education. She said: —

"Some speak of the 'higher education,' meaning a training that is only to be received by men who do not believe in the Word of God. Jesus Christ was sent to this world to make known that which is essential for salvation. How could we discount his teachings more than by sending our children and youth to be educated by men who do not recognize the authority of the Word of God? We are seeking to prepare for the heavenly courts. We desire our children to be welcomed into the city of God when its golden gates shall be swung back on their glittering hinges, that the nations that have kept the truth may enter in. Then how can we consistently place these children under the influence of those who will insinuate into their minds error and doubts, even though their teachings are called 'higher education'?

"The highest education you can receive is to learn how to 'add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . For if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.'"

In closing her remarks, Mrs. White made another appeal for reconsecration, and a few were added to the number who the day before had expressed their determination to seek the Lord anew. Tuesday forenoon many of these were buried in baptism; and before the meeting closed, another baptismal service was held. Forty-two candidates in all submitted gladly to this solemn rite.

Tuesday afternoon, Mrs. White again addressed the congregation assembled in the large tent. She read and commented upon the instruction found in the fifteenth chapter of John, and made a strong appeal for individual efforts to be put forth in giving the message to friends and neighbors.

"In our homes," she said, "we have a very important work to do for the salvation of our children, but we are not to shut ourselves up to service merely for our own families. We must not allow ourselves to be so overwhelmed with household cares that we shall find no time for visiting those about us. If a ray of light has come to you, find some one to whom you can impart it. There is a world to be warned, and we are to receive help and light and blessing from Jesus Christ, then carry this light to other souls. In this work you will not labor alone; angels of God will go before you.

"If you are repulsed by some one to whom you try to speak of the salvation of Christ, do not become discouraged. Do not say, 'I will never speak to him again regarding religious subjects.' The angels of God may work upon his heart, and prepare him for that which you desire to impart to him. He who is our advocate in the heavenly courts, has bidden us carry his gospel into every part of the earth, and he gives us the comforting assurance, 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.' Shall one of us hold back from engaging in this service with him?

"As a people we need to arouse, that we may realize the value that Christ has placed upon the human soul. Day by day we are brought in contact with those who are unsaved, and shall we let them go as though they had no souls to save? Since I left Washington, I have passed through city after city, and I have asked the question, Who is laboring here? Who feels a burden to go from house to house, visiting and praying with the people, and carrying to them the precious publications containing the truths that mean eternal life to those who receive them? There is a work for women as well as for men. Paul speaks of the women who labored with him in the gospel. All who dedicate themselves unreservedly to God will have a message to bear."

Wednesday morning, June 30, Mrs. White and a party, including Elder and Mrs. Edmed and Elder Haskell, accompanied Elder Gilbert to Concord, Mass. A few hours were spent in driving about the beautiful and historic portions of Concord, then the party were driven out to the property that has been secured as a refuge home for Jewish workers and converts. The home is beautifully located, and the buildings seem well adapted to the work. Elder Gilbert and his associates have labored untiringly in the securing and fitting up of the institution.

When the family were gathered for dinner, Mrs. White led out in earnest prayer, acknowledging with gratitude the providence of God that had led in the securing of the property, and asking his blessing to rest upon the work and the workers. After dinner the party were driven over a portion of the land, until it was necessary to hasten to take the train for South Lancaster.

Thursday morning, Mrs. White and her helpers drove to Sterling, a distance of about five miles from South Lancaster, to visit the "Pilgrims' Rest," a property recently purchased by the Atlantic Union Conference as a home for some of our aged brethren and sisters. This property consists of one hundred fourteen acres of land, a twenty-six-room house, and a well-built, commodious barn. The house was originally built by the town of Sterling. At the time of our visit, the building was being fitted up for use. Several applications had been made for admission, but the home had not been formally opened.

In securing this home, our brethren did not intend to ignore the obligations resting upon the relatives of our aged brethren and sisters to care for those of their own household. Nor would they remove from the members of local churches the responsibility of caring for the poor and needy among them. But there are some who have no one to whom they can look for sympathy or support, and for such as these the Pilgrims' Rest gives promise of furnishing an ideal retreat.

A Learned Professor on Spiritism

GEO. O. STATES

The Literary Digest of October 2 contains some interesting extracts from an article on Spiritism, by Prof. William James. After stating that he had been investigating this question for twenty-five years, he admits himself "constantly baffled" as to what to think of this or that particular story, for the sources of error in any one observation are seldom fully knowable. "I find myself believing that there is 'something in' these never-ending reports of physical phenomena, although I haven't yet the least positive notion of the something. It becomes to my mind simply a very worthy problem for investigation."

After mentioning some of the mysteries of these phenomena, he says: "If there were in the universe a lot of diffuse soul-stuff, unable of itself to get into consistent personal form, or to take permanent possession of an organism, yet always craving to do so, it might get its head into the air, parasitically, so to speak, by profiting by weak spots in the armor of human minds, and slipping in and stirring up there the sleeping tendency to personate." He closed by saying: "I personally am as yet neither a convinced believer in parasitic demons, nor a Spiritist, nor a scientist, but still remain a psychical researcher waiting for more facts before concluding."

Aug. 24, 1850, just a few years after the manifestation of Spiritualism, we were told that the "mysterious rapping" was the power of Satan: "I was say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

The forgiveness offered is for sins committed. The pardon extended is to sinners, and the invitation to come is to those who are guilty of sin. Whosoever will, let him come without money and without price — come to God through Jesus Christ and find pardon and cleansing from all sin.

The Home Run

THE year 1909 is rapidly passing. Only three more weeks remain, when a new year will be ushered in. How many Seventh-day Adventists have done their full duty during 1909 in contributing to the support of foreign missions?

One State secretary writes that he wishes to know the last day of 1909 when money can reach the General Conference Office to be entered on the books for the calendar year. He says, "We purpose not simply to make our offering to foreign missions ten cents a week, but we are struggling to make it reach twenty cents a week."

Both union and local conferences are throwing themselves with great vigor into the effort to raise money for foreign missions. Every Seventh-day Adventist who has not paid his full quota of ten cents a week for foreign missions, ought to endeavor to make up the deficit at the earliest possible date, so that the same can be passed through the books to be credited on the year 1909.

Shall not the remaining portion of 1909 witness the most vigorous campaign in behalf of foreign mission funds in the history of our people? May each one endeavor, with God's help, to do his best.

WHERE there is a loyal heart but no teacher, God can and does speak direct to the soul in darkness. Said Adlooat, an Eskimo boy: —

"When I am little boy, I use tobacco, and like it very much. By and by God speaks to me, out on Bering Sea in a storm, and I know God saves me. But do you think I give up tobacco then? O, no! I love God; I love tobacco. No one tells me tobacco will hurt me. One day when walking down by the beach, something seems to speak to me inside, just the same as in the storm, and it says: 'What for do you use tobacco?' I say: 'I don't know.' Then I walk along a little way, and again the voice speaks to me and says: 'What good is that stuff anyway?' I say: 'No good, I guess.' The third time the voice speaks to me and says: 'Why don't you quit?' And I quit, and never use that tobacco again. Now I am poor Eskimo boy, and no missionary or teacher to tell me what is right, and so God tells me himself."

SOMETIMES, while standing on the rock,
His glory passes by;
Sometimes his presence floods my soul
Though tears bedim my eye;
Sometimes the fog, so damp and cold,
Banks closely round my heart;
But God, I know, is light and love,
And ne'er from me will part.

Nor principalities nor powers
Can sever from his love,
Nor height nor depth can isolate
From that great power above;
And though so small, so weak, so vile,
I naught on him impose
By loving him who first loved me,
And all my frailty knows.

Ah, when the night-winds shriek and howl,
Know he is very nigh,
Just as when glory-clouds reflect
His shining in the sky:
And when earth's storms are overpassed,—
Eternal morn awakes,—
My Jesus still will be my all,
Who never me forsakes.

At the Portland Camp-Meeting

D. E. ROBINSON

JULY 2, Mrs. E. G. White and her party traveled from South Lancaster to Portland, Maine. At Nashua we were joined by Elder and Mrs. S. N. Haskell, Elder and Mrs. H. J. Edmed, and Brother F. M. Dana. Mrs. White was met at Woodfords Station by Mr. C. S. Bangs, a son of her twin sister, and during her visit she was made welcome at his home, which was but a short distance from the camp.

For several years Mrs. White had cherished the hope of once more bearing her message to the people of Portland, Maine, and when at the General Conference old friends urged her to visit Maine, she agreed to do so. Therefore a camp-meeting was appointed to be held in Portland, beginning July 2. A beautiful spot was selected for the camp at Deering's Oaks, about two miles from the business section of Portland.

Owing to the associations of her childhood and youth, this visit to Portland was of special interest to Mrs. White. It was in this city that she attended school till she met with the accident that made her an invalid for many years. Here it was that she heard the powerful preaching of William Miller; and here, after a period of despair, Jesus revealed himself, and she seemed to see his blessed face beaming upon her in divine love and gentleness. Across the river formerly stood the house where, in November, 1844, she received her first vision, and where she spent a night of anguish at the thought of going out to relate to others the things that God had presented to her. In Portland and its vicinity she and her husband had labored together in the early days of this message. During her stay she visited some of the localities of special interest in connection with her early life.

Sabbath morning, July 3, Mrs. White spoke in the tent, giving lessons from the experiences of Israel as rehearsed by Moses in the fourth chapter of Deuteronomy. From this discourse we give the following: —

"'Your eyes have seen what the Lord did because of Baal-peor; for all the men that follow Baal-peor, the Lord thy God hath destroyed them from among you. But ye that did cleave unto the Lord are alive every one of you this day.'

"It makes a great difference whether we are obedient or disobedient to the word of the Lord. Let us make sure that we stand in right relation to God. There is a God in heaven who guards his people, but we need to take heed lest we place ourselves in such relation to him that he can not protect us.

"'Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it. Keep therefore, and do them; for this is your wisdom and understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this nation is a wise and understanding people. For what nation is there so great, who hath God so nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is in all things that we call upon him for?'

"The success of Israel in the promised land was made dependent upon their observance of God's commandments. This instruction is for us as verily as for them. These commandments have never been abrogated, and in the day of judgment they will be brought forward as the standard by which all shall be tried. Angels of God are writing in the books of heaven our life record; and if we remain true to God, serving him with exact obedience, our faithfulness will be remembered, and will have its reward.

"'Furthermore,' said Moses, 'the Lord was angry with me for your sakes, and sware that I should not go over Jordan, and that I should not go in unto that good land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.'

"I feel like weeping every time I read of Moses' mistake, with its consequent bitter disappointment. The children of Israel had come to a place where there was no water. Forgetful of how many times the Lord had delivered them, they murmured and complained, and found fault with Moses. Moses and Aaron sought the Lord, and he bade them speak unto the rock, and promised that water should flow forth. But Moses was provoked with the people because of their unreasonable course, and he spoke hastily in anger. 'Hear now, ye rebels,' he said, 'must we bring you water out of this rock?' He smote the rock twice with his rod, and the water came forth. But the Lord had not told him to smite the rock. 'Speak ye unto the rock,' was the instruction given to him, 'and it shall give forth his water.'

"'And the Lord said unto Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them.' Moses entreated of the Lord to let him pass over Jordan, but the Lord would not permit him. With this one exception, he had been so faithful and so true — why was this disappointment placed upon him? — Because of his position. If his disobedience had been lightly passed over, it would have made of little account the requirements of God before the people.

"The lesson is for us. We must follow the Word of God exactly. Those who deviate from it, thinking they will come out as well, will in the end find that they have met with a terrible loss. The word of God is precious in his sight, and it is for every one to obey that word to the letter. There must be no careless deviation from duty. Some think that God is not particular, and that, although he specifies in the commandment the seventh day as the Sabbath, yet because it is more convenient for them to observe another day, God will pass by their deviation from his command. Not one of us can afford thus to presume upon God's forbearance.

"It means earnest effort to be among the overcomers. This God would teach his people, even though in order to do so he was obliged to refuse to remit the punishment of faithful Moses. He had made his mistake before all Israel, and God could not pass it by as though he had been obedient. Let us remember that we are serving the same God to-day. Let us prove the Lord. Let us pray to him, and believe that he hears us. If we will trust in him, and be obedient, he will deliver us from all our troubles.

"There is a great work to be done for perishing souls. From the foreign countries, from every part of our earth, there is a call for missionaries. It was my privilege while at Washington to see representatives from many countries. There were some representatives from the heathen world, who had been converted and believe this message. They say, 'We need help, we need teachers, and we need means for the building of churches, schools, and sanitariums. We are willing to help you to learn our language, if you will come and teach the truth to our people.'

"But we need not look away to the foreign fields to find perishing souls. All around us are those to whom we can explain the Scriptures, showing them the simplicity of the truths of the Word of God. We can show them what God has promised to those who will be obedient to his requirements."

The little band of workers in Maine seemed much encouraged by the suggestions made that the time was ripe for an aggressive work to be carried forward in Portland, and in other cities of the East. After speaking of her own early experiences in the city, Mrs. White said: —

"The people of Portland were wonderfully stirred by the proclamation of the messages of the first and second angels. There were powerful speakers, and there was a great deal of visiting from house to house. A deep earnestness characterized the labors of those who took part in this movement. There was one speaker who was almost ready for the grave, but he would not leave his work; for he felt that he must sound the note of warning to as many as possible before he should be taken away and his voice silenced. Meetings were held in the homes of believers all through the city, and the Lord wrought with mighty power.

"A work is to be carried forward here in Portland as the proclamation of the Lord's coming was carried forward in 1843 and 1844. There is a great work to be done in our cities, and we are individually to act our part. Let each one ask himself, What shall I do to meet the mind of the Spirit of God? If any of you have lost the evidence of your communion with God, will you not today reconsecrate yourselves to his service? You will be elevated, ennobled, and sanctified through a belief of the truth. Then you will be fitted to be workers together with God.

"You can not afford to lose the strength that comes from a union with God; for you are to bear his message. There is a part for all to act in carrying the truth throughout this city. Meetings should be conducted by earnest, able ministers, and many should go from house to house with publications filled with the truth. There is but a little time in which to work; for the Lord is soon coming, and we must work diligently to do all in our power to prepare a people to meet him."

The early morning Bible studies by Elder Haskell were greatly enjoyed. They were of a nature to strengthen faith in the evidences that God has led his people, and that through the gift of prophecy he has made known the counsel of his will. One forenoon was devoted by Elder and Mrs. Haskell, Elder W. C. White, and others to a presentation of the privileges and blessings of personal labor with books and periodicals. Many books were bought by those present for work in their home neighborhoods, and quite a number volunteered to spend a day or a portion of a day during the meeting in house-to-house labor in the city.

The evening of the fourth of July was devoted to a stereopticon lecture by Elder Edmed, the views dealing with scenes of native life and our mission work in South Africa. His story of the growth of our work in that field, and also a discourse on the infallibility of the Bible, were a source of great inspiration.

The meetings increased in attendance and interest during the week. The daily papers contained favorable reports of the meetings, and this served to advertise the camp. The house-to-house visitations of the "field day" workers also greatly augmented the interest, and on the second Sunday of the meeting, there was a very large gathering, among whom were many of the leading citizens of Portland.

When Mrs. White spoke Sunday afternoon, the tent was crowded. The campers were requested to bring all the available chairs from their tents, but when this was done, some were still unable to find seats. Mrs. White spoke with even more than her usual strength and power, and many hearts were melted by her earnest appeals. After a discourse of nearly an hour, she offered a fervent petition to God for his mercy to rest upon the people of Portland, and for the spirit of consecration and service to be poured upon the believers. We believe that a good impression was left upon the congregation who attended this service.

It was our privilege to see the beginning that has been made for a Seventh-day Adventist church in the city of Portland. A lot had been purchased, and the walls were up for the basement of what gave promise of being a neat, commendable place of worship. But the work was at a standstill because of lack of means. Because of the importance of having a memorial in this city, Mrs. White has felt an earnest desire that the needed means should be raised and the building completed as soon as possible. In some of her meetings in the Middle West, she presented the needs of this place, and small sums were contributed. These donations were gratefully received and forwarded to the treasurer of the conference.

A Visit to Melrose and Buffalo

At the close of the Portland camp-meeting, Mrs. White, in company with Elder and Mrs. Haskell and others, went to Boston for a short visit to the New England Sanitarium at Melrose.

Many important changes had taken place in the institution since her last visit, in the summer of 1904. A portion of the original main building had burned down, and a beautiful large four-story building had been built on higher ground. This building and the large new gymnasium and treatment-rooms are well furnished and equipped, and the institution is prepared to do excellent work.

It was to a physician in this sanitarium that Mrs. White wrote in May, 1906: —

"The medical missionary work is a door through which the truth is to find entrance to many homes in the cities. In every city will be found those who will appreciate the truths of the third angel's message. The judgments of God are impending. Why do we not awaken to the peril threatening the men and women living in the great cities of America? Our people do not realize as keenly as they should the responsibility resting upon them to proclaim the truth to the millions dwelling in these unwarned cities.

"There are many souls to be saved. Our own souls are to be firmly grounded in a knowledge of the truth, that we may win others from error to the truth. We need now to search the Scriptures diligently, and as we become acquainted with unbelievers, we are to hold up Christ as the anointed, the crucified, the risen Saviour, witnessed to by prophets, testified of by believers, and through whose name we receive the forgiveness of sins.

"We need now a firm belief in the truth. Let us understand what is truth. Time is very short. Whole cities are being swept away. Are we doing our part to give the message that will prepare a people for the coming of their Lord? May God help us to improve the opportunities that are ours."

Why Conduct Sanitariums?

When a prominent minister who was almost weary of the toil and struggle connected with sanitarium work wrote to Mrs. White, asking if it was necessary to spend so much energy and time in this institutional work, she wrote: —

"In letters received from our brethren, the questions are asked, 'Why do we expend so much effort in establishing sanitariums? Why do we not pray for the healing of the sick, instead of having sanitariums?'

"There is more to these questions than is at first apparent. In the early history of our work, many were healed by prayer. And some, after they were healed, pursued the same course in the indulgence of appetite that they had followed in the past. They did not live and work in such a way as to avoid sickness. They did not show that they appreciated the Lord's goodness to them. Again and again they were brought to suffering through their own careless, thoughtless course of action. How could the Lord be glorified in bestowing on them the gift of health?

"When the light came that we should begin sanitarium work, the reasons were plainly given. There were many who needed to be educated in regard to healthful living. As the work developed, we were instructed that suitable places were to be provided, to which we could bring the sick and suffering who knew nothing of our people and scarcely anything of the Bible, and there teach them how to regain health by rational methods of treatment without having recourse to poisonous drugs, and at the same time surround them with uplifting spiritual influences. As a part of the treatment, lectures were to be given on right habits of eating and drinking and dressing. Instruction was to be given regarding the choice and preparation of food, showing that food may be prepared so as to be wholesome and nourishing, and at the same time appetizing and palatable.

"In all our medical institutions, patients should be systematically and carefully instructed how to prevent disease by a wise course of action. Through lectures and the consistent practise of healthful living on the part of consecrated physicians and nurses, the blinded understanding of many will be opened, and truths never before thought of will be fastened on the mind. Many of the patients will be led to keep the body in the most healthy condition possible, because it is the Lord's purchased possession. . . .

"It is to save the souls, as well as to cure the bodies of men and women, that at much expense our sanitariums are established. God designs that by means of these agencies of his own planting, the rich and the poor, the high and the low, shall find the bread of heaven and the water of life."

The Responsibility of Physicians and Managers

During her visit at Melrose, Mrs. White wrote regarding the duties of those in positions of responsibility as follows: —

"The workers standing at the head of our sanitariums should be prepared to give needed spiritual help to the patients who come to the institution, that these souls may be converted from error to an understanding of the work of God as it is revealed for this time. They are to do faithful service for God, receiving from him a sense of their sacred responsibilities. By prayer and earnest effort they are to be workers together with God for the conversion of souls. By the exercise of faith in God, they are to draw from the source of all power the ability to do the will of God in genuine missionary work. The blessing of the Lord will come in rich measure to the patients through the medium of the sanitarium when the workers in the institution realize their responsibility and act like converted men. The word of the Lord, if received and believed, will be accepted as yea and amen by every earnest seeker.

"To those who have had opportunity to become trustworthy men, but who have not improved their opportunity, I will say, Unless your hearts are changed, and you sense your great responsibility before God, unless you come to an understanding of your own unpreparedness for service, and accept the discipline of the Word of God, other and better qualified men must come in to do your work, — men who have fitted themselves for positions of trust by grasping the opportunities for spiritual advancement that have presented themselves."

Visit to Buffalo

From Melrose, Elder and Mrs. Haskell returned to California, and Mrs. White, with her secretary, Miss Mc Enterfer, and Elder E. W. Farnsworth, went to Buffalo, N. Y., to attend a general meeting appointed for Sabbath and Sunday.

At the Buffalo meeting over two hundred were in attendance. Several came in from neighboring churches. Some of these were accommodated in tents pitched in the church lot, and many found lodging in the basement rooms of the newly purchased meeting-house. These basement rooms may some day be used as a home for city mission workers.

Our people in Buffalo rejoice in the ownership of this substantial, roomy church building. Its former owner, feeling friendly to our work, sold it to our people for much less than its cost.

Several Bible studies were conducted by Elder Farnsworth. Other services were devoted to a study of methods of work for church-members. Mrs. White spoke in the forenoon of both Sabbath and Sunday. In her discourse on Sabbath, she read portions of the seventeenth and eighteenth chapters of Luke, and said:—

"We need more faith. When we have before us these simple records of Christ's labors and his promises, why should we not have a large increase of faith? Only by a constant exercise of intelligent faith, a faith that grows continually, can we properly develop in Christian experience. If we will encourage that faith that grasps the promises of God, these promises will be fulfilled in our behalf.

"O that we might realize the interest with which the heavenly intelligences are looking upon our world! Those who are seeking for righteousness will have divine help. They will ask, and God will hear them. They may not at once experience the feeling that they expect, but God will care for them. If they are in peril, Jesus will deliver them. His praying, believing people are under his special care.

"In Buffalo I have felt the same intense desire that I have felt in other cities through which I have passed, that the many inhabitants may have an opportunity of hearing from the Word of God the truth for these last days. This means that earnest efforts must be put forth by the believers in this vicinity. Let every one put his shoulder to the wheel, and labor in the simplicity of true godliness. We want to learn how to find access in this city.

"Perhaps a work needs to begin in your own church, that all the members may be thoroughly converted. Are some of you devoting your whole time to working your farms, or to devising ways of obtaining riches? The greatest riches you can obtain is the life that measures with the life of God. This is granted to those who serve God, and who are laying up their treasures above.

"Shall we not all be missionaries? Shall not all who profess to be Christians take hold understandingly in an effort to lead others to know the will of God? We must adapt ourselves to various situations, but if we have the grace of God in our hearts, we shall be able to impart light to those with whom we come into contact. Our work is to be done in simplicity. The most effective appeals can be made in the most simple language. Thus the Lord speaks to us in his Word. In the Bible there are some names difficult to pronounce, but there are few words difficult to be understood.

"If we had more of the simplicity of godliness, we should see very many more souls converted to the truth. In this day of preparation, we can not afford to be idle. The Scriptures have pointed out what is to take place in our world. The night is soon coming in which no man can work. Let us take hold in earnest, to make the necessary reformations, that we may be prepared for what is before us.

"Men will arise who will bring in division by teaching various errors. Therefore we must all look to our Teacher. We need to search the Scriptures for ourselves diligently and prayerfully, lest we be drawn away by the subtle deceptions of the enemy. There are many who must have a deeper experience in the things of God. Unless they arouse to a sense of their danger, they will lose their knowledge of what is truth. 'Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you.'

"What more could the Lord do for us than he has done? He has promised us power and strength here, and for the overcomer he has promised an eternal life in the kingdom of glory. He will help you in all your struggles with sin. You can take your trials to him. Who will now accept of Christ, and give himself to him as he has never done before? Who will seek for the comfort and encouragement that Christ has given? Who will search the Scriptures to learn what is truth? Let those arise to their feet who will to-day make a new covenant with God."

In response to this appeal nearly every one in the congregation arose. Mrs. White then offered an earnest prayer that God would let his light shine into their souls, that they might be able to keep the pledge they had made, and that they might so receive the power of the truth that they should lead others to rejoice in the triumphs of the cross.

Christmas; Its Origin and History

S. MORTENSEN

The Origin From Paganism

"Little children, keep yourselves from idols." This admonition is given to us by John, the beloved disciple (1 John 5:21), and those who love Jesus truly are willing to obey the injunction. Now we will note more closely how this festival is related to paganism: "No other Christian festival penetrated so deeply into the household as Christmas, probably because its character is essentially joy, such as it appears in the household. However, many features indicate that there were more Christian elements present in its origin. The giving of the presents was a Roman custom. The yule tree and the yule log are remnants of old Teutonic nature worship. In the household also, the festival gradually sank down to a mere revelry."—Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia.

"From the first institution of this festival, the Western nations seem to have transferred to it many of the follies and censurable practises which prevailed in the pagan festivals of the same season, such as adorning the churches fantastically, mingling puppet-shows and dramas with worship, universal feasting and merrymaking, Christmas visits and salutations, Christmas presents and jocularity, and Christmas revelry and drunkenness. . . . The Christmas holy days, which by a law of Theodosius the Greek (emperor A. D. 383-395) were to comprise fourteen days, . . . have borne so close a resemblance wherever they have been observed to the Roman Saturnalia, Sigillaria, etc., and to the yule feast of the ancient Goths, as to afford strong presumption of an unhappy alliance between them from the first."—"Ecclesiastical History," by Mosheim, Vol. I, page 280.

"Upright men strove to stem the tide, but in spite of all their efforts the apostasy went on, till the church, with the exception of a small remnant, was submerged under pagan superstition. That Christmas was originally a pagan festival is beyond all doubt. The time of year, and the ceremonies with which it is still celebrated, prove its origin. In Egypt the son of Isis, the Egyptian title for the queen of heaven, was born at this very time, 'about the time of the winter solstice.' The very name by which Christmas is popularly known among ourselves — yule day — proves at once its pagan and Babylonian origin. 'Yule' is the Chaldee name for an 'infant' or 'little child;' and as the twenty-fifth of December was called by our pagan Anglo-Saxon ancestors 'yule day,' or the 'child's day,' and the night that preceded it 'mother night,' long before they came in contact with Christianity, that sufficiently proves its real character. Far and wide in the realms of paganism was this birthday observed."—"The Two Babylons," pages 93, 94. "Little children, keep yourselves from idols."

The author of "The Two Babylons" identifies also the child, whose birth was so universally celebrated, with Nimrod, who built the tower of Babel, and says that he was worshiped by the name Osiris in Egypt, and Tammuz (the same one as Adonis the famous hunter) in Phenicia and Assyria. (See page 56.) This Tammuz is also mentioned by the holy prophet Ezekiel, who in a vision saw the women of Judah weeping for him. He is there spoken of in company with sun-worship.

"It was an essential principle of the Babylonian system that the sun, or Baal, was the one only god. When, therefore, Tammuz was worshiped as God incarnate, that implied also that he was an incarnation of the sun."—"The Two Babylons," page 96.

In this way we trace sun-worship back to Nimrod, whose worship was universal in the old time. Again we have good reason to say: "Little children, keep yourselves from idols."

About the transferring of the pagan customs into Christendom the same author says: "The wassailing-bowl of Christmas had its precise counterpart in the 'Drunken Festival' of Babylon;

Come Forth

M. E. YERGIN

"Of God, of God," the earth proclaims
At dawning of the day;
And like a throbbing sea, the air
Is filled with minstrelsy.
From creatures small, from creatures great,
The high Jehovah's name
Is heard in all the languages
That creature life can claim.
The voice is silent; all is still
On mountainside and plain,
Where day's broad fringe of glory spreads
O'er groups of homes of men.
Come forth, ye silent sons of men!
Come forth! Why are ye still?
Your beating heart, your food, your breath,
Are by Jehovah's will.

As David, nightly on his couch,
Sank in the common death,
He trusted God would bring him forth
At morning's early breath.
And, lo! the light of early morn
Came from the distant throne;
A bird sang near the royal form;
A zephyr, gently blown,
Passed o'er his brow, and mortal man
Came forth again to live:
All creatures to their sovereign Lord
Unstinted praises give.
Come forth, ye silent sons of men!
Come forth! Why are ye still?
All nature gives as man should give;
Jehovah waits thee, still.

Mrs. White's Labors in Michigan and Indiana

D. E. ROBINSON

The West Michigan camp-meeting was held on the fair-grounds at Three Rivers, July 22 to August 2. A goodly number of our people were present, although on account of its being harvest-time, there was a smaller attendance than usual. Besides union and local conference workers, several ministers from abroad were in attendance. Among these were Elders A. G. Daniells, G. B. Thompson, W. C. White, S. G. Haughey, and C. McReynolds. On the part of the citizens of Three Rivers there was an increasing interest from day to day.

Mrs. White arrived the day before the meeting opened, and with the exception of one day, remained till the close. During the ten days, she spoke in the large tent four times. On Sabbath, July 24, she read from Exodus portions of the experience of Israel from their departure out of Egypt up to the giving of the law at Mt. Sinai. Regarding this she said: —

"We are sometimes astonished at the course of the children of Israel. The Lord had wrought for them mightily in bringing them forth from Egypt and through the Red Sea, and it seems surprising that they should not afterward have an unshaken faith that God was leading them, and that he would provide for them. But are we not as faithless as they? are we not in danger of being fearful when we should be strong and of good courage? Many to-day are ready to pledge themselves as willing to be led by God; but when they come into a hard place, they do not stand the proving. They complain and murmur against the Lord. Would it not be better, when we are in trouble or perplexity, to come in simplicity to the same God who led Israel of old, and ask him to show us his great kindness?"

In concluding her discourse, Mrs. White made an earnest appeal for all to declare themselves on the Lord's side, and to seek, during the time of the meeting, the blessing he has in store for them. "Do not," she said, "trifle with the opportunities that you have in such gatherings as this. Be faithful in attending the meetings, and give heed to the messages borne. Make thorough work for eternity. Respond to the invitations that may be given. Let your hearts be melted under the influence of the Holy Spirit. 'Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near.' Search your Bible, that you may know what God says. You need not ask any one else your duty; you are individually amenable to God. I entreat of you to make your peace with God, and to be obedient."

Nearly all present pledged themselves to seek the Lord, and Mrs. White prayed for a rich blessing to rest upon those assembled. The revival effort was continued in other meetings during the day by Elder Thompson and others, and many were impressed by the Holy Spirit to give themselves to the Lord.

Sunday, many from the city attended the camp, and Mrs. White addressed a large congregation in the afternoon. She dwelt impressively upon the great sacrifice of Christ and his sufferings, reading the prophecy found in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, and bringing out many practical thoughts regarding Christian living.

The forenoon of Tuesday was devoted to a consideration of the canvassing work and other lines of missionary effort. By request, Mrs. White spoke for about half an hour regarding our duty as a missionary people. She said, in part: —

"As a people we have received great light. The truth of God is to be justified before the world. If we are content to remain in our homes, feeling no burden to communicate the truth to others, we ourselves need the converting power of God in our hearts. Our light comes from the highest source, and is given to us that we may pass it on to others.

"It is time that we place ourselves in right relation to God. If you have an intelligent knowledge of the truth for this time, then it is your privilege and your duty to impart it to others. If you have not that knowledge, then you should seek for it. Learn how to present the truth in a clear and forceful manner. The light is to shine forth to the world in clear, distinct rays. If you are truly converted, you will not hide your light under a bushel, but let it shine forth to others. 'Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.'

"In the Word of God there is a commission that we can not evade. There is a world to be warned, and the believers must carry the saving truth to all nations. There is a great work before us, and it can not be finished by only a few. There is something for every one to do. May God put upon us all a spirit to communicate truth, and may he impress every one to lift every possible ounce in an effort to get the message before the world.

"How can we arouse our people and the people of the world to prepare to meet our God? We must seek the Lord with all the heart, that we may find him. Then hold on; we must not let go. We need a conversion that will remain with us; for we have a work that is to continue. Just as long as we are on this earth, and there are souls unwarned, we can not lay off this responsibility.

"And if you are under the influence of the Holy Spirit, you can reach some of these unwarned souls. Many who are now perishing in their sins will yet be converted, and turn to the Lord with full purpose of heart. Take hold of the work in earnest, anywhere and everywhere, and when you do this, you will have a sense of your need of power from on high.

"He that is to come will come, and will not tarry. And thousands upon thousands are unwarned. The great cities are to be worked; this is kept before me night and day. Because of the magnitude of the work, because of the large outlay of means that they think necessary, many are hesitating about taking up the work that must be done in these large centers. Do they expect that men of means will come to them and offer them help, asking them to come and give them the message? We must make a beginning with what we have. Let groups of laborers appoint meetings in some portion of a city. An interest will be created that will increase. Those who receive the message will be willing to impart of their means to provide for an enlargement of the work.

"We are to labor in simplicity, but earnestly. Shall we now take hold to do the work that God would have us do, or shall it be that persons will come up to us when the troubles have burst upon the world, and say, 'Why did not you warn us of these calamities that were coming, if you knew them?'

"O, this precious message that God has given us! Many are longing for it, and it must be given as soon as possible. Begin to proclaim it wherever you may be. As soon as you begin to act, God will open the way before you."

At Battle Creek

On the way from Buffalo to Three Rivers, Mrs. White stopped over one day in Battle Creek. While there, she met many of her old friends and associates in the work. The brethren urgently requested that she speak to them, and she promised, if possible, to return from the camp-meeting for that purpose. Accordingly an appointment was given out for a discourse by her in the Tabernacle, Thursday afternoon, July 29.

The church was well filled, there being present many from the sanitarium and from the city, in addition to the regular membership. Mrs. White opened the service with prayer, after which she gave a simple, but earnest discourse, based upon the fifteenth chapter of John.

In the evening Elders Daniells and White stopped over in Battle Creek on their way from Washington to the Three Rivers camp-meeting. They accompanied Mrs. White and her party on their return from Battle Creek to Three Rivers Friday morning.

Visit to the Indiana Sanitarium

Monday morning, August 2, Mrs. White, Miss McEnterfer, and Elder White left Three Rivers for a brief visit to the Wabash Valley Sanitarium at La Fayette, Ind.

At the depot they were met by Dr. W. W. Worster, the medical superintendent, and Brother H. C. Saunders, the business manager, who took them quickly in an automobile three miles up the river to the new sanitarium. Here they found a well-equipped institution that does credit to our people in Indiana who have established it. At the time of this visit there were thirty-two patients being cared for, and applications from others for entrance as soon as room could be found for them. Regarding this sanitarium and its influence, Mrs. White wrote: —

"We were intensely interested in this sanitarium and its surroundings, for the Lord has presented before me in vision just such a scene. I could hardly believe that I had not seen the place before with my natural eyes.

"I am instructed to say that it is in the order of God that this property has been secured. It is to become an important center for missionary work in the surrounding cities. Our sanitariums are designed of God to be institutions through which he can work.

"In securing and equipping the La Fayette Sanitarium, our brethren have acted according to their best judgment. They have not moved rashly. Some have tried to discourage this enterprise, but I am instructed to say, Help those that are struggling with difficulties. If they look to him for counsel, the Lord will bless and strengthen the physician and the helpers in the sanitarium.

"Let not our brethren feel it their duty to restrict the investment of means where it is needed. It is in the Lord's order that the sanitarium has been secured. More land should have been purchased, and if possible, this should be done now. The grounds around a sanitarium should not be restricted. Provision should be made for the raising of fruit and vegetables, and it should not be made possible for buildings of an objectionable character to be erected near our institutions.

"The plan of having our sanitariums out of the cities is born of the Lord. This should be borne in mind, and sufficient land should be secured to raise fruit and vegetables. It will be a boon to the sick and to the helpers to be given outdoor work on the land. Many of our own workers have broken down in health through excessive mental taxation without the balance of physical exercise.

"There is an important work to be done in the vicinity of La Fayette. Our people generally do not realize how Satan is at work to secure souls through his specious deceptions. . . .

"Because of distracting influences, the work in Indiana has in the past been greatly hindered. The reproach of God rests upon a people who have a knowledge of the truth, and yet hold their peace. May the Lord forgive those who have known of open fields that have been left without a knowledge of the Scriptures. Let no one excuse himself from helping, nor complain because the Lord now calls for efforts and means to atone for the long neglect of work that should have been done years ago. In every place where the sheep have been scattered, let earnest effort now be put forth for the salvation of souls."

The Kingdom Principle

T. E. BOWEN

ONE of the hardest lessons for us to learn is the one Jesus taught us when he stepped down from his exalted place beside the throne of his Father to become one with us in our fallen estate. There could be no selfishness in this free choice on Christ's part; for he already had all that his heart could desire in the way of honor, wealth, and glory. But the word had been whispered in heaven that even God the Father and Christ the Son were actuated by self-interests in their administration of the affairs of the universe. And when Jesus voluntarily offered himself as a sacrifice for the lost world, and the Father gave him up, and the Son actually of his own free will left his exalted place upon the throne, all heaven must have looked on in wonder and astonishment. That mystery hidden from before the foundation of the world, now began to unfold and be worked out in a way heretofore not understood. An actual demonstration was to be made of the blessed principle underlying love — that heaven-born principle of self-forgetfulness in its service for the good and happiness of others.

Satan contests this point. He seems never to tire in repeating that there is no such thing as unselfishness, no motive born of disinterested love. But Jesus forever settles the question in his life of self-denial, self-forgetfulness, and toil for a race so ungrateful as to repay his love by cruelly putting him to death. One thing is sure, and that is that on the cross our Lord effectually put an end to this falsehood, as far as heaven is concerned. The last lingering tie of sympathy that might have remained in any angel heart surely must have been severed when Satan poured out his contempt and hate upon the innocent, suffering Son of God, as his divine-human form quivered in the agonies of death in that awful hour of darkness on Calvary's hill. And one good, long look on the scene ought so to set our hearts against the wicked principle of self-serving, self-exaltation, self-seeking for glory and honor and place, as to banish it, by the help of God, from the soul forever. But somehow the battle rages in our hearts still. The tempter lures us into some pleasing snare often before we are aware of it.

One beautiful illustration of how strife for glory found no place in the life of Jesus, is shown in an occasion early in his ministry, at a time when John's work was at its height, when large multitudes thronged to hear him at Jordan and be baptized. The record says: "When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, . . . he left Judea, and departed again into Galilee." He wanted no strife to arise, caused by comparison of his work with that of John; so he quietly removed to another place,— a lesson all workers in spiritual labor might study with great profit to-day.

Even the disciples comprehended but faintly the self-sacrificing life of their Master. In seeking to correct their self-seeking for place and position and honor, we are told: "Very tenderly, yet with solemn emphasis, Jesus tried to correct the evil. He showed what is the principle that bears sway in the kingdom of heaven, and in what true greatness consists, as estimated by the standard of the courts above. Those who were actuated by pride and love of distinction, were thinking of themselves, and the rewards they were to have, rather than how they were to render back to God the gifts they had received. They would have no place in the kingdom of heaven. . . . When men exalt themselves, feeling that they are a necessity for the success of God's great plan, the Lord causes them to be set aside. It is made evident that the Lord is not dependent upon them. The work does not stop because of their removal from it, but goes forward with greater power." —"Desire of Ages," page 436.

The principle of self-exaltation belongs to Satan. He is the father of it. It is evil, and evil only. It will work ruin to every one who builds upon it.

Unselfish love is of God. He originated it. He lives it. In it is all true greatness. To build upon this principle is life, because this is love, and love is of God. And he that hath the Son of God, hath life. Jesus has made it possible for us as truly to live unselfishly

Building the Temple

WORTHIE HARRIS HOLDEN

Build thou a temple for thy God;
Build thou with greatest care,
That so the presence of thy Lord
Daily abideth there.

Search from the quarries of his Word
E'er for foundations true,
Then let his Spirit all unheard
Square thee and trim and hew.

Build thou with hands well washed and clean,
Stained not with act of sin;
Build thou in quiet all unseen,—
Earth builds with noise and din.

Build with a mind intent to be
What the true Pattern shows;
This on the mount he gave to thee,—
His will his words disclose.

Ever thine incense burn in prayer.
Always be clean and pure;
God finds a dwelling only where
Sinfulness can not endure.

Thus shall thy temple stand for aye,—
Stand when earth's mansions fall:
Haste to be like thy Pattern, then,—
The Christ, thine all in all.

Mrs. White's Labors in Illinois and Wisconsin

W. C. WHITE

From August 4-13 Mrs. E. G. White and her party were entertained at the Hinsdale Sanitarium. The main building and all the cottages were full at the time of our visit, but just across the road a beautiful residence was vacant, its occupants having gone for a few weeks' outing, and Dr. David Paulson secured for us the privilege of occupying this residence during our stay in Hinsdale.

Sabbath and Sunday, August 7 and 8, were spent at the Elgin camp-meeting. There Mrs. White met many old friends, and spoke to large congregations each day. Wednesday afternoon, August 11, she spoke to a full house in the South Side Chicago church. She spoke four times to the helpers and patients at Hinsdale.

Work was being hastened on the large new building, which will double the size of the Hinsdale Sanitarium. There is a company of earnest and faithful workers in the institution, some of whom are in training for foreign fields. Mrs. White took a deep interest in the work of the sanitarium and its allied institutions. Besides the main building, she visited the Good Samaritan Inn and the Life Boat Rescue Home. To the workers in the Home she said: —

"It gives me great pleasure to know that there are some who are carrying forward such a work as is being done here. If we see those who have been unfortunate in falling under the power of the enemy of souls, we are not to push them out into the darkness, but we should help them to find a connection with Christ. Those who are united in this work will see that the Lord will bless the efforts put forth in kindness and tenderness. He would have us claim the promises that are found in his Word. For those who have sinned and have made mistakes, there is a Christ to pardon and forgive. Let us lift him up as the Redeemer of mankind.

"Why did Christ come to this world? He saw that humanity was separated from divinity. Therefore he laid aside the glory he had in heaven, and came to this world to unite in himself divinity and humanity. With his divinity he could grasp the throne of the Infinite, while with his humanity he could reach fallen man. It is by our humanity laying hold upon his divinity that we can be saved. We thereby become 'partakers of the divine nature.'"

Friday morning, August 13, the physicians and heads of departments gathered at the cottage where Mrs. White was staying, and she said to them: —

"The opportunities which you possess here seem favorable for the carrying forward of the medical missionary work as God would have it. If the workers will faithfully act their part, angels of God will make impressions of truth upon the hearts of those who come here. It is not by chance that this work was taken out of the city of Chicago. Our medical institutions can not work to the best advantage in the cities. From the instruction I have received, I counsel our brethren, wherever possible, to locate in the country. These large cities will soon be visited with the judgments of God.

"The situation of this sanitarium is a great help in the bringing of many to a knowledge of the truth. In its surroundings I see many advantages. The patients need not suffer from impure air. They can sit outside under the trees, surrounded by the beauties of nature. God has had a purpose in bringing his workers to this place.

"It is not by persistent arguments that souls will be won to a knowledge of the truth. Let the workers manifest in their words and actions the simplicity of true godliness, and heavenly agencies will make the right impression upon the minds of those with whom they associate. Just as surely as we shall walk in humility, honoring God as the one who must convict the heart, we shall see the results of our labor for souls, even in the cities. I have the courage to hope that there will be a greater work done in Chicago than we have yet seen. To those who place themselves in right relation to God it is said, 'Ye are laborers together with God.' That assurance is worth everything to us; for if we are in union with God, we have back of us a power that is irresistible.

[“Whatever may arise, never be discouraged. The Lord loves us, and he will perform his word. Try to encourage in the patients a trust in God. Bid them be of good courage. Talk hope, even to the last. If they are to die, let them die praising the Lord. He ever lives; and though some of his faithful followers may fall in death, their works will follow them, and theirs will be a joyous awakening in the resurrection morning. (1)

"Let us not be discouraged. Let us not talk doubt, but faith; for faith brings infinite power. If we lay hold upon this power, and do not trust in our own human strength, we shall see the salvation of God.] There are many who are hungering and thirsting for a better knowledge of spiritual truths, and it is the privilege of those in this institution to impart to them that which will satisfy their longing."

Visit to the Madison Sanitarium

Elder C. McReynolds, of the Wisconsin Conference, had requested us to spend Sabbath and Sunday, August 14 and 15, at the Madison Sanitarium. On arriving there we were pleased to find a small camp-meeting on the sanitarium grounds. An appointment had been sent out hastily, and a number had gathered in from near-by churches. There was a full program of meeting each day. Mrs. White remained at the sanitarium for six days, during which time she spoke twice to the brethren assembled from the churches, and three times to the sanitarium family. This was the first time she had visited the Madison (Wis.) Sanitarium. She was much pleased with its beautiful location by the lakeside, and believed it is destined to become a very popular institution.

Monday afternoon, August 16, the helpers assembled in the gymnasium, and Mrs. White addressed them.

"I can not feel free to leave this sanitarium," she said, "without speaking to you of the necessity of earnestly seeking the Lord. This must be done by the workers in all of our institutions. A position in a sanitarium is a place of great responsibility. You are not to go on in carelessness and indifference, thinking that because this is the Lord's institution, therefore he will work it for you, regardless of your manner of life. Let each one seek for a daily, living experience in the service of God. Unless you have such an experience, patients that come here unconverted will ask why those professing to believe in the binding obligation of God's law, do not walk in obedience to his commandments.

"Now is your time to say, Let us seek the Lord with all our hearts, that we may find him. Let us humble ourselves before him, that he may teach us. He can not teach you his way unless you have humility of heart, and are daily converted to his will.

(1)
Selected Messages, Bk. 1 p. 85

"In our institutions, we should take pains to make everything harmonize with the principles that the Lord has outlined before us in his Word. The work should be educational, preparing the workers for the transfer to the higher courts above. This education is highly essential. Our sanitariums, which are established at large expense, are to be places where character is molded. In them should be laboring a class of people who have especially consecrated themselves to the service of God, and who seek him daily for guidance.

"We should be careful that we connect with all our sanitariums those who will give a right mold to the work. Characters are to be formed here after the divine similitude. It is not the expensive dress that will give us influence, but it is by true Christian humility that we exalt our Saviour. Our only hope for success in doing good to the people of the world who come to our sanitariums as guests, is for the workers, each and every one, to maintain a living connection with God. The dress of sanitarium helpers is to be modest and neat, but the dress is not so important as the deportment. The matter of greatest consequence is that the truth be lived out in our lives, that our words be in harmony with the faith we profess to hold. If the workers in our sanitariums will surrender to God, and take a high position as believers in the truth, the Lord will recognize this, and we shall see a great work done in these institutions.

"It is not the wisest course to connect with our sanitariums too many who are inexperienced, who come as learners, while there is a lack of experienced, efficient workers. We need more matronly women, and men who are sound and solid in principle,— substantial men who fear God and who can carry responsibilities wisely. Some may come and offer to work for small wages, because they enjoy being at a sanitarium, or because they wish to learn, but it is not true economy to supply an institution largely with inexperienced helpers.

"If the right persons are connected with the work, and if all will humble their hearts before God, although there may now be a heavy debt resting upon the institution, the Lord will work in such a way that the debt will be lessened, and souls will be converted to the truth, because they see that the workers are following in the way of the Lord, and keeping his commandments. This is the only hope for the prosperity of our sanitariums. It is useless to think of any other way. We can not expect the blessing of God to rest upon us, if we serve God at will, and let him alone at pleasure.

"It is not necessary that we should cater to the world's demands for pleasure. There are other places in the world where people may find amusement. We need at our sanitariums substantial men and women; we need those who will reveal the simplicity of true godliness.

"When the sick come to our institutions, they should be made to realize that there is a divine power at work, that angels of God are present. I wish to emphasize one point: Do not permit yourselves to wear a sour countenance or a desponding look. There is danger of getting a sour spirit, and of speaking harshly. Remember that you are dealing with invalids, and that invalids watch the countenances of those who are about them. They watch to see if they are going to be spoken to encouragingly or discouragingly.

"Your work is not to be confined to this institution. There are surrounding places where your influence should reach. If this sanitarium is conducted as it should be, its influence will grow. Similar institutions should be established in other places. This is why the Lord is laying upon his people the burden of establishing sanitariums, that his name may be glorified.

"Will you not all put on Christ, not to lay him off again, but to let his Spirit stamp your mind and character? When all in this institution are truly converted, there will be just as surely a wonderful work done as when on the day of Pentecost the disciples received the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The Lord himself will be with you, to teach and to lead and to guide. You will see of the salvation of God. You may be disheartened at times. Discouragements may arise, but it is your privilege at all times to lay hold of the hope set before you in the gospel. Watch unto prayer. Believe that God will help you to speak words that will cheer and encourage and increase the faith of those with whom you associate."

Events Between the Close of the Gospel and the Second Coming of Jesus — No. 1

T. E. BOWEN

IN a recent article the point was made clear from the Scriptures that the expressions of the Lord to the disciples on the Mount of Olives, which speak of the suddenness of his coming, applied to that time when the work of the gospel should close, rather than to his second appearing on the cloud. We learned that the passing of this hour would come upon us as the approach of a thief in the night — unheralded.

But that all will know soon after the passing of this important event, is very evident from events that will begin to take place here upon the earth at that time.

We shall not attempt to go into the details of this subject, but there are a few events which stand out so clearly as meeting their fulfilment during this time, that we feel sure we can with profit give this subject some study.

No More Forgiveness of Sin

When Jesus ceases his work as high priest, there can be no more forgiveness of sin. We might therefore safely conclude that when the Lord announces in heaven that his mediatorial work is done, at the same time the Holy Spirit will cease to entreat sinners. This time will be known. While salvation lingers, "the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." But an hour cometh when the Spirit pleads no more. As it was in the days of Noah, so again at that time will it be true, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man." Then very likely will be fulfilled that passage of Scripture which says, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." Isa. 26:20.

Here is portrayed that time foretold by many prophets, when God, during a little moment, is wroth, and arises to punish the inhabitants of the earth. During this time God's people are hidden under the special protection of the Almighty, as were the Israelites in Egypt when terrible plagues were falling upon the disobedient Egyptians, but not without trial to the saints.

The Wrath of God

During the time that God draws his covering, or protection, over his people who have kept his commandments, after the close of Christ's ministry in the heavenly sanctuary, the seven last plagues come upon earth's inhabitants. These are recorded in Revelation 16. In them is filled up the wrath of God. It is very evident that this wrath — unmixed with mercy — could not be poured out until the work of the gospel ceased.

A time is appointed the angels for pouring out these vials of wrath. A command comes from the throne to them "out of the temple," saying, "Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth." Rev. 16:1. Until that command comes, they wait. And to make clear that all ministration in the heavenly sanctuary had ceased during this time, we read: "And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled." Rev. 15:8. Thus just after the close of probation, when Jesus ceases his mediatorial work in the heavenly sanctuary, it will be known upon the earth that God is dealing in judgment, and that probation has closed. But then it will be too late to obtain eternal life. Hence, the knowledge brings no comfort to the lost, and only reveals to those whose sins have been covered, that just before them is an hour of great trial before actual deliverance will come to them, and they can be with their Lord.

This is a day of distress to all flesh, a day not to be desired by even God's people. Amos bears testimony: "Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! to what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness, and not light. As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear
